A SINGULAR relic of the poet Burns will be offered for sale to-day at the auction rooms of Messrs. Puttick & Simpson, Leicester Square. It is a poem entitled 'The Friar's Curse,' written on two panes of glass that once formed part of a summer-house in the grounds of Friars' Carse, near Dumfries, the seat of Mr. Robert Riddell, of Glen Riddell. The poem, which is published in Currie's edition of Burns, begins:—
Stranger, go: Heaven be thy Guide!
Quod the Bedesman of Niddale.

The original glass has been inserted between two pieces of plate glass, and placed in a strong oak frame.

THE Senate of the new Royal University of Ireland at its recent inaugural meeting, presided over by its Chancellor, the Duke of Abercorn, elected a representative committee to prepare and submit a detailed scheme for the effective working of the institution. This committee, after lengthened deliberation, has adopted a report—not yet published—which, it is understood, includes a recommendation that application should be made by the Senate to Government for an endowment the amount of which would place the new university in point of funds on an equality with the older institution—Trinity College. The Royal University of Ireland at present includes the three Queen's Colleges of Belfast, Cork, and Galway.

ARRANGEMENTS are in progress for a portrait of Thackeray being added as a companion one to that of Macaulay in the Reform Club. Thackeray was one of the original members of the Reform, and many of his writings were penned in its library.

PROF. LEPSIUS has had a serious attack of illness, but, we are glad to say, has partly recovered.

It may be interesting to some of our readers to know that the draft scheme of the Charity Commissioners for the "Bluecoat School," or Christ's Hospital, London, allots forty places to boys nominated by the Council of Almoners, such boys being some of persons distinguished in literature, science and art, or the public service of the country, who have left their families insufficiently provided for. This scheme is to take effect on the receipt of an Order in Council. Considering the comprehensive, not to say unlimited, nature of the classes eligible for nomination, it cannot be said that forty boys and no girls is too large an appropriation out of a total of one thousand boys and not fewer than four hundred girls.

No. 51 of the Hunterian Club's publications (being the second issue for the sixth year) is now in the binder's hands and will shortly be sent out to members. It will contain title-pages, notes, glossary, &c., to Samuel Rowlands's completed works, besides a memoir on that writer by Mr. Edmund W. Gosse. Rowlands's works having thus been disposed of, the Club have only now to complete the Bannatyne MS. (the text of which is nearly all in type) and the rest of the writings of Thomas Lodge. For members of the seventh year there will shortly be ready part vi. of the Bannatyne MS.; Lodge's 'Life and Death of William Longbeard,' 1593; 'Proscopieia, or the Teares of the Holy, Blessed, and Sanctified Marie, the Mother of God,' 1596; and 'A Treatise of the Plague,' 1603.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. will publish almost immediately a translation, with critical and historical notes by the Rev. G. E. Jeans, M.A., Fellow of Hertford College, Oxford, and Assistant-Master at Haileybury, of those letters of Cicero which form the basis of Mr. Watson's well-known edition. The author has taken pains, by connecting the letters with a short summary of intervening events and by elucidation of matters referred to in the letters themselves, to justify the title which the volume bears, 'The Life and Letters of Marcus Tullius Cicero.'

A PAPER by Mr. W. Fraser Rae, on 'John Winthrop, the Father of Massachusetts,' will appear in the September number of Good Words.

TOWARDS the end of this month Messrs. Marcus Ward & Co. will publish a new edition of Seemann's 'Mythology of Greece and Rome,' which has been revised by the editor, Mr. Bianchi, of St. Peter's College, Cambridge.

A BEQUEST of 20,000*l.* has been left by Dr. Daniel Tyler Coit to his alma mater, Yale College. Deceased graduated at the College in 1825, and afterwards became one of the most distinguished physicians in the United States. He has also left a sum of 2,000*l.* to one of the Western colleges.

An announcement has just been made of a complete edition, with illustrations, of the prose and poetical works of Mr. Edwin Waugh, of Manchester, to be published by subscription by Mr. John Heywood of that city. It is to be comprised in ten volumes, small octavo, the subscription price being five shillings per volume; a large-paper impression will also be issued, quarto size, the subscription price of which will be fifteen shillings per volume. The number of each size will be limited, the small paper to 500 copies and the large paper to 200. We announced some time ago the projected publication of a collected edition of Mr. Waugh's works, which it appears was abandoned after preliminary arrangements had been made.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. have in the press for publication in September a 'History of Procedure in England during the Norman Period,' by Dr. Melville Madison Bigelow, the learned American whose 'Placita Anglo-Normannica' was reviewed in these columns about a year ago. The work is partly constitutional and partly legal history, dealing on the one hand with the courts, their jurisdictions and relations towards each other, and on the other with the conduct of causes. The following are the titles of the chapters: 1. Principles of Criticism; 2. The Danelag; 3. The Courts (with special reference to the ecclesiastical and king's courts); 4. The Writ Process; 5. Distract; 6. Summons; 7. The Issue Term; 8. The Medial Judgment; 9. The Trial Term; 10. The Final Judgment. An appendix will follow containing records, most of them never before printed.

An illustrated weekly is announced to make its appearance in Edinburgh at an early date, under the name of The Archer.

MR. ALEX. MACKENZIE, the energetic editor of the Celtic Magazine, contemplates the publication of a volume on the Highlanders in Canada, giving the results of his observations made there during last winter.

SIGNOR G. BARBERA, of Florence, will publish in the beginning of next year the first volume of an 'Annuario della Letteratura Italiana,' of about 500 pp., 16mo. Besides giving an account of the literary history of the year, the 'Annuario' will endeavour to be a useful repertory of biographical, bibliographical, and statistical facts, and will furnish a view of the intellectual movement in Italy as manifested in universities, academies, and theatres.

M. MASPERO, says the Revue Critique, has been entrusted by the French Minister of Education with the mission of visiting the museums of Italy and collecting materials for a history of Egypt.

PROF. E. B. ANDERSON, of Wisconsin University, has sent us a reply, too long for us to print, to our very merciful review of his translation of the Younger Edda. Into Prof. Anderson's defence of his renderings we cannot enter, and what he says does not alter our opinion; but we are glad to state that the professor assures us that, while opposed to the study of Latin by "Teutonic lads and lasses," he is "an enthusiastic advocate of Greek literature." Only a Greek scholar should not treat his readers to such forms as ἀνὴρ πολύθροπος: νεφίλγ, &c., which appear in the professor's book

SCIENCE

Sylvan Spring. By Francis George Heath. With Twelve Coloured Plates. (Sampson Low & Co.)

MR. HEATH'S books always come into the world with very considerable advantages. They seem born to good fortune. They are excellently advertised; they are capitally got up, well printed, well bound, and with illustrations that appear attractive. In short, they are just the books which critics are tempted to take on trust and praise without reading, and which bookbuyers will procure not for themselves, but as gifts for some one else. Their place is the drawing-room table, and their best service is that they give some momentary pleasure as their leaves are turned over for the sake of their pictures. Whether they ever find a permanent place on a library shelf, whether they are ever read through, or whether any man will ever refer to them a second time, we cannot, of course, say. The unexpected often happens, and it may be so in this case.

Of Mr. Heath's books, few have disappointed us more than 'Sylvan Spring.' The subject—spring among the woods—was full of promise. Well worked out it might have resulted in a book which might recall White's 'Selborne' or 'The Gamekeeper at Home.' The wild animals and the wild flowers—old folk-lore and old wort-lore—the stories of famous trees, the associations and legends which haunt the woods, and the songs which poets have wreathed in honour of the spring—all these come naturally within the scope of such a book. The closer the descriptions of tree or flower, the more graphic and picturesque the touches, the more the thing spoken of is brought close to us by vivid word or telling epithet, the greater the success of the author. In a book of this kind everything will depend upon accurate observation in the first place, and beauty of style in the second.

Now Mr. Heath's observation is not always accurate, and his style is for the most part anything but beautiful. In the first place, the title of the book is itself inappropriate. The book describes field and lane hardly less than wood, and "sylvan" has to be taken with a very wide significance indeed.

We next turned to the coloured illustrations. These, if they are to be of any use, should be characteristic, and true to time and place. The very first one showed that their object was merely to attract the eye, and certainly not to instruct the reader. It is an illustration of a hedge sparrow's nest, resting upon the ground and backed with young ivy, snowdrops, and buttercups! This picture was so astonishing that we referred to the letter-press, and found that even Mr. Heath makes a half apology:—"Though snowdrops may perchance yet linger on some hedge-bank, the first buttercup will be seen in the meadows when the bright blue eggs appear." Whether the last snowdrop ever met the first buttercup, and watched with it by the side of a hedge sparrow's nest, we do not know. But such an interesting meeting must certainly be one of the greatest rarity, more especially as the "habitats," to use a favourite word of Mr. Heath's, of hedge sparrow, snowdrop, and buttercup are not precisely the same.

Another illustration gives a peacock butterfly resting upon flowering willow and primroses. Again it is impossible to say that such a thing has never happened; but as the ordinary or "normal" (another favourite word of Mr. Heath's) time for the peacock butterfly to appear is in August, this illustration is simply misleading. Further on we have a green hellebore of January, a daffodil of March, and the red admiral butterfly of August on the same plate; and, almost more extraordinary still, comes the winter aconite with a guelder rose and a small tortoise-shell butterfly (let us say in passing that it is the garden Viburnum that is usually known as the guelder rose).

The fact is that these coloured illustrations have really very little or nothing to do with the text, and that these butterflies, which are certainly not distinctively "sylvan," are only thrown in among the flowers for the sake of ornament. The same objection does not hold as regards the woodcuts, which are fairly illustrative of the letter-press, but some of which seem rather familiar friends.

But we will now turn from his illustrations to Mr. Heath himself. There is no doubt that he really cares for his subject and would wish his readers to care for it too. But he is singularly unfortunate: he overloads his sentences with botanical terms, and yet often fails to give an exact description of the flower about which he writes; he expects his readers to be learned enough to understand all the language of technical botany, and yet so ignorant as to exclaim in great surprise "Tree flowers!" "Green flowers!" when they are told that a tree may have its blossom, and that a flower may be green. Meanwhile it would be as well if the instructor were careful in smaller matters. He introduces the wallflower—the very last flower we should associate with the woods—and says that on crumbling walls and cliffs "flaunts [sic] the handsome orange and blood-red blossoms." Will Mr. Heath tell the editor of Sowerby where to find the "blood-red" variety of the wild wallflower, as he apparently does not know of it, and if it ever occurs it must at least be extremely rare? But Mr. Heath is at any rate in luck in some respects. He says that in April "on the oak and apple we may now expect to see the blossoming of that interesting parasite, the mistletoe." We may "expect" to see mistletoe on the oak, but our expectations are very unlikely to be realised. Surely Mr. Heath must know that, common as the mistletoe is on apple and other trees, it is hardly ever found upon the oak. So to find it must have been rare even in the days when Druids cut it with a golden sickle, and now, except on a tree in Eastnor Park and in a very few other known places, a mistletoe-bearing oak simply does not exist.

But if Mr. Heath can at times see more than other people, he occasionally sees a good deal less. He says of the Pulmonaria or lingwort (certainly not an ordinary sylvan plant) that "its flowers are deep blue in colour." Now the great peculiarity of the Pulmonaria is that its flowers are pink, fading off into blue, so that in country places it is known as "soldiers and sailors." This plant, too, has various curious legends connected with it, but Mr. Heath tells his readers none of them.

However, after all, we do not know that Mr. Heath's accuracy is not more to be admired than his style of writing. As has been already said, it is rough and bristling with technicalities, but it is at the same time full of faded sentiment. Here is an example: "How beautiful is the pervading geniality of spring! This tender season favours all alike, and makes its influence felt no less in the window gardens of the poor than in the conservatories of the rich." And a little further on we read—and the important words have a full-length woodcut illustration to themselves,—"The genial influence of spring pervades, too, no less the sylvan surroundings of the humblest cottage than those of the great country-house." Well, it is certainly true that spring is no respecter of persons, and is just as truly spring to the poor man as to the rich, but the remark seems a little obvious. Nature is (Mr. Heath is quite right about it) usually independent of rank and fashion, and even the sun is said to shine with some impartiality. When Mr. Heath comes to speak of the month of May he grows still more enthusiastic: "Oh, 'thou merry month of May,' 'Queen of fresh flowers,' of sunshine, and fragrance, and beauty"; and, after a great deal more to the same effect, he actually is pleased to add, "there is a luxurious softness in the air." Surely he must be thinking not of existing May, but of the May of the poets, the May of the old style; but the rhapsody is rather tantalizing than agreeable.

Another of Mr. Heath's pet words is "incipient": it sometimes appears twice on one page, and we have "incipient" leaves, ovaries, pistils, capsules, and other botanical matters. It is hardly fair, however, to treat what is "incipient" as if it were a perfected plant, and to inflict on the reader five pages about the fox-glove and its flower, which is here called "the fox-glove's fairy chamber," merely because the root-leaves may be seen in spring on some hedge-bank.

And now let us say what little we honestly can in favour of 'Sylvan Spring.' The botanical structure of the various plants seems for the most part carefully given, and if no handier or more thorough book is available, it may possibly be found of some service in this respect. Occasionally, too—but very occasionally—Mr. Heath forgets both his botany and his fine sentiments, and for a short time writes as if he really saw and felt the beauty of the woodlands in early spring. There is a touch of old Gilpin about him every now and then, and of Gilpin when he is not at his worst. But unfortunately there is not enough of this to redeem the general character of the book.

THE ROYAL SOCIETY.

A CORRESPONDENT calls attention to the last part of the Proceedings of the Royal Society (No. 206), which has just been issued, as containing some things worth notice, from being sent out under the auspices of a distinguished scientific society:—

"It seems remarkable that blank pages should be left in a publication such as this. A paper by Prof. Lankester, on a new freshwater Medusa, is marked 'Publication deferred,' and the space it should have occupied left without the slightest intimation other than the words quoted. Assuredly a thing like this does not occur in scientific publications without good reason; but why allow a useless space of two whole pages? Can this be a joke on the part of the Society's committee of publication? the more so since Prof. Allman gravely quotes the paper in question in a recent paper of his in the Linnean Society's Journal. Still further, in the very same opening (p. 554) this paragraph appears:—

"The recently discovered fungi of the Coal-measures are investigated, especially the Peronosporites [sic] antiquorum [sic] of Mr. Worthington Smith. The author finds, in the specimens he has examined, including that described by Mr. Smith, no traces of septa in the hyphæ or of Zoospores in the Oogonia. He concludes that its affinities are probably with the Saprolognia [sic], and not with the Peronosporites [sic]. Four blunders in five lines!

"Continuing, we find some objectionable novelties in the mode of abbreviating scientific names:—1. 'The Mackenzie Flora contains six species present also in the Brown-coal Flora of Alaska, viz., Tax. distichum, Glypt. Ungeri, Seq. Langsd., Corylus M'Quar., Jugl. acuminata, and Viburnum Nordenföldi. Eight appear also in the Flora of Saghalien:—Tax. dist., Glypt. Ung., Seq. Langsd., Corylus M'Quar., Jugl. acum., &c. (p. 561). 2. '.....eight species in common, viz., Tax. dist., Seq. Langsd., Glypt. Ung., Cor. M'Quar., Pop. Richards., Populus Arctica, Betula macrophylla, and Platanus aceroides (!)'

"The Royal Society's publications at one time were held up as models of perfection; can they be so now? Some time ago the Society threw its printing open to contractors, and accepted the lowest bidder. If these vagaries be the fault of the printer, the change seems to be hardly wise."

AN ETRUSCAN ASTROLOGICAL INSTRUMENT.

THE fourth part of Dr. Deecke's Etruskische Forschungen has just appeared. It is devoted to an elaborate investigation of the meaning of the inscriptions on an Etruscan bronze disc, recently found near Piacenza, of which we gave a brief account at the time of its discovery (Athen. No. 2065, Nov. 23, 1878). The disc is divided into thirty-eight compartments, each inscribed with one or more Etruscan words, and is provided with three protuberances, a cone, a pyramid, and a semicircle; and has four perforations, which are evidently eyeholes for taking observations of the heavens. This very curious scientific instrument seems to be the model of a "templum," as used by the Etruscan and Roman augurs for dividing the firmament into the "regions" which were supposed to be the special habitations of the different gods. Fabretti and other Italian archaeologists have hitherto hesitated in admitting the genuineness of this singular instrument, but the ingenuity and exhaustive learning which Dr. Deecke has brought to the discussion can hardly fail to carry conviction to the minds of most of his readers. His explanation of the divisions and inscriptions on the disc agrees in the main with the account which has already appeared in our columns, to which he refers in terms of strong approval. The names and positions of the "regions," as they appear on the disc, offer surprising coincidences with the elaborate descriptions given by Martianus Capella, a writer of the fourth or fifth century A.D., from whom we derive our chief knowledge of the celestial "regions" of the ancient astrologers. As to the "regions" of the Sun (Uail) and of the Moon (Tiv) no doubt can be entertained. Dr. Deecke is also successful in identifying with the descriptions of Martian the "regions" of Janus (Ani), Jupiter (Tinia), Juno (Uni), Liber (Faduna), Mars (Mars), Saturn (Satre), Dis or Vadius (Vetis), and Vulcan (Velch); and he makes out a strong, though perhaps less convincing, case as to the names of the occupants of most of the remaining regions. His interpretation of the inscribed words is in such substantial agreement with the description of Martian as to leave no reasonable doubt as to the general nature and use of the disc, while the discrepancies and unexplained difficulties are sufficiently numerous and important to supply a strong argument against the hypothesis of a modern forgery based upon the passage in Martian. The character of the alphabet which is employed in the inscriptions is also in favour of the genuineness of the disc. A forger would in all probability have made use of the normal Etruscan alphabet, whereas the alphabet employed is of an unusually late date, and must be assigned to the time of the early empire, a date which explains the curious admixture of Etruscan and Italic mythologic names. The names of the deities differ in several instances from the normal forms, which are known to us from the numerous Etruscan mirrors on which they are represented. A forger would most certainly not have confined himself to such characteristic Etruscan names as Uail, Tinia, and Faduna, but would have introduced the equally familiar names of Turan (Venus), Turmas (Mercury), Sethlans (Vulcan), Aplu (Apollo), and Menrva (Minerva), all of which are conspicuous by their absence.

Dr. Deecke's treatise is not only an important contribution to our knowledge of the Etruscan language and mythology, but it stands alone in the light which it throws on the Etruscan astrology, as borrowed and adapted by the Roman augurs. It may be added that the pamphlet contains five plates, which give facsimiles of the inscriptions, and explain very clearly the mode in which the disc must have been used in taking observations of the heavens.

Science Gossip.

MRS ARABELLA B. BUCKLEY, author of 'The Fairyland of Science,' has in the press the first part of a new work for young people, entitled 'Life and her Children,' which gives an account of the structure and habits of the invertebrate animals.

THE Queen has been pleased, on the recommendation of the Viceroy, to confer on Dr. De Vry, of the Hague, the dignity and distinction of a Companion of the Order of the Indian Empire, for his long and valuable services in connexion with the introduction of the chinchona tree into India and the manufacture of Indian quinine.

WITH the concurrence of the Government of Jamaica, a handbook of that island is now being compiled. It is intended to embrace particulars of the history, Flora, Fauna, physical geography, climate, and resources of the island, together with trustworthy statistical and other information as to the cultivation, trade and imports, and the civil and religious institutions of the colony. The compilers are Mr. F. Sanguinetti, of the Colonial Secretary's Office, and Mr. A. C. Sinclair, of the Government Printing Establishment.

MR. MUNGO PONTON's death is announced in the obituary column of the Times of the 6th inst. as having occurred at Clifton on the 3rd. Mr. Mungo Ponton made several contributions of much value in the early stages of photographic inquiry. He was the first to call attention to the peculiar photographic properties of the bichromate of potash, which was the origin of the permanent printing processes now so extensively employed.

THE Rev. Prof. Deussen presented to the International Congress of the Alpine Clubs at Geneva an interesting report on the mountains of Italy. The observations have been made upon mountains at 113 stations. Three of these merit especial mention. Stelvio, at the height of 2,543 metres; Valdabia, 2,548 metres; and the Little St. Bernard. The meteorological observations upon each are made every three hours, from six in the morning until nine in the evening. The results of these observations have been studied and compared with great care by Prof. Denza.

THE Philosophical Society of Glasgow have resolved on holding in that city an exhibition of coal-gas apparatus and appliances; of oil lamps, oil gas, and other artificial means of illumination; and of electricity, showing all the modes of generating the power, and its applications as an illuminating agent and as a motive power. The exhibition will be open for four weeks from the 28th of September. Awards for merit are to be given to such subjects as exhibit especial ingenuity or excellence.

M. JANSEN's discovery of successive transformations in the photographic image is not entirely new. In the early days of photography similar changes were observed by Sir John Herschel and by Mr. Robert Hunt. M. Jansen has, however, succeeded in obtaining, by the continued exposure of gelato-bromine plates, a succession of negative and positive images, alternating, by continued exposure to solar influence, in the most remarkable manner. This is a striking and most curious fact, requiring further investigation by competent experimentalists.

M. ÉMILE JEANNIN, of Paris, proposes to use celluloid for the process of obtaining stereotype plates for printing. The remarkable properties of this preparation appear to fit it in a peculiar manner for stereotyping, especially for cylinder machines running at high speed. A celluloid plate will yield, it is stated, 50,000 impressions.

M. E. WALES, at the session of the Chemical Committee of the Industrial Society of Mulhouse, advanced the curious idea that the corrosion of steam boilers is due to the action of ozone, which he thinks is generated by electrical action, resulting from the violent impulse of steam against the upper portion of the boiler.

THE Rev. J. Clifton Ward, who died not long since at Keswick, was for many years a highly esteemed member of the Geological Survey of England and Wales. In the Memoirs of the Geological Survey will be found valuable memoirs on the Yorkshire coal-field, the carboniferous rocks north and east of Leeds, and on the mining districts of Cumberland. Mr. Ward was mainly instrumental in establishing the Cumberland Association for the Advancement of Literature and Science, and as honorary secretary he maintained in activity the societies in union, and contributed to the annual volume of the Memoirs of the Association. A subscription has been opened by his friends, the purpose of which is to erect a mural tablet in the church of St. John's, Keswick, and to form a fund to assist in the education of Mr. Ward's two daughters.

FINE ARTS

DONN'S GREAT WORKS, CHRIST LEAVING THE TETRARCH, CHRIST ENTERING JERUSALEM, and THE SHAZER REMISSION (the latter not completed), each 28 by 22 in., with Dream of Plato's Wife. Dealers of the Cross, Night of the Crucifixion, Memoir of Chapman, &c., at the DONN GALLERY, 25, New Bond Street, Italy, The 10th, 11th.

L'Art et les Artistes Hollandais. Par H. Havard.—III. Beerestraeten, P. de Hoogh, P. Codde. (Paris, Quantin.)

THIS is the third instalment of a series of studies the former parts of which we have already praised warmly. Like its predecessors, this tractate comprises some additional notes on artists whose careers are not described at length. The appendices treat of Beerestraeten and P. Van Bronckhorst, and supply some extremely curious details concerning those painters. As in the previous instalments, M. Havard has most conscientiously searched the municipal records and other papers of Dutch cities and companies, especially those of Amsterdam. Jan Beerestraeten is hardly known in England; Stanley's 'Bryan' writes his name 'Baerstræet.' Cassel, the Hermitage, the Hague, London, and Florence, the last a collection rich in Dutch works, know not his name. We remember but one picture of his in England, and that is at Hadzor, a characteristic winter scene, not named in M. Havard's list; this work was at Manchester in 1857, and attributed to 'A. Van Beerestraeten.' Hadzor is the place where Dr. Waagen, seeing young ladies engaged in 'toxophilite exercises,' marvelled greatly at the impression made on the British mind by the victories of Crécy and Agincourt, which more than three centuries had not effaced.

Most of Beerestraeten's pictures, and they are but few, represent frost scenes in Amsterdam, at Bois-le-Duc, and other towns in the Low Countries. Besides these he produced views of Mediterranean ports, and representations of naval battles in the North Sea, in which the English generally got the worst of it. There are three capital pictures of his at Amsterdam (Nos. 20, 21, and 22); in each of which, as if to plague critics who vex their souls about the spelling of names, he signed himself differently, thus: 'J. Beerestraten,' 'J. Beerestraeten,' and 'J. Beer-stræten.' In the Berlin Gallery, No. 808a is signed 'J. Beerestraeten fecit 1664.' In the register of his marriage his name is spelled 'Berenstraten' and 'Berestraten,' while 'Beerstræet' is found on the picture which was till lately in the Six Collection. We follow M. Havard, who adopts the form which is most thoroughly Dutch, and suggests a residence in the Street of the Bears. There, no doubt, Abraham Janaz, the father of the painter, lived before he removed to the Elandstraat, from which the procession started on August 30th, 1642, when Jan himself was wedded to Magdalena Bronckhorst, of Amsterdam.

This marriage register supplies several data which before its discovery by M. Havard were forgotten. The artist was vaguely said to have painted between 1650 and 1690. But the register declares that in 1642 the bridegroom was 'out 20 jaer,' beyond his twentieth year, so that he must have been born before September, 1622. By a curious and ingenious series of wide inquiries, much too intricate and minute for our limits, M. Havard not only established the relationship of Bronckhorst with Beerestraeten, but discovered the place and date of the christening of Abraham Janaz's son Jan to be the old parish church of the Beerenstraat, May 31st, 1622. M. Havard found that the father was a 'Kuiper,' or cooper, who lived in the Elandstraat, the sixth house on the south side of the street; his mother's name was Dieuwert Dierx, his godmother's name was Eoertige Heirix; on August 30th, 1642, he married, as has been said, Magdalena Bronckhorst, of Amsterdam, daughter of Theunis Theunis, of the Bloemstraat in that city. He had five children, viz., Abraham, Jan, Jacob, Magdalena, and Daniel. Magdalena, the mother, died in 1665, and the inheritance of her children was a thousand florins, according to the Register in the Orphans' Chamber of Amsterdam. It appears that our painter married again, and died at Amsterdam in 1697. The last is the date usually given. Beerestraeten painted in a manner which reminds us of Vlieger. Lingelbach generally inserted the figures in his landscapes, because Beerestraeten was not very dexterous in that respect, although he may have worked up Lingelbach's Italian sketches of landscapes and given to them his own name. His works have been confounded with those of Van der Heyde and Bakhuizen. The painter himself appears, in the act of drawing and perched on a block of stone, in a corner of 'The Ruins of the Hôtel de Ville of Amsterdam,' one of his best pictures, now in the gallery of that place, No. 21.

M. Havard devotes a section of his book to 'Alexander Beerestraeten, brother of Jan,' whom the catalogues had created, but whom our author demolishes, showing that there was but one Beerestraeten, and that his first name was Jan.

The second section of this book is devoted to P. de Hoogh, otherwise De Hooghe, De Hooge, or De Hoogh, a more important artist than Beerestraeten; but we cannot give him so much space. Let it suffice to say that, whereas till now surmises supplied approximate data for this painter's biography, M. Havard has proved that De Hoogh was probably baptized December 12th, 1632 (eleven years earlier than Pilkington supposed), the son of Thomas Pieterse, a painter, and Jeannette Claes. Doubtless he was born in or near Rotterdam. He was described as of that city in the register of his marriage in the Reformed Church at Delft, May 3rd, 1654, where he is described as a 'young man.' His bride was Jeannette Van der Burch, a damsel living on the Binnenwaterloot of Delft, a canal still existing near the railway station. The name Rotterdam gave a clue to further researches, and in the Doopboek of that place the author found an entry of the baptism in the Oudekerk of 'Een Kint genaemt Pieter, vader Pieter de Hoogh, moeder Jannettje van der Burchoghet. [Witnesses] Heyndrick van Burch, Jacquemyntje van der Burch,' a note we need not translate. It is dated February 2nd, 1655, a date which leads M. Havard into a pretty close reckoning affecting the antenuptial reputation of the young Mrs. de Hoogh, which, although it is harmless, is not quite fair. The lady was of a good 'Reformed' or Anabaptist family, apparently reduced in fortune, and connected with a pottery. In November, 1656, 'Een Kint genaemt Anna' (after the mother) followed, at the baptismal table at Delft, Pieter, the son of Pieter, the son of Thomas, the son of Pieter. The painter appears to have finally left Delft at the end of 1657. He had been admitted a member of the guild of St. Luke of that city as a stranger or foreigner, probably after a residence in apprenticeship of five previous years, in September, 1655. These are very important data as to the technical education of De Hoogh, if he was really not born before 1632. He paid his 'scot' to the guild till 1657, the very year when he seems to have left the place. He is next heard of at Haarlem. In this town the death of Annette Van der Burch, supposed to have been his wife, is recorded, September 11th, 1680. Herr Van der Willigen found in the Register of Deaths a request, dated February 28th, 1681, for the opening of a tomb, No. 4, in the "côté bas" of the choir of the church of St. Bavon at Haarlem, for "Pieter de Hooge," whose wife had been buried in the same sepulchre. This may have been our painter; the "Pieter" in question lived near the "Groote houtpoort" of this city. At any rate there was a picture ascribed to him in the Paturle Collection, sold in 1872 for 20,200 francs, which, according to M. Havard's catalogue, is dated 1698. Some authorities say that he died in 1708.

Sir Joshua Reynolds. By F. S. Pulling. Illustrated. (Sampson Low & Co.)—Another volume of the series called "The Great Artists" lies on our table. It is a tolerably good and succinct compilation of biographical data concerning Reynolds and his circle. Yet at the same time it is an extremely superficial book, the work of a man of letters, who has "got up" his subject with some courage and tact, but possesses no special qualifications for the task, and is destitute of close knowledge of Reynolds's time and the peculiar learning of an art critic. There are compilations and compilations, and Mr. Pulling might have been expected to be acquainted with something more than the rudiments of the literary history of the eighteenth century, even if the art history of that period is outside his range. Take, for instance, the following, from p. 15:—"Who asks who Penelope Boothby was? Sufficient it is that, in her childlike coquetry and arch simplicity, she is the type of fresh young life in the eighteenth century." Now, here is blunder on blunder. If Mr. Pulling had been able to answer his own question, or even seen the picture he praises, he would have known that the pretty child was anything but the "type" he supposes her to have been, and he would have read 'Sorrows sacred to the Memory of Penelope,' which her unhappy father wrote. Many of the writers of "The Great Artists" are, in the old bookellers' sense of the term, "eminent hands"; some of them are experts, acquainted with their subjects; but among them are "cobblers" who have not stuck to their last. On p. 27 a somewhat similar mistake is made about Lady Sarah Bunbury.

A Handbook for Painters and Art-Students on the Character and Use of Colours. By W. J. Muckley. (Baillière.)—The appearance of this book is timely, and the author's practical experience gives to it a high and peculiar value. Mr. Muckley has arranged his materials with care and tact, and thus afforded the student ready access to the fruits of his experience. Summaries of permanent, semi-permanent, and fugitive pigments are offered, and their utility is obvious. We notice among the permanent pigments is orange vermillion, the very colour which, in a highly commendatory letter acknowledging the dedication of the book to himself, is denounced by Mr. Poynter as not only dangerous, from the uncertainty attending the "preparation," but unnecessary, and destructive, moreover, of the purity and delicacy of the tints. Opinions may, and do, differ extremely as to the latter part of this assertion of the R.A.'s, but it is unfortunate that these doctors should differ in so important a point as the true character of a pigment which stands nearly at the top of the scale of brilliancy. Again, Indian red is admitted into the category of pigments which are permanent in oil or water. We fear the ghosts of Robson and Barret could tell Mr. Muckley a different tale, especially when they saw what happens to this colour in combination with Antwerp blue. The last pigment is included with those of the second order of permanence, but we should rather rank it in the third—that is, among the fugitive materials. We are glad to see that Strontian and Orient yellows are denounced. Pure linseed oil is recommended; but how are you to get it? We are told that Messrs. Mander Brothers, of Wolverhampton, have made arrangements to prepare pure copal and amber varnishes for painters' use. Let us see what the new Guild of Colour-makers, "Limited," will do for artists.

L'Année Archéologique. Par Anthony St. Paul. (Hachette.)—This summary of the leading archaeological events for the year 1879, which appears to be a careful compilation, will be of more value in France, and perhaps in other places on the Continent, than in England. At the same time, it is of interest for us to know here, and in some degree authoritatively, the result of various stonings and public archaeological gatherings which have taken place in a neighbouring country with which we are in many ways so nearly connected. The Année Archéologique commences with a calendar, in which for each day some event is recorded, naturally, for the most part, in connexion with the history of France, followed by a list of "centenaries" from A.C. 120 to A.D. 1780, the purport or use of which is not so clear. A third section gives us "L'Archéologie au Salon Français de 1879," "Congrès et Réunions," comprising, inter alia, very interesting reports by MM. Chabouillet, Le Vicomte Delaborde, and M. Caillemier, with an account of the annual public meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions et des Belles-Lettres. A further section gives us briefly archaeological details from Belgium, Italy, England, &c., not omitting some details of prehistoric antiquities discovered in Japan. A fifth section is devoted to "Construction, Restauration, Vandalisme"; a sixth, and most valuable one, to the bibliography of the subject, with a list of the papers read or published by the leading French archaeological reviews or papers. A seventh section gives a full list of the members of many of the principal scientific societies of France, as notably of the Académie des Inscriptions, with a final report of great value, by the late Viollet-le-Duc, "Sur les Monuments Historiques de la France, leur Classement," &c. It is to be hoped that this work, which appears to have been got up with great care, may meet with adequate support for its publication in future years.

THE PRIVATE COLLECTIONS OF ENGLAND. No. LIII.—WORTLEY HALL, SHEFFIELD.

As the crow flies, Sheffield is not more than nine miles from Wortley Hall, yet, although in the heart of a smoky region, this mansion stands amid lawns and woods as stainless as if Tubal Cain had never forged a scythe or sword-blade. You may walk there for miles amid almost primeval silence under stately oaks and rocks shrouded with ferns. The Don rushes through a ravine near the house, and, though the noise of trains is from time to time audible in the higher glades, the Dragon of Wantley need not have left his den, which still towers among the crags on the ridge where, it is said, one may see the towers of York and Lincoln Minsters, north and east. This is the place which Walpole thought Pope described as

On rifted rocks, the Dragon's late shade.

Wharnccliffe Chase is the last fragment of Sherwood that is worthy of that name, so prized by —all that love green haunts and loneliness.

It is full of deer, and rich in oaks so old that they may have seen Robin Hood. In Wharnccliffe Lodge, for a time at least, lived Lady Mary Wortley Montagu. She must have cherished happy memories of the place and its beauty, for long after her separation from her husband, and while she was distracted by the weakness of her son, she wrote from Avignon that the Rock of Douse, at the junction of the Rhône and the Durance, "is the most beautiful land prospect I ever saw (except Wharnccliffe)."

Wortley Hall is chiefly remarkable for the fine collection it contains of portraits in oil and miniatures, many of which, apart from their technical merits, are of considerable personal and historical interest. It is hardly less noteworthy in the eyes of the student of modern art, for the walls of the Drawing-Room in which there hangs a portrait of the Earl of Wharnccliffe, are decorated with four large pictures by Mr. Poynter, a series which the Earl of Wharnccliffe originally intended should represent legends connected with dragons, in honour of the famous monster called the Dragon of Wantley, who is fabled to have occupied the den we have before alluded to. This self-consistent design was changed after two of the pictures were painted, and the series now represents More of More Hall, the hero of the local legend, combating the Dragon of Wantley; 'Andromeda rescued by Perseus,' 'Atalanta's Race,' and 'Naumachia and her Maidens.' Having already described these pictures when they were at exhibitions of the Royal Academy, we need not say much about them further on. Nor is it necessary to enter at length into the personal histories and genealogical associations of the portraits. The student desirous of information on this subject may profitably consult Hunter's 'South Yorkshire,' p. 307. No account has been published of these collections of paintings. Dr. Waagen did not describe Wortley or its contents. We are under special obligations to the Earl of Wharnccliffe for permission to write about his pictures and for the information he has generously afforded us concerning them.

One of the most attractive and interesting of the portraits is that of Lady Mary Pierrepont (afterwards Wortley Montagu) by Kneller, a graceful and pretty figure in a silvery white dress, and with a slender waist tightly bound. In fact, she is delineated in a manner which Jervas adopted without much success. He imparted stiffness where Kneller afforded simplicity, and dryness where his master gave brightness. This really is a beautiful portrait of its kind, and, more than most Knellers, reminds us of Van Dyck. We suppose this to be the work referred to by Pope's 'Extemporaneous Lines on the Picture of Lady M. W. Montagu by Kneller.' Near this is a fine likeness of Mary (born Hervey), Countess of Erbe, daughter of the Earl of Bristol and Bishop of Derry, a lady who lived till 1842. She was the mother of the first Lady Wharnccliffe. It is a capably painted and beautiful head, and the features are most delicate; the work of — Clarke. A second Kneller comes next to notice, being the likeness of Mary (born Churchill), Duchess of Montagu, a bust with a long neck, in profile to our left, in a sea-green dress: an excellent example, very characteristic of the painter, being well drawn and solidly modelled, with clear, bright carnations. This portrait was mezzotinted by J. Faber in 1740, and published by him "at the Golden Head in Bloomsbury Square" (see Mr. J. Q. Smith's 'British Mezzotint Portraits,' Faber, jun., 246). The "Golden Head" was a frequent sign with painters and engravers, e.g., it was Hogarth's, in Leicester Fields; Sir R. Strang's, in Henrietta Street, Covent Garden; G. King's, in Brownlow Street, Drury Lane; J. Dubou's, in Cecil Street. The earliest known example is that of J. Savage, "in y^e Old Bailey," in 1691. Pope's "Angel Goddess Montagu" was famous for her beauty. She was the youngest daughter of the great Duke of Marlborough. Her husband was the last Duke of Montagu, whose portrait by Dahl Faber engraved likewise. This duke was painted by Kneller in the "Kit Cat" series, a picture which Faber engraved in 1731. In the same series is Kneller's portrait of Evelyn, Duke of Kingston, Lady M. W. Montagu's father. Readers will remember the anecdote of the fondness shown by this parent for his charming daughter. At the Kit Cat Club, having to toast the most beautiful lady he knew, he named his daughter, then a child, and promptly produced her, daintily dressed, to the club, so that she was welcomed, toasted, and perhaps declared an honorary member of that noble Whig institution.

Lely painted Lady Denham (born Brook) in a dress of carise velvet lined with pink satin. She is seated by a pillar, on the base of which rests one of her hands, while the other lies in her lap and on a satin petticoat of that dead-leaf colour which the painter so often employed with admirable effect. It is a capital, richly tinted picture, and seems to have been carefully restored or thoroughly preserved, so that it is an example of that condition to which, no doubt, very many Lelys, now in lumber rooms, might readily be brought. It is a fact that good Lelys are much better pictures than they have the credit of being. Of this there is a good illustration in his work lately added to the National Portrait Gallery, a likeness of another of "these cattle," being that of Mrs. Jane Middleton, recently noticed at length in these columns. "The Duke of York is wholly given up to his Lady Denham," wrote Pepys in his 'Diary,' October 8th, 1666, and at other times condemned this woman. She is said to have been poisoned (see Pepys, November 10th, 12th, 1666; January 7th, 1667): "The Duke of York is troubled for her, and hath declared he will never have another public mistress again." There was controversy as to who poisoned her, her husband or her royal lover's wife. Aubrey said the Countess of Rochester administered the fatal dose "with chocolate." Of her character and death, and of Lely's pictures of this class, there is much in Grammont. There is another portrait of Lady Denham by Lely at Hampton Court, probably one of those painted at the instance of the Duchess of York. Lady Denham is in amber satin with flowers in her lap. A third portrait by Lely is at Althorp.

Another Lely (or Kneller) here is the portrait of Anne, daughter of Sir F. Wortley II. The expression is most vivacious. The lady is depicted seated, in a dress of rich red under a blue cloak, and holding a garland. It is a little positive in colour. By the same artist is the portrait of this lady's husband, the Hon. Sidney Montagu, in a full-bottomed wig and a laced cravat. He was the second son of Pepys's patron, the Earl of Sandwich, and the father of Lady M. W. Montagu's husband. He was probably one of the "young gentlemen" who, at Cranborne, disturbed the rest of Pepys and his wife by "flinging of cushions and other mad sports." This was ungrateful, for Pepys was evidently fond of "Mr. Sidney."

The next portrait takes us forward to "other times, other manners." It is a small version, of great merit and spirit, by Reynolds of his picture of John, third Earl of Bute, the minister, and his secretary Mr. Charles Jenkinson, afterwards the first Earl of Liverpool: whole-length figures standing together, the former wearing a puce coat and the Garter, and in the act of speaking to his companion as if giving directions. It is a choice specimen of the artist, evidently entirely by his own hand, and exceptionally rich in tone and luminous in colour: the blue coat of Mr. Jenkinson goes admirably with the puce coat of his neighbour. The chiaroscuro is adapted to bring out the figures. It is a much finer picture than the finished or enlarged work which belongs to the Earl of Bute. In some respects it reminds us of the handwork of Jackson at his best. The next portrait represents the same Earl of Bute, and is the work of the same painter. The peer is standing as if at a window or balcony, in an attitude of contemplation, and holding a large miniature in a black frame. The attitude is a little stiff. This is a sketch, found under the other. Lord Wharncliffe has another portrait here of the same lord, full-length, life-size, in Garret robes, and holding his plumed hat. It was at Manchester in 1857, No. 290, and at the National Portrait Exhibition in 1866, No. 448. In 1779 Reynolds painted the earl's son, John, then Viscount Mount Stuart, afterwards first Marquis of Bute, and the picture is here, a bust in peer's robes, the face in three-quarters view to our right. The light is from the front, and so direct that the features have hardly any visible shadows; nevertheless the workmanship is exceptionally broad and soft, the modelling is rich and fine. The condition of this picture is excellent.

Not far from the last hangs an interesting series of four paintings, representing the reception of the embassy of Mr. Edward Wortley Montagu to the Sultan, of which the envoy's wife has given so lively an account. Some of the great men of the Porte are grouped alternately with the English, each party in their proper dresses. There is a small picture of Lady M. W. Montagu leading her son by the hand, both in quasi-Oriental dresses. The lady's beauty is not unlike that of the fine line engraving said to represent her and known as 'My Aunt.' Her peculiarly erect carriage is marked here. A lute-player and a pipe-bearer, the latter holding a letter, accompany the principal group. C. F. Della Roca painted the next portrait of Lady Mary, evidently when she was affected by a melancholy whim, for she sits with writing materials before her on a table, and one hand is on a skull. She wears a low red dress and holds a book. This picture was No. 234 in the National Portrait Exhibition of 1866. Much more interesting is the portrait by Richardson of the same lady, of life-size to the knees, standing, with her left hand on her hip, and with the other hand holding the front edge of her dress, which is cut open very low, so that her bosom is much exposed. An upright white collar is about her neck. She is looking to the left, with the eyes a little downwards. Not a good picture, it is a capital portrait. It has been engraved. The Duke of Portland has a miniature of this lady when young by Zincke. The best of her likenesses is that miniature in a Turkish dress which is now here, and was in the possession of the Earl of Harrington; it was engraved in her 'Letters and Works,' 1837.

Near this picture is a good portrait of Sir H. Vane (the elder?), a half-length, in armour and a lilac scarf. Romney painted the likeness of Edward Wortley Montagu, Lady Mary's son, of which versions are here and at Warwick Castle, showing him in a Turkish dress. We noticed another portrait of him, with a white beard, at Wentworth Castle. It was at Leeds. That before us is not one of Romney's best productions. Very close relations seem to have subsisted between the painter and his sitter almost to the last days of the latter. A capital likeness of Mr. E. W. Montagu, Lady Mary's husband, by Kneller, in a puce coat, with the right hand extended, was painted for Addison and bequeathed to the sitter: it is now here.

Among older portraits it is interesting to notice the following. Elizabeth, wife of Sir R. Wortley, afterwards Countess of Devonshire, as by Zuccherò, and a whole-length figure, walking with a stick in one hand, gloves in the other, wearing a black dress trimmed with pearls; a veil falls behind the figure; her white hair appears under her coil. Old as she is, her beauty is but little diminished. The carnations are low in tone, while the shadows are rather brown. The execution is remarkable for solidity; the finish is good; the design is less stiff than is common in portraits which in this country bear Zuccherò's name. A fine sense of the richness of local colour is apparent in the yellow curtains behind the figure. Near this is a capital portrait, said to represent one of the Portuguese maids of honour whose advent with Katherine of Braganza created so great a sensation in this country in 1662. Her long black hair is trained in the fashion illustrated in portraits of her royal mistress, hanging down her back and plastered in an ugly curve over her forehead. The best example of this costume is Lord Clarendon's bust of Queen Katherine, now at the Grove, which was No. 834 in the National Portrait Exhibition, 1866. A portrait of the same type has lately been added to the National Portrait Gallery. The anonymous damsel was doubtless, as Grammont says, one of "the six frights who called themselves Maids of Honour." She wears a dress of citron colour, embroidered with silver flowers, likewise rich lace and pearl ornaments; her sleeves are very large, and of white over yellow puffing open to the forearm. The costume is so hideous that the spectator sympathizes with the objections of Charles's Court. It is displayed in Faithorne's print of the queen, of which the original was at Strawberry Hill, and is now at Montreal, Kent, the property of Earl Amherst, a picture that is said to be that which was shown to Charles before his marriage. A good picture of a lady in a black dress with light brown hair, hung not far from the last, looks like the work of Old Stone. Here is an excellent portrait of Sir Kenelm Digby with sunflowers. Amongst others are likenesses of Queen Elizabeth, James I., Charles I., Charles II., and lords, ladies, and knights of later generations.

Among the greatest treasures at Wortley is a collection of nearly one hundred miniatures, of all dates but the earliest, many of which were lent by Lord Wharncliffe to the Exhibition of Miniatures, 1865, and in 1879 to the Royal Academy. This collection, almost the richest in England, is placed in the Drawing-Room at Wortley. Among the historical personages are Madame de Brun, holding a portrait of Voltaire; Marie Antoinette at the age of fifteen, by Drouais, in oil; the Princess de Lamballe, by Hallé; Madame Catiani, by Saint; the Duchesse d'Angoulême, by Dumont, 1816; Madame de Pompadour, by Madame V. Coster, after Boucher; Lady Elizabeth Foster, afterwards Duchess of Devonshire; Lady Hamilton; the first Lord Wharncliffe; the Duchess of Devonshire; Mrs. J. S. Wortley Mackenzie, and three more portraits of ladies, all by Conway; Mrs. Fitzherbert; Elizabeth Farren, Countess of Derby; James I., by N. Hilliard, in oil, on card; Catherine of Russia, in the dress she wore in the Crimea, 1787; the third Earl of Bute, by N. Hone, dated 1766; Charles Edward Stuart, enamel, by Zincke; Edward Seymour, the Protector, by I. Oliver; E. W. Montagu; Lord Godolphin, by Boite; Madame de Montespan; the Duchesse de Chevreuse; Madame de Genlis, by Dumont; Arabella Stuart, by I. Oliver; the Earl of Totnes; and Mademoiselle Oliva, who was concerned in the "affair of the diamond necklace." Although the last-named was not a beauty, her miniature has the charm of great vivacity, and the colour is exquisitely delicate; the harmony of the carnations with the warm white of her dress and purple sash is enjoyable. The bosom is finely wrought. Near this is a beautiful likeness of Rosalie Dugazon, of the Opéra Comique, by Augustin, 1795. She is not beautiful, but her portrait is a lovely piece of art, and shows wonderful skill in the drawing of the eyelids, the modelling of the cheek, and, in the shaded side thereof, the rich reflections. It is thus a masterpiece in rendering daylight, and in handling unusually solid. Technically speaking, its general effect is injured by the background, which is too light. There is a miniature of the Duke of Lauderdale in a full wig, by Flatman, which is an example of the effect of employing a large style for small pictures. This head (and the fact is characteristic of Flatman's works) looks as if it were life-size, so broad and vigorous is it. A cipher of "C. L." is at the side. In the same technical category should be placed the miniature in oil of Elizabeth Capel, Countess of Carnarvon, the back of which bears the name of the lady, the signature of the painter, R. Gibson, the dwarf, and the date 1657, "Ascot, Janu. 31." It is one of the finest works of the class, and in art takes a place between the styles of Van Dyck and Lely. Like many of Gibson's productions, it is rather cold and blue in the flesh shadows, and, if it has not faded, it shows his pallid carnations. The wonderful thing about it is perfect verisimilitude; its fidelity to life gives it the character of a biography. The silvery tones are delicious; the style is of the largest, and nothing can excel the draughtsmanship of the peculiarly pulpy lips. 'The Countess of Erbe,' by Mrs. Mee, an artist to whom Dickens was unjust because he had not seen her works at Windsor, reproduces with genuine grace the mannerisms of Lawrence, as 'The Duchess of Rutland,' which is signed "H. H., 1775," for Horace Hone, A.R.A., whom the mode of Reynolds even in its loose drawing. The latter is a pretty but not a sound work. The more masculine mode of art in miniature appears in the older specimens to which we now come. See 'My Lord Carnarvon,' which is signed and dated "J. H. [J. Hoskins the Younger], 1655," a luminous and sound portrait of the peer, wearing armour, and with his long fair hair enclosing a very sweet and gracious face. It is solid and very powerful in modelling after the then fashionable mode of Van Dyck. The younger Hoskins was a pupil of his father, of the same name, who likewise taught the Coopers. 'Arabella Stuart' is by Isaac Oliver (?), and the portrait of an extremely pretty and evidently somewhat weak-minded young lady, having three red roses in her pale yellow hair. The work reminds us of the mode of Hilliard, which looked to Holbein's Gothic style, rather than the fashion of the Oliviers, which followed the types of Van Dyck. This miniature is delicately touched, but there is not any sign of labour in it. 'My Lady Capel,' in widow's weeds, is in oil on card, and by R. Gibson—another very good example of that master's manner, and better as a picture than the above-named one by the same. It is essentially an oil-painter's miniature, and shows a black veil falling over the lady's dark brown ringlets. 'My Lady Franklin' is by S. Cooper, in oil, and an excellent specimen of his style. It is a charming picture, especially remarkable for colour and solidity. She wears a dress of opulent of very brilliant quality; notice the cold shadows of the carnations. A beautiful picture in oil, and full of character, is that which represents Henry IV. of France, with white hair and beard, wearing a black dress, and holding a branch of olive (?). Here is 'Anne of Denmark,' a capital piece, probably by N. Hilliard, or his son Lawrence. Besides these we admired Sir Henry Capel, by Cooper, in a full brown wig, and not fewer than eighteen miniatures by Coway, the more charming of which represent the Princess Amelia, with a very sweet and innocent face; Mrs. Robinson, with her big, wondering eyes; and one or two anonymous likenesses. Coway's mannerisms are obvious, such as a constant smile, large eyes, a peachy complexion of pearl and rose, that strongly suggests the use of cosmetics, and seems to prove that the "Macaroni Painter," as Coway's detractors delighted to style him, actually matched the carnations of his sitters. 'Mrs. Fitzherbert' looks like a Venus grown fat; Charles II. in armour is signed "S. C., 1667," for Samuel Cooper. Besides these Lord Wharfedale has collected miniatures of Lucy Percy, Countess of Carlisle, by Hoskins the Elder; Addison, enamel, by Zincke; Hortense, Duchesse de Mazarin, by Beaubrun; the Earl of Dalketh, by B. Lens; Lady Hunsdon was painted on an ace of hearts, and her likeness signed by I. Oliver.

Some modern water-colour drawings merit attention. They include ten "dewy" and luminous landscapes by De Wint. A few of them are not quite finished, while one has faded.

By Turner is a superb early drawing, signed "W. Turner, '38," and representing Harewood House, the seat of the Earl of Harewood, the pictures in which were the subject of No. XL of this series of papers. The house stands on a bank, which slopes to a river, with masses of trees shading it, and gracefully leading the eye through the view. A clump of dark trees with deer is in the foreground, and revealed by a bright gleam of sunlight. The house stands in less brilliant light in the middle distance. The distance is in cooler light; the remote horizon is treated with extraordinary delicacy of tones and bright, tender, and silvery tints. The foreground, except so far as the gleam of light is concerned, is in a passing shadow of a cool tint, which extends over the whole of the work on our left, notwithstanding the warmer shadows of the larger masses of foliage on the meadow. Thus an effect of double shadows is produced, and the fact is noteworthy because it shows that Turner had thus early mastered one of the charms by which he worked wonders in later life. The beauty of the sky is ineffable, and comprises the utmost delicacy of a clear, pure, turquoise tint exquisitely graded in tone and colour; large white, somewhat formal cumuli occupy part of the firmament, and with marvellous draughtsmanship show the lights, shadows, and reflections proper to each cloud. The only defect of the picture is one common to the painter's art at this period of his life, a certain scottiness of the shadows. The rest works like a charm, of which the mid-distance has the most potency. 'Harewood House,' engraved by J. Scott, was one of the illustrations of 'Leodis and Elmete,' by T. D. Whitaker. It is supposed that while making this drawing the painter became acquainted with Mr. Fawkes, of Farnley Hall, whose collections of Turner's drawings we have described in this series of papers.

A picture by Mr. E. W. Cooke should not be overlooked. It shows a Dutch boat beached and unloaded by fishermen into a cart. It is an interesting attempt at composition in three pyramidal masses, which are united into one by means of chiaroscuro of a rudimentary kind, the craft, the cart, and their attendants; a more distant group of fishermen do not combine well with the rest, nor is the attempt to make them do so happy. The effect is sunny, soft, and bright, with a good deal of air. The foreground and water have been painted with unusual care for works of this class, and altogether, being much less hard than the pictures of the artist commonly are, this is an acceptable example. By Copley Fielding is a beautiful landscape in oil, showing a river meandering in aure curves through woodland to the distant sea of a deeper blue. A pool is in front, and, like its neighbouring meadow, shaded by a clump of trees on our left; alternate bands of light and shade extend to the glowing and softened distance, where a white cliff looms. A grand mass of foliage is on our right in the meadow. Figures are in front. On the whole, this is a noble example of a somewhat mannered and over-educated style of landscape. By Robson or Glover is a large drawing of the sea after a storm breaking on the coast, a large rock being on our left in the distance and accompanied by mist; the sun is setting behind the vapour, and is strong enough to break through and illuminate the whole. The charm of the work is in the drawing and modelling of the waves, which are first rate, in the fineness of the sky, and the light on the leaping waves. The sky is, as usual with Robson's productions, very much foxed indeed, owing to the fading of the Indian red he used.

By Mr. Naish is a highly characteristic large landscape, called 'Tintagel,' a most brilliant and solid work, of fine poetic quality, because it is so faithful to nature. A noble small landscape by Signor Costa illustrates different views of art from those of the English painter: it is a masterpiece in a grave, eclectic style. A head of a girl in the act of hitting a flower, by Mr. F. Sandys, which many of our readers will remember at the Royal Academy, enriches this collection with its brilliant painting and passionate expression.

Wortley Hall contains the four pictures by Mr. Poynter before named. They are the chief ornaments of the stately and beautiful room for which they were painted. As these works were so recently before the public, we must content ourselves with a few descriptive lines on each. 'Perseus and Andromeda,' was No. 505 at the Royal Academy Exhibition in 1872, and it shows the virgin chained to the rock by her hands, which are behind her back. Her head is decorated like that of an antique bride; her feet are on white drapery, which is washed by the sea and drips on the stone; her red robe is blown out in a wide curve. The monster has issued from the waves; his body trails in many folds, and penetrates the depths of a cave which the waves fill. Perseus has alighted on a stone before the opening of the cave, and, standing with his feet wide apart and firmly placed, thrusts his falchion into the open mouth of the dragon between the teeth; he is in armour; his action is full of energy. Andromeda's naked form, the best part of the picture, is a fine example of vigorous conception, and shows the pallor of horror in every limb and feature. The sea is a capital, learned study. 'The Fight between More of More Hall and the Dragon of Wantley' was No. 541 in the Academy Exhibition of 1873. The dragon is under the foot of More, in the agonies of death. The action of the hero is full of intense passion. The finest part of the picture is, we think, the grand, ward, lonely-looking waste hills of the background, seen, or half seen, in blue, misty twilight. 'Atalanta's Race,' No. 943 in the Academy Exhibition of 1876, is even better known than either of its forerunners, and has been more warmly admired. The scene is near the middle of the course; the time is while the swift virgin stoops to pick up the treacherous apple. A golden fillet spreads like an iris above her shoulders as, keeping her robes together with one hand, she stretches the other to the prize; Hippomenes continues his fight, and the spectators cheer. The design is admirable, and fully carries out a vigorous conception. 'Nausicaa and her Maidens playing at Ball,' No. 307 in the exhibition of last year, is best known of the series, and least of all needs description to remind our readers of its exceptionally good colour, clearness, and pure illumination, the energetic nature of its design, and the careful draughtsmanship it displays.

Five-3rd Series.

Messrs. W. H. Allen & Co. have issued the prospectus of a work on the 'Architecture and Decorative Arts of Rajputana,' by Dr. De Fabeck, of the Bengal Medical Service, and Major S. S. Jacob, Bombay Staff Corps. It will consist chiefly of illustrations, and will be brought out in a series of volumes containing about sixty plates each. The cost of each volume to subscribers will not exceed three guineas. The first volume will contain illustrations of Akbar Shah's palace at Futtahpore Sikri, the grand Mosque at Ajmere, the Temple of Mahadeo at Harush, the Palace of Amber, the Jaina Temple at Sangar, and Baktawar Singh's Chhatri at Ulwar. There will be plates also of the marvellous chintees manufactured in Rajputana.

ADDITIONAL antiquities excavated by Mr. Rassam have arrived at the British Museum. They principally come from Kouyunjik. Amongst them are three terra-cotta cylinders of Sennacherib and an Assyrian bronze helmet.

Before the end of the present year the Parvis of Notre Dame, Paris, will be extended by removing and otherwise completely regulating the buildings which form its sides. The whole of the quai on the smaller branch of the Seine will be cleared of incumbrances. The last fragment of the very ancient Hôtel Dieu has been removed, and the quai will be open. It has been decided not to plant trees on the pavé lest the church should be hidden. A colossal statue of Charlemagne will, it is said, occupy the centre of the place. It is further proposed to re-establish the ancient "Point de Départ," or central stone of road measurement to all parts of France, which till the Revolution stood at the foot of the last buttress on the left of the Grand Portail de Notre Dame.

We regret to record the death, in his seventy-third year, of Mr. Thomas Henry Wyatt, the well-known architect, of Great Russell Street, an event which occurred suddenly on the 5th inst. The deceased was one of the sons of Mr. Matthew Wyatt, police magistrate of Lambeth, and elder brother of Sir Matthew Digby Wyatt; he was Honorary Secretary to the Institute of Architects for some years, and resigned that office quite recently.

THE Twenty-third Annual Report of the Trustees of the National Portrait Gallery has been published, and supplies details about the condition and progress of that rapidly improving public institution. In addition to matters we have already noticed, the Trustees acknowledge the receipt of five still unnamed portraits from the British Museum, and portraits of Sarah Austin, given by Lady Arthur Russell; Baron T. Dimsdale, by Plimer, given by Baroness Dimsdale; a portrait of Copley Fielding, by Sir W. Bozall, given by Mrs. Longland; a head of Robert Owen, modelled by J. Levesotti, given by Mr. J. Cusfeld; Inigo Jones, copied by Old Stone from a Van Dyck which is now at St. Petersburg, given by the Rev. J. Fuller Russell; Henry Howard, Earl of Surrey, given by Mr. T. Stanton; a portrait of Macias, by E. M. Ward, given by Mr. G. Schaff; Queen Mary II., by Netscher, purchased; B. West, a bust in marble, by Chantrey, purchased; Sir W. Beechey, by himself, purchased; the sixth Duke of Norfolk, by Mrs. Beale, purchased; Sir Henry Rowley Bishopp, purchased; and W. Faithorne, by Walker, purchased. Many autograph letters and other MSS. have been added to the Gallery. The number of visitors was affected by the closing of the Gallery in the spring, and amounted to 64,084. The Gallery is open free to the public every week-day except Friday. The Trustees lament the lack of room for the deposit of casts and other materials used by copyists; but they acknowledge the grant of increased accommodation by the Treasury. For want of space many electrotypes from monumental effigies are still withheld from public view. The Trustees desire that further improvements may be made in the lighting of the upper long gallery, where the construction of the roof lends itself to such an improvement, so that an entire side, or double the wall space, of that gallery may be made available for the display of pictures. This may be done at trifling cost, and ought not to be delayed. The Trustees deplore the danger of fire to the collections on account of the proximity of wooden buildings and passages, used by visitors at the Albert Hall evening concerts, any one of whom might burn the Gallery by throwing down a cigar light! Surely this is a unique arrangement and might be dispensed with.

M. LEMAITRE, sculptor of part of the front of the Madeleine and of numerous other important works, is dead. He was born at Valenciennes in 1798, and educated in the École des Beaux-Arts, where he obtained the Prix de Rome in his twenty-third year. He made his début in the Salon of 1827. His work in the Salon of 1831 was bought for the Luxembourg. He produced many well-known statues, busts, and groups, and has been distinguished in his profession for half a century. He became a Knight of the Legion of Honour in 1834, having previously received a medal of the first class on account of the tomb of Mdlle. Duchesne at Père Lachaise and statues of Kléber and Louis XIV. for Versailles. In 1836 he became an Officer of the Legion and a member of the Académie in place of Boiss. He produced the bas-relief of 'Les Funérailles de Marceau' on the Arc de l'Étoile, and the statues of Henri IV. at the Hôtel de Ville, of Hoche at Versailles, and of Froissart at Valenciennes. In 1852 he was sent to the Corps Législatif by the electors of Valenciennes, and re-elected in 1857 and 1863.

ARTISTS will do well to note that the new plans of the Metropolitan Board of Works, following the acquisition of the Thames bridges, comprise proposals for taking down the old and picturesque, but, it must be admitted, dangerous and inconvenient bridges at Battersea and Putney. New bridges are to occupy the sites of the old ones. Putney Bridge is said to have been erected from plans by Cheselden the anatomist.

'THE CASHEM-MARR' is a monthly budget of designs and information which is likely to be useful to what its promoters call "the furniture trade," by which, no doubt, they mean not only the shopkeepers who sell furniture, but the men who make it. Although confined to its proper subject, it is by no means unreadable or devoid of culture and taste.

THE frustra, capitals, entablature, and other parts of the colonnade removed from Burlington House to make room for Mr. Barry's building, are lying by the roadside at Battersea Park, and are being rapidly destroyed by the playful children and louts who, in disporting themselves there, wantonly break the carvings. Who is responsible for this wicked waste? When is the screen to the entrance of the park, which was to be formed by re-erecting this colonnade, to be set up? These remains have been lying where they are for nearly fifteen years.

THE French journals report the death, at Chazay d'Amargues, near Lyons, of M. François Claudius Comte-Calix, a constant contributor to the Salons of thirty years past, a painter of genre, historical genre, and landscape subjects. He was born at Lyons, and became a pupil in the École des Beaux-Arts in that city, and has been one of the most diligent and popular of French painters of his class. Some of his works have been engraved. He obtained a medal of the third class in 1844, and vuyets of the same in 1837, 1850, and 1863.

THE French Minister of the Fine Arts has given commissions for several works to be executed for Paris. Equestrian statues of Kléber and Marceau are ordered for the Ministry of War; busts of Sophie Arnould and other celebrities for the Opéra; a bust of Quinet and a statue of Budeus for the Collège de France; and busts of Charles V., Francis I., the Comte de Caylus, &c., for the Bibliothèque Nationale. Besides this St. Quentin, Amiens, Poitiers, St. Omer, Arras, Soissons, Rheims, La Havre, Rouen, Grenoble, Châteaudun, St. Dié, Versailles, Montpellier, Luxeuil, Nancy, Compiègne, Dieppe, Laval, Bastia, and Riom are to have a share of the minister's patronage. The total outlay of public money for these commissions is 430,000 francs, part of which is to be voted by municipal authorities. 345,000 francs are charged to the Government.

THE fiftieth anniversary of the opening of the Royal Museums at Berlin was celebrated on the 3rd of August.

THE new Palais des Beaux-Arts at Brussels, opposite the palace of the Count of Flanders, has been opened to the public. It will be appropriated to annual exhibitions of works of art.

CAV. A. BERTOLOTTI has published at Florence (Tipografia Editrice della Gazzetta d'Italia) an interesting volume, entitled 'Artisti Belgi ed Olandesi a Roma nei Secoli XVI. e XVII.'

which contains excerpts from documents found in the Roman archives concerning the artists in question, some of whom were men of note, such as Paul and Matthew Brill, Michael Corcia, and a few others. Such a book concerning Low Country artists in Florence would be very welcome.

MUSIC

THE ARTIST'S WORLD

It would be a wearisome and profitless task to review any considerable portion of the immense mass of sheet music issued annually by the leading publishers, and destined to enjoy at best an ephemeral popularity. But from time to time it is advisable to direct attention to what is known as drawing-room music, in order to note the various mutations in popular taste, and to record any movement, however slight, in the direction of progress. With regard to pianoforte music, the fashion of the passing hour is no longer in favour of fantasies on popular operas, and airs more or less enveloped in arpeggios and other devices common to writers of "brilliant" pieces. This revolution of feeling from a style of composition inaugurated by Thalberg, and affording an illustration of the cynical proverb that "the evil that men do lives after them," has been long in coming, but it would seem to be thorough and sincere. One curious effect is shown in the present fondness for gavottes, bourrées, and other trifles in which florid ornamentation is next to impossible. The old dance forms, together with nocturnes, reveries, and the like, would appear to be the stock-in-trade of the drawing-room composer just at present. There seems no reason to regret the prevailing tendency towards increased methodism, but it would be premature as yet to found on it the inference that public taste is undergoing an improvement destined to be permanent. The modifications in the style of popular songs are less marked, but even here there are some appreciable changes. The extreme and almost infantine simplicity of the Claribel school is almost a thing of the past, and the treatment of the words shows a more poetical tendency, while the accompaniment no longer consists of monotonous arpeggios on tonic and dominant harmony. The writers of words for music evince at the present time an unhealthy predilection for subjects treating of death, blighted affection, and despair, but in this they merely obey the pessimist current which sways modern poetry. We select the following pieces and songs from a quantity of recently published music, as being either specially meritorious or at least useful for teaching purposes.

Scenes in the Scottish Islands. By A. O. Mackenzie, Op. 23. (Novello, Ewer & Co.)—These are three pieces, of which the separate titles are 'On the Hillsides,' 'On the Loch,' and 'On the Heather.' Mr. Mackenzie is too earnest a musician to write either carelessly or flippantly, and in the present instance he appeals to experienced pianists and to listeners of cultured taste. Of the three pieces we prefer No. 2, an expressive and characteristic melody with a syncopated triplet accompaniment. Scotch colouring is displayed chiefly by a certain sombreness of style suggestive of the North.—A Nursery Rhyme, Constant Love, and My Love, My Own, by Francis Hueffer. Simplicity is by no means synonymous with either shallowness or puerility. At the first glance these songs might seem to be intended for beginners; but, although they present no executive difficulties, they are full of delicate touches which none save a musician could either write or appreciate. The setting of Miss Rossetti's fanciful words in the first song, though a mere trifle, is the reverse of commonplace, and 'Constant Love' is an effective song, the treatment of the words showing considerable poetic feeling. The last in the order named is slightly more conventional, but decidedly pleasing.—Luctus in Mortis Passeris, Ode by Catullus, Music by Charles Salaman. This is No. 4 of a series of "musical settings of ancient lyrics." The 'Lament for the Death of Lesbia's Sparrow' has been treated by Mr. Salaman with besetting gravity. His music is impassioned and impressive, and would suit a theme, if we may be allowed to say so, of greater significance.

Gondoliers, Frühlings Ankunft, Vögelns Liebesgruss, and Noch sind die Tage der Rosen. By Charles Morley, Op. 6, 7, 11, and 12. (Neu-meyer & Co.)—English composers have ever evinced an unaccountable repugnance to their native language, and polyglot titles for even the simplest effusions are almost as frequently to be met with as ever. Mr. Morley's pieces are objectionable only in name; they are melodious, and of very moderate difficulty.—The Celebrated Hungarian Dances, transcribed by Imre Alföldy, six numbers, are comparatively simple arrangements of some of those melodies which Brahms has made so generally popular by his piquant and inimitable treatment. The same publisher send us pianoforte transcriptions by L. Samson of the Adagio ma non Troppo and the Minuet from Mendelssohn's Posthumous Quartet in a flat, which was so favourably received last season at the Popular Concerts.

Unter den Linden, Echoes of the Past, and The Last Rose of Summer. By Sydney Smith. (Ashdown & Parry.)—The first of these pieces for brilliancy, and the second for tastefulness and melodic grace, may be recommended to the admirers of Mr. Sydney Smith. But the third is only a meaningless succession of arpeggios and fortissimo, by means of which the old Irish air is disguised and tortured almost beyond recognition.—A word of approval must be given to Echoes du Passé, by J. Theodore Trekel, a most tuneful and piquant little sketch in the style of a gavotte.

I prithee send me back my heart, When Delia on the Plain appears, and The Sea hath its Pearls. By Maude Valérie White. (Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co.)—Miss White must be congratulated on her choice of words for songs. With regard to the music the second and third are more successful than the first, perhaps because they are less pretentious. We may be permitted, however, to suggest that better work than mere ballad writing is expected from a Mendelssohn scholar at the Royal Academy of Music.—Now sleeps the Crimson Petal, by Francis Hueffer. This is taken from the volume of Tennyson's songs reviewed a few months since in the Athenæum. The composer has evidently endeavoured to catch the spirit of the words, and it must be said that he has fully succeeded. Attention may be drawn to some curious and most unconventional transitions of key which have almost a startling effect, and altogether the song may be said to possess considerable individuality.—Le Navire, sarabande, by Lionel Benson, is a pleasing song with French words; and from many other ballads before us we select I think on thee, by Frank H. Sims, and Love the Truant, by Lady Benedict, as worthy of mention.—Cupid's Curse, duet by Malcolm Lawson, and Sous les Étoiles, duet by A. G. Thomas. The words of the first of these duets are taken from Peele's 'The Arraignment of Paris,' and the music shows a slight feeling in favour of the sixteenth century style; but modern tonality intrudes itself, though the composition as a whole may be pronounced effective and picturesque. Mr. Arthur Thomas's composition has English and French words. The composer is well versed in the school of modern France, and this duet reflects the experience thus gained. It is a graceful and taking piece.

Bourrée in D. By Alma Sanders. (Metzler & Co.)—Relieved of its title this may be considered a well-written and effective piece. But though the accent is correct, the style is quite opposed to the period when the bourrée was in vogue either as a dance or as a movement of the suite. It smacks very much of the latter half of the nineteenth century.—The Unfinished Song, by Frederic H. Cowen, is an extremely expressive ballad, and quite worthy of the composer of 'The Corsair.'

Perles Classiques is the title of a series of selections from the works of the great masters, edited by Carlo Tieset (Wood & Co.). The number before us contains a fugue in C, and adagio sostenuto from Op. 14, by Clementi.

Musical Gossip.

SIGNOR VERDI has decided, in order to avoid any possibility of misunderstanding, that his new opera on the subject of 'Othello' shall be entitled 'Iago.'

THE novelties introduced within the last few evenings at the Promenade Concerts have been M. Saint-Saëns's Poème Symphonique, 'Phaëton'; Méhul's Overture to 'Le Jeune Henri'; an overture entitled 'The Camp,' by Mr. Walter Austin; and Mr. Cowen's incidental music to Schiller's 'Maid of Orleans.' Beethoven's 'Eroica' Symphony was performed on Monday, and Schumann's in a flat (the 'Rhenish') on Wednesday.

WE have received the prospectus of the new Guildhall School of Music, under the conduct and control of the Corporation of the City of London. The object of the institution is to afford a sound and thorough musical education at the most moderate cost; and that persons engaged during the day may avail themselves of the school, the hours of teaching will be from half-past eight in the morning until nine in the evening. The subjects to be included are pianoforte, solo, class and sight singing, all orchestral instruments, organ, harmonium, theory and composition, the French and Italian languages, and elocution. This scheme is comprehensive, but German should be added to the list of foreign languages. The school will open in the third week of September.

MR. J. S. CURWAN informs us that the first prize of the Society of Arts examination in the theory of music has been taken by a Tonic Sol-faist, Mr. James Paul, of Aberdeen. The examination was conducted by Dr. Hullah strictly on the staff notation.

MESSERS. BREITKOPF & HARTEL, of Leipzig, announce a complete edition of the literary works of Franz Liszt. The first volume is already published and there are four more to follow.

AMONG new French operas shortly to appear are the following: 'Une Nuit de Cléopâtre,' by M. Victor Massé, libretto by M. Jules Barbier; 'Jean de Nivelle,' by M. Léo Delibes; and 'Galante Aventure,' by M. Ernest Guiraud, libretto by M. Armand Silvestre. The last-named work will be produced at the Opéra Comique next winter.

DRAMA

Dramatic Gossip.

A FOUR-ACT drama by Mr. H. Such Granville, entitled 'Falsely Judged,' has been produced at the Connaught Theatre. It is a weak and unsatisfactory piece, exhibiting incidents supposed to have occurred previous to the Revolution. The claim to originality put forward in its behalf may be admitted so far as regards the arrangement of the plot. It is probable that the same circumstances have never followed in the same order. The dialogue is certainly of English growth; so thoroughly so, indeed, that it is incoherent in French mouths. Miss May Bulmer played the heroine, and Miss Marion Lacey a species of comic witch. As a murderer, appropriately named Courvoisier, Mr. Granville over-acted in remarkable style.

'A WARNING TO BACHELORS,' a farce taken from the French by Mr. James Mortimer, and first produced nine years ago at the Vaudeville, has been revived at the same theatre. As it does not commence until after eleven, it cannot be supposed to greatly strengthen the bill. Miss Cicely Richards as the heroine (a married woman who, in her husband's absence, receives the attentions of a Don Juan-like neighbour) displays a vein of comic extravagance. 'Our Bitterest Foe' has been revived as an opening piece, and is well played by Miss Kate Bishop, Mr. J. Maclean, and Mr. Herbert.

'BETSY,' Mr. Burnand's version of 'Bébé,' commenced last week the second year of its run. It still stands high in public appreciation. With it is given Mr. Maltby's comic drama, 'Jilted: an Old Story Retold.'

A COMPLETE change of programme has been made at the Gaiety, at which houses 'High Life below Stairs,' with a cast which we not long since described, has been revived, and with it Mr. Reece's burlesque of 'Young Rip van Winkle.' Of the cast with which in April, 1876, this piece was first given at the Charing Cross, Miss Farrer, the exponent of Rip, and Mr. Keyce, that of Derrick, remain.

'THE RIVALS' has been given in fairly competent style at Sadler's Wells. Mr. Chippendale is a good Sir Anthony, and Mrs. Chippendale an excellent Mrs. Malaprop. The cast also includes Miss Virginia Bateman as Lydia Lang-wish, Miss Compton as Julia, Mr. R. Lyons as Sir Lucius, and Mr. Somerset as Capt. Absolute. On Monday next Mr. Warner will appear at this house as Coupeau in 'Drink,' to be followed at the close of a fortnight by Miss Jennie Lee in 'Jo.'

'MARIE; OR, A REPUBLICAN MARRIAGE,' a piece which has before been seen on the stage on a similar occasion, was revived at the Olympic on Wednesday afternoon, with Miss Lizzie Coote as the heroine, and Mr. Charles Harcourt in the dual rôle of the hero.

THE Continental papers contain obituaries of Juan Eugenio Hartzenbusch, the Spanish dramatic poet, who during the last half century has exercised the greatest influence upon the development of the Spanish stage. The poet's father was a German, a native of Schwabach, near Cologne, and a wood-carver by profession. He emigrated from the Rhineland to Madrid in the early years of the century, married a Spanish woman, and made a fair income by his calling. The poet was born at Madrid, September 6th, 1806. His parents devoted him to the priesthood, and he was educated by the Jesuits, in whose schools he became acquainted with the dramatic literature of Greece and Rome. He had attained his nineteenth year, however, before he became practically acquainted with the theatre. A visit to the opera and his passionate delight at witnessing a piece called 'Antinoo en Elouisa' decided the bent of his life. That evening, he afterwards asserted, taught him to discern his real vocation, and he resolved to devote himself wholly to the stage. Renouncing the notion of taking holy orders, he earned a living for a time as a wood-carver, and later as a shorthand writer in the service of the Government. During his spare hours he worked hard at the study of the Spanish drama, and wrote several original pieces; but the stringent censorship of the period hindered him from obtaining a place for any of them upon the stage. He first became known in 1836 by his 'Amantes de Teruel,' and from that date to the latest years of his life he was incessantly active as an original dramatic author, and as the editor of a series of editions of the older Spanish playwrights, of Calderon, Lope de Vega, and others. He held for many years a post in the Royal Library, and became in 1862 Director of the National Academy.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—F. W.—W. T.—J. S. C.—M. F. A. F.—G. M.—W. A. L.—received.

No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW LIST.

Now ready, price One Shilling, Part V. of SUNRISE: a Story of These Times.

By WILLIAM BLACK.

"It is too soon to judge of a book only a quarter completed, but for so far 'Sunrise' seems to us his author's greatest work."—Daily News.

Demy 8vo. 460 pages, price 5s. 6d.

NAVIES OF THE WORLD.

Giving Concise Descriptions of the Plans, Armament, and Armour of the Naval Vessels of Twenty of the Principal Nations.

Together with the Latest Developments in Ordnance, Torpedoes, and Naval Architecture, and Concise Summary of the Principal Naval Battles of the last Twenty Years, 1860 to 1880.

By Lieut. EDWARD W. VERNY, U.S.N.

N.B.—This Work is Copyright in this Country.

FOREIGN COUNTRIES and BRITISH COLONIES.

Edited by F. R. FILLING, M.A., Exeter College, Oxford, and formerly Professor at the Yorkshire College, Leeds.

Under the above title it is proposed to publish a series of small volumes descriptive of the principal countries of the world each country being treated of by a writer who from personal knowledge is qualified to speak with authority on the subject.

The general aim of the series will be to present a clear and accurate idea of the actual state of the different countries in a sufficiently popular form to prove interesting to the general reader, while at the same time it is intended that the works should be useful for educational purposes.

The volumes will average 150 crown 8vo. pages, and will contain Maps and a few typical illustrations. The price of the volumes will be 2s. 6d. each.

The following volumes are ready or in preparation:—

DENMARK and ICELAND. DREIFER. SWITZERLAND. AUSTRIA. RUSSIA. FINLAND. JAPAN. PERU. CANADA.	SWEDEN and NORWAY. The WEST INDIES. NEW ZEALAND. FRANCE. EGYPT. SPAIN. TURKEY-IN-ASIA. AUSTRALIA. HOLLAND.
---	--

Now ready, crown 8vo. 220 pp. price 3s. 6d.

The WEST INDIES. By Charles H. EDEN, F.R.S. Author of 'Froese Asia,' 'The Fifth Continent,' &c. With Map and Illustrations.

Now ready, crown 8vo. 101 pp. price 1s. 6d.

GREECE. By Lewis Sergeant. With Illustrations and Physical and Political Maps, showing proposed boundary.

8vo. in wrapper, price 4s.

THE AMERICAN ART REVIEW.

Managing Editor: S. R. KOEHLER.

Associate Editors: WM. C. PRIME, LL.D. New York; CHARLES C. PERKINS, A.M. Boston.

This Publication has been highly spoken of by English Art Critics.

Vol. I. No. 8, for JUNE, 1880.

CONTENTS.

- ELIHU VEDDER. First Article. By W. H. Bishop.
- THE WORKS OF THE AMERICAN ETCHERS. I.—Alfred Brannen. By H. H. Kuebler.
- IN THE HOUSE OF MOUERNING. Painted by Karl Hoff. Etched by F. L. Meyer.
- THE HISTORY OF WOOD ENGRAVING IN AMERICA. Chapter IV. By W. J. Linton.
- ARTIST AND AMATEUR. By Mrs. M. G. Van Brummelaar.
- OLYMPIA AS IT WAS AND AS IT IS. (Conclusion.) By Charles C. Perkins.
- THE EXHIBITIONS. V.—National Academy of Design. Concerning Notice. By E. Q. W. Benjamin.
- BIBLIOGRAPHY.—AMERICAN ART CHRONICLE.—FOREIGN ART CHRONICLE.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

- THE SEA-SERPENT. By Elihu Vedder. Etched by G. A. Schoff. Printed by J. H. Daniels.
- THE PHOEBIDES. By Elihu Vedder. Engraved by G. Krueh.
- DIVINATION IN TEA-LEAVES. Etched by Alfred Brannen. Printed by J. H. Daniels.
- CINDERELLA. Engraved by Jonnard.
- IN THE HOUSE OF MOUERNING. By Karl Hoff. Etched by F. L. Meyer.

In the Fort:—

- Head-piece. Roman Girls on the Seashore. After Elihu Vedder.
- Initial B. Based on a Design by Elihu Vedder.
- Elihu Vedder. Engraved by G. Krueh.
- Head-piece. Vignette from the Title-page of the Book of Drawings by Elihu Vedder.
- Jack of the Mill. Engraved by Harley.
- Bohemian Traces. Engraved by H. March.
- Initial A. Designed by M. Knecht. Reproduced from Zemmer's Das K.-G. Formen in München.
- Plan of the Garden of Herodes Atticus at Olympia.
- The Philopon and Eurydice at Olympia.
- Antique Figs. in the Vatican.
- Morning on the Sound. By Arthur Gantley. From a Sketch by the Artist.
- Morning in Venice. By A. P. Burrows. From a Sketch by the Artist.
- Butcher's Trees on the Monasticon. By Arthur Gantley. From a Sketch by the Artist.
- The Coast of New England. By R. Swets Olford. From a Sketch by the Artist.
- A Summer Night. By Joseph Lyman Jr. From a Sketch by the Artist.
- Head-piece. Reproduced from Das Kunsthandwerk.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE & RIVINGTON, Crown Buildings, 188, Fleet-street.

AT ALL THE LIBRARIES, SUSSEX STORIES.

By Mrs. ROBERT O'REILLY.

In 3 vols.

From the Standard:—"These Sussex tales, whether redolent of the sea, or fragrant with the smell of wild flowers, or odorous with the thyme blossoms of the downs, are as purely and freshly local as Miss Mitford's Hampshire 'Village,' or as Mrs. Gaskell's Arcadian 'Cranford.' The humour and pathos of these stories are beyond all praise."

From the Academy:—"These three volumes contain a dozen or so of admirable tales, distinguished by an unusual power of rendering both character and scenery. We should say that we have never seen better stories of their kind."

From the Saturday Review:—"These 'Sussex Stories' must be real records of character and action as seen by an intelligent observer. Little Rosie is charming."

From the Fall Hall Gazette:—"Mrs. O'Reilly possesses the art which Miss Mitford exhibited so remarkably in 'Our Village.' To make a short tale attractive has baffled the craft of some of the greatest of our novelists. It is a special gift, and the author of 'Sussex Stories' may be congratulated on its possession. People who have not time to peruse these volumes from beginning to end, may be recommended to read 'Miss Olive's Boys,' 'Fairly Gold,' and 'Two Girls.' Tales like these will please all readers."

LADY LAURA.

By M. R. CHRISTIE.

In 3 vols.

From the Daily News:—"Lady Laura" is extraordinarily clever. Probably no novel has lately appeared written in such strong, terse English, or in which an active mind has got itself expressed in such vigorous language. There is a sustained power, a concentrated force, a high level of earnest purpose over the whole book, which never sinks nor flags. The story is delightful as a study of manners. Miss Christie has written one of the most interesting books of her time."

STRAHAN & CO. LIMITED, 84, PATERNOSTER-ROW.

CHEAP EDITION OF MISS BRADDON'S LATEST NOVEL.

Just out, price 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE STORY OF B A R B A R A:
HER SPLENDID MISERY AND HER GILDED CAGE.
By the AUTHOR of 'LADY AUDLEY'S SECRET,' &c.

NEW ROMANCE OF LONDON LIFE.

Now ready, price 2s.; cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.; postage, 4d.

THE ORANGE GIRL: a Dramatic Novel.

ILLUSTRATED BY GUSTAVE DORÉ.

Now ready, price 2s.; cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.; postage, 4d.

THE KING'S PAGE: a Love Story.

Now ready, price 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.; postage, 4d.

LOTTIE'S FORTUNE. The New Novel.

By the AUTHOR of 'SOPHIE CREWE,' &c.

"A wild, rattling, excellent story, full of matter."—Athenæum.

CHEAP EDITION OF Mrs. GORDON SMYTHIES' NOVELS.

Just out, price 2s.; cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.; postage, 4d.

OUR MARY: a Novel.

CHEAP EDITION OF MR. W. S. HAYWARD'S NOVELS.

Just out, price 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.; postage, 4d.

THE SECRET SEVEN: a Romance.

PLEASURE BOOKS FOR RAIL, ROAD, AND RIVER.

Now ready, price 1s. each; post free, 1s. 3d.

STRANGE JOURNEYS. RIVER SECRETS.
ON THE RANK. IN THE FORCE.
COMIC ENGLISH GRAMMAR. Illustrated.

SECRETS OF MODERN RUSSIA, NIHILISM, &c.

Just out (never before published), price 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.; postage, 4d.

MYSTERIES OF ST. PETERSBURG.

By M. MIKAËL GORTSCHAKOV.

London: J. & R. MAXWELL, Milton House, Shoe-lane, E.C.

E P P S ' S C O C O A.
GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

JAMES EPPS & CO. HOMOEOPATHIC CHEMISTS, LONDON,
MAKERS OF EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.—Sold in Labeled Boxes only.

of the Company's Agents.

"LEARNED, CHATTY, USEFUL."—Athenæum.

Now ready, price 10s. 6d. each, cloth boards, with very Copious Index,

NOTES AND QUERIES.

Vols. I. to XII.

FIFTH SERIES.

Containing, in addition to a great variety of similar Notes and Replies, Articles of Interest on the following Subjects:—

ENGLISH, IRISH, and SCOTTISH HISTORY.

The Dream and Death of Thomas, Lord Lyttelton—The Elective and Deposing Power of Parliament—Anne Boleyn—Scottish Titles—Burial-Place of Edmund, Duke of Somerset—Elizabeth, Queen of Robert Bruce—Bondmen in England—Serfdom in Scotland—Grahame, Viscount Dundee—A Jacobite Letter—Abbotsford in 1825—Compurgators—Bishop of Ross, Scotland, 1417—Knox's 'History of the Reformation'—Good Friday and Easter Sunday, temp. Charles II.—The Jews in England in the Thirteenth Century—Warrants for the Execution of Charles I.—The Fitzalans and Stewarts.

BIOGRAPHY.

T. Allington—William Roy—Caspar Hauser—Charles Owen of Warrington—Paolo Sarpi—The Descent of William Penn—William, Abbot of Ramsey—A. H. Rowan—George Cromer, Archbishop of Armagh—Matthew Smith, the first Principal of Brasenose College, Oxford—James Sayers, the Caricaturist—Jeremiah Horrocks.

BIBLIOGRAPHY and LITERARY HISTORY.

Shakespeareana—The Authorship of Anonymous Works—Milton's 'L'Allegro'—Unpublished Letters of Macaulay—'Histoire des Médecins Juifs Anciens et Modernes'—Earle's 'Philology of the English Tongue'—Unpublished Poems by Burns—Dr. Johnson and Mrs. Norton—'From Greenland's Icy Mountains'—Chap-Books—Lord Byron in Scotland—Welsh Language—Unpublished Letter of John Wesley—The Works of Thomas Fuller—The Welsh Testament—Burns's Ode on the American Civil War—Opus Questionum divi Augustini—Letter of Smollett—'The Pilgrim's Progress'—Development of the Press, 1824-1874—Books written by Mrs. Olivia Serres: 'The Book.'

POPULAR ANTIQUITIES and FOLK-LORE.

Ague Charms—Birds of Ill Omen—Candlemas Gills—Eggs and Drunkenness—Evil Eye—Jewish Superstitions—Hydrophobia prevented—Handkerchief thrown on Suicide's Coffin—Ladies and Lionsesque—The Seven Whistlers.

POETRY, BALLADS, and DRAMA.

The real Richelieu and Bulwer's Richelieu—"The Irish Brigade"—Thomas Decker—Mrs. Siddons a Sculptor—Barham's Lines on Dean Ireland—Browning's "Lost Leader"—The Lord Chamberlain's Inspection of Plays—Emma Isola—A Poem by W. M. Praed—Goethe—Shelley—Henry VIII. as a Poet—The Australian Drama—Charles I. as a Poet—Sheridan and Sir John Suckling—Oxfordshire Christmas Miracle-Play—Christmas Mummers in Dorsetshire—Dante and his Translators—The Christian Year.

POPULAR and PROVERBIAL SAYINGS.

"You know who the Critics are"—"You may put it in your eye and see none the worse for it"—Called Home—God's Church and the Devil's Chapel—Unaccustomed as I am to public speaking—Tout vient à point—Wise after the event—La Parole a été donnée à l'homme—Robbing Peter to Pay Paul—The End justifies the Means—The English seems a Foole and is a Foole.

PHILOLOGY.

Carr=Care=Heel Taps—"Bloody"—Spurring—Nor for Than—Vagaries of Spelling—Spelling Reforms—Surrey Provincialisms—Quadragesimalia—S. v. Z.—English Words compared with the Icelandic—Gingham—The Termination Y in Place-Names—Calomel—Yeux—Cameo—Hall, Wyoh, and Salt Works—Shad-dongate—Shakespeare's Name.

GENEALOGY and HERALDRY.

The Insignia of the Knights of the Garter—Arms of Hungary—Dering Roll of Arms—Unsettled Baronetcies—The Arms of Sir Francis Drake—The Arms of English Sees—Bar Sinister—Strawberry Leaves on Coronets—Byron Arms—F. E. R. T. in the Savoy Arms—Seal of Prince of Livonia—The Templars and Hospitaliers.

FINE ARTS.

Portraits of Dr. Johnson—Marks on Porcelain—Italian Works of Art at Paris in 1815—Sir Joshua Reynolds: Miss Day: Mrs. Day—Portrait of Barbor—Church Plate—Various Paintings and Engravings.

ECCELESIASTICAL MATTERS.

Altar Rails, Covered—Liddell v. Westerton—Ecclesiastical Vestments—Funeral Garlands—The Cistercians—"Prestor John" and the Arms of the See of Chichester—Penance in the Church of England—Laud's Service Book—Epitaph of Cardinal Howard at Rome—St. Cuthbert's Burial-place—Old Northern English MS. Painter—Bere Regis Church—Sacred Vessels—A Roman Catholic Visitation in 1709—Episcopal Titles—St. George's Lodge—Registrum Sacrum Batavianum—Communion Tokens—Fasting Communion in the Church of England—The Title of Reverend—Consecration of Church Plate—"Defender of the Faith"—The "Breeches" Bible.

CLASSICAL SUBJECTS.

The Latin Version of Bacon's Essays—Greek Anthology—Martial's Epigram xiii. 75—Lucretian Notelets—Medieval and Modern Latin and Greek Verse—Mittitar in disco—Catullus: "Hoc ut dixit"—"Sandon" (Horace)—Cicero—Lucius a non Lucendo.

TOPOGRAPHY.

Sandwich Islands—Origin of the Names of the American States—Arthur's Oven on the Carron—Scottish History—The Yardley Oak—Hart Hall, Oxford—Old Kensington—Travelling in Italy Forty Years Ago—The Equestrian Statue in Hyde Park—Arthurian Localities: Scotland—The Sacred Lotus—St. John's Chapel, Bedford-row.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Christian Names—Pillar Posts—Hanging in Chains and Irons—George III. and the Pig—The Kilkenny Cats—The Waterloo and Peninsular Medals—The Clerical a Healthy Profession—Unlawful Games of the Middle Ages—Itinerant Empirics—Sunday Newspapers—Gipsies—The Wordworth—Double Returns in Parliamentary Elections—Curiosities of Corporation Records—Spiritual Apparitions—The "Dial" System of Telegraphy—Professor Becker's "Gallus"—Skating Literature—Cricket—London Companies, or Guilds—A Travelling Tutor of the Olden Time—Gunpowder Plot—Baths in the Middle Ages—The Little Summer—Whitsuntide—Michaelmas—Christmas Contrasts.

CASSELL, PETTER, GALPIN & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

AN ENTIRELY NEW EDITION,

In Monthly Parts, price 1s.

PAXTON'S FLOWER GARDEN.

By PROF. LINDLEY and SIR JOSEPH PAXTON.

Thoroughly Revised and brought down to the present date by Mr. THOMAS BAINES, F.R.H.S., with many entirely

NEW COLOURED PLATES, executed expressly for this Edition.

Part I. ready August 25.

This new issue of Paxton's Flower Garden will be revised and brought down to date, both as regards the text and illustrations. Many entirely new Coloured Plates will be expressly executed, by the best artists, from paintings made from nature and produced in fac-simile colours, of the most remarkable plants recently introduced into cultivation. The descriptive letter-press will be amended and altered in accordance with the latest botanical researches, Mr. Baines supplying fresh original matter descriptive of the New Coloured Plates, and adding whatever recent information may be found desirable.

. Prospectuses at all Booksellers', or post free from the Publishers.

NEW BOOKS AND NEW EDITIONS.

THE NEW AND CHEAP EDITION

LIFE of RIGHT HON. W. E. GLADSTONE. By BARNETT SMITH. A SEVENTH EDITION is now ready, price 5s.

OUR OWN COUNTRY. Vols. I. and II. now ready, each complete in itself, and containing upwards of 200 Original Illustrations, and Steel Frontispieces. Extra crown 4to. cloth, price 7s. 6d. each.

"Altogether 'Our Own Country' is a charming book, well calculated to give a good idea of the beauties of our island town and scenery." Morning Post.

SHORTER WORKS in ENGLISH PROSE. By Prof. Henry MORLEY. Being Vol. IV. of "Cassell's Library of English Literature." With Original Illustrations, price 11s. 6d.

"A very useful and valuable 'Library of English Literature.' It is difficult to give an idea of the industry, reading, and judgment which have contributed to produce this volume." Standard.

The NEW PARLIAMENT. By W. Saunders. A Second Edition is now on Sale. Price 6s.

MEMORIES of MY EXILE. By Louis Kossuth. On Sale at all Booksellers'. Price 10s. 6d.

"The volume is extremely interesting." Athenæum.

"The book is one of very great interest and value." Scotsman.

GREAT INDUSTRIES of GREAT BRITAIN, with about 400 Illustrations, is now ready, complete in 3 vols. price 7s. 6d. each.

CANARIES and CAGE-BIRDS, The ILLUSTRATED BOOK of, with 56 Fac-simile Coloured Plates, is now published complete in one handsome volume, demy 4to. cloth, price 35s.; or half-morocco, 45s.

The Times, in reviewing this volume in its issue of July 22, remarked:—"Altogether the book is a perfect encyclopedia on everything relating to the subjects of which it treats, and the plates may be studied with as little profit by those who desire to become practical naturalists."

FAMILIAR WILD FLOWERS. By F. E. Hulme. With Coloured Plates. The SECOND SERIES, complete in 1 vol. is now ready, price 12s. 6d.

HOW WOMEN MAY EARN a LIVING. The First Edition having been exhausted, a SECOND EDITION is now ready, price 1s. 6d.

'LITTLE FOLKS' NATURE PAINTING BOOK. Two Editions of FIFTEEN THOUSAND COPIES of this Work having been rapidly exhausted, a THIRD EDITION of Ten Thousand Copies is now on Sale, price 1s. 6d. or cloth gilt, 2s.

The NEW VOLUME of LITTLE FOLKS, with nearly 500 Illustrations, is now on Sale at all Booksellers', price 3s. 6d.; or 5s. in cloth.

FIELD NATURALIST'S HANDBOOK. The. By Rev. J. G. WOOD and THEODORE WOOD. Second Edition now ready. 5s.

The LANDED INTEREST, and the SUPPLY of FOOD. By JAMES CAIRD, C.B. F.R.S. Revised and Enlarged Edition. 5s.

RABBIT-KEEPER, The PRACTICAL. By CUNICULUS. With Illustrations. 2s. 6d.

DON QUIXOTE. With about 400 Illustrations by Gustave Doré. Cheap Edition. Demy 4to. 15s.

PICTURES from ENGLISH LITERATURE. With 20 Full-Page Illustrations by Eminent Artists. Cheap Edition. 5s.

The CHRISTIAN in his RELATIONS to the CHURCH, the WORLD, and the FAMILY. By the Rev. DANIEL MOORE, M.A. 1s. 6d.

The HISTORY of the WALDENSES. Reprinted from 'The History of Protestantism.' By the Rev. J. A. WYLLIE, LL.D. With Illustrations. Second Edition now ready. 2s. 6d.

The CHILDREN of HOLY SCRIPTURE. By L. MASHBY. With Full-Page Illustrations. 3s. 6d.

SUNDAY: its Origin, History, and Present Obligation. By Archdeacon HESSEY, D.C.L. Fourth Edition. 6s.

CHRIST our REDEEMER; being Thoughts and Meditations on our Lord's Life. Selected and Arranged by HENRY SOUTHGATE. 3s. 6d.

FRENCH, CASSELL'S LESSONS in. New and Revised Edition. Considerably Enlarged by Prof. E. ROUBAUD, B.A. Parts I. and II., cloth, each 2s. 6d.; complete, 4s. 6d. KEY, 1s. 6d.

ENLARGEMENT of

CASSELL'S TIME TABLES,

Commencing with the SEPTEMBER ISSUE, price 4d.

. With the September issue CASSELL'S TIME TABLES will be enlarged by a considerable increase in the number of pages, and will contain several improvements, including an additional Map, specially drawn and engraved. The Publishers believe that the additions and improvements now arranged to be made will tend to the still more extended use of this most serviceable Guide, of which it has been justly said, that "no counting-house or household should be without a copy."

CASSELL, PETTER, GALPIN & CO. Ludgate-hill, London; and all Booksellers.

Editorial Communications should be addressed to "The Editor"—Advertisements and Business Letters to "The Publisher"—at the Office, 20, Wellington-street, Strand, London, W.C.
Printed by E. J. FRASER, Athenæum Press, Took's-court, Chancery-lane, E.C.; and Published by JOHN FRASER, at No. 20, Wellington-street, Strand, W.C.
Agents: Sir SCOTLAND, Messrs. Bell & Bristow, and Mr. John Menzies, Edinburgh;—for ILLINOIS, Mr. John Robertson, Dublin.—Saturday, August 14, 1880.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 2756.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 21, 1880.

PRICE
THREEPENCE
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

BRITISH ASSOCIATION for the ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE, &c.

ANDREW CROWE RAMSAY, Esq., LL.D. F.R.S. V.P.O.A.
Director-General of the Geological Survey of the United Kingdom and of the Museum of Practical Geology

The Annual Meeting of the Association will be held at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

EXHIBITION OF COMPETITIVE ORIGINAL
DRAWINGS FOR CHRISTMAS CARDS, to be held at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

FAC-SIMILES in COLOUR, produced by the late ARTHUR DOUGLASS, Esq., are for sale at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

MR. HENRY BLACKBURN, Editor of "Academy" Magazine, is at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

ARTIST (Exhibitor) gives LESSONS in OIL PAINTING, at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

MISS GLYN, 15, Mount-street, Grosvenor-square, is at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

MISS LOUISE WILLES, of Theatre Drury Lane, Covent Garden, is at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

DR. N. HEINEMANN'S THREE POPULAR LECTURES: THE HUMAN FACTOR IN THE GREAT QUESTION OF THE FUTURE OF THE RACE, at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

BREWERS' COMPANY.—The Master and Wardens of the Worshipful Company of Brewers are at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

WANTED, by a GENTLEMAN, a position as SECRETARY, at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

TO NOBLES, Members of Parliament, &c.—A GENTLEMAN, aged 30 (B.A. Cambridge), with high references as to position and qualifications, desires an APPOINTMENT as SECRETARY, at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

LIBRARIAN WANTED.—Messrs. MAYNARD, Swan & Co. require a thoroughly experienced and energetic LIBRARIAN, at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

LEADERS for PROVINCIAL PAPERS.—A GENTLEMAN, engaged on the staff of a Daily London Paper, is at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

A BARRISTER, who has recently Edited an English Journal, is at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

THE EDITORSHIP of a LIBERAL WEEKLY NEWSPAPER, is at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

THE EDITOR of a PROVINCIAL CONSERVATIVE PAPER, is at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

THE EDITOR of an INFLUENTIAL CONSERVATIVE COUNTY JOURNAL, is at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

PROFITABLE INVESTMENT.—For SALE, in One or more Lots, TWELVE SEVEN PER CENT. PREFERENCE SHARES (NEW) in CHAPMAN & HALL, Publishers (Limited), at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

PRESS.—JUNIOR REPORTER desires RE-EMPLOYMENT.—The undersigned, who has been employed for some time as a Junior Reporter on the Press, desires to be re-employed.

WANTED TO PURCHASE, a Financial and Working INTEREST in an influential LONDON JOURNAL.—Address G. L., care of Mr. A. B. C., Fleet-street, E.C.

TO PRINTERS, LITERARY MEN, and Others.—The undersigned, who has been employed for some time as a Junior Reporter on the Press, desires to be re-employed.

PRINTING.—JOHN BALE & SONS, Printers of the Daily News, the Standard, the Times, and other Periodicals.—Address John Bale & Sons, 10, Abchurch-lane, London, E.C.

TO AUTHORS AND OTHERS.—The undersigned, who has been employed for some time as a Junior Reporter on the Press, desires to be re-employed.

MESSRS. WYMAN & SONS, Printers, Lithographers, and Engravers.—Address Messrs. Wyman & Sons, 10, Abchurch-lane, London, E.C.

LITTLE BOYS.—The SONS of GENTLEMEN are at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

PRIVATE TUITION for the ARMY, UNIVERSITY, &c.—Address Mr. A. B. C., Fleet-street, E.C.

NORMANDY.—A FRENCH FAMILY is at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

EDUCATION.—A CLERGYMAN is at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

EDUCATION in GERMANY.—MR. PRIPPO, is at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

EDUCATION in SWITZERLAND.—NEW is at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

A HANOVERIAN LADY, having lived in England is at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

ENGLISH SCHOOL, ST. PETERSBURG, Russia.—Address Mr. A. B. C., Fleet-street, E.C.

MILL HILL SCHOOL.—The MICHAELMAS is at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

MRS. O'BRIEN'S SCHOOL for EIGHT LITTLE is at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

THE DOROCK COLLEGE for LADIES, 63, Kensington Gardens-square, Hyde Park, W.—Address Mr. A. B. C., Fleet-street, E.C.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL for the SONS of GENTLEMEN.—Address Mr. A. B. C., Fleet-street, E.C.

STRATFORD-ON-AVON.—TRINITY COLLEGE is at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

The SENIOR of the FACULTY OF MEDICINE will begin on MONDAY, September 1st.

The SENIOR of the FACULTY OF ARTS and LAWS will begin on MONDAY, September 1st. The SENIOR of the FACULTY OF THEOLOGY will begin on MONDAY, September 1st.

UNIVERSITY HALL, GORDON SQUARE, W.C.—Address Mr. A. B. C., Fleet-street, E.C.

THE QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY in IRELAND.—Address Mr. A. B. C., Fleet-street, E.C.

The COLLEGE of the QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY in IRELAND will begin on MONDAY, September 1st.

The COLLEGE of the QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY in IRELAND will begin on MONDAY, September 1st.

The COLLEGE of the QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY in IRELAND will begin on MONDAY, September 1st.

The COLLEGE of the QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY in IRELAND will begin on MONDAY, September 1st.

The COLLEGE of the QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY in IRELAND will begin on MONDAY, September 1st.

The COLLEGE of the QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY in IRELAND will begin on MONDAY, September 1st.

The COLLEGE of the QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY in IRELAND will begin on MONDAY, September 1st.

The COLLEGE of the QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY in IRELAND will begin on MONDAY, September 1st.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.—The NEXT TERM will begin on MONDAY, September 1st.

THE LONDON INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE.—Address Mr. A. B. C., Fleet-street, E.C.

QUEEN'S COLLEGE, 42 and 45, Harley-street, is at the Crystal Palace, London, on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st of August 1880.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST OF NEW WORKS.

BY MORTIMER COLLINS.
THOUGHTS IN MY GARDEN. By
MORTIMER COLLINS. Edited by EDMUND YATES.
With Notes by the Editor and Mrs. MORTIMER
COLLINS. In 2 vols. crown 8vo. 21s.

By CHARLES DICKENS.
The MUDFOG PAPERS. By the late CHARLES DICKENS. Now first Collected. In crown 8vo. cloth, price 2s. 6d.

BY MARY FITZ-GIBSON.
A TRIP TO MANITOBA. By Mary
FITZ-GIBSON. In 8vo. 10s. 6d.

BY MISS DE FONBLANQUE.
FIVE WEEKS IN ICELAND. By
MISS DE FONBLANQUE. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
"Graphic, real, and interesting."—St. James's Gazette.

BY THE REV. J. C. BOYCE, M.A.
NIGHT UNTO THE END; or, a Passage in Sacred Prophecy now in Course of Translation into History considered. By the Rev. J. C. BOYCE, M.A.
Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

POPULAR NOVELS, AT ALL LIBRARIES.

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'CUT ADRIFF.'
PIOUS FRAUDS; or, the Dawn of Love. By ALBANY DE FONBLANQUE, Author of 'Cut
Adrift,' 'A Tangled Skein,' &c. In 2 vols. crown 8vo.

MISS THOMAS'S NEW NOVEL.
The VIOLIN PLAYER. By Bertha
THOMAS. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

"The characters are well and naturally drawn, the situations admirable, and the story is thoroughly good and interesting. What more can be said in its praise?"

Whithead Review.
"There can be no hesitation in saying that in her latest novel Miss Thomas shows so marked an advance upon former work as to justify the belief that she is destined, at no distant period, to rank among the foremost living writers of fiction."
Morning Post.

LADY M. MAJENDIE'S NEW NOVEL.
FASCINATION. By Lady Margaret
MAJENDIE. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

"The book deserves its title most completely, for it is seldom that one becomes so entirely engrossed in the progress of a modern novel. There are scenes in the book of such power and pathos as are but seldom conceived by any but the first of artists."—Whithead Review.

Also, immediately,
LIZZIE OF THE MILL. From the Original by Mrs. CHRISTINA TYRKELL, Translator of 'No Surrender,' &c. 2 vols. crown 8vo.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE PURE VOILET.'

On Wednesday, August 20th, in 3 vols.
THE WELLFIELDS.
By JESSIE FOTHERGILL,
Author of 'Probation' and 'The First Violin.'

THE NOVELS OF JANE AUSTEN.
(The only Complete Edition.)

Each Volume in crown 8vo. cloth, price 6s.
SENSE and SENSIBILITY.
EMMA.
PRIDE and PREJUDICE.
MANFORD PARK.
NORTHANGER ABBEY and PERSUASION.
LADY SUSAN and The WATSONS.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington-street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

HURST & BLACKETT'S LIST.

MONSIEUR GUIZOT in PRIVATE LIFE (1787-1874). By his Daughter, MADAME DE WITT. Translated by Mrs. SIMPSON. 1 vol. 8vo. 14s.
"Madame de Witt has done justice to her father's memory in an admirable record of his life. Mrs. Simpson is fortunate in the opportunity of presenting to English readers a singularly interesting book. Her translation is in accuracy and idiomatic grace worthy of the original and of the subject."—Saturday Review.

TALES OF OUR GREAT FAMILIES.
SECOND SERIES. By EDWARD WALFORD, M.A. 2 vols. 71s.
"The social rank of the persons whose lives and characters are described in this work, and the inherent romance of the stories it contains, will ensure it a widespread popularity. Many of the papers possess an original and popular interest, while all of them may be read with profit."—Lancet.

THE VILLAGE OF PALACES; or,
CHRONICLES OF CHREKA. By the Rev. A. G. L'ESTRANGE.
3 vols. crown 8vo. 21s.
"Mr. L'Estrange tells us much that is interesting about Chreka. We take leave of this most charming book with a hearty recommendation of it to our readers."—Standard.

THE NEW NOVELS.
LORD BRACKENBURY. By Amelia
B. EDWARDS, Author of 'Barbara's History,' &c. 3 vols.

THE TENTH EARL. By John Berwick BARWOOD, Author of 'Lady Flavia,' &c. 3 vols.
"The Tenth Earl" is very amusing reading. "John Bull."
"A fascinating novel. The plot is deeply interesting, the characters are true to nature, while the language is remarkable for graphic power and observation."—Quarterly Journal.

A VERY OPAL. By C. L. Pirakis.
3 vols.
"There is very much to admire in this most amusing novel. The plot is well constructed and the characters are powerfully drawn."—Messenger.

FORESTALLED. By M.
BETHAM-EDWARDS, Author of 'Elly,' 'Bridges,' 'Holidays in Eastern France,' &c. 3 vols. 21s.
"This tale is effectively told, and contains passages, now of reflection, now of description, which, apart from all question of dramatic interest, are for their own sake well worth reading."—St. James's Gazette.
"Forestalled" is a very remarkable novel. Miss Betham-Edwards has produced a tale of powerful interest, which successfully rivets the attention from the beginning to the end."—Sunday Times.

WOOLERS and WINNERS. By Mrs.
G. LINNEUS BANKS, Author of 'The Manchester Man,' &c. 3 vols.
"A thoroughly readable, fresh, and wholesome novel. The story is intriguing and well told."—John Bull.
"Woolers and Winners" will add to Mrs. Banks's literary fame. The characters are original, the plot is cleverly conceived, and the incidents are startling and deeply interesting."—Court Journal.

A MODERN GREEK HEROINE.
"A very attractive and clever story, which, if it be a first effort in fiction, is an unusually successful one."—Advertiser.

MERVYN O'CONNOR. By the Earl of DERMOT, Author of 'Kilverdale,' &c. 3 vols.
"A bright, lively story, full of interest."—Sunday Times.

MISS BOUVERIE. By Mrs.
MOLESWORTH, Author of 'Hathorcent Rectory,' &c. 3 vols.
"One of the prettiest stories which has appeared for years."—Post.

BOOKS FOR THE COUNTRY.

Each Work complete in 1 vol. price 4s. (any of which can be had separately printed and bound, and illustrated by MR. J. GILBERT, MILLAIS, HUNT, LEACH, POYNTER, FOSTER, TENNIEL, SANDYS, & HUGHES, SAMBOURNE, &c.)

HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY

OF CHEAP EDITIONS OF POPULAR MODERN WORKS.
Best Greek's Nature and Human Nature. By the Hon. Mrs.
John Hallifax, Copleston.
The Crescent and the Cross. By Bliss Warburton.
Nathalie. By Miss Kavanagh.
A Woman's Thoughts about Women. By the Author of
'John Hallifax.'
Adam Grange. By Mrs. Oliphant.
Sam Slick's Wise Sawe
Cardinal Wheman's Pope.
A Life for a Life. By the Author of 'John Hallifax.'
Lodge Hunt's Old Coast Suburb.
Margaret and her Bridemaids.
Sam Slick's Old Jew.
Dorian. By Bliss Warburton.
Sir R. Burke's Family Romance.
The Laird of Newby. By Mrs.
Oliphant.
The Englishwoman in Italy.
Nothing New. By the Author of
'John Hallifax.'
Fanny's Life of Jonathan Alford.
The Valley of a Hundred Firs.
Burke's Romance of the Forum.
Addie. By Miss Kavanagh.
Bessie from Life. By the Author of 'John Hallifax.'
Grandmother's Money.
Jackie's Rock about Doctors.
Marian and Maid. By the Author of 'John Hallifax.'
Los Miserables. By Victor Hugo.
St. Olave's.
Sam Slick's American Humour.

THE NEW VOLUME (Aug. 27) will comprise
YOUNG MRS. JARDINE.
By the AUTHOR OF 'JOHN HALLIFAX.'

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

NEW NOVEL.

WHITE WINGS:
A YACHTING ROMANCE.
By WILLIAM BLACK.
3 vols. crown 8vo. 31s. 6d. [Now ready.]

NEW NOVEL.

LOVE AND LIFE.
By CHARLOTTE M. YONGE.
2 vols. crown 8vo. 12s. [Next week.]

NEW NOVEL.

THE REBECCA RIOTER.
A STORY OF KILLAY LIFE.
By E. A. DILLWYN.
2 vols. crown 8vo. 21s. [Shortly.]

NEW NOVEL.

THE LADY RESIDENT.
By HAMILTON PAGE.
3 vols. crown 8vo. [Shortly.]

CICERO'S LIFE and LETTERS;
being a New Translation of the Letters included in
Mr. WATSON'S Selection. With Historical and Critical
Notes by the Rev. G. E. JEANS, M.A., Fellow of Hertford College, Oxford, and Assistant-Master in Halesbury College. 8vo. 10s. 6d. [Immediately.]

A LATIN GRAMMAR FOR SCHOOLS.

By H. J. ROBY, M.A., Author of 'A Grammar of the Latin Language from Plautus to Suetonius.' Crown
8vo. 3s. [Now ready.]

OUT OF THE DEEP: Words for the
Sorrowful. From the Writings of CHARLES KINGS-
LEY. Extra fesp. 8vo. cloth extra, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.
[Now ready.]

TWO WORLDS are OURS. By the
Rev. HUGH MACMILLAN, LL.D. F.R.S.E. Globe 8vo.
6s. [Next week.]

RIQUET of the TUFT: a Love
Drama. Extra crown 8vo. 6s.

ART AT HOME SERIES.

The MINOR ARTS: Porcelain Painting, Wood Carving, Stencilling, Modelling, Mosaic Work, &c. By CHARLES G. LELAND. With Illustrations,
crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

ENGLISH MEN OF LETTERS.

Edited by JOHN MORLEY. New Volumes.
BYRON. By Professor NICHOL. Crown
8vo. 2s. 6d.

MACMILLAN'S SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.
A DOUBTING HEART. By Annie
KEANY. Crown 8vo. [Next week.]

MACMILLAN & Co. London.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 21, 1880.

CONTENTS.

SWANSEA AND ITS HISTORY	229
MRS FITZGERALD'S TRIP TO MANITSA	230
BOOBY'S SELECTION OF ENGLISH LETTERS	231
HARRINGTON'S VIEW OF THE STATE OF IRELAND	232
THE TREATY OF CANTERBURY	233
COLLIER'S THOUGHTS IN MY GARDEN	234
THE HAMILTON PAPERS	234
NOVELS OF THE WEEK	236
BOOKS OF THE WEEK	237
THEOLOGICAL BOOKS	237
LIBRARY TABLE—LIST OF NEW BOOKS	238—239
"THE MELANCHOLY JAGUERS"	240
LIBRARY Gossip	240
SCIENCE—BURDETT ON PAY HOSPITALS; BLENNER ON TOWNSHIPS; LIBRARY TABLE; MATHEMATICAL SCHOOL BOOKS; GEOGRAPHICAL BOOKS; ASTRO- NOMICAL NOTES, SOCIETIES; Gossip	241—244
FINE ARTS—SCHOOLS OF MYCENÆ; THE BRITISH ARCHÆOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION; THE PRIVATE COL- LECTIONS OF ENGLAND; Gossip	244—248
MUSIC—LIBRARY TABLE; Gossip	249
DRAMA—LE THÉÂTRE DES JÉSUITES; Gossip	250—252

LITERATURE

The British Association for the Advancement of Science at Swansea. 1880.

FOR SWANSEA, the name of what is now practically the capital of South Wales and the centre of the copper-smelting district, antiquaries have found derivations as absurd as they are ingenious. One traces it from the swans, which he supposes may have had different habits in bygone ages, and may have affected salt water and a breaking sea; and another from the porpoises, which he conjectures may at a similar period have been called swine, and might then have abounded in the bay.

A glance at the Ordnance Map, however, shows us pretty clearly that the locality was the centre of one of those Danish settlements which were not rare in "Bretland." Scattered along the promontory of Gower we find, beyond Swansea itself (which is obviously Sweyns-ee), three places bearing Danish terminations in Oxwich, Helwick, and Burry Holmes, and a point named Worm's Head, an obvious corruption of the Danish personal name Orm. Similarly and further west, clustered round Milford Haven, we note such place-names as Hubberton, Skokholm, Skomer, Mitsuwick, Gouldtrop, Haegward, and Marlaes; and careful search will disclose traces of the sea rovers near every important harbour or head on the west coast.

Known to the Welsh as Abertawe, from its situation at the mouth of the Tawe, on the western side of which it lies, and which almost turns the peninsula of Gower into an island, its safe anchorage and commanding situation at the head of the broad bay no doubt specially commended it to the Norsemen. Equally so did the site tempt their Norman descendants, and late in the eleventh century Henry de Newburgh, otherwise de Beaumont (said by some to have been Earl of Warwick, and sadly confounded by the gazetteers with the de Beauchamps, later earls of that place), made what was practically an independent conquest of the district, and built his castle here. Whether this incursion was part of that headed by Robert Fitz Hamon and eleven other Norman nobles in the same district, which turned out so successfully, is not clear; but all these raids were no doubt favoured by the king as saving him the trouble of keeping his border himself, though he might not immediately profit by them personally.

Possibly to avoid treachery, this Henry de Beaumont is said by the earlier authorities to have garrisoned his castles with men brought from Somersetshire. Later compilers, stumbling like sheep over a comparison made in the 'Beauties of England and Wales' with reference to a similar case in which some Flemish were brought over as garrison, have erroneously made out that his soldiers were Flemish. Whoever they were, however, it is certain that, like the inhabitants of Portland, the dwellers in Gower are a distinct species from those of the mainland both in appearance and language. Their ancestors who kept watch and ward in the castles of this debatable land had from time to time plenty of trouble in keeping out the "wild Welsh." Swansea Keep itself had not been standing a quarter of a century before it had to resist a stout siege, and this it did successfully. Less lucky at its next trial, it was taken early in the thirteenth century by Rhys Ychwan, to whom was addressed a most interesting congratulatory ode, in which the writer graphically calls Swansea "that peaceless town," and exults over the rent towers of the key of England and the widowhood of all its defenders' wives.

Rebuilt and regarrisoned by the English, it was again stormed and sacked in 1260 by Llewellyn ap Gruffydd, and the castle practically razed. It must have been re-erected by the end of the reign of Edward II., for we find that shortly after his flight thither in 1326 his Chancellor's rolls—which he probably placed there himself when driven ashore in Glamorganshire—were taken in Swansea Castle.

Bishop Gower—himself descended, if we may judge from his name, from some local potentate, and probably kinsman of Chaucer's friend, the author of the 'Confessio Amantis,' so dear to Cartesian bibliomaniacs—took the ruins in hand very shortly after this, and once more made them serviceable, surmounting the tower with a beautiful parapet, designed not only for ornament, but also for a partial arrow-shelter for its defenders. Its exact date unfortunately cannot be ascertained, but that usually ascribed (1330) seems too early.

The castle suffered once more in the reign of Henry IV., when Owen Glendower took the town; but the bishop's beautiful work happily escaped unhurt on that occasion, and also when the French and Dunkirkers sacked the place in 1628 and shed a great deal of blood. During the Civil War it was garrisoned and long held for the king by one Llangharne, Langhorne, or Langhorn, a renegade from the Commonwealth, but when he was beaten and killed at St. Fagans, the stronghold fell into the hands of the Protector. Oliver himself, so say the guide-books, stayed here some time, comforting himself with private prayer with a female fanatic of the neighbourhood, and whether for her sake or not, he certainly soon afterwards confirmed the city liberties.

Excepting Bishop Gower's balustrade on the castle, there is nothing much to interest the antiquary in Swansea, for the church is modern and hideous, being a fine specimen of the churchwarden's style of the last century. It contains, however, two or three good monuments, particularly one to Sir Hugh Johnys (Jones?), who was knighted at the Holy Sepulchre, and was long a mercenary of the Emperor of Constantinople and a stout fighter for him against the Turks and Saracens.

Of celebrities Swansea has had few. Its inhabitants up to a comparatively recent date must have been a rough hand-to-mouth people, chiefly subsisting on a small coasting trade. Privateers we know set out from here, for in the reign of Edward V. Matthew Cradock, the captain of a privateer of this place, got into serious trouble with the King's Council for boarding and ransoming the good ship, the Julian of Brittany, trading between Bridgwater and Lisbon. Possibly akin to him was his namesake, Sir Matthew Cradock, the High Steward of Gower and the second husband of that unhappy kinswoman of the Scotch king who had been given in marriage to Perkin Warbeck. She was a Gordon of the Huntley family and deserved a better fate, though probably she forgot her early wrongs when living here with her Welsh husband. There is a monument to them in the church, which gives some rude if unfavourable idea of their personal appearance. Savage spent a year of his life here when he was sent away from London by his prudently generous friends, who seem to have provided him with scanty funds, partly to get rid of a disreputable companion, and partly in the hope that he might purge and live clean under the Welsh hills from the very want of opportunity for debauchery. How he fretted under the enforced quiet, how he failed to obtain advance subscriptions to his works from the cautious Welsh squires, and how he indignantly wrote home to those whose bread he was eating that their conduct "had been perfidiousness improving on perfidiousness, and inhumanity on inhumanity," may be read at length in Johnson's 'Lives of the Poets,' in which the writer labours tenderly but ineffectually to excuse his friend's career.

The most celebrated native of Swansea was a very different sort of man, Beau Nash, the well-known master of the ceremonies at Bath, and no doubt a very superior person, thoroughly qualified to fulfil the minute duties of his position. He was the son of a glass-maker here, and descended maternally from that Col. Poyer who was shot in Covent Garden for being a renegade from the Commonwealth, against whose forces he unsuccessfully defended Pembroke Castle in 1648.

Those in search of the pleasant watering-place with its shelving sands and sheltered bay, glowingly described in the old guide-books, will be disappointed if they think to find it here now. Its rural attractions are gone, for though Swansea has remarkably improved in money and manufactures, it is yet more remarkable for the emphatic nature of the stink which pervades it. It has not, like other manufacturing towns, the melancholy satisfaction of offering its visitors a choice of ill odours, so the monotony of the sour suffocation from its copper fumes is most depressing.

Copper, indeed, is king at Swansea now. A century and a half ago the only business done here was in straw-plaiting and coal exporting; but when some more than usually acute tin miner discovered that the "poder" which his fellows threw away when in search of the white metal was copper ore, it was not long before the discovery was made available at a place where coal and ore lie side by side. As Swansea practically began the copper-smelting trade, so it has retained almost a monopoly of it, ore being brought here to be smelted from all parts of the world. An ingenious reason has been hazarded for this, viz., that coal being more bulky than ore, it was cheaper to bring the ore to the fuel than the fuel to the ore. This may have had something to do with the secret of Swansea's success, but it is more probable that the skilled labour to be found here was the real reason of South American shippers sending over their rough material, for now that this skilled labour has been largely exported to all cupriferous countries, the increase of Swansea's prosperity has received a serious check. Indeed, the thriving coal trade, saved by fine docks, is more likely in future to benefit the town than the industry now so long identified with it.

In 1848 the British Association met at Swansea under the presidency of the Marquis of Northampton, and the Royal Archaeological Institute held its Congress at Lincoln. Curiously enough, both have returned in the same year to their former haunts. The Institution met at Lincoln on the 27th of July, and Prof. Ramsay will deliver his opening address at Swansea on Wednesday next.

A Trip to Manitoba. By Mary Fitzgibbon. (Bentley & Son.)

THOUGH Miss Fitzgibbon has visited Manitoba, and has written a lively and entertaining account of her personal experiences, yet she has formed an inaccurate notion of that prairie province. It is not quite clear whether she is even aware that the two years and a half which she spent in the Canadian North-West were not wholly spent in Manitoba, and that for two-thirds of the time she lived in the district of Keweydin. The vagueness of her knowledge of the place about which she writes is shown in her "prefatory note." It appears from her narrative that during her stay she lived with a contractor of the Pacific Railway, and it might be supposed that she would have acquired from him some authentic information about the position and prospects of that great undertaking. When, however, she writes in the first sentence of her prefatory note that "the Canadian Pacific Railway, so frequently referred to in the following pages, is now almost an accomplished fact," she shows that her opportunities for acquiring information have been strangely neglected. If the Canadian Pacific Railway be "almost an accomplished fact" five years hence, most of the persons interested in it will be highly pleased. Three-fourths of the line have yet to be constructed. She goes on to say that the railway "running through British Columbia to Vancouver's Island will unite the Atlantic with the Pacific." It would be quite as misleading to write that the London and South-Western Railway, running through Hampshire to the Isle of Wight, will unite the Thames with the Solent. The truth is that the Canadian Pacific will have its terminus on the mainland at Barrard's Inlet, just as the South-Western has a terminus at Portsmouth, and that passengers for Vancouver will have to cross the water in a boat just as those do who leave Portsmouth for Ryde or Ventnor.

Miss Fitzgibbon has as curious views about Manitoba as she has about the Canadian Pacific Railway and the geography of British Columbia. She tells readers who may be puzzled about the situation of Manitoba that it "is a province in the great north-west territory of the Canadian Dominion," that it lies within the same parallels of latitude as London and Paris, and that it has an extraordinarily healthy climate and an exceptionally fertile soil. These facts are substantially correct. The succeeding sentence is quite the reverse:—"Immense coal-fields exist within the province, its mountains abound with ore, and its natural wealth is enormous." There is neither a coal-field nor a mountain in the province; there is no ore, and its natural wealth is the fine climate and fertile soil already mentioned. She refers to chapter xi. for "an amusing instance of how universally the Prohibitory Liquor Law prevails in Manitoba." There is no such law in Manitoba. On the contrary, in Winnipeg, the capital, there are between twenty and thirty public-houses, a large proportion for a city of about 10,000 inhabitants. Here again Miss Fitzgibbon has confounded Manitoba with the district of Keweydin, in which her "amusing instance" occurred. The "prefatory note" ought either to be cancelled or corrected. It will convey erroneous impressions to those who read it for information, while it will give a sad opinion of Miss Fitzgibbon's local knowledge to those who are well informed. She had the greater reason for trying to be accurate because she knew how little was known about the place she visited:—

"A letter for me, mailed in a county in England in September, and mainly addressed to Winnipeg, Manitoba, omitting Canada, travelled to France, where it received sundry post-marks, and such sensible hints by the post-office officials as 'Try Calcutta.' At last, some one better acquainted with the geography of this side of the globe added 'Nouvelle Amériques,' and my letter reached me old New York, in Christmas week, richly ornamented with post-marks and protests from officials that it 'came to them in that condition,' tied together with two varieties of string, and frankly exhibiting its contents—a pair of lace sleeves, which, but for the honesty of the mail service, might easily have been abstracted."

The incidents of travel are pleasantly told; indeed, when Miss Fitzgibbon describes what she has seen she enlists the reader's attention; but she would have produced a more striking account of her voyage down the Red River of the North if she had been more minute in her details. The boat started from Fisher's Landing on Red Lake River, which is one of the most tortuous of navigable streams. Miss Fitzgibbon says that it flows into the Red River at Grand Forks, "some ten or twelve miles below Fisher's Landing." This is the distance by land. By water it is about sixty miles. If this fact had been added the readers of the volume would have been able to understand how much the stream winds. Her picture of muddy Winnipeg is not flattering, yet it is true in the main. It must be understood that it is only in the spring or when there has been much rain that the rich alluvium of the Red River has all the appearance of the worst kind of mud:—

"The first thing that struck me in Winnipeg was the mud. I had heard that Red River mud was the worst in the world, and I now for the first time realized how bad mud could be. Not only was the roadway so soft that every turn of a wheel loaded it inches deep with the sticky compound, and made it so heavy that the driver had frequently to stop and clear his wheels with a stick, but, trodden from the crossings into the side walks, it covered them with a slimy mixture very difficult to walk on. From the windows I could see people slipping and sliding about so much that any one ignorant of the cause might have attributed their unsteadiness to the strength of their morning libations; the absence of women from the streets making that solution appear possible, if not probable."

This mud has the virtue of being fertile to an unprecedented degree. Miss Fitzgibbon realized this when she visited an exhibition of agricultural products:—

"Many of the vegetables were so large that a description of them was treated with incredulity until some specimens were sent to Ottawa to be modelled for the Philadelphia Centennial Exhibition. One Swedish turnip weighed over thirty-six pounds; some potatoes (early roses and white) measured nine inches long and seven in circumference; radishes were a foot and a half long and four inches round; kail branched out to the size of a currant bush; cabbages, hard, white, and good, grew to a foot and a half in diameter, and there were cauliflower as large. Neither Indian corn, melons, nor tomatoes were exhibited, chiefly because most of the farmers in Manitoba have cultivated wheat-growing rather than market-gardening, as the former brings in the largest returns with the least labour."

Passages like the foregoing are the most valuable in the book, and Miss Fitzgibbon would have made a far more useful contribution to the literature of travel had she confined herself to reproducing what she saw. The following descriptive passage is good of its kind, and will please even those persons who can least easily forgive her many blunders respecting Manitoba:—

"Nowhere is evening more beautiful than in Manitoba. One instance in particular I noticed. The sun was setting low down in the heavens as in a sea of gold, one long flame-coloured line alone marking the horizon. In the south-west rose cloud upon cloud of crimson and gold, crossed by rapid flashes of pale yellow and white lightning, which momentarily obliterated their rich colours. To the south was a great bank of black thunder-cloud crested with crimson, reft to its deepest darkness by successive flashes of forked lightning. Immediately overhead a narrow curtain of leaden clouds was driven hither and thither by uncertain winds; while below the prairie and all its varied life lay bathed in the warmth and light of the departing sun, throwing into bold relief the Indian wigwag, with its ragged sides and cross poles. Squaws were seated round the camp fire, or dipping water from a pool hard by; Indians were standing idly about; droves of cattle were being driven in for milking; groups of horses, their fore feet tied loosely together, were hobbling awkwardly as they grazed; tired oxen were tethered near, feeding after their day's work, while the driver lay under his cart and smoked. Above the low squat tent of the half-breed there rose the brown-roofed barracks, its lazy flag clinging to the staff. Through the surrounding bushes water gleamed here and there. In the distance could be seen long trains of ox-carts coming from remote settlements, the low monotonous moan of their ungreased wheels making a weird accompaniment to the muttering thunder; or a black-robed procession of nuns on their way to the small chapel on the prairie, whose tinkling bell was calling them to prayers. An Indian on his fiery little steed, his beaded saddle-cloth glistening in the sun, was galloping in mad haste over the grass, away to the low hills on the north, which deserved their name of Silver Heights as they received the sun's good-night kiss."

Four Centuries of English Letters: Selections from the Correspondence of One Hundred and Fifty Writers, from the Period of the Pastoral Letters to the Present Day. Edited and Arranged by W. Baptiste Scoones. (G. Kegan Paul & Co.)

THE well-known criticism on Johnson's Dictionary, "interesting but slightly unconnected," involuntarily comes to mind on opening such a book as 'Four Centuries of English Letters.' Here is a mass of letters on all sorts of subjects by all sorts of writers. We have the grave, the gay, the lively, and severe. We have letters on theology and morals, love letters, political letters, letters full of advice, and letters full of gossip. The reader can hardly open a page without finding something curious, or amusing, or edifying, and though the book is, from the very nature of things, not one to read through at a sitting, it is an excellent book for dipping into every now and then. It has faults, no doubt, as we shall presently show, but it would be difficult to compile such a book without them; the materials are very widely spread, and then, too, the relative importance of both the letters and the letter-writers will not seem the same to every one.

A book of this sort was really needed, for though in 1807 a large volume of 'Elegant Epistles' was published, it can now be found only in old-fashioned libraries, side by side with the two volumes of 'Elegant Extracts' in which our grandmothers delighted, but which no living creature ever opens. These 'Elegant Epistles,' moreover, included translations from Latin authors, while their latest letter, from Gibbon, only comes down to 1789. On the other hand, this old collection contains many capital letters from writers of whose powers very inferior specimens appear in Mr. Scoones's volume.

It is obvious that in making a selection of letters the choice must be guided by very different considerations. There are celebrated historical letters which, without intrinsic merit as compositions, have exerted real and permanent influence on the world. There are letters which, again perhaps without any grace of style, narrate famous incidents and recall great names. There are letters of which the interest rests mainly in the fact that one eminent man is addressing another. And, lastly, there are the letters valued by us for their own sake, for the charm of manner that attracts, the play of wit that brightens, the geniality and ease that animate. The best letters of this class are like the best conversation. The writer is talking to us, and talking at his best. He tells gay anecdotes, or throws out droll expressions or paradoxes for our amusement, and sometimes, of course, shows that he can feel deeply and warmly, and can sympathize with sorrow no less than happiness. But good letter-writers themselves will differ, and we care for one because he has always something to tell us, and we turn to another because he tells us anything so well.

There is a curious and pedantic letter quoted by Mr. Scoones, which is most elaborate in its analysis of letters. It is by Howell, himself a most delightful letter-writer, but in this particular letter doing himself, by his style, every possible injustice. He says:—

"Now letters, though they be capable of any subject, yet commonly they are either narrative, obsequatory, consolatory, monitory, or congratulatory. The first consists of relations, the second of reprehensions, the third of comfort, the two last of counsel and joy. There are some who instead of letters write homilies,—they preach when they should epistolize; there are others that turn them to tedious treatises,—this is to make letters degenerate from their true nature."

On the whole, we prefer our own way of dividing the various classes of letters.

The first section of these 'English Letters' contains many of historical importance, but there are several singular omissions. Mr. Scoones prints Anne Boleyn's letter to Wolsey, but not the far more celebrated and most pathetic letter of Anne Boleyn to the king. Two of Henry VIII.'s letters to Anne Boleyn are given, and very commonplace love letters they are; but Mr. Scoones could have discovered more curious ones by going no further than the 'Harleian Miscellany.' Mr. Scoones inserts nothing of Mary Tudor (and Elizabeth's remarkable appeal to her is not here), nor anything of Mary, Queen of Scots. Indeed, all this first section (up to 1600) might easily be improved. Still, there is a great deal that is both entertaining and instructive in the selection.

The second section purports to carry the reader over a hundred years—to 1700; but, in fact, it does much more. Mr. Scoones should have taken the dates of the letters as guides, and not the births of the letter-writers. As it is the chronological arrangement becomes extremely confusing. Mr. Scoones prints in section ii., for instance, a letter written by the Earl of Chesterfield to his son on the 10th of August, 1749, and in section iii. (which includes from 1700 to 1800) a letter written by Horace Walpole to Sir Horace Mann on the 25th of June, 1749. The later letter comes first simply because the writer was born first. It is better, then, to take these two sections, up to 1800, together. There is less, perhaps, of historical interest than in section i., but we are among the great masters of prose. There are, however, some terrible sins both of commission and of omission. Why is there only one letter of John Milton, and none of Prior, or Gay, or Atterbury, or Peterborough, or Congreve, or Sir William Jones, or Sheridan? These are only a few of the more noticeable omissions. On the other hand, we have Pope's letter to Lady Mary describing the death of the two lovers by lightning, which he transcribed bodily from Gay. Mr. Scoones prints no less than four letters from Dr. Arnold, who was a most excellent man, but a dull letter-writer, and only two specimens of Gray, whose scholarly and playful humour places his letters in the very foremost rank—some say first of all. Then there is but one letter of Mrs. Piozzi. Indeed, the ladies generally have been badly treated, and there is nothing of Mrs. Barbauld, Miss Mitford, Charlotte Brontë, Mrs. Browning, or Mrs. Gaskell, any one of whom wrote better letters than Thomas Moore or Henry Kirke White, or several others who have secured a corner in this collection.

There is still a short fourth section of eleven names of those who were born and have died since the beginning of the present century. Here, again, is a want of proportion, for Kingsley, who was not a specially good letter-writer, furnishes four letters to four of Dickens (perhaps the best letter-writer of our time) and two of Thackeray.

In looking over these letters the reader will feel satisfied that two very common opinions about letters are fallacies. In the first place, women have not written such good letters as men, though of course, as has been just said, some women write better letters than some men. Still, their best letters are only second best. Miss Mitford has spoken of "an opinion which I have long ventured to entertain of the general inferiority of women's letters," and she goes on to "appeal to the collections of such as are most celebrated in that line, from the overrated Lady Mary Wortley Montagu down to Anna Seward." She only admits of one great exception, and that not an English one, Madame de Sévigné. Within certain limits women's letters are often delightful, but a woman's knowledge of the world is seldom so thorough as a man's, and where it is a woman will generally rather shine in society than write for the amusement of a single friend or for the chances of a posthumous fame.

Another common opinion, which really will not hold water for a moment, is that letter-writing is a forgotten art, and that the oldest letters are the best. As a matter of fact, some of the best letters in this volume are among the very last, and there are living letter-writers, not included here, who will hold their own with the great majority of their predecessors. Of course we cannot expect to get a Gray, a Walpole, a Sterne, a Lamb, a Byron, or a Dickens every day, but the supply of good letter-writers is not likely absolutely to die out. A man will always wish to do what he can do well, and when a man has opportunities of observation and powers of expression he will often feel that a familiar letter to a friend is the best and pleasantest way of recording what he wants to say. Possibly, too, the feeling that his letter may some day be read more widely will stimulate his ambition; but in this there is an inevitable danger, for he may easily destroy the very chance by becoming less natural and more self-conscious. Of course people who have no taste nor faculty for letter-writing have now every opportunity of excusing themselves from what was always a wearisome task. But post-cards and short notes are often at least as great a gain to readers as to writers, and then, as nobody keeps such things, the saving of labour in the future will be immense, as any one who has had to wade through piles of old family letters can testify. Those long, tiresome letters, often not very legible and often crossed in an excruciating way, will exist no longer. Small beer may still be chronicled, but the chronicles will be shorter than in those dark days of heavy postages.

We have already had much occasion to find fault with Mr. Scoones in his editing of this book, but we have not done with him yet. He says in his preface that "political letters, except in a very few instances, will be conspicuous by their absence. The chief obstacle to their introduction here has been the want of sufficient interest in any one or two such letters taken by themselves. The correspondence of politicians is a branch of literature in itself."

Mr. Scoones is, no doubt, perfectly right in these views, but we should have excused him had he given one or two more of Lord Palmerston's characteristic and humorous letters. We do not, however, excuse him for inserting two letters of Junius and another of Peter Plymley. These are not political letters at all. They are short political pamphlets, written under assumed names and for the public eye. Mr. Scoones might just as well, so far as any principle goes, have reprinted Sir William Harcourt's old letter to the last Lord Derby on the "Morality of Public Men," or one of Mr. Gladstone's letters to Lord Aberdeen about Naples. Sydney Smith's letter to the editor of the Morning Chronicle is also obviously out of place.

On somewhat different grounds the "single specimen of Theodore Hook's absurdly facetious 'Ramsbottom Letters'" should not have been inserted. At any rate, if Miss Dorothea Ramsbottom can fairly put in an appearance, why not our old friends Evelina, and Winifred Jenkins, and the other charming ladies whose letters Miss Burney and Thomas Smollett and other respectable editors have preserved?

Nor is a rhyming letter admissible, like the one printed here from Barham to Dr. Wilmot. When a letter is in verse it really ceases to be a letter. Who would think of placing "Huzza, Hodgson, we are going," or "My boat is on the shore" among Byron's letters?

That this book should have been much better, and could have been much better with a little more care, is certain. The explanatory head notes which Mr. Scoones has added are generally very fair; but there are here also occasional oversights, as when he more than implies that poor Mary Wollstonecraft's letters to Imlay were first made known to the world by Mr. Kegan Paul. Still, all said and done, here are a great number of most entertaining letters brought together in a handy form.

A Short View of the State of Ireland. Written in 1605 by Sir John Harrington, Knt., and now first Edited by Rev. W. Dunn Macray, F.S.A. (Parker & Co.)

SIR JOHN HARRINGTON, not the author of the "Oceana," but the translator of Ariosto, possessed much knowledge of the affairs of Ireland, having been employed in that country in both the most peaceful and the most troubled periods of the reign of Elizabeth. He had a certain experience of public business, he had made the acquaintance of men the most opposite in politics and religion, and had observed the proceedings of the Government and the condition of the inhabitants with an impartiality which was founded upon an absence of any special belief, a genial temper, and a strong sense of the humorous. Under these circumstances it was but natural that he should entertain opinions about the character of the natives and the best mode of civilizing the country very different from those embodied in the detailed plans of statesmen or industriously published by the military adventurers who, in the sixteenth century, crossed the channel with the hope of founding a family upon estates carved out of lands confiscated, or, to use the more polite phrase, "granted for the purpose of plantation." The conclusions at which this sarcastic and indifferent spectator arrived about the state of Ireland have been accidentally preserved in the tract which forms the subject of this article—a tract the object of which was so extraordinary, and the contents so admirably calculated to defeat the desires of the author, that nothing less than a knowledge of the character and antecedents of Sir John Harrington could prevent its being construed as an elaborate pleasantry.

Sir John Harrington, after having made a pretence of studying law, devoted himself seriously to the business of a courtier, and with such success that her Majesty was accustomed to describe her illegitimate relation as "that witty fellow, my godson." To improve the morals of the ladies-in-waiting, he published a translation of a peculiar episode of the "Orlando Furioso," and he so offended the queen that she forbade him the Court until he had completed a version of the entire poem. Having published his "Ariosto" in 1591, he applied himself to the study of Rabelais, and the result was the publication in 1596 of a satire in the style of the curé of Meudon. The indecencies of this work might have been passed over, but the personal allusions were objected to, and the author found himself involved in proceedings in the Star Chamber, to avoid which he in 1599 took service under Essex in the Irish war, and so far distinguished himself that he was there knighted, much to the queen's displeasure. Having returned with Essex to England, he fell into disgrace at Court, and, being threatened with the Fleet, he "poetically" replied that, having come so late from her Majesty's land service, he hoped he would not be pressed to serve her Majesty in the Fleet. To prison nevertheless he went, but after three days' confinement was released, and he assured the queen that he felt like St. Paul rapt up into the third heaven. His wit and considerable learning recommended him to King James, and, being then in his forty-fourth year, he cast about to discover some appointment at once permanent, lucrative, and honourable. Having heard of the "languishing sickness" of the Chancellor Archbishop Loftus, he conceived that the situation of Chancellor-Archbishop in Ireland would exactly suit him; and as he was equally convinced that he himself was pre-eminently suited to perform the compound episcopal-judicial duties of the office, he made his "humble and zealous offer for his Majesties service in Ireland," and accompanied his letter of application with a short relation, directed to the Lords Devonshire and Cranborne, wherein he set forth his peculiar fitness for the office he desired, and the line of policy which he proposed to adopt when appointed.

This amusing tract has been now made public, and is issued as one of a contemplated short series of publications from MSS. in the Bodleian Library, another instalment of which we reviewed last July.

The author having overcome some scruples which he had "whether a man might with a safe conscience ambire magistratum, now for an office, specially of such nature, or ought rather expect to be called and appointed to the same," felt himself bound to fortify his application by suitable precedents:—

"But now, my Lords, yt may bee objected that the example ys strawge for a Knight, a laymaa, and one moche conversant in lyght studies and poetry, to bee made a Byshop and a Preest, but that ys not new or strawge. For many hundred years since, Novatianus was chosen a Byshop before hee was baptised, and Nectarius, a man specially commended by Mr. Calvin, being both lay and unlearned, was made Byshop of Constantinople; and not to travell so far for examples, Wickham, a good surveyor of building in King Edward the Third's tyme, hee that wrote on Winsor wall, 'This howse made Wickham,' meaning, not that hee had made the howse, but that the howse had made and rayed him, this Wickham was made Byshop of Winchester, and howsoever hee cold not preach to edifye the Church, yet hee will bee famous to all posteritye for edifyce in the Church."

His poetical works, Sir John thinks, should not be alleged against him,—nay, should rather be accounted in his favour: "Witness Saint Awgustin, who sayth the fyrst Poets wear Theologi as the name Fates doth partly signifie." He declines to compare himself with the existing bishops, "as skorning theyr meaneesse," although he admits that some of them were men "of reverent guyfts," but these, he says, would be very willing to have him "a fellow laborer in the desolat vyneyard of the Church of Ierland, which bringeth yet sower grapes such as set not teeth but swords on edge."

Sir John does not pretend to any knowledge of English law, but maintains that such acquirements are not necessary for judicial office; he thinks that the less law a judge in Ireland has the better judge he will be; what is really required for the office is good temper and common sense. As to the minor matter of the practice of the Court, he had considerable although unpleasant experience, for divers troubles, the details of which perhaps were unsuited to the occasion in hand, had "quickened his understanding and increased his experience and knowledg in matters of the Star-chamber and Chawncery (in both of which he had fownd most honorable justys)." The objections which our author takes to the mode in which Ireland was then governed are precisely those which occur to the mind of any educated Englishman of the nineteenth century acquainted with the State papers of the period; and the policy which he proposes for adoption is that which would now, under similar circumstances, be established by a good-humoured member of the Indian Civil Service. The modernness of Sir J. Harrington's views is most remarkable. His peculiar opinions may be attributed to his study of Rabelais, whose works inculcate a dislike for shams, genial good humour, a spirit of universal compromise, and a desire that all should make themselves as comfortable as possible under the circumstances. If Pantagruel had been appointed Deputy, and had arrived in Ireland accompanied by Friar John as Archbishop of Dublin, he would probably have acted upon the principles of Harrington, who discerned that the peace then supposed to have been established in the country could not be durable unless the mass of the people were contented and comfortable:—

"And now give mee leave, my Lords, in my zeal to that Cowntry (where I allee have receaved some dignity) to tell y^r Lordships that the quyet yt now enioeth ys not a perfect recovery of heith, but rather (as some, not of the worst berth and breeding in that Cowntry, have told mee) lyke to a man that having had a pestilent and furious fever, and all his blood and strength spent therewith, lyes quyet not because he wold not, but because hee cannot, stir; but yet as redy still to rage and rave yf the humor had strength as before."

The evils which are denounced in this little work are familiar to us of the present day: first, the instability of titles to land and uncertainty of ownership; secondly, the introduction of a system of municipal law foreign to the habits of the people and which no private man could understand; thirdly, the existence of an army of adventurers, whose interest it was to excite rebellion instead of maintaining order; and, finally, the insulting attempts to promote religious conformity. It was in the interest of the officers of the army that there should be rebellions and confiscations, and they acted in conformity with their interest:—

"Soch ys the nature of Justice, that the most vniust honor yt, the most feeble submit them to yt, the barbarous obey yt; yt makes, yt confyrms, yt encreases, the frutes of peace; and whear yt ys thear indeed Beati Pacifici. But this our Captens and men of warre thear perhaps do not wys; at least I observed, evn at my fyrst being thear, that some of them tooke speciall care how to nowrysh the seeds of new quarrells, least yf all wear quyet theyr craftes wold bee out of request, doing heerin lyke our gun-powder-makers or salt-peeter-men, that fyrst dig vp our flours to serve theyr turn, and in putting backe the earth agayn leave a mixture apt to breed more of the same stuffe in few years. This makes Machiavell in his booke of the Art of Warre both confesse and confyrme that hee that makes soldiery his art to lyve by can hardly bee eyther vir bonus or civis bonus, honest man or good subject."

When the country is disturbed judges and lawyers avail little to bring it back to order:—

"Gave mee leave to say this to both, your Lordships, yt ys not the sending thither of Judges or great Lawyers that can pacify theyr contentions, or set an end to theyr suyts, as well appeared in the year 1587, when two of our principall Judges of this land now lyving tooke a long and paynfull, and as vayne and frutlesse, a Journey into Munster."

The exertions of the Protestant clergy merely contributed to excite disorder and ill feeling:—

"By these and soch kynd of myld conferences many may bee wonne, and not as our men have used them, by tyolent hewing down theyr crosses, burning and defacing theyr ymages, rayling in theyr pulpet on all theyr Saynts and ceremonies, feasting on Ash-wednesdays and Good-Frydays, going to plow on theyr Christmas-days, and pronouncing that theyr awncestors are damned that did but pray to our Lady, with soch lyke, as yt ys no marvell yf soch laborers have in 44 years made so slender an harvest."

The principles advocated by Sir J. Harrington are simple. The inhabitants of Ireland are not an exception to ordinary humanity:—

"I never found in the remote shores of England or Walls eyther the gentry more kynde in theyr fashion of intertayment, or the marchawnts and townsmen and women more cyvill in behavoure, or the mean sort and peasaunts more loving and serviable whear they honestly vied, though all the fyve provinces, but they are so seldome used to soch vauge, and so grossly abused, somtyme by the souldyer in war, somtyme by the offyicer in peace, that yt ys no wonder yf they take revenge."

The policy to be adopted was to treat every one justly and kindly, to make every one comfortable all round, and to leave things alone; to give to the owners of land parliamentary titles and the benefit of a Statute of Limitations; to compel the officials to abstain from violence and corruption; to abolish the Common Law courts and the English law, and to establish an equitable and common-sense Star Chamber; and, lastly, not to insult the Catholics, to govern for the general benefit of the people, and not to trouble oneself about the result.

If Sir J. Harrington had succeeded in his suit he could not have been a worse bishop than most of the occupants of the episcopal bench; as a civil official he would probably have been a seventeenth century Lord Carleton; but what is most surprising is that a man of Harrington's abilities should have imagined that such a composition could advance his suit. What would Sir J. Davis have thought of the project of the abolition of the English Common Law, or the Protestants of the open toleration of the Catholics, or the king and the adventurers of a policy which would have rendered impossible the plantation of Ireland?

It is satisfactory to know that if Sir J. Harrington did not succeed in becoming an archbishop, or even a bishop, he did the next thing to it: he wrote a book about bishops, entitled 'A Brief View of the State of the Church,' intended for the private use of the Prince of Wales.

Das Bündnis von Canterbury. Von J. Caro. (Gotha, Perthes.)

THE Treaty of Canterbury, made in August, 1416, between Henry V. of England and the Emperor Sigismund, was productive of important results in European history. The circumstances attending it are a little obscure, and various judgments have prevailed concerning them. Sigismund left the Council of Constance to procure the withdrawal of the allegiance of the Spanish kingdoms from Pope Benedict XIII. He then passed on to Paris in his capacity of peace-maker, to try and end the war between France and England, and so prepare the way for united action on the part of Christendom as regarded the settlement of the Papacy, the reformation of the Church, and even a crusading expedition against the Turks. The distracted state of things in Paris did not afford Sigismund much ground for hope, and he passed on to England, where he set on foot a negotiation between Henry V. and France. This negotiation was not productive of any result, and on its failure Sigismund deserted the ancestral alliance of the house of Luxemburg with France, and by the Treaty of Canterbury entered into an alliance with Henry V. of England.

An alliance with the Empire on the part of Henry V. was a continuance of the old policy of Edward III., who wished for imperial countenance in his claims on France. But on the part of Sigismund it seemed unwise, as it awakened against him the hostility of France, and destroyed his previous position of impartiality in the Council of Constance. When he returned thither he openly sided with the English nation against the French, and the prevalence of national animosity within the Council hindered his schemes of Church reform, which he professed to have nearest to his heart. The question, therefore, How came Sigismund to enter into the Treaty of Canterbury? is one of considerable importance, and has had various answers given it.

The answer generally given and accepted used to be that Sigismund was partly won over by Henry V., partly was forced into the treaty by the anger of the king and the English people at the fact that France, during the futile negotiations carried on while Sigismund was in England, despatched a fleet against Plymouth. Sigismund was accused of aiding the treachery of the French, and made the treaty to clear himself. Against this view Dr. Max Lenz, in an interesting monograph, 'König Sigismund und Heinrich der Funfte von England,' published in 1874, endeavoured to prove that already in 1411 Henry IV. and Sigismund had been in correspondence, that the breach with France had been decided upon before Sigismund left Constance, and that his peace negotiations were begun with a view to finding a pretext for carrying out the project. He argued that the subsequent proceedings at the Council of Constance were due to a collusion between Sigismund and Henry V., and that the action of the English bishops in obedience to their king gave Sigismund an opportunity for retiring from an opposition to the prevailing feeling in favour of a new Papal election, in which he was no longer able to persist.

Herr Caro comes forward to dispute this opinion, and his researches among the documents of Sigismund's chancery have enabled him to make an important contribution to the question. He upholds, we think with justice, the sincerity of Sigismund's proceedings. Sigismund's schemes of pacification were, no doubt, chimerical; he trusted ridiculously to his own skill and the imperial prestige to settle matters which were entirely beyond his control. He was vain, then as always, but at least he was sincere. When he found that the distracted state of the French Council gave him no hopes of success in Paris, he boldly resolved to try his fortune in England. The French opened negotiations only to juggle Sigismund and Henry V. by gross diplomatic duplicity, which Herr Caro has brought to light. The affront offered to Sigismund's self-respect led him to form an alliance with Henry V., who, like himself, was sincere. The Count of Holland, who was aiding in the negotiations, left England abruptly, and took away the ships in which he had promised to convey Sigismund back to the Continent. The anger of the English king and of the English people was awakened by the French duplicity, and no doubt Sigismund felt his position to be ignominious in having brought about negotiations which ended so disastrously. He made an alliance with England, for he scarcely had any other choice, and returned in an English ship to Calais.

Of course Sigismund was foolish in entering upon his errand; but, granting this, Herr Caro urges that his conduct was strictly honest in discharging it. He returned to Constance as an ally of England, and was opposed by the French in the Council. This was an inevitable result of what had occurred. But Sigismund still sought to pursue his policy of obtaining a reformation of the Church before the election of a new Pope. The French joined with the Italians in demanding a Papal election first, and Henry V.'s ecclesiastical conservatism led him to join with them. There is no sufficient evidence of a close understanding between Henry V. and Sigismund about the affairs of the Council. The defection of the English from the side of the Germans on the question of the priority of the reformation placed Sigismund in a minority. But this was not the result of any collusion between Sigismund and Henry V. Sigismund's action was consistent and straightforward, and he resisted to the last.

Such is a sketch of Herr Caro's argument, and the matters which it concerns deserve more notice at the hands of English historical writers than they have met with.

Thoughts in my Garden. By Mortimer Collins. Edited by Edmund Yates. 2 vols. (Bantley & Son.)

It would seem that the poet of Knowl Hill is receiving at length the recognition of which he had too little in his lifetime; at least it may be presumed that his kindly editor, Mr. Yates, has been moved to give his services by the success of the recent collection of Collins's miscellaneous pieces. It seems clear that, either owing to the unfashionable nature of his opinions or a certain boisterous treatment of opponents, he was undervalued when alive, and that a sufficient reaction has set in to secure to him something more than a transient reputation.

The present collection is highly judicious; more appears of the genial humanity of the man, and fewer of his crudities and mannerisms, than on previous occasions; and though there are a good many réchauffés and repetitions which might have been avoided, the book is pleasant reading throughout, and contains many a bright thought and many a graceful lyric.

The pretty title suggests the name of Andrew Marvell, and it is quaint to note the contrast between the Puritan and the Bohemian in the "happy garden state" both loved so well. In Marvell's lovely verse, though his thought takes the colour of the shade, it transcends it, and creates "far other worlds and other seas." He is an anchorite to whom the stillness of the garden suggests withdrawal into abstract speculation. Even the birds only strike him as prepared for flight. Not so our more mundane—shall we say more human?—gardener. He revels in the life of the miniature Paradise about him. Its growth, not its stillness, refreshes him. The jealous affection of his robins, the intelligence and sympathy he wins from wild pets and tame, the phases of seed-time and harvest, keep him alive with their changeful interest. Above all, Collins never thought

Two Paradises are in one,
To live in Paradise alone.

His Eden would have been very imperfect without its Eve, and his social instinct never rusted in retirement. Most of our readers will remember his verses on birds and their teaching:—

O swallow, flying by windy ways,
Over leagues of white sea-foam,
To the nest you left in the autumn days
Under eaves of an English home—
Voyage right swiftly, wandering bird,
A speak in the distant blue,
For the pulse of life in the leaves is stirred,
And white doves coo.

Have you wintered away in the Cyclades
Or on marge of mysterious Nile?
No matter, so that the summer sees
You back in our western isle.
But come more swift than the sailing ship,
For the skies are calm and clear,
And I long to see your brown wing dip
In stream and mere.

Yes, I long for the magic of indolent hours,
The glamour of amorous eyes
When the bee which flutters 'mid fern and flowers
In the noon's rich languor dies,
When bees grow drowsy in honey-bells,
And the brown lark sleeps in his nest,
And a vernal vision of gladness swells
One soft white breast.

It cannot be said that all the thoughts in the garden are so appropriate. In the main the book is a reprint of light magazine articles which treat de omnibus rebus et quibusdam aliis. Mr. Collins gives his opinions on the malt tax, which in a prophetic spirit he said the Liberals were bound to abolish,—on spelling bees, on which he remarks that their promoters, having only a big bad dictionary as their final authority, arrive at what has been called a "flocinancial nihilipitification,"—on "lady helps," or, as he more meetly calls them, "waiting gentlewomen,"—and on all kinds of literary matters, from a contrast between Tennyson's 'Charge of the Light Brigade' and Drayton's 'Agincourt,' to some remarks both sound and trenchant on Sainte-Beuve's mystification over the Sermon on the Mount. Collins was a better critic of arts than arms, and in treating of the Balaclava charge should not have committed himself to the revoco opinion that the great winner of battles must be heavy artillery; but we agree with him in the enormity of the rhyme "hundred" and "thundered," and the merit of the grand lines:—

Upon St. Crispin's day
Fought was this noble fray,
Which fame did not delay
To England to carry;
Oh! when shall English men
With such acts fill a pen
Or England breed again
Such a King Harry!

A man who wrote so much, and who does not seem to have had many early advantages, must inevitably have made great errors, and, like all partisans, was tempted to think his opponents the worst of men till he made their personal acquaintance. The incident related by Mr. Yates in the preface is a ludicrous instance of this. It is pleasant to notice, however, how much he found to like in his later years in persons of the most opposite opinions. Of his occasional lapses in accuracy his remark upon Chaucer is one. He seems to have forgotten that it was Spenser who called Chaucer a well of English undefiled, and that no more in Spenser's day than in Chaucer's was it the vogue to identify our composite language with the Ænglisc of Mr. Freeman.

On the whole, this collection of Collins's works, though it will tend to define his position as a man of a good deal of originality of thought and "a charming lyricist," will not set him in the category of learned men. Considering the questionable advantage of much learning to any but the highest class of minds, we may conclude that the man is happy who, though not profoundly read, can write thus, and in this measure be a philosopher and a poet:—

Come April, her white fingers wet with flowers,
And we might well enjoy her sunny hours
If the malignant Fate which o'er us rules
Did not bring April Fools.

Fools who will whisper, you and I together
Ought not to wander in the sweet spring weather,
For I'm a boy and you're a girl, and so
'Tis very wrong, you know.

To hunt for violets in meadows fair
Till April rains bet diamonds on your hair
Is really such a silly girlish fashion
It puts them in a passion.

Youth's joy must have its grim concomitants,
Its sulky sisters and its maiden aunts;
Well, let them scowl at us and keep their rules—
We won't be April Fools.

The Hamilton Papers: being Selections from Original Letters in the Possession of his Grace the Duke of Hamilton and Brandon, relating to the Years 1638-1650. Edited by Samuel Rawson Gardiner. (Camden Society.)

MUCH has recently been written about Charles I. and his 'Idon,' but a remarkable illustration of that monarch's character, recently published by the Camden Society, justifies a brief recurrence to the subject. This new evidence is drawn from the historical documents at Hamilton Castle, and consists of a minute description of the king's conduct and behaviour during the chief portion of his miserable residence at Newcastle, before his surrender by the Scottish army into the custody of our Parliament.

From the beginning of August, 1646, to the end of January, 1647, is the space of time embraced in this narrative, and a special interest attaches to the king's demeanour during those months; it was then that he first began to pose before his subjects as a living exemplar of a "sacred Majesty in his sufferings and solitudes," and, by making use of his misfortunes and captivity, aroused in his favour that reaction of regard and sympathy which, if wisely employed, might have restored him to his throne, but which, being misused, sent him to the scaffold.

Charles had, to a singular extent, a gift rarely possessed by wearers of a crown: he was able to adapt himself readily to external circumstances and to the exigencies of the moment. This faculty he utilized even in the crisis when the battle of Stow-on-the-

Wold completed the dispersal of the royal army. The king perceived the opportunity thus created, and that, though a defeat, the rout gave to him a considerable advantage. For, to use the words with which Sir J. Astley summed up the result of that conflict, though the king's opponents were "his masters" and "had done their work," still as certainly "their play" would end in "their falling out among themselves." Cessation of active hostility immediately dissolved the sole bond of union which held them together.

To disunite his disuniting enemies was an end to which Charles promptly addressed himself. Freed by utter overthrow from factious counsellors, and from generals more bent on thwarting each other than on defending the crown, he could employ his own resources without hindrance, and, with innate self-reliance, he embarked on a new line of action. The sword was struck out of his hand, and so he exchanged a war of force for a war of intrigue. He brought his personal influence into the field; the part of a conquering king being his no longer, he assumed the character of the suffering king, of a martyr for his people.

An unconditional and immediate surrender was the king's first move. Charles threw himself upon the mercy of the nearest army, approaching it, without apparent previous negotiation, as an unarmed wanderer. He then divested himself, with ostentatious zeal, of all military power. He gave up Newark to the Parliament; he directed the "governors of our cities and towns of Oxford, Lichfield, Worcester, and all other our commanders, to quit those castles and forts intrusted to you by us," and to disband the forces under their control. He commanded Montrose to cease fighting, and exiled him from Scotland. In appearance Charles also quitted his hold upon Ireland; and he proclaimed to all his subjects that "he was resolved to comply in everything which might be for their good," and insisted on his right to appear as their mediator before Parliament, that he might "restore peace and happiness to these miserably distracted kingdoms." Nor did he neglect, whilst he conspicuously exhibited himself to the world at large as the true peace-maker, to create upon the minds of the few who witnessed his captivity at Newcastle the same impression. No outbreak of the arrogant irritation to which he was naturally prone was ever seen; no event, however untoward, disturbed his unmoved confidence in ultimate success. That "God for his" Charles "hath in heavenly pay a glorious angel," and that "weak man must fall before the deputy elected by the Lord," was asserted by the king in every word and gesture.

That, when the dust and smoke of the battle-field dispersed, Charles I. appeared with scenic effect upon the political stage as the martyr king, is not an idea due merely to modern fancy. To quote the words of an acute contemporary observer, "the people" were convinced by the king's misfortunes

"that though his designs had been wonderfully defeated, his armies beaten out of the field, and himself delivered into the hands of the Parliament, against whom he had made a long and bloody war, yet that certainly he must be in the right; and that though the king was guilty of the blood of thousands, yet was still in a condition of giving pardon, and not in need of receiving any, which made them flock from all parts to see him as he was brought from Newcastle to Holmby, falling down before him, and courting him as only able to restore them their peace and settlement."

A captive king inevitably attracts sympathy and regard from many of his subjects; and that Charles, to heighten this impression, deliberately assumed a calm, resigned demeanour wholly foreign to his real nature—the fact to which we desire to call attention—is distinctly proved by a comparison between the letters he wrote to Henrietta Maria from Newcastle and the letters which Mr. Gardiner has selected from the archives of the Duke of Hamilton.

Both collections of correspondence belong to the latter half of the year 1646, and both refer to the same subject, the king himself; but they are not the less absolutely opposed in tone. Charles in his letters to his wife shows himself a restless, passionate, and irritable being; he is full of vague hopes that "his restitution to the throne" will be soon effected by a "strong formed party from abroad"; he trusts no one either in England or Scotland, not even those whom he calls "his friends,"—the Duke of Hamilton and his associates,—having but "little belief that they will do what they say"; he eagerly looks for help from the Pope, or from France, Spain, or Holland, and expects that such "a storm from abroad" will break upon England as will cause his enemies "to change their minds," and enable him "to make either a gallant war or a happy peace."

This was the real Charles, a king wholly unreluctant on the efforts of his adherents, but alternating between a confident anticipation of foreign military aid and that feeling of hopeless irritation that attends indulgence in vain expectations. The outward Charles, however, was a being quite different from the man disclosed by his letters to his wife; and yet it is a fully competent observer who supplies the picture of the king from without. Sir Robert Murray, the writer of the letters now published, was both royal secretary and also confidential agent to the Duke of Hamilton, for whose guidance Murray forwarded every week a detailed and continuous account of the king's conduct and demeanour.

A monarch experiencing for the first time a captive's lot, whilst two nations and two armies were consulting about his fate, would show remarkable self-restraint were he able to refrain from betraying any nervous anxiety; but Charles carried his performance far beyond that: he met whatever happened with the didactic of absolute indifference. He rejected the terms of compromise offered to him by his victors; and Murray reported that he had fully explained to Charles the disastrous effect of that refusal, and told him that not one of his friends "dared to speak a word in Parliament that may be wrested into a favourable sense for the king," and that an immediate advance to the north by the English army and other extreme measures were "talked of." But the king upon receiving the report "said nothing," and "presently went to chess, and talked as merrily as ever."

So again when the Earl of Essex died, an event most calamitous to the royal cause, the king, in appearance at least, was "nothing sensible of" that loss, and asserted, on the contrary, "that everybody was convinced that it is now in his power to conserve his crown." Then, to extinguish all chance of a peaceful settlement of their dispute, the Commons put the proposals which the king had rejected into the form of statutory "ordinances"; that hostile proceeding, however, "moved him not at all." Nor did even the threat of adjourning Parliament, and thus leaving the action of the army unrestrained—a step "of the most dangerous consequences of any design that hath yet been broached"—disturb his self-possession. And in his "wonted unmovedness" Charles continued to the end, until upon the retreat of the Scottish army, and the arrival of the English Commissioners to convey their prisoner to Holmby House, Murray "cut off passionately the thread of his woeful subject." Charles's conduct was to him a mystery which he could not unravel, for he was as well acquainted as the king himself with the false hopes upon which that misguided man, who "never made the right use of any opportunity," relied.

The historical interest of an accurate account of Charles I. during what Murray terms "the very paroxysm of his affairs" is enhanced by the keen personal interest that attaches to the writer and to the receiver of these letters. Both were men not only remarkable in themselves, but also in the singular contrast they afford in career and character. Sir R. Murray passed through those troubled times unscathed, "beloved and esteemed by men of all sorts and sides"; he gained the confidence of Cardinal Richelieu, and, so far as it was possible, also of Charles I. After the Restoration he received distinguished employment in the state; he was the founder and first president of the Royal Society; and then when Evelyn's "dear and excellent friend, that good man and accomplished gentleman, Sir Robert Murray, Secretary for Scotland," died, he was buried, by the king's command, in Westminster Abbey. The Duke of Hamilton had, on the contrary, as Charles most truly said of him, "ever a strange number of enemies in every place." Though he was invariably unsuccessful, all the ill will and jealousy that success provokes pursued him constantly; and in the end he threw away his life in behalf of a master to whom, according to universal belief, he had never given true and faithful service.

NOVELS OF THE WEEK.

The Tenth Earl. By John Berwick Haswood. 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Amy Wynter. By Thos. A. Pinkerton. 3 vols. (S. Tinsley & Co.)

The Sport of Fate. By R. Dowling. 3 vols. (Tinsley Brothers.)

Doña Perfecta: a Tale of Modern Spain. By B. Perez Galdos. Translated by D. P. W. (S. Tinsley & Co.)

The Undiscovered Country. By W. D. Howells. (Boston, U.S., Houghton, Mifflin & Co.; London, Trubner & Co.)

MR. HARWOOD takes by preference an aristocratic theme for his romances, and lavishes titles of nobility upon his puppets. Lady Flavia, Lord Lynn's wife, young Lord Penrith, are the prominent characters of some of his former novels, and 'The Tenth Earl' introduces us to men and women of the same kidney, speaking the same kind of words and doing the same kind of things, displaying the grace and the ungraciousness of the same aristocracy. There is, of course, little specific difference between English peers and English commoners, between the lords and lordlings whose lines are popularly supposed to have fallen in such pleasant places and the general body of wealthy and well-mannered Englishmen. For this reason Mr. Harwood's stories are about as faithful to the reality which they profess to represent as they would be if their actors never rose higher in the titular grade than plain Mr., Mrs., and Miss. The author does, indeed, seem to consider that a change in his phraseology and vocabulary is necessary when he is interpreting the thoughts of his more distinguished personages; he makes them talk in a grandiose way, reiterate their adjectives, patronize the subjunctive mood, and occasionally diverge with well-bred indifference into the most elegantly ungrammatical forms. He even adopts the same style himself in speaking of them and their affairs, as when he tells us that the heir of the earldom "was just then the tenant of a dreary old dwelling on the Norfolk coast, Claypole Manor House so called, and which," &c. We do not venture to surmise whether this is the result of personal observation by the author, or whether it is due to the imitation of bad models, whereof the library of English fiction contains more than enough. At any rate, inflated language is traditional amongst the peers of fiction; and so, too, are the imposed heir and the vulgar villains trading on dark secrets, on whom the plot of 'The Tenth Earl' is made to turn. Nevertheless it may be conceded that Mr. Harwood does not make an altogether inartistic use of the materials at his command; and it would be idle to deny that the whole group of conditions and interests surrounding the life of an English peer, from his accession to the title down to the reading of his last will and testament, is a peculiarly tempting theme for an ingenious novelist. Mr. Harwood's story is a fair specimen of this characteristic section of romantic literature. It has plot and substance, incident and vitality; its heroes and villains are constantly on the alert for the amusement of all who care to watch their movements; it is abundantly sensational, and yet free enough from the more treacherous elements of "le highlife" to have earned a place in a family magazine.

'Amy Wynter' is a pleasant story of simple English life, not told with the highest finish of style, but warm with kindly feeling and redolent of natural charms. The prologue is a romance in itself, and serves, as a good prologue must, to secure the interest of the reader for the more detailed narrative which follows. Almost every character to which Mr. Pinkerton sets his hand is freshly and distinctly drawn; and, what is still better, there are innumerable characteristic touches throughout the three volumes in connexion with the least important personages. In one place is the picture of a "retired" gentleman at the seaside, whose chief fault in the eyes of his lively and marriageable daughters was "that he would needlessly endanger the admirable suggestiveness of his appearance, as a distinguished retired military officer at the least, by foraging for his own breakfast; in the shape of a haddock, the tail of which usually persisted in sticking out of its covering of newspaper in his coat-pocket, or a couple of mackerel he had cheapened on the beach."

Elsewhere it is the rapid sketch of a horse-dealer, who, failing to conclude a bargain, of which he had boasted beforehand, with a squire in the neighbourhood, comes home in crestfallen fashion:—

"When he at length drove into his yard, the first remark he heard was just what he had been anticipating all the way home.

"'Why, Muster Trigwell, ye've brought the mare back with ye!'

"The next was to the same effect, but, coming from an old, politic, bandy-legged groom, who observed the annoyance upon his master's face, was differently put.

"Eyeing the smoking animal as if its presence in that yard might yet be proved to be purely delusive, he exclaimed:

"'Why, Muster Trigwell, they do say as you've brought the mare back with ye!'

The heroes and heroines of Mr. Pinkerton's tale are not lay figures, but impress the reader with a sense of reality. Perhaps the best of them is Dicky Yeoland, a rough diamond full of English rusticity, whom his friends transform into the Reverend Richard, but who very speedily restores himself to his more congenial and honest condition. In his case, as in that of several other characters, the author happily brings out some of the mellowest effects of rural habits and associations; and, indeed, 'Amy Wynter' is a book which appeals in a special manner to the lovers of country pastimes and pursuits. A little more care, of a mechanical but very necessary kind, would have added polish to its attractions; but it may be commended for virtues which are somewhat rare in the fiction of the day.

Mr. Dowling has reached, or thinks he has reached, that point in the career of a successful novelist when the public becomes contented with his odds and ends, and does not expect to get his best work every time he publishes a new book. 'The Sport of Fate' is one of a collection of pieces of various length, some of them of small value. Mr. Dowling seems to have founded his style upon Victor Hugo and Mr. Bret Harte. Imitation unfortunately is usually only successful with manner. Victor Hugo's manner of narration is not difficult to catch, but in imitating that manner it is hardly possible not to be absurd. That rough simplicity of Mr. Bret Harte's, out of which there is made to appear with startling suddenness a bit of the strongest of human feeling or a dramatic situation of striking force, is less easy to copy. Mr. Dowling succeeds sometimes in imitating the manner in which Mr. Bret Harte leads up to his point, but the imitation fails at the critical moment. It is impossible to quote enough to show how this takes place, but there is room for a bit of imitation of Victor Hugo, whom, by the way, Mr. Bret Harte has himself imitated in his 'Sensation Novels.' This passage really reads very much like an imitation of Mr. Bret Harte's imitation:—

"She had ceased to be a girl and had become a woman. Perhaps this accounted for all.

"She knew her personal appearance had altered, and she felt it had altered not for the better. This was a source of joy rather than grief to her.

"'For,' she mused at night in her own room as she looked in the glass, 'when my Charlie comes home and sees I am changed for the worse, he will love me all the better.'

Mr. Dowling's first book showed considerable originality and a forcible style of narration. Since its publication he cannot be said to have improved, although, as this new book shows, he must have become successful.

It is difficult to describe 'Doña Perfecta,' and it would be unprofitable to read it. Señor Galdos has not improved since his readers last met him; his plot is ill contrived, his language incoherent, his dialogues wearisome, and his unguarded profanities shocking. A few phrases will suffice, taken here and there, to show the quality of the work. Speaking of Villahorrenda, he says, "Blind people ought to be happy in this country, for to the tongue it is paradise, to the eyes hell." "Daylight entered in glad irruption the windows and skylights of the Spanish horizon, the fields inundated with splendid clearness." The bewildering scenes which make up the story take place in

"Orbajosa, a city which neither in Chaldean nor Coptic geography (only in Spanish) figures as containing 7,324 inhabitants, a town hall, episcopal see, judicial district, public school, depository for the breeding of horses, preparatory school, and other official prerogatives."

The hero

"was of a fresh complexion, slightly herculean could use the weapon of mockery, which was a slight defect in the eyes of his friends, as it caused him to appear slightly disrespectful when speaking of many things. This much must be admitted, although it may detract slightly from his merit."

The heroine, the daughter of Doña Perfecta, is not a lovely person:—

"'I confess it, and I do confess it,' she exclaims, while kneeling before an image of the Saviour, 'saying to thee, "Lord, let me hate my mother.'"

The conversation of the lovers when they are alone on one occasion turns on the question if the infant Jesus should wear trousers; on another the girl exclaims, "Listen! it might be the breathing of my mother or the creaking of the weathercock." He: "It is a metallic sound—your mamma's breathing." What is the meaning of the following: "The garlic of Orbajosa made the gentlemen of the jury of the London exhibition quite sticky"? Señor Galdos is as fortunate in his description of the classical poets as he is in portraying human love and hate. He speaks of Virgil, for instance, as one "in whose verses may be seen the palpitating and melting heart of the elated Dido." The book is badly translated and carelessly corrected. Nominatio, roas, Gensivito, Davito, Accusatio may be intended for fun; an ordinary mind would take it for blundering, such as occurs at p. 197, where we hear twice of Renialdes. We close, as closes the book, with the whole of chapter xxxiii.:—

"This history is finished. We therefore at present are not able to say more about the people who seem so good, but are not so really."

Mr. Howells's well-deserved reputation ought hardly to be increased by the publication of 'The Undiscovered Country.' It is a tale chiefly dealing with fraudulent spiritualism and the Shakers. The popularity of the former topic has, it would seem, declined in England. Possibly it may be otherwise in America, and Mr. Howells may have been writing ad captandum.

RECENT VOLUMES.

The Prince's Quest, and other Poems. By William Watson. (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

The Defence of Rome, and other Poems. By Ernest Myers. (Macmillan & Co.)

Dotty, and other Poems. By J. L. (Glasgow, MacLachlan.)

Hesperus, and other Poems. By Charles De Kay. (New York, Charles Scribner's Sons; London, Sampson Low & Co.)

The Golden Hind, a Story of the Invincible Armada; Theatricals, and other Poems. By Charles Robinson, M.A. (Bell & Sons.)

THE fact that much good work may spring in part from imitative sympathy is exemplified in Mr. Watson's chief poem. The influence of Mr. William Morris upon the author can by no means be ignored; but it is fair to bear in mind that there is no style of narrative into which a poet even of some originality may more easily drift than that which the pleasantly flowing, if somewhat facile, measures of 'The Earthly Paradise' have made popular. It is, moreover, of good omen for Mr. Watson that he is most original and altogether at his best in those portions of his poem which give greatest scope to imagination. The prince's quest is for a fair land, of course with a fair queen to match. This region of delight is first beheld by him in a dream of his youth. After many adverse fortunes he succeeds in reaching it at last, but only when he is old and worn out. He drinks, however, of the river that flows through the land, and so regains his youth. Notwithstanding the reflections of Mr. Morris which we have noticed, these lines from the song with which the poem closes will show that Mr. Watson can realize fairyland on his own account. The sense of strange seas, hostile and remote, is in particular finely caught:—

Often when evening covered all the air,
No doubt but she would sit and marvel where
He tarried, by the bounds of what strange sea;
And peradventure look at intervals
Forth of the windows of her palace walls,
And watch the glimmering darken lout and tree;
And think on twilight shores, with dreaming curves
Full of the groping of bewildered waves,
Full of the murmur of their hollow halls.

As flowers desire the kisses of the rain,
She his, and many a year desired in vain:
She waits no more who waited long once,
For listeth he to wander any more.
Who went as go the winds from sea to shore,
From shore to sea who went as the winds go,
The winds do seek a place of rest, the flowers
Look for the rain; but in a while the showers
Come, and the winds lie down, their wanderings o'er.

Other passages of equal excellence may be found in the poem, which is, however, somewhat disfigured by affectations of diction. Thus we have the resuscitation of the obsolete "wox" instead of "waxed"—"The king himself wox grave"—and occasionally a strange omission of aspirates. The production entitled 'Angelo'—next in length to 'The Prince's Quest'—is far inferior, being at times ludicrously immature in treatment. It is difficult to understand why a writer of Mr. Watson's ability should have written it, still more so why he should have published it. The remaining poems are melodious, though they lack any striking value of idea—that is, if we except the two sonnets reprinted from Mr. Main's 'Treasury.' The one on Beethoven has been altered and improved. So far as 'The Prince's Quest' and these sonnets are concerned, Mr. Watson has, on the whole, done good work; but he cannot afford to write below his best.

This last volume of Mr. Myers contains much of that pretty, ineffectual poetry which is produced by a fair acquaintance with the technique of verse, some delicacy of sentiment, and moderate grace of expression. 'The Defence of Rome' is by far the most ambitious poem in the collection, and by far the most unsatisfactory. Though recording exciting events, it deals so much in well-worn generalities of expression, so little in those vivid and stirring pictures which embody martial ardour or popular enthusiasm, that the long swing of the verse becomes ultimately monotonous and cumbersome. The galvanised dry bones of composition seek in vain to do duty for the quick flow of blood and the pulse of life. In the rendering of the eighteenth book of the Iliad, where the same metre has been employed as in 'The Defence of Rome,' Mr. Myers is far more successful. His original here inspires him with fervour and supplies him with detail, so that the entire performance well deserves perusal.

The critic's task is never more thankless than when he has to speak unfavourably of efforts like J. L.'s, which abound in kind and genial sentiments, evidently set forth with great sincerity. Moral qualities unfortunately will not atone in verse for a total want of originality both as to idea and treatment. In the interests of poetry one is tempted to ask why J. L.'s amiable platitudes should have been printed. There is room, however, for a second question. Why should they not have been if their issue gives any pleasure to the writer and sympathizing friends? It is too probable, however, that the pleasure afforded will be strictly confined to this limited public.

'Hesperus' is a tantalizing volume. It evinces some of the qualities that are essential to poetry, but they are so often infelicitously combined and presented in such rough and unmusical forms that it is an exceptional piece of good fortune to light upon a complete and satisfying poem. In his better examples Mr. De Kay's love of Nature and his minute observation of her aspects merit warm approval. Yet sometimes into otherwise pleasing descriptions an ugly and prosaic feature obtrudes itself, which mars all the more gracious surroundings. Of this an instance is furnished by his very first stanza, the general details of which, at once faithful and imaginative, are ruined by the bald line and a half we print in italics:—

Keen gleams the wind, and all the ground
Is bare and chapped with bitter cold
The ruts are iron. Ask are found
Alone on ice as in a mold
The frozen hilltops ache with pain
And shudders tremble down each sky
Deep rootlet burrowing in the plain;—
Now mark the sky.

Accuracy is doubtless of vital importance in poetry, but there is a wide difference between imaginative accuracy, which touches the forms of nature with the glow of human sympathy, and the accuracy of a catalogue, an inventory, or a newspaper report of the weather. A writer may conscientiously describe the world around him in the spirit of a naturalist, and yet quite ignore those sweet affinities between nature and the heart to discern which is a function of the poet. It would be untrue to say that Mr. De Kay does not at times perform this function. Yet the cases are numerous in which the value of his descriptions is destroyed not only by an incongruous mixture of the literal with the ideal, but by verse which, though it may bear the test of scanning, is harsh and unspontaneous. Of these various effusions, some are trivial both in spirit and manner, some ambitious but feeble. There are others through which, however defective as wholes, fine lines are scattered. Of a few it may be said that they have both idea and considerable grace and force of execution, and of many that they are imaginative embryos which, under the influence of more emotional heat and more harmonizing taste, might have been developed into poems.

Mr. Robinson declares in his preface that in publishing these poems he "cherishes an artistic purpose—that of cultivating a fresh and pure style in modern poetical expression. It is now ten or twelve years," he adds, "since his attention was first drawn to the critical study of the best English poetry of all periods, and as one result of this pleasant labour, long continued, he formed in his mind a clear ideal of poetic style, which has had a more or less conscious influence on the composition of all the pieces contained in this volume." He then points out for the reader's guidance the pieces in which he thinks his ideal has been most nearly attained. The self-confidence of these assertions provokes some curiosity to see whether they are justified, and what has been accomplished by an author who evidently believes that he has rendered no slight service to modern poetry by his "critical study" of poetical literature. We have sought carefully for examples of the "fresh and pure" style at which the writer aims; but they are either very infrequent or we do not know them when we see them. In the following one of them:—

That night none slept: old men sat up in arms
Brought rusty home from famous floodland field:
Wives wept, and farmers groan'd, and maidens pray'd,
Until the dawn fell on their wearied eyes.
Then Mary wander'd, rapt in reverie,
Down to the beach, but something startled her,
And her eyes, lifted up from half-clothes,
Met Roland's, with a strange look searching them.
He, smiling, clasp'd her small white hand in his,
Bole a warm kiss, and "Now sweet little one,"
He said, "before you speak another word,
Give me what I have never dared ask yet!
You saw the first last night. Our enemy
Is close upon us, and perhaps my duty
May call on me before to-morrow's eve,
To die for poor old England! Promise now
To be my wedded wife!—Another kiss,
My sweet, and give the promise!—Never think!
The net a stranger asks you. Promise! Mary!
Another kiss, and promise!"

But all pale,
Trembling and mute, leant Mary on her lover.
At last she said, "O Roland, I can not,
Because I love you very, very dearly!
And then words fall'd her, giving way to tears.
"Why sweetest?" Roland cried, "the very reason,
That you should promise, is because you love me!
Just for you are fast with sleeplessness
And morning hunger. Let me lead you home!"

It is certainly well to avoid strain and inflation in poetry; but, on the other hand, babyish simplicity of detail is not in itself a merit. There is really nothing in this book of featureless verse to lift it to the rank of an experiment for reforming poetic taste. Though the subject treated of in 'The Golden Hind' might have been made stirring and lively, the reader who would find entertainment must revert from the poem to the preface.

THEOLOGICAL BOOKS.

THE author of A Treatise on the Authorship of Ecclesiastes (Macmillan & Co.) has taken the trouble of wasting several hundred pages in order to prove that Solomon is the author of Ecclesiastes. It is easy to see that he has spent a good deal of his time over researches in the Hebrew Concordance and Mr. Driver's excellent book on the Hebrew tense, in order to discover parallel passages between Ecclesiastes and books of the Old Testament generally recognized to be earlier, as well as to prove that some later forms of tense are already to be found in older writings. The author is evidently a bad Hebrew scholar, or perhaps only a beginner, and it is scarcely worth while to occupy space in proving his lack of knowledge of the language. We may of course believe that by the help of inspiration Solomon may have employed neo-Hebrew expressions and even Græcisms, but that such expressions are to be found in Ecclesiastes the author could have learned from Graetz's Commentary on Ecclesiastes, published in 1871, which, however, he does not seem to know. As an instance of the author's critical knowledge we shall only quote his following statement:—"The book of Job, which is certainly older than the days of Solomon, contains Aramaisms which, as pointed out in the 'Speaker's Commentary,' are evidences rather of antiquity than of lateness."

Messa. Burns & Oates have published The History of St. Catherine of Siena, by Augusta T. Drane, the well-known author of 'Christian Schools and Scholars' and other works. This book is not written in a style so free or likely to be so popular as, for example, her 'Life of Mother Margaret.' But the subject involves very different questions, and there certainly can be no doubt that all who wish to know either the public or the private history of St. Catherine will find in this volume everything which is necessary to be told about her. Miss Drane herself does not attempt to show us why we should hesitate to express doubts about the reality of the miraculous occurrences which are said to have distinguished St. Catherine. Sceptical persons will probably explain most of them by referring them to cataleptic attacks and to her own imagination. It is clear that in her lifetime there were more who doubted than believed, and Pope Urban VI. himself corresponds with her in a tone which one would hardly expect in a person who accepted as true all that was reported. It is not quite evident, therefore, why the biographer of St. Catherine should pass by all such difficulties, and tell her reader that "a critical examination either of physical or psychological phenomena would be sadly out of place in these pages." Miss Drane's volume, however, will be very acceptable to Catholics; and those also who are merely interested in the secular history of the fourteenth century will find it full of information about the Italian states at that period.

Mr. Elliot Stock sends us the first part of the Legenda Sanctorum of John de Grandinens, Bishop of Exeter, edited by H. E. Reynolds. The importance and historical interest of the manuscript are beyond all question, but criticism on the manner in which it is edited must be reserved until the book is finished. This is fasciculus i. of vol. ii., part 3, and it would be manifestly unjust to Mr. Reynolds to offer any opinion about it. We can only say now that the aim, type, and paper of this first instalment are worthy of praise.

Wiclif's treatise, De Christo et suo Adversario Antichristo, has been printed from manuscripts at Vienna and Prague by Dr. R. Buddenwig. This is another proof of the interest felt abroad in the English reformer, of which Prof. Lechler's exhaustive work gave striking evidence. The treatise, as Dr. Buddenwig satisfactorily proves, belongs to the last years of Wiclif's life. In spite of his title Wiclif, Dr. Buddenwig contends, does not actually identify the Pope with Antichrist; but, if he does not, he falls not very far short of it. He denies that St. Peter is the head of the Church or the Vicar of Christ and chief of the Apostles; that the Pope derives his authority from St. Peter; and he also denies the Pope's infallibility. Besides he enumerates twelve points in which the Pope differs from Christ. Christ is the truth, the Pope the incarnation of falsehood; Christ poor, the Pope a temporal prince, a particular mark of Antichrist, who always covets worldly dominion, &c. Dr. Buddenwig, who has edited the polemic with true German enthusiasm, has founded his text on a collation of six MSS. It is to be hoped he may proceed with his design, and edit others of Wiclif's Latin writings. His publisher is Perthes, of Gotha.

We have received an interesting monograph by Dr. M. Joel, with the title of Blick in die Religionsgeschichte im Anfang des zweiten Christlichen Jahrhunderts. It contains an essay on the Talmud and the Greek language, with two excursuses on Aristobolus, the so-called Peripatetic, and on Gnosticism compared with passages in Talmudical writings.

We have received Prof. Salvatore de Benedetti's (of Pisa) Vita e Morte di Mosè, Leggenda Ebraica, Tradotta, Illustrata, e Comparata. This Midrash relating to the life and death of Moses is of great importance for comparative study with the apocryphal book, 'Assumptio Moysi.'

Prof. Benedetti in his copious notes draws attention to many interesting facts in the two legends, and illustrates several of them from parallel passages in the Talmud and the Midrashim. It is, however, to be regretted that the translator followed simply Jellinek's edition of this Midrash, without consulting MSS. containing this small and interesting legend in somewhat different form. He could have found near at hand MSS. in the Vatican Library, at Parma, and in minor Italian libraries.

Le Saint Edict. Étude de Littérature Chinoise préparée par A. Théophile Piry. (Shanghai.)—The "Beneficent Emperor" K'ang-he, who sat on the throne from 1661 to 1721, is the glory of modern China. As a wise and patriotic ruler he is considered second only to the sage emperors of antiquity, while as an author his fame is equally renowned. To his pen the literature of China is indebted for many excellent poems and treatises, and to his untiring energy as an editor is due the publication, among other works, of the famous dictionary which bears his name and the huge imperial encyclopædia in 5,090 volumes, a copy of which now adorns the shelves of the British Museum Library. But of all his exploits the one which endeared him most to true Confucianists was the publication of the celebrated sixteen maxims known collectively as the 'Sacred Edict.' These maxims, which are held to be an embodiment of the principles of modern—that is, of practical—Confucianism, were intended to be a counterblast to the immoralities and heretical tendencies of the age. Each consists of seven characters, and deal with the duties of social relationships, the habits and pursuits of the people, and their intellectual and moral welfare. That so many subjects should be dealt with in but a hundred and twelve characters may seem surprising, but Chinese is a concise language, and K'ang-he knew how to use it. But K'ang-he was more than an able writer and a patriotic ruler; he was a thoroughly enlightened man. He so far broke through the traditions of his Court as to pay distinguished honours to the Jesuit missionaries at Peking; and he himself dabbled in European science. But yet one of his maxims formed the excuse for the banishment of Europeans from the empire under his successor, and has been quoted by thousands of reactionary mandarins in support of an anti-foreign policy since his day. History and everyday life, however, abound with similar pervasions of dicta. Leo X. and Luther, Cardinal Manning and Bishop Wilberforce, all based their doctrines on the same authority, and all differed from each other. "Flee strange beliefs in order that you may do honour to the true doctrine," wrote K'ang-he, referring no doubt in the first part of the sentence to the White Lily Sect, the Triad Society, and the host of other political clubs which have at different times honeycombed Chinese society, but certainly not to the faith of Ricci and his companions. Yung-ching made no such exceptions, but states in his commentary, which forms the body of the work before us, that the Western belief which exalts the Lord of Heaven is equally with the political sects contrary to Chinese orthodoxy. On all other points Yung-ching is in agreement with his father, and his commentary is esteemed of scarcely less value than the maxims themselves. The style in which it is written is simple and scholarly, and the volume is thus peculiarly well fitted both for a text-book for students and for an introduction to the doctrines of modern Confucianism. As such it attracted the early attention of European Sinologists, and has at different times been translated into English by Milne, Staunton, and Wado, and also into Russian. M. Piry tells us in his preface that he began his translation to assist the students in the College for Foreign Languages at Peking to acquire a knowledge of French. Feeling when it was finished that an annotated edition would serve the converse purpose, and be a help to French students of Chinese, he published the present work. Consistently with the system of Confucius, K'ang-he begins with filial piety. "Pay regard," he says, "to filial piety and brotherly love, in order that you may give weight to the social relationships." Commenting upon this first duty, which he describes as "the canon of heaven, the principle of earth, and the highest obligation of the people," his son enlarges on the different ways in which it is to be fulfilled. A dutiful son should so "order his person and regulate his expenses as to save his parents every fatigue and supply all their wants. He should eschew wine and gaming, fly disputes and quarrels, and avoid lavishing his wealth secretly on his wife and children." On this point Chinese moralists never tire of quoting with approbation the case of a man who, finding himself unable to support his infant son as well as his mother, determined to bury the child alive. When digging the grave into which he was about to thrust the infant, his spade turned up a nugget of gold, which obviated the necessity for murder and supplied the wants of his mother. For this signal act of filial piety he was promoted to high office in the state. In the same way another man is highly commended for having relieved his father from the mosquitoes which were troubling him at night by offering his naked body as a bait to the insects. Passing from the domestic to the political relationships, K'ang-he says, "Live at peace in your villages and districts in order that you may avoid wranglings and litigations." M. Piry translates this maxim, "Vivez en paix avec vos voisins afin d'éviter les procès." But this hardly brings out the full meaning of the text. As the commentary points out, not only are litigations to be avoided but the quarrels which lead up to them. No doubt if all the rules of life laid down by K'ang-he were followed society would be infinitely benefited, but the reader of this, as of all other works on Confucianism, will be struck with the very commonplace notions held out as an inducement for the practice of virtue. So far as they go the maxims are excellent, but to European minds they read more like rules for the conduct of children than ethical laws for the guidance of an intellectual people.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

Messa. Bell & Sons send us a translation, by Miss Emily J. Leonard, of M. Jérôme Adolphe Blanqui's History of Political Economy in Europe. The name of Blanqui is associated in England rather with the stormy atmosphere of political revolution than with the peaceful humdrum of political economy. The first duty of those who are responsible for presenting this book to the English and American public is, therefore, to make it clear that the Blanqui of 1830, of 1848, and 1870, the imprisoned Communist whose return to the French Chamber of Deputies was a nine days' wonder in 1879, is not the same Blanqui who in 1837 wrote the book before us. This duty is discharged by means of the rather ingenious expedient of a biographical sketch of the author of the book, towards the close of which the necessary explanation is given that Jérôme Adolphe Blanqui, the economist, was the elder brother of Louis Auguste Blanqui, the revolutionist. In a volume of more than six hundred pages, three need not be grudged to serve as the husk which envelopes the kernel of fact that Jérôme Adolphe is not Louis Auguste. A preface is contributed by Mr. David A. Wells, late Chief Commissioner of Revenue in the United States, which anticipates an objection that will be felt by many readers to the title of the book. It is not so much a history of political economy in Europe as a sketch of the industrial condition of various European countries before political economy existed. Economic conditions, of course, always influence men's conduct; but to call a man a political economist because his life is controlled by economic conditions is like calling him a physiologist because he eats his dinner, or a chemist because he knows how to make pickled cabbage. Mr. Wells says: "Man became an economist at the moment when, through foresight and the excesses of labour and frugality, he began to anticipate and make provision for his future needs and contingencies. . . . He became a political economist at the moment when, in association with his fellow men, he began to exchange the products of his labour," &c. Language of this kind is quite out of harmony with the ordinary meaning attached in England to the words "political economy." When we speak of political economy in this country, we mean not a collection of facts, but we mean the reasoned theories concerning certain facts, which theories proceed upon hypotheses and assumptions which are never exactly true, but which serve precisely the same purpose as the hypotheses and assumptions of mathematics or mechanics. In this, the English sense, political economy is about a hundred years old; it did not exist in the period to which the greater part of M. Blanqui's volume relates. The work is one that may be useful to political economists, but it is not in our English sense political economy; it is a collection of industrial facts. To use an illustration of Prof. Jevons, it is a specimen of economic book-keeping, a rather indiscriminate mass of information about the condition of slaves in ancient Greece and Rome, about the luxurious habits of the patricians, about the mixture of refinement and discomfort in their lives (e.g., "their seats were elegant, but very hard," p. 58), about the influence of Christianity in elevating the status of labour, &c. M. Blanqui has posted facts of this kind in a sort of ledger which the economic student may use, just as an agriculturist might use a table showing the prices of agricultural produce over a series of years; but his facts are not political economy any more than the price-list would be agriculture. Even as a collection of facts the book is not good. There is a vast deal of verbiage in it, too much husk in proportion to the grain. There are, for instance, between seventy and eighty closely printed pages relating to the economic condition of Rome, the chief part of which is devoted to the time extending from the beginning of the empire to the reign of Justinian; yet there is no adequate description of the Roman latifundia; indeed, they receive hardly more than a casual allusion. Three sentences from Mommsen would bring the condition of the labourers in the latifundia more vividly before the student than thirty pages of M. Blanqui. There is a chapter devoted to a description of the economic influence of Christianity; but the author's pen flows with a fatal facility away from the subject indicated at the head of the chapter to a dissertation upon the ideal Christian priest, and how widely this creature of the imagination differs from curés and persons of real life. The work of the translator appears to have been well done; she has aimed at following her author word for word as closely as the dissimilarity of the two languages allows; and if she has used a few words that are not to be found in the English dictionaries, the fault under the circumstances is not unpardonable.

We have received the book entitled Eminent Israelites of the Nineteenth Century: a Series of Biographical Sketches, by Henry Samuel Morais (Philadelphia, Stern & Co.). The biographies contained in this first series, which are revised reproductions of articles which appeared serially in the Jewish Record, are either taken at third hand or reproduced from hurried communications to the author by some of the eminent men themselves; in any case, they are not complete and are often erroneous. The selection made by Mr. Morais is somewhat strange. That the biography of the Rev. Dr. N. M. Adler, Chief Rabbi, should head the volume is right enough, for he takes the place of a bishop in the synagogue, and besides has done something for Hebrew literature. But we cannot see in what respect the late Dr. Artom and the Rev. Prof. Marks are more worthy of a place in Mr. Morais's book than Dr. H. Adler and Dr. A. Löwy, who are also rabbis in London, and have moreover contributed to literature. Why are Dr. Schiller-Sainsbury, of Cambridge, and Dr. Friedlander left out? It is no doubt pleasant to be a great banker, but it is possible to be so without being a great man unless the banker is also a great philanthropist, which was certainly not the case with Émile Pereire of Paris. Anyhow, why are the biographies of the great bankers, Herr Bleichröder, of Berlin, and Baron Gutzburg, of St. Petersburg, not given together with those of inferior financiers?

DR. W. CHAMBERS has sent us a new edition of his useful volume The Youth's Companion, one of the best books of its class.

We have on our table Twenty-one Days in India, by G. Abernethy-Mackay (Allen & Co.),—Philosophy of Charles Dickens, by the Hon. A. S. G. Canning (Smith & Elder),—Caroline von Lieven and King William the Fourth, by T. G. Arundel (Sonnenchein),—Second Steps to Greek Prose Composition, by the Rev. E. Jackson (Macmillan),—A Practical Greek Method for Beginners, Part I., by F. Rutledge and E. H. Moore (Rivingtons),—Outlines of Farm Management, by E. S. Burn (Lockwood),—Fancy Fables, Parts I.-IV., by J. C. Lyell ('The Bazaar' Office),—British Dogs, Parts XI.-XIII., by H. Dalziel ('The Bazaar' Office),—Political Economy for the People, by J. L. Shadwell (Trübner),—Report of Observations on Injurious Insects, 1879 (Sonnenchein),—The Highland Handbook and List, June (Low),—Health and Health Resorts, by J. Wilson (Trübner),—How Women may Earn a Living, by Mercy Grogan (Cassell),—Plain Hints for Needlework Examiners, by the Author of 'Plain Needlework' (Griffith & Farran),—The Underlying Principles of Indian Fiscal Administration, by J. Hector (Chapman & Hall),—The ABC of Art, by R. T. Sutherland (Allen & Co.),—Artistic Homes (Ward & Lock),—Critical Essays and Literary Notes, by B. Taylor (Low),—Columba, Parts I. and II. (Satchell & Co.),—A Hopeless Case, by E. Fawcett (Trübner),—Leaves from the Ash, by M. Field (Low),—The Sea and the Moor, by Rosa M. Kettle (Ward & Lock),—Alas Wine, by H. Gordon (New York, The American News Company),—Songs and Sonnets for the Season, by N. R. T. Hastings, W. Pinson),—Fanny: Poems, by C. Duval (Simpkin),—Antiope: a Tragedy (Kegan Paul),—Children's Treasury of Bible Stories, Part III., by Mrs. H. Gaskoin (Macmillan),—The School Prayer-Book (Relife Brothers),—Truthfulness and Ritualism, by O. Shipley (Burns & Oates),—Adam, Noah, and Abraham, by J. Parker (Edinburgh, Macniven & Wallace),—The Collects of the Day, 2 vols., by E. M. Goulburn, D.D. (Rivingtons),—The New Testament, Vol. I., by J. P. Norris (Rivingtons),—Confessions d'Angleterre, by E. Renan (Paris, C. Lévy),—Politea Segreta Italiana, 1863-1870 (Turin, Favale),—Lord Beaconsfield et son Temps, by C. Clarygny (Paris, A. Quantin),—Kunstgeschichte des Humanismus, by Dr. E. Vischer (Nutt),—and Gastfahrten, by W. Rotmann (Trübner). Among New Editions we have Milton: Lycidas, by T. D. Hall (Galt & Co.),—My Little Note-Book of General and Bible Knowledge, by H. Fuller (Houlston),—Practical Hints for Pupil-Teachers on Class Management, by J. Saunders (Laurie),—The Protagoras of Plato, by W. Wayte (Bell),—Floriculture, by G. Glenny (Beimrose),—A Treatise on the Conflict of Laws, by F. Carl von Savigny (Clark),—and Buxton and its Resources, by J. Croston (Heywood). Also the following Pamphlets: On Preservation of Health in India, by Sir J. Fayer (Kerby & Edean),—Is India Sublim? by L. C. Probyn

(Wilson),—"Among the Immortals": a Political Satire (Stanford),—The Origin of the World according to Revelation and Science, by H. Goodwin, D.D. (S.P.C.K.),—and Hull Newspapers, by W. Hunt (Hull, 'The Eastern Morning News' Office).

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

THEOLOGY.

Kale's (S. E.) Hints to Preachers, with Sermons and Addresses, cr. 8vo. 6/6.

Gettemer's (Rev. H. E. von) Christ in the Divine Man, or Deity Veiled, 12mo. 5/6.

Whiston's (D. D.) Popular Commentary on the New Testament, Vol. 5, cr. 8vo. 5/6.

LAW.

Fisher's Digest of the Reported Decisions in all the Courts from Hilary Term, 1870, to Easter Vacation, 1880, Consolidated and Arranged by T. W. Chitty and J. May, 3 vols. roy. 8vo. 63/6.

Field's (J. C. M.) Treatise on the Law concerning Wills and Executors, cr. 8vo. 16/6.

POETRY.

Barrow's (G.) Love Songs, cr. 8vo. 5/6.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

Gibbon's (H.) Life and Letters of, with his History of the Crusades, Variations, &c., with Copious Index by W. J. Day, 12mo. 3/6.

Maitland's (Col. G. B.) History of the Indian Mutiny, 1857-1859, Vol. 2, 8vo. 30/6.

GEOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL.

Darwin's (E.) Ways through the City of York, edited by his Widow, 8vo. 10/6.

M'Mullen's (E. T.) An Experimental Cruise Single-handed in the Procyon, 7-ton Lugger, 12mo. 3/6.

Tourist's Handbook to the British Islands, 12mo. 2/6.

Young's (A.) The Angler's and Shooter's Guide to Southern, 12mo. 2/6.

PHYSIOLOGY.

Clair's Lectures on a Dialogue on Friendship, with Ornamental Analysis, Explanatory Notes, and Translation, cr. 8vo. 5/6.

Laurent's (V.) Questions and Answers on the French Grammar, cr. 8vo. 2/6.

Walt's (Dr. C.) Practical Grammar of the Turkish Language, 8vo. 14/6.

SCIENCE.

Hall's (R. S.) Elements of Astronomy, 12mo. 6/6.

Greenhouse's Favorite, a Description of Choice Greenhouse Plants with Coloured Plates, cr. 8vo. 25/6.

Prior's (W. D.) Hardy Shrubs, cr. 8vo. 3/6.

Brimmer's (E.) Land and Freshwater Snails of the British Isles, cr. 8vo. 10/6.

Robinson's (J. F.) British Bee-Farming, cr. 8vo. 5/6.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

Collins's (Martha) Thoughts in my Garden, Edited by Edmund Yates, with Notes by the Editor and Mrs. Mortimer Collins, 2 vols. cr. 8vo. 11/6.

Dickens's (C.) Speeches, Literary and Social, 12mo. 30/6.

Keary's (A.) A Drowning Heart, cr. 8vo. 8/6.

Linton's (E. L.) Under which Lord? cheap edit. cr. 8vo. 2/6.

McCarthy's (J.) Donna Quixote, cheap edit. cr. 8vo. 3/6.

Macmillan's (H.) Two Worlds are Ours, cr. 8vo. 6/6.

Philips's (Mrs. A.) Benedicta, cr. 8vo. 2/6.

Shelley's (J. F.) Prose Works, edited by E. R. Parnham, 4 vols. 8vo. 50/6.

Young's (C. M.) Love and Life, an Old Story in Eighteenth Century Costume, 2 vols. cr. 8vo. 12/6.

FOREIGN.

THEOLOGY.

Bruchmann's der Theosophischen Deutung d. A. Testamenten, ed. by A. Kruse, 12mo. 10/6.

Lipsius (E. A.) Die Eusebische Abgrenzung, 2m. 60.

Schulte (J. P. v.) Geschichte der Quellen u. Literatur d. evangel. Kirchenschriften in Deutschland u. Österreich, 10m.

FINE ART AND ARCHITECTURE.

Annales du Musée Guimet, Vol. 1, 15fr.

Bouvier (J.) Peintures Décoratives, Part 1, 20fr.

Fac-similé des Miniatures contenues dans le Bréviaire Grégoire, avec Texte Français de M. L. de Mac-Laurin, 3fr. 20.

AFRICA.

Musee de Bary (H.) Monuments du Passé, du Présent, et de l'Avenir, 3fr. 20.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

Bader (Mlle. Clarisse) Sainte Claire d'Assise, 3fr.

Baillet (L.) Madame de Montmorancy, Made-Vierge des Ursins, 3fr.

Hardy (E.) Les Français en Italie de 1494 à 1499, 7fr.

Letourneur (M.) Présidents de la République de France, revue sur les Éditions Originelles, et précédées d'une Notice Biographique par Eugène Amy, 3fr. 60.

GEOGRAPHY.

Registres der Geographisch-statistisches Abtheilung d. Deutschen Generalstabes, Fench Year, 18m.

PHYSIOLOGY.

Hesse (Fr.) Lehrbuch der Sprachwissenschaft, Vol. 2, 2m. 20.

Lagarde (F. de) Orientalia, Part 2, 3m.

Levy (E.) Guilhem Figeac, a provençal Troubadour, 2m. 20.

Wittmann (F.) Das Koorwesen der Mohammedaner, 2m.

SCIENCE.

Annales de l'Université de Bruxelles, Faculté de Médecine, Vol. 1, 10fr.

Frey (H.) Die Lepidopteren d. Schweiz, 16m.

Ludwig (M.) Morphologische Studien an Nephrodermen, Vol. 2, Part 1, 4m.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

Littérature (Le Vis. G. de) La Marquise de Trévilly, 3fr. 60.

"THE MELANCHOLY JACQUES."

I AM afraid the fact cannot be blinked that Mr. Oswald Crawford (for whose general literary abilities I entertain an unfeigned respect) is quite unacquainted with the principles of prosody. I therefore confine myself to two elementary statements of fact.

"Jacques" in Shakespeare being scanned as two syllables must be so pronounced, when it occurs at the end of a line as well as when it occurs in the middle. The line will then have one hypermetrical syllable; in other words, it will consist of eleven syllables instead of ten, or of five iambs and a half. Such hypermetrical lines are common in Shakespeare and in all blank verse.

Every e mute in French poetry is invariably scanned as a separate syllable, except, of course, when elided before another vowel. This is the first law of French scansion, and it allows of no argument. Ordinary heroic verses (Alexandrines) consist of twelve syllables each, every alternate couplet ending in a feminine rhyme, that is to say, a hypermetrical e mute. I will transcribe a few lines from Corneille and Molière, dividing the verses for convenience's sake into artificial feet of two syllables each.

Nous par | times | cinq cents; | male, par | un prompt | renfort.

Nous nous | vîmes | trois mille | en ar | rivant | au port.
Tant & | nous voir | marcher | avec | un tel | vaisseau, les plus | épou- | vantés | repren- | dent de | courage. Je n'ai | che- | z eux | deux tiers | eussent | tôt qu'ar- | rivés.
Dans le | fond des | vaisseaux | qui lors | furent | trouvés;
Le roi | le, dont | le nombre | augmen- | ta; & | toute- | heu- | re,
Reulant | d'impa- | tience | autour | de moi | demeu- | ra,
En cou- | che- | con- | tre terre | et sans | faire au | cun bruit,
Passe- | u- | ne bon | ne part | d'une | si bel | le nuit.

Cid, IV III.

Ma foi | des meurs | du temps | mettons- | nous moins | en
peu- | ne.

Et fai | sons un | peu grâce | à la | nature | humain | ne.
Et l'ex- | amin | ons point | dans la | grande | rigueur.
Et voy | ons ses | défauts | avec | quelque | douceur.
A for- | ce de | raisonne- | ment | on peut | être | bête | ble;
Il faut | parmi | le monde | une | vertu | traite- | ble;
Le par | faite | raison | fuit toute | extrê- | mité,
Et veut | qu'on | soit sage | avec | sobri- |été.
Cette | grande | raideur | des ver- | tus des | vieux & | ges.
Heure- | trop | ne | tre siècle | et les | communs | usages.

Amant d'Europe, I. II.

Tout | dont | le monde | en core | igno- | re le | vrai nom,
Esprit | mysté- | rieux; | mortel; | ange ou | démon,
Qui que | tu sois, | Byron, | bon ou | fatal | géni- | e,
J'aime | de tes | concerts | la mu- | sique | bar- | moni- | e.

Lamartine.

In these lines there are 69 e mutes. Of these 19 are elided, and 50 are pronounced. Not one is suppressed, as Mr. Crawford supposes they may be. Mr. Crawford may search all the Alexandrines in the French language, and he will not find a single example of an e pronounced or suppressed at pleasure.

I must apologize for burdening the columns of the Athenæum with such schoolboy knowledge, but it is unpleasant to be accused of ignorance on an elementary point about which one is obviously right. GRANT ALLEN.

Norwood, August 14, 1880.

In the fine sonnet written in memory of his college friend, the Rev. William Henry Brookfield, and printed in a biographical notice prefixed to the volume of his sermons published by Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. in 1875, the Poet Laureate, it may be interesting to note, gives a dissyllabic value to the name of the Shakespearean Jacques, and apparently also sanctions its accepted and conventional Anglicized pronunciation. At least it is otherwise difficult, if not impossible, to scan or to read the line containing the name.

As this sonnet is very little known, I may be allowed to quote it here entire in illustration of this rezata quæstio, italicizing the line referred to:—

Brooks, for they call'd you so that knew you best,
Old Brooks, who loved so well to mouth my rhymes,
How oft we two have heard St. Mary's chimblee
How oft the Cantab supper, host and guest,
Would echo helpless laughter to your jest!
How oft with him we paced that walk of times,
Him, the lost light of those dawn-golden times,
Who loved you well! Now both are gone to rest;
You man of humorous-melancholy mark,
Dead of some inward agony—is it so?
Our kinder, truer Jacques, past away!

I cannot land this life, it looks so dark:
Ξαύς δ' ὕπν'—dream of a shadow,—go,
God bless you. I shall join you in a day.

It will be remarked that Mr. Tennyson retains the old French spelling of the name. May not this have some bearing on its pronunciation?

J. T.

Literary Gossip.

MR. SWINBURNE has in the press a new volume of poems, containing a song for the centenary of Walter Savage Landor (1875); a parting song to a friend leaving England; a descriptive poem of some length called 'Off Shore'; another descriptive poem in the anapestic-alegiac metre of 'Hesperia,' called 'Evening on the Broads'; a descriptive poem called 'By the North Sea'; and other pieces.

MR. FRANCIS PARKMAN, well known by his excellent works on the history of the French colonization of Canada, is now engaged in preparing an account of the final struggle between the English and French colonists in North America. Mr. Parkman begins with the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle, and will end with the capture of Quebec and the death of Wolfe. Mr. Parkman has had access to a large amount of inedited material, including the letters of Montcalm to his wife, which have been placed at the historian's disposal by the present Marquis de Montcalm.

MR. GRANT ALLEN has undertaken to write a monograph on Anglo-Saxon Britain for the series projected by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. The work will deal with the purely English element in our nationality, and with the share due to English influences, as opposed to Celtic, Scandinavian, or Norman, in our existing society. It will discuss the nature, character, and extent of the Teutonic colonization, and will describe the history of the race up to the time of the Danish invasions. The Anglo-Saxon literature will also be copiously illustrated by extracts in prose and poetry, modernized only so far as to be intelligible to ordinary readers.

PROF. JOHN RHYS, of Oxford, will deliver an address on 'The Legends of Carnarvonshire' at the National Eisteddfod of Wales, at Carnarvon, on Tuesday, the 24th inst. Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, Bart., M.P., will occupy the chair.

THE public will shortly see announced an édition de luxe of George Eliot's 'Romola,' which will be printed on the finest paper and contain numerous full-page illustrations.

It is not unlikely that Prof. Kuenen, the well-known Dutch theologian, may deliver the Hibbert Lectures in 1882.

THE Society of Antiquaries has advanced far in the preparation of what is really a great work, a complete and exhaustive index to the Archæologia, which is to be issued as part of that publication. Such a book will be a great boon not to Fellows of the Society only, but to all Dryasdusts.

THE English edition of Prof. Ebers's 'Egypt' will be published by Messrs. Cassell, Petter, Galpin & Co., under the title of 'Egypt, Descriptive, Historical, and Picturesque,' and the first monthly part will be ready September 25th. The work will be translated by Clara Bell, and will contain original notes by Dr. Birch, Keeper of Oriental Antiquities at the British Museum.

THE death is announced of the Rev. W. G. Cookeley, once an assistant-master at Eton, who edited some of the odes of Pindar, and by so doing drew upon himself the wrath of the late Dr. Donaldson.

A NEW novel, entitled 'St. Martin's Summer,' by Shirley Smith, author of 'His Last Stake,' &c., in three volumes, will be shortly published by Messrs. Hurst & Blackett. 'Hilary's Love Story,' by Miss G. M. Craik, will constitute the next volume of the 'Bluebell' original novels, and will be published early in September.

THE Burns statue at Dundee will be publicly inaugurated on the third Saturday in September. Sir John Steell has nearly completed the work. The statue for New York, of which the Scotch one is a replica, will be shipped from Glasgow towards the close of this month.

THE fifth volume of Bohmer's 'Romanische Studien' will contain the Old French romance 'Girart de Rossillon,' from a MS. in the Bodleian Library, by Prof. W. Foerster, of Bonn.

A WEEKLY paper adapted to the requirements of boys will be commenced next month by Messrs. Cassell, Petter, Galpin & Co., under the title of The Boys' Newspaper.

MR. JAMES CROSTON, F.S.A., of Manchester, author of 'On Foot through the Peak' and other works, has in preparation a book to be entitled 'Nooks and Corners of Lancashire and Cheshire: a Wayfarer's Notes in the Palatine Counties, Historical and Legendary.' These notes were originally contributed by Mr. Croston to the Manchester Weekly Courier, and are now to be published in a quarto volume, with additional matter and with woodcut illustrations. Mr. John Heywood, of Manchester, will be the publisher.

MESSRS. SONNENSCHEIN & ALLEN will publish during the early part of next year the second volume of Grimm's 'Teutonic Mythology,' by Mr. J. S. Stallybraes, of which the first volume appeared last season. Among the announcements of this house for next season is a book for youthful readers, 'Asgard and the Gods: Tales and Traditions of our Northern Ancestors.' No popular account of the mythology and superstitions of the Norsemen has hitherto been written for boys and girls.

A LEARNED German, Dr. W. Victor, of Wiesbaden, is going to edit a new periodical devoted to spelling in general and international spelling reform. The Zeitschrift für Orthographie is to contain original articles in different languages, notes, reviews, &c. A large number of philologists and educationalists have promised their help. The first number, which will appear in September, will contain an article by Prof. Sayce ('Why we Want a Reformed Alphabet'); a paper on Dutch Spelling, by M. H. de Beer of Amsterdam; contributions by Prof. Sanders of Altschreitz, J. F. Krauter of Saargemünd, and other distinguished orthographers.

THE Society of the Rose, which has its headquarters in Manchester and devotes itself to the study of Mr. Ruskin's writings, publishes in its last report a list of free libraries which contain copies of Mr. Ruskin's works. The Manchester Library has a complete set. Many seem to have only the well-known volume of selections.

AFTER being for sixty-one years in the public service, of which thirty-six have been passed in the House of Lords, Mr. W. J. Thoms retires on a well-earned pension. It is superfluous to speak of Mr. Thoms's many literary labours, but it may be as well to recall the fact that for thirty-two years he acted as secretary of the Camden Society, of which, along with John Bruce and J. Gough Nichols, he was the originator.

SCIENCE

Pay Hospitals. By Henry C. Burdett. (Churchill.)

It would seem somewhat unfortunate for the movement which Mr. Burdett advocates that a better name than "Pay Hospitals" has not been invented by him or some other enthusiast; it is not an attractive title, and that of "Home Hospital," which seems to be more likely to be adopted, is not quite satisfactory.

Mr. Burdett asserts that it is no longer disputed that middle-class hospitals, if established in England on a proper basis, will probably become highly popular and financially successful; and that there is a large class of persons who desire hospital treatment and who can afford to pay a remunerative sum for what they require. The probability of financial success of course depends upon the numbers of this class, and if it really be as large as Mr. Burdett supposes the question arises how it is that the demand has not, at any rate in some degree, already created the supply.

When sceptics ask how far experience justifies Mr. Burdett's anticipation of success, the reply is far from favourable. Of his thirteen chapters nine are devoted to some account of such experiments throughout the world, and, though he himself seems entirely unconscious of it, hardly anything could have been written more discouraging. Even were success fully attained in other countries, it would by no means necessarily imply that a like success is certain in England, as English habits of life and views of comfort are in many respects peculiar; even when sick Englishmen must have a certain amount of freedom, and are resentful of the minute regulations necessary in a public institution.

In France such hospitals are of two kinds, public and private, and the former are in each place under the municipality, which has the privilege of making good any deficit which may occur; the latter are purely business undertakings. About these our author supplies no information, while of the largest public Maison de Santé, that at Paris, he says that it is carried on at a permanent loss, that the diets are neither liberal nor sufficient, and that of late years its management has been in other respects unsatisfactory.

In Germany and Austria it is the custom for eminent surgeons and physicians to be associated with private hospitals, of which they are often the proprietors; in some of these operations upon private patients are always performed in the theatre of the public hospital.

Mr. Burdett does not disdain to seek for an example even in Spain, where he declares the diets are such as may cause an English invalid a feeling of utter helplessness and misery, and where neither is fresh air nor washing considered necessary. In Italy a hospital at Milan furnishes the most typical example. This is the property of a company of shareholders, and the whole of the administration is under the personal control of a medical director; it is financially successful, that is to say, it pays its shareholders five per cent., and its consulting medical officers nothing.

Mr. Burdett specially praises the management of the State Hospital at Christiania for its thrift; but it is not an example of the kind of institution that he wishes to see established in England, as it has attached to it a medical school; and although he calls it practically self-supporting, he at the same time states that a large portion of the income is derived from a public bathing establishment, and for any deficiency there is a grant voted annually by the national Parliament. In America, he states, all hospitals make provision for pay beds, which are placed, not in separate wards, but side by side with those occupied by persons admitted without payment. The medical staff receive nothing for their attendance upon such patients, and yet the system is, he asserts, popular among them.

In Dublin several of the hospitals admit patients upon payment, but we learn that the absence of a proper system leads to serious abuse. At the Mater Misericordiarum the practice of admitting such patients has been discontinued because after a fair trial it proved to be a failure.

Pay wards, so far as they have been tried in England, have not met with great success, and the writer admits that the public are loath to enter any hospital where free cases are treated from a fear of being considered in some sense objects of charity. In what sense, it may be asked, would they not be objects of charity? Experience is thus not greatly in favour of admitting paying patients to existing hospitals; nor are the writer's arguments for this course very telling. Were it true that the fittest of all applicants for aid from our medical charities are liable to be crowded out by classes for which these charities were not intended, the natural reform would surely be to exclude such classes, not to admit the paying patient and so limit still further the room rightly appropriated.

The experiment of admitting paying patients is now to be tried at St. Thomas's Hospital, where, however, it is avowedly done not because a demand has been clearly shown to exist, but because the financial mismanagement of the hospital has been such that its income will not allow of the maintenance of the buildings for those for whom they are intended. This does not make a hopeful starting-point, and the protest of the medical staff against such use of the wards, or, as they call it, such misappropriation, foreshadows an uneasy period of probation.

The Home Hospital Association has now also, after many difficulties, established its first house in Fitzroy Square, and, no doubt, before very long it will be seen whether the demand which undeniably exists to a certain extent for such houses is sufficiently large to make them a permanent success financially. As Mr. Burdett says, the home hospital must succeed financially or it deserves to fail. With this view we thoroughly agree, but his idea of what is success is, to say the least, very odd. Thus, speaking of the first English hospital started on the self-supporting principle, he states that it was carried on for three years with an annual deficit of 350%, and was then killed by its own success: directly the demands upon its resources became greater than its accommodation the scheme had to be abandoned, as the committee had not funds enough to open a sufficiently extensive and commodious establishment.

Torpedoes and Torpedo Warfare. By C. W. Sleeman, late Lieut. R.N. (Portsmouth, Griffin & Co.)

THE task of tracing the history of torpedo warfare is not difficult, as it is barely more than a hundred years since Capt. Bushnell, of Connecticut, attempted to destroy British vessels in Transatlantic waters by the explosion of buoyant mines, either drifted to their proposed destination or conducted thither by a submarine boat.

For half a century subsequent to their first invention, and during a not over-scrupulous age, these infernal machines were regarded as "too diabolical" for adoption in civilized warfare either by our own or foreign governments; and Robert Fulton, in spite of his pertinacity, was powerless to overcome the repugnance which his ingenious engines of destruction excited on all sides. At first, indeed, Napoleon and Pitt lent favourable ears to his projects, but both finally mistrusted his means of operation; nor did he meet with better encouragement from his countrymen in America, and he was forced, in spite of himself, to direct his inventive genius towards the improvement of steam machinery as a means of propulsion for more humane purposes. Nevertheless it is to him that the hitherto scanty literature of submarine warfare owes its first instalment, in the shape of a work entitled 'Torpedo War,' which dates from 1810.

Clockwork, dependent on springs and weights, was the machinery first employed, but it was far too clumsy and inaccurate in its application under water to fulfil the requirements of the early torpedists; and it was not until the aid of voltaic electricity had been sought that any certainty of practical result was obtained, first by Col. Colt at New York, and later by Col. Pasley, R.E., at Spithead in 1839. The discovery of gun-cotton by Schönbein, and of nitro-glycerine by Sobrero in 1846, added two most important explosives to the material at the disposal of the submarine mining engineer.

It was not, however, until the Russian war in 1854 that the powers of submerged torpedoes were tested in actual war, when the moral effect of the knowledge that electrical mines had been placed around Cronstadt and other ports was such that the naval operations of the British Baltic fleet under Admiral Sir Charles Napier were absolutely paralyzed. The present Admiral

Sir Michael Seymour, then fleet captain, lost the sight of an eye from the explosion of one of these machines on board H.M.S. Exmouth, whilst his gunnery lieutenant, now Rear-Admiral Beamish, was also severely burned, an incident omitted in Lieut. Sleeman's sketchy narrative. The physical effect of the Russian mines was confined to the more or less severe concussions experienced by H.M. ships Merlin and Firefly during the same campaign.

Hitherto all the results of torpedo warfare had been merely negative, and they remained so until the breaking out of the American war, when submarine engineering entered upon a new phase, as offensive torpedoes were actively employed by the Confederates against the ships of the Federal navy. Between December, 1862, and April, 1865, the Southerners destroyed no less than twelve of the enemy's ironclads and gunboats, &c., by torpedoes, moving and stationary, and lost one of their own vessels by the same means. We may cite the most tragic of these events, viz., when a Confederate submarine torpedo boat sank the Federal vessel of war Housatonic on the 17th of February, 1864, off Charleston. In her "successful" attack this boat was armed with the bow-spar torpedo, and was sunk by running into the hole formed by the explosion of her own torpedo; about three years after the war divers went down and found her lying alongside the hull of her antagonist, with the remains of her crew, consisting of nine men, in her.

Mean time dynamite had been introduced by the Swedish chemist Nobel in 1864—"poisoned earth," as it has been appositely characterized by the Bishop of Natal in allusion to its composition, in which nitro-glycerine is mixed with "kieselgur," a porous siliceous earth. This, Lieut. Sleeman remarks, being cheaply and readily procured, is the very best explosive for torpedoes; and it is significant of the times in which we live that whereas the total production of dynamite in 1867 was only eleven tons, in 1878 it amounted to 6,140 tons. The same year in which dynamite was first used also witnessed the first experiments, made at Fiume, with the celebrated fish torpedo, the invention of Messrs. Lupis and Whitehead. Since then only three opportunities have occurred of testing the destructive powers of this famous weapon on active service, and on two of these occasions it failed to fulfil its deadly mission. The first occasion was that of the Huascar and the Shah, when luckily for both parties the Peruvian altered her course simultaneously with the discharge of the Whitehead by the English man-of-war, thereby escaping an unhappy fate. During the same year, 1877, the Russian torpedists made a night attack upon the Ottoman squadron lying off Batoum, when the Turkish ships remained unscathed, whilst two misdirected torpedoes were found on the beach, one unexploded and in perfect condition, whereby the mechanism of the hitherto secret adjustment chamber of the Whitehead torpedo was divulged to the world. The last and only successful attempt was also made by the Russians, who operated on a Turkish guard-ship in 1878, when the vessel was totally destroyed. Even now it may still be said that our knowledge of offensive torpedo warfare is principally theoretical; let us hope that it may long remain so.

Inquiring readers must not expect to find in Lieut. Sleeman's work an elaborate treatise on torpedism, nor must they hope to discover from its pages the so-called secret of the Whitehead torpedo. If they do they will be disappointed, for, although they will find a good representation of the exterior of the mysterious fish, they will look in vain for plans and sections of the marvellous, compact Brotherhood engines within, which work up to 40-horse power in a confined space.

The publication of this book will be of service in one way, and that is that there can be now no longer any objection to the publication of an official manual or handbook (by authority) of torpedo exercise and construction. The art of submarine warfare has reached the stage when any affectation of mystery is absurd, for we might as well expect to hear of instructors of musketry drilling squads confidentially "on their honour." It will be remembered that when the Armstrong gun first came out a select squad exercised it on Woolwich Common with sentries round to prevent unauthorized intruders from looking at its exterior. Before concluding we cannot help noticing that a thinly veiled advertisement of Capt. McEvoy's inventions is too obvious throughout the pages of the work before us, and it is to Lieut. Sleeman's absence in China in connexion with these same patents that we suppose we owe the exclusion of the most recent experiments in countermining, as exemplified by the submarine operations carried on last October opposite Fort Monkton, when such very conflicting opinions resulted. Great preparations are now in progress for similar manoeuvres this year, when the tables are expected to be turned on the defenders by a newly discovered method of sighting guns on the electric light, an operation which has hitherto baffled the artilleryists; but, on the other hand, a novel employment of Bockquell's luminous sulphides may be used by the sappers and aqueous miners, whose phosphorescence will effectually discover the approach of any hostile torpedo launches when they attempt to tow countermines against the line of defence.

Since the above was written, these experiments have taken place (on Tuesday, the 10th of August) with great success on the same ground. The lines of countermines were laid and exploded in a masterly manner by the naval launches, and the boom effectually destroyed in the day attack, under cover of the heavy guns of H.M.S. Glatton. By night the effect of smoke, produced by a prolonged cannonade, in obscuring the luminous rays of the electric light, was tested, with advantage to the defence.

Nature's Byways: a Series of Recreative Papers in Natural History. By J. E. Taylor. (Bogue.)

THIS is a series of reprints of papers, by the editor of Science Gossip, on geological matters, on the wanderings of a naturalist in various more or less known parts of England, on artificial manures, the geological dispersion of animals, floods and their prevention, the British Association, the Norfolk broads, ancient jokes and folk-lore, Lancashire people, the Colorado beetle, pike fishing and pike poaching, vegetable parasites, beavers, together with some half-botanical, half-ethnical studies of catkin-bearing trees, of primroses, violets, various kinds of ranunculus, hawthorn, and honeysuckle. In this very miscellaneous lot of light sciences, or rather of science lightly treated, geological matter is the most prominent. The naturalist's wanderings are told rather too much in the style of a guide-book. There is little fault to be found with the facts, and of the style in which these are told, which is not without life, the following extract is a fair specimen:—"Trees are magnificent regulators of climate. They are to it what the pair of revolving 'governor-balls' are to a stationary engine. When the engine is going too fast, the 'governor-balls' distend, and 'throttle' or compress the aperture whence the motive steam-power is issuing. When the engine is working slowly the balls droop, and so open the valve as to allow more steam to issue. The same with the woods and forests of a country. When the rainy seasons are on, every tree and plant absorbs some of the moisture, and stores it away into its own tissues. It thus prevents great quantities from flowing off the surface and gathering into rills and rivulets, and so swelling the main rivers as to cause them to overflow their lowest-lying banks. During periods of drought the leaves of the same forest give out the moisture they consumed into the atmosphere, and so prevent its being as dry and parching as it otherwise would have been. During the hours of night, also, the surfaces of the leaves become colder than the air, and thus the moisture contained in the latter is condensed upon them as dew. In many parts of Arabia this is the only kind of waterfall with which the parched earth is visited." The book is certainly good of its sort. The only fault which we find in it, if we make allowance for its kind, is that sufficient care has not been taken in reprinting these articles to arrange them in some sort of order and to remove repetitions. For instance, the fact that the Pass of Llanberis is not due to volcanic agency seems to have struck the author so much that he insists upon it in more than one of these papers; and various similar instances might be shown. Every one who has been in the habit of writing articles for newspapers or periodicals knows by experience that he occasionally reproduces one idea in various articles. So long as these articles are in their original form, scattered in time and place, there is, of course, no harm in such reproduction. But when the articles are collected and republished in one book, the author should at least take the trouble to remove all repeated passages. In conclusion, we cannot help expressing our wonder as to what class of reader such books as these, however good of their kind, are intended for. The present volume is, we gather from one of its earliest pages, intended for that now often-quoted body, "the non-scientific public," that part of the public, we suppose, which likes to have disconnected scraps of natural history thrown to it. It may be open to doubt whether this taste, if it exists, of the non-scientific public ought to be encouraged. Again, one of the papers in this book, the sensible if slight sketch of the value of artificial manures, is avowedly intended for farmers—non-scientific farmers. This sketch occupies 11 out of the 408 pages of the book, and is, therefore, so small that it may be doubted whether many non-scientific farmers are likely to discover it beneath the matter under which it is buried.

MATHEMATICAL SCHOOL-BOOKS.

Euclid for Beginners. Books I. and II. By the Rev. F. B. Harvey, M.A. (Longmans & Co.) To "express the text of Euclid more distinctly" and to "bring it more fully within the boy's comprehension" are the objects which Mr. Harvey has in view. His plan consists chiefly in employing red ink for the particular annotation and the special statement of the point or points to be proved, and for the lines of the figure which occur in the course of construction; and in the use of italics for each "but," "then," "therefore," &c. Of course it is difficult to hit the juste milieu between the removal of useless difficulties and pauperization, and we will therefore only say that so far as the lines of the figures are concerned we cordially approve the device. But, putting all prejudice aside, we cannot admit that Mr. Harvey's plan has at all improved the text. We will take one instance, of Mr. Harvey's own choice, viz., in the fifth proposition of Book I., in which a fatal repetition occurs, utterly confusing to a boy, and of a kind never found in the terse and perfect logic of the old phraseology: "Further, because the angle ABC—the angle ACF, and the angle CBG—the angle BCF, as already proved, therefore if the angle CBG be taken from the angle ABG, and the angle BCF be taken from the angle ACF, then the remaining angle," &c. There is no need for the then, it merely repeats the therefore and confuses the boy. Many other examples of a similar kind may be noted.

Mathematical Formulae. Edited by R. M. Milburn, M.A. (Longmans & Co.)

WAS this book likely to be used by any person who has the interests of education at heart, we should feel bound to register against it a mild but decided protest. The author is the best judge of the value of his own time, and this compilation must have occupied a good deal of it. There is no preface to which the reader can turn for an explanation of its objects.

The Teachers' Manual of Mental Arithmetic. (National Society's Depository.)

THIS little manual shows how lessons in mental arithmetic in public elementary schools can be made more useful and less wearisome than they now generally are. Very numerous examples of sums are given, and they are well chosen and are within the compass of the young scholars for whose use they are intended. Pupil-teachers, and indeed teachers generally, find it difficult to fabricate questions in mental arithmetic for use in class; and while the teacher is laboriously evolving sums, his pupils are apt to fall into dulness and inattention. Teachers who have experienced this difficulty will be grateful to the compiler for placing at their disposal so large a stock of good arithmetical examples. The explanations of processes in mental arithmetic are clever and to the point; and the hints for teaching and the account of different methods of class instruction will prove interesting and serviceable to young teachers—and to many old ones.

DISCONTINUOUS BOOKS

The West India. By Charles H. Eden, F.R.G.S. (Sampson Low & Co.)—This little volume forms one of the series of "Foreign Countries and British Colonies," edited by F. S. Pulling, M.A., and an attractive and popular series it is likely to be if the writers engaged are only willing and diligent enough to make use of the requisite materials which have been published during the past twenty years, including those brought out under the auspices of our own Government. In the list of about forty different works stated to have been consulted for this volume we miss some of the most recent and the most valuable for the West India. Take, for instance, the Bermudas. Had Mr. Eden consulted General Lefroy's 'Memorials of the Bermudas' (2 vols., Longmans, 1877-9), he would have devoted at all events more than one page (143) to two hundred years of the history of those islands, and with advantage to his work. Of the Buccaneers, or the Freebooters of the Spanish Main, as Mr. Eden calls them, he says rather more, though the well-known Morgan and other equally notorious English Buccaneers captains are not even mentioned; but then, perhaps, the author's space was limited, though there is almost a blank page at the end of half the chapters in the book. Altogether the historical part of Mr. Eden's work is far inferior to the geographical part, sometimes even to misleading, as in the statement that Jamaica was entirely wrested from the Spaniards by order of Oliver Cromwell. Had the Calendars of our National State Papers been consulted, Mr. Eden would have seen that Cromwell's orders to Penn and Venables were to take Hispaniola, for which the expedition was expressly prepared; that, failing to take Hispaniola, they seized upon Jamaica; that on their arrival in England warrants were issued for the apprehension and committal of them both for having returned without licence, contrary to their trust; and that they were only released after some six weeks' imprisonment in consideration of their acknowledging their fault and of their submission. Of the history of the Leeward Isles Mr. Eden says next to nothing, though an interesting page or two might have been written with advantage about each one of these; and as to Barbadoes, he thinks "its history is entirely local, and need not be entered upon in a sketch so brief as this."

The magnificent Handatlas für die Geschichte des Mittelalters und der neueren Zeit, which was originally due to Spruner, and is now edited by Dr. Menke, has reached its third edition. The work has been greatly enlarged, and more than ever is it indispensable to the student of history. Some idea of its size may be inferred from the fact that it contains 90 large maps and 376 small maps and plans. The student of history is thus almost superabundantly provided for. It is not with a view to detracting from the merits of this unrivalled atlas, but simply to furnish some notes for the next edition, that we note a few trifling oversights that an examination of the maps has revealed. In Map 9, while the island of Corgo is rightly assigned to Venice, Tinos is given to Turkey, although Venice held this last relic of her possessions in the Archipelago down to 1715. In Map 90 the same oversight occurs. On Map 10 Minorca is assigned to Spain, although at that time (1740) it belonged to England. The English occupation of Tangiers is ignored on Map 9. Maps 20 and 62 are the only ones of the series which can be called inadequate. It would be impossible with the aid of the former to follow the Spanish discoveries of America. For instance, San Sebastian, founded by Ojeda 1510, is not marked, nor the Gulf of Uraba, nor most of the spots connected with the adventures of Balboa. The conquests of Pizarro and Cortez are better illustrated, but surely the position assigned to Tambo, the scene of "the last triumph of the Inca," is incorrect? On Map 62 the French colonies in North America are very imperfectly marked. On the map of the English and Scotch borders given on No. 61, to which an English student naturally turns, there are sundry slips, such as "Melrose C." for Melrose Abbey, "Solway Moor" for Solway Moss, &c. The difficult question of spelling names has, on the whole, been well treated. It is, perhaps, carrying purism somewhat to excess to give the Arabic names in the kingdom of Granada when nine people out of ten who read the history read it in Spanish authorities only. On the other hand, "Strassburg" is a curious spelling for a French town in Napoleon's days, and "Mauze" and "Coln" are also rather out of place in the year 1810. But, after all, these are very slight matters. The atlas is a superb work, and does the greatest possible credit to the renowned house of Perthen.

The Historical Atlas of Messrs. Johnston falls far short of its German rival. The maps are a great deal too small to be of use. What is the advantage of a little map of Europe, "1715 to 1830, illustrating the wars of the French Revolution and Napoleon's wars," which is not so large as a map in an ordinary school atlas, and if it represents in its colouring any period in European history, it is that of 1846!! At least, Cracow is given to Austria, Belgium is an independent kingdom, and Luxembourg is divided according to the treaty of 1831. Messrs. Johnston seem to have odd notions of the progress of the followers of Mahomet. In the "Europe of the Norman and Plantagenet period" they appear to have had no foothold in Western Europe except Granada. The battle of Ourique was apparently fought long before "the Norman period," as there is not a sign of them in Portugal. On the other hand, in the East there is a most curious "Osman Empire," which appears to have been unable to take Thessalonica, although it possesses Constantinople. But there is little need to particularize faults. Such maps will simply mislead, and the student of history will get far more real help from the Royal Atlas. It is with regret that we speak unfavourably of any attempt to promote historical study, but it is obvious that the compilers of the new atlas have formed no adequate conception of the task they have undertaken. It is not necessary that they should attempt to rival the Gotha atlas, but the maps given should have been well selected, on a sufficient scale, and at least tolerably accurate.

Glimpses of the Globe, by J. R. Blakiston, M.A. (Griffith & Farran), supplies some useful hints to teachers and is at the same time a fairly interesting reading book. The author very properly insists upon pupils being taught to observe. The information conveyed by him is not, however, at all times strictly correct. The Persian Gulf cannot fairly be described as lying between Arabia and India, the Gulf of Venice is not between Italy and Greece, and all Europe and all North America do not lie within the temperate zone. It is truly astonishing that a geographical writer should make erroneous statements on such simple matters. Mr. Blakiston intends to follow up 'Glimpses of the Globe' with a work of similar size and character dealing only with the mother country. It will be entitled 'Glimpses of England,' and it is to be hoped he may avoid making more mistakes.

Mr. Stanford has sent us Mr. Worth's excellent Guides to North and South Devon, bound in one volume. It is a pity that advantage was not taken of the opportunity to amalgamate the two guides, as there are necessarily some pages of repetitions. One or two misprints might have been corrected. For instance, Buckingham's rising against Richard III. did not take place in 1468. The chief fault in the book is that Mr. Worth has little taste in architecture. He admires Sir G. Scott's treatment of Exeter Cathedral! Mr. Stanford sends us new editions of some others of his convenient county guide-books. These books deserve to be popular, but advantage should be taken of their success to revise them carefully.

Guide-books to the Lakes seem to be much in demand; at least, the supply is large. The latest is the Thorough Guide to the English Lake District, by Mr. Baddeley. It is published by Messrs. Dulau, and obviously "got up" on the model of Baedeker's books. It seems to be most carefully and intelligently compiled.

The Holiday Companion and Travellers' Guide of Messrs. Warr, Lock & Co. contains some useful information, but a great deal that is useless. Mr. Mason might have done his work a good deal better.

Prof. Berthoulet, of Lyons, has brought out an elaborate study on Le Jura, which will be interesting to the strategist.

Europäische Staatenkunde Von Oscar Peschel. Erster Band. (Leipzig, Duncker & Humblot.)—This posthumous work of the lamented Prof. Oscar Peschel has been carefully edited and completed by Dr. O. Krimmel, one of his pupils. It bears the stamp of originality which distinguishes all that Peschel has written. It is not a mere collection of facts and figures, as might be imagined from the title, but enters fully into the social questions which agitate the world, besides supplying, in a masterly exposé of the physical geography of the various states of Europe, those fundamental facts which determine in so large a measure our material prosperity.

ASTRONOMICAL NOTES.

Mr. COMMON succeeded in detecting Faye's comet with his fine 18-inch silvered glass reflector at Baling on the night of the 2nd inst. It was very faint, and close to the place assigned in Dr. Axel Möller's ephemeris. The moon being now past the full, and the comet increasing in brightness, it is probable that before the end of next week it may become visible with telescopes of less power than Mr. Common's. The following are the predicted places (for Berlin midnight) on the closing days of the month:—

Date.	R.A.	N.P.D.
Aug. 27	23 9 40	79° 47'
" 28	23 9 18	79° 47'
" 29	23 8 47	79° 45'
" 30	23 8 18	79° 57'
" 31	23 7 41	80° 2'

It will be remarked that the comet is in the constellation Pisces and rises about an hour before sunrise.

Jupiter and Saturn are now both well situated for observation, rising between eight and nine o'clock in the evening. The red spot on the former is certain to be well scrutinized. It is desirable that attention be given to the phenomena of the two more distant satellites, the tables of which much require improvement. An occultation of the third satellite will take place about midnight on the 27th inst.—predicted disappearance 11^h 20^m. Saturn's ring is now well opening out, the south surface being visible. Reference may be made here to a small matter connected with the history of the ring. The discovery of its duplicity was long attributed to Cassini (John Dominic, often called Cassini I) in the year 1676, until Mr. Hind pointed out that the division had been noticed ten years before by the brothers Ball in Devonshire ('Solar System,' p. 106). The record of their observation is in the very first volume of the Philosophical Transactions, p. 152, and is stated to have been made by Mr. William Ball, accompanied by his brother, Dr. Ball, October 13th, 1666, at six of the clock, at Manhead, near Exeter, with a very good telescope near thirty-eight feet long. Prof. Newcomb remarks that these observers were "otherwise unknown in astronomy" ('Popular Astronomy,' p. 346), and this may have led to a misunderstanding as to their exact location. Mr. Hind calls it Minehead, North Devonshire, but it cannot be the well-known Minehead, which is, in fact, in Somersetshire, and which no one would describe as near Exeter. We suspect that the word in the Philosophical Transactions is a misprint for Mamhead, a village near Dawlish, and of course not far from Exeter. The Balls do not seem to have announced the division as a certainty, but sent a drawing of the planet to a friend, who was induced by it to write to Huyghens (who can find no record of any reply), asking him to attentively consider the present figure of the ring, "to see whether the appearance be to him as in this figure, and consequently whether he there meets with nothing that may make him think that it is not one body of a circular figure that embraces his disc, but two."

Another variable star in the constellation Hercules (the designation of which will be V Herculis) has recently been discovered to be such by Herr Dunér, of the Observatory of Lund. It occurs in the Bonn Durchmusterung in the place R.A. 16^h 30^m 5^s, N.P.D. 52° 23', with the assigned magnitude 8.7. On the 7th of June last year Herr Dunér estimated the magnitude as 8.3, not very different from Argelander's;

but towards the end of June this year he found it only 9.3 or 9.4, and following it up afterwards observed the light to continue to decrease, until at the beginning of the present month the magnitude was only the eleventh, which would not have been visible at all to the telescope with which the Durchmusterung was made.

We have received the Memoirs of the Italian Spectroscopical Society for January and February (after that for March, referred to in the Athenæum for July 31st). The former contains, besides a continuation of Prof. Tacchini's solar observations at Rome, a description, accompanied by a fine engraving, of the splendid solar photographs taken by M. Janssen at Meudon. The latter is wholly occupied by a reproduction of an interesting paper on the solar temperature and the relative intensity of the rays of different colour spectroscopically determined by Prof. W. H. Pickering, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

SOCIETIES.

ENTOMOLOGICAL.—August 4.—J. W. Dunning, Esq., V.P., in the chair.—Sir Sidney Saunders forwarded for exhibition four living specimens of Proctos rubicola, all stylolised females, recently bred from larvae extracted from briars received from Epirus, and contributed notes thereon.—Miss E. A. Ormerod exhibited a soft gall-like formation found on Rhododendron ferrugineum, but believed to be of fungoid growth.—Mr. Billups exhibited a specimen of Heptanotus villosus from Box Hill.—Mr. H. J. Elwes communicated a paper 'On the Genus Colias.'—Mr. W. L. Distant read a paper entitled 'Notes on Exotic Rhynchota, with Descriptions of New Species.'

Science Society.

It is proposed to mark the fifty-first birthday of the British Association by holding a meeting of unusual importance next year. The place of meeting will be York, where the Association originally assembled. Sir John Lubbock will, it is hoped, preside, and an endeavour is to be made to obtain the services as Presidents of Sections of former Presidents of the Association. Thus Prof. Ramsay will be asked to preside over the Geological Section, Prof. Huxley over the Biological.

MR. WALLACE will bring out before long a new work, 'Island Life,' which discusses the most interesting questions connected with insular Faunas and Floras by the aid of recent geological and physical researches. Great importance is attached to secular changes of climate, and hence the problem of geological climates is carefully investigated, and a new and somewhat novel solution of it attempted.

THE annual meeting of the Mineralogical Society of Great Britain and Ireland will be held at the Unitarian School-room, Swansea, on Friday next, the 27th, at 2.30 P.M.

It is interesting to notice that some telephone experiments have been made by Dr. Herz with the French Atlantic cable between Brest and Penzance. A new apparatus was employed, and the results are stated to have been satisfactory.

M. ADER communicated to the Académie des Sciences on July 12th the conclusion, drawn from his experiments, that every mechanical action having the effect of disturbing the state of molecular equilibrium of a magnetic nucleus develops, at the moment when such nucleus returns abruptly to its conditions of equilibrium, an electric current capable of acting on the telephone.

THE Yorkshire College of Science at Leeds has issued the Sixth Annual Report, for 1879-80, of that institution. Twelve professors, lecturers, and instructors, aided by nine assistants, are now giving instruction in fourteen subjects. The number of students in the year had increased from 113 to 142, and in addition there were 52 medical and 148 occasional students.

THE Academy of Sciences of Bologna will award their Aldine Prize Medal for 1882 to the memoir on animal electricity exhibiting the most original research. The Philosophical Faculty of Göttingen offer their Beneke prizes for experimental investigations and theoretical examinations of the phenomena exhibited in the case of non-homocentric light sources.

MM. HAUTEFEUILLE and CHAPUIS recently brought before the Académie des Sciences of Paris some experiments which appear to prove that the production of ozone is considerably influenced by pressure and temperature, and consequently that with extreme cold and great pressure large quantities of ozone may be obtained.

THE Monthly Records of Results of Observations in Meteorology, Terrestrial Magnetism, &c., taken at the Melbourne Observatory during January and February, have been forwarded by Mr. R. L. J. Ellery, F.R.S., with his usual promptitude.

THE Secretary for Mines of Victoria also sends us the 'Report of Progress' of the Geological Survey of that colony, to the end of June, 1879. Field operations were suspended immediately after the date of the last Progress Report, 1878, but they were subsequently resumed by Mr. Reginald A. F. Murray alone. To this volume Mr. Murray contributes several valuable reports and remarks, which are largely illustrated by maps and plans. The other members of the survey have contributed notes and returns, which place before the public a satisfactory view of the condition of the Geological Survey of an important mineral colony.

M. DE QUATREFAGES asked the Académie des Sciences, at the Séance of July 26th, to open a subscription for founding a medal to commemorate the services of M. Milne Edwards to science. This was agreed to, and a committee was formed.

Les Mondes for the 5th of August prints the 'Rapport Annuel sur l'État de l'Observatoire de Paris pendant l'Année 1879, par M. le Contre-amiral Mouchez, Directeur de l'Observatoire,' giving a plan of the actual state of the observatory and grounds, and another of the contemplated additions thereto.

M. J. A. ROORDA SMIT has in the Archives Néerlandaises des Sciences Exactes a paper on the diamond mines of South Africa. He states that the diamond is found in a primitive gangue of volcanic origin, the presence of a double carboniferous silicate being a characteristic of these mines, which he regards as extinct craters of volcanoes. His hypothesis is that the diamond is of Plutonic origin, formed at the expense of organic matter under the influence of great pressure and a high temperature. The recent artificial production of the diamond appears to confirm this view. M. Meunier states in the Comptes Rendus that he has produced crystals of spinel, and he believes periclase and corundum, by the action of steam on the chloride of aluminium in presence of magnesium at a red heat.

FINE ARTS.

DON'S GREAT WORKS.—CHRIST LEAVING THE PRÆTORIUM.—CHRIST ENTERING JERUSALEM.—THE BRAZEN SERPENT.—The latter (not completed) each by Sir David, with 'Dream of Fanny's Wife,' 'Soldiers of the Cross,' 'Night of the Crucifixion,' 'Home of Calvary,' &c., at the DOME GALLERY, 25, New Bond Street. Daily, Ten to Six.—See.

Compte-Rendu de la Commission Impériale Archéologique pour l'Année 1877. (St. Petersburg.)

Mykenai, eine Kritische Untersuchung der Schleimannischen Alterthümer unter Vergleichung Russischer Funde. Von Ernst Schulze. (St. Petersburg.)

THE pamphlet of Herr Schulze is a republication of an article in the Russische Revue; its theme is the exposition and defence of a theory about the origin and occupants of the graves on the acropolis of Mycenæ, which was propounded at greater length by M. Stephani in the recent issue of the Compte-Rendu of the Russian Archaeological Commission. A theory so put forth must be approached respectfully, whatever may be the value which, after examination, we may think belongs to it. Thus much is due to the archaeological experience of the author and his genuine learning. The encouragement by a considerable authority of a moribund paradox is pretty sure to bring about a revival of criticisms and carpings which were falling into oblivion. It is, therefore, by no means unnecessary to appraise without reserve the arguments which, in the deliberate opinion of a distinguished scholar and antiquary, will avail to transfer the antiquities unearthed by Dr. Schliemann at Mycenæ from some thousand years, and rather more than less, before the Christian era to the third century after it.

The position of Dr. Schliemann, as an interpreter of the remains of antiquity which his sagacity and enthusiasm have brought to light, may well engage our sympathy. It cannot be denied that the coincidences between what he hoped and expected to find and what he actually did find were most remarkable; and after all the encouragement which he received from considerable scholars, it is naturally a trial to him to be called upon to give up—as it seems too clear he must—his cherished dream of having recovered the personal relics and remains of Agamemnon and Cassandra. He is between banded theorists on opposite sides, and it is as little comfort to him as to the “men of Angiers” if, “from North to South,” the assailants who afflict him are scarcely less troublesome to each other. His conjectured identification is too modern for one party, and too ancient for the other. On the one hand, the Achaian Agamemnon, so far as he represents an historical fact at all, is both confidently and plausibly assigned to a period when the Cyclopean walls of the acropolis of Mycenæ and the tombs they enclosed were already antiquities—a period far more advanced in the arts of construction, as the highly artificial tombs, the so-called treasuries in the lower city, abundantly testify. On the other hand, we are now challenged to admit that these Mycenaean graves were thrust intrusively among the ruins of a city which had been desolate for centuries—after Achaian, Dorian, Macedonian rule had succeeded each other, had been superseded by Roman, and when Roman power was already coping at disadvantage with the insolent audacity of the Goth and Vandal.

The ten years from 250 A.D. to 260 comprise the three naval expeditions of the Goths and associated tribes, which, starting from the Sea of Azoff and the scenes of M. Stephani's archaeological explorations, ravaged not only the maritime but inland cities of Asia Minor and Greece. Each was more adventurous and destructive than its predecessor. The wealthy city of Trapezus (Trebizond) was taken by storm by the first. The second passed through the Thracian Bosphorus, captured Byzantium, and Chalcedon on the opposite shore with its well-stored arsenal, and then turned inland to assail with equal success the once royal city of Nicomedes and other Bithynian towns scarcely less important. The third and largest expedition, in which the important and peculiarly vagrant tribe of the Heruli took part, after ruining Cysicus, passed through the Hellespont, and seized and plundered Athens, Corinth, Argos, and Sparta. One of their chiefs, Naulobatus—a true Greek name, most appropriate for the admiral of a flotilla—led the Heruli as far as Epirus; there by capitulation he took service, together with his followers, under the Roman emperor. Another section of the adventurers regained the sea, and destroyed the temple of Diana at Ephesus and ravaged the Troad on their way back to the Cimmerian Bosphorus.

Now what we are invited to accept as fairly proved is nothing less than that the resemblances between the remains obtained from the excavations at Hisarlik and those from the Mycenaean interments are due to a common connexion with these devastating Goths or Heruli. The theory imports that while the Peloponnesus was in their power they occupied the Cyclopean acropolis of Mycenæ as a place of strength, and, after a disaster in which they lost women and children as well as princes, buried them in a general grave, “with golden masks upon their faces in South Russian fashion,” and deposited with them intaglios of Sassanid origin, which they had brought from the North, and a variety of gold ornaments, especially those with representations of butterflies, which were productions of Greek art of late date and obtained from the plunder of Greek cities.

The custom of applying thin golden masks to the faces of the dead is not peculiarly “South Russian.” Roman examples are known which date much earlier than those from the neighbourhood of Kertch and Olbia; others are producible from Cyprus, Phœnicia, and Mesopotamia; the practice is among the number of those which ethnologists are accustomed to regard as carrying no more proof of dependence upon a single centre than the custom of tattooing the living. The Persian female figures which Herr Schulze engraves as precise parallels in costume to those on the intaglio of Mycenæ prove no more than a comparison of the fashion plate of Myra's Journal with an archaic Greek vase, and that is not contemporaneousness, but that ladies of all periods have worn petticoats and plaited their back hair. The intaglio in question is pronounced by better authorities to be of Babylonian origin, and the other lentoid gems take their places in series with those which have been collected from the Greek islands, and throw so much light on the development of archaic Greek art.

But most surprising is the inference which M. Stephani draws with such positiveness from the frequency of the occurrence of the butterfly as an ornament, either solid or upon the thin gold discs of Mycenæ.

“The assumption,” he says, “that the butterfly was a favourite object for representation in a prehistoric period of which otherwise we know nothing, and then was lost sight of entirely in the historical times of culture in both Europe and Asia, is a manifest contradiction to all sound criticism.”

M. Stephani has made an exhaustive collection of the passages in which the butterfly has been mentioned by Greek and Roman authors, and urges so eagerly that it was utterly neglected both in poetry and prose as compared with the cicada, for example, before the age of Alexander, as almost to imply an impression that it was previously unknown. True enough, no doubt, it is that the world does not for the most part readily forego the easy development of any form of decoration already in possession; yet fashions in art do sometimes die out completely and capriciously enough. If these Mycenaean butterflies are really to be taken as part of the swarm that overspread art in the second century, especially as associated with the pretty allegory of Eros and Psyche, we must ask how it is that the graves are entirely unfurnished with other traces of the Greco-Roman art of the period. Laden with plunder of wealthy cities as the Heruli were, had they no other spoils from the acme or the decay of art to devote to the unstinted enrichment of the graves of their chiefs? But we are scarcely called upon to linger over an analysis of “these poor habits and thin likelihoods” by an objector who entirely ignores considerations of “more certain and more overt tests” that are decisive. M. Stephani gives us the option of assigning the graves to the still later incursion of the Goths of Alaric (A.D. 397); but—to deal with the case which is most favourable to him—was not one word required to account for the absence of iron from the graves of Heruli who had matched themselves with Roman legionaries from the west to the east of Europe, and had but lately plundered the armouries of Chalcedon and so many other cities? There is no trace whatever of iron among the multifarious contents of these entombments; yet such traces are indestructible. Iron may waste away by rust, though against the last ravages of rust the circumstances of the burials would have given much protection; but a mass of rust does not disappear, if it disappears at all, without leaving permanent stains behind it. And not only is not iron present, but its natural place is taken by bronze. Swords and lance-heads by the score were found beside the remains of these ancient warriors, but they were without exception of bronze, of copper hardened by a liberal alloy of tin. We are told by engineers that a chain is as strong as its weakest link, but a complex chain of evidence is as strong as its strongest, and an objector who withholds from testing or even noticing this has little claim to be answered on immaterial cavils in detail. To suppose that the Goths and Heruli of the third century fought against Roman levies with the weapons of men of the bronze age is as reasonable as to assign the weapons of Forus to our opponents at Aliwal and Chillianwallah. We therefore feel absolved from the uninviting task of tediously demonstrating all the inconsistencies of the date assigned to the other works in precious metals.

Every year is now bringing forward fresh evidence in illustration of the prehistoric age, of indefinite duration and term, to which the antiquities of Mycenæ must be assigned. Discoveries following on discoveries make it futile to treat of these as isolated in character, however at present unrivalled in their significance and conspicuousness. The advocates of the Gothic or Scandinavian claimants may be left to deal as they can, from their whimsical point of view, with the proofs of the wide limits, in geography as well as in time, of a system of comparative civilization showing distinctly related characteristics, which has left its traces at Cameirus and Ialysus in Rhodes, in Cyprus from end to end, at Spata and elsewhere in Attica, as well as at Mycenæ. The illustrations derived from Dr. Schliemann's excavations at Hissarlik are in some respects even more instructive than the Mycenæan. The historical student is presented here with a section of deposits as valuable and conclusive as ever was hailed by a geologist. Remains which have the most direct relation to those of Mycenæ were here sealed down by ruins upon ruins of demonstrably prehistoric times, with walls on the top of all which are certainly anterior to the Rome of the emperors. There is the best reason to expect that the energy of archaeological explorers in this field will soon make as important additions to our knowledge here as we have received respecting paleolithic man since controversy has been hushed as to whether the man of the flint instruments was a reality at all.

Whatever advance, whatever discoveries, may be made that throw light upon the characteristics of society over the proper area of Greece during the age antecedent to the employment of iron, the antiquities of Mycenæ will always be of importance as bearing on still another question, by no means inferior in interest—the relation of that society to the civilization which succeeded it. That this was a development by men of the same race we believe may be established by the study of these antiquities, and if this be so, the more is it to be desired that such study should not be further interrupted by the revival of theories which it was hoped were once for all defunct.

THE BRITISH ARCHEOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION.

THE thirty-seventh annual Congress meeting of the British Archaeological Association commenced on Monday last at Devizes, under the presidency of Earl Nelson. After the two meetings of immediately preceding years at Winchester and Yarmouth the Association gladly revisits westerly hunting-grounds. Twenty-two years have elapsed since the Congress of the Association met at Salisbury for the examination of Wiltshire antiquities, and probably very few of those who take part in this Congress were numbered among those who then explored the beauties of Salisbury Cathedral, the Gib Hill tumulus, or the earthworks at Old Sarum. The proceedings were inaugurated by a cordial reception at the Town Hall by the Mayor and Corporation of Devizes and the executive members of the Wiltshire Archaeological and Natural History Society, a society which has flourished for many years and collected in the pages of its periodical magazine an immense store of topographical, archaeological, and scientific information, by way of pendant to the colossal works on Wiltshire by Sir Henry Colt Hoare. On this occasion the ancient charters of privileges which have been from time to time accorded to this town by many sovereigns, the mace, civic insignia, and mediæval plate in the possession of the corporation, and several other objects likely to attract an antiquarian assembly were displayed, and considerable interest was taken in them by the members of the Congress as well as by the inhabitants of Devizes itself, who do not often have so excellent an opportunity of inspecting the relics of their own town.

In the temporary absence of Earl Nelson, whose inaugural address upon the county antiquities selected for examination was postponed to a future opportunity, the Rev. A. C. Smith, of Yatesbury, a prominent member of the Wiltshire Society, cordially welcomed the members, and pointed out with great eloquence the leading features of ancient and mediæval Wiltshire. This county possesses, perhaps in a greater degree than any other in the whole of England, magnificent examples of the earliest works attributed to human agency on the globe. The British period, illustrated but sparingly elsewhere, here is well shown by the flake-strewn, barrow-studded downs; then comes the marvellous and mysterious megalithic edifice at Stonehenge and its larger, but perhaps less generally known companion in age, Avebury; Silbury, the largest artificial mound in Europe, with its adjacent stone circle; the Roman road at Wansborough; Amesbury and Vespasian's Camp; the castle of Bratton, where the Danes once held their camp, and Devizes; the monastic remains at Malmesbury—the home of the most vivid and most trustworthy of our chroniclers, William of Malmesbury—Braddestoke Priory, and Lacock Abbey; and a large number of typical specimens of ecclesiastical and domestic architecture, all being included in the places put upon the programme for visitation during the eight working days at the disposal of the Association. Under the guidance of the Rev. H. A. Olivier and Mr. Henry Cunningham, Curators of the Devizes Museum, the extensive collection of antiquities recovered from excavations in the barrows preserved in that institution was inspected, and the party was then conducted to the churches of St. Mary and St. John, which were described at length by the Rev. Dr. Burges, rector of Devizes. Afterwards a visit was made to the remains of the ancient castle, renowned in the middle of the twelfth century in the wars of the Empress Mathilda, daughter of Henry I., who, as Mr. W. de G. Birch pointed out in a paper published some time ago, is entitled to her place among the sovereigns of England by reason of her formal recognition by the Government then existing in England during the eventful years 1141–1142.

After visiting some buildings in the town, the members assembled in the Town Hall, and the President delivered his inaugural address, in which, after referring generally to the important bearing which these annual gatherings of archaeologists had upon the furtherance of the study and the preservation of our historical relics, he proceeded to point out that the Association might assist in promoting archaeological lore by preserving the old names of different fields and farms. Every field had a name, and many still retained them by mere tradition among the old labourers and in the old parish maps and terriers. Some of more modern date only referred to the use of the field on its comparatively recent allotment, such as "Hundred Acre," which generally meant "under an acre," and "Ten Furlong," or the like, but there were much older names than these, and if any one ever attempted to walk the bounds of an old Saxon charter many of the old names, if kept, would help out the boundaries, and the specified points on the boundary would give an explanation to the names. For example, Whelpley, Wellow, Landford, were a proof of the British being originally to the east of Christ-Church Avon. Cordic's battle at Charford drove the Britons to the other side, and caused the succession of forts from Old Sarum down the valley protecting the western lands to which they retired. A few years ago, in digging in a rabbit burrow, Lord Radnor's keeper came upon the remains of an old Saxon chief, with his sword by his side, who had evidently fallen in the moment of victory in the middle of the fortified pah which he had taken from the British, following up the successes of Cordic, and driving the Britons on the other side across the river at Britford—a name which still commemorates this strategic movement of the defeated party. Hence the use of preserving names and the old earthworks. A discovery was thus made which would have been comparatively useless without those well-known surroundings which, having been preserved, gave a consistency to the history. His lordship then proceeded to refer to some of the places of interest which it was the intention of the archaeologists to visit. Referring to the large number of tumuli, he said those on the Wiltshire downs had been sufficiently excavated, and he thought nothing could justify the profanation of old burial-places when there was a certainty of no new discovery being made. He did not see, however, why a careful tunnelling should not be conducted under the so-called altar stone at Stonehenge, to see if any remains which might illustrate the age of Stonehenge could be found there or within the sacred circle, and, further, he advocated the replacing of those stones which had fallen within man's memory, a record of which had been carefully preserved. The mechanical appliances of the present day could easily replace them. The necessity of something being done to preserve the ruin as handed down to us was becoming more and more imperative. One of the great stones was gradually bearing more heavily on a stone of the inner circle, and it might fall down any day. Some means should also be taken by artificial supports to prevent that catastrophe, and he could not see why, when that was done, they might not have those stones replaced whose position was clearly known, and whose fall had been carefully recorded. Having briefly glanced at the programme, which promised a successful meeting, he trusted that all archaeologists would endeavour to collect and preserve all such monuments of the past as came in their way, so as to bring them under the notice of associations like the one now engaged in investigating the county of Wilt.

On Tuesday, at an early hour, a large party was conveyed in carriages to Potterne Church, which, with the ancient porch and church house, was described by the Rev. H. A. Olivier, Mr. E. P. Loftus Brock, F.R.S., and others. From this place the members proceeded to Eastwell, where the font, attributed to the very early date of the tenth century, and its remarkable inscription were inspected. The drive was then continued through Eristoke to Edington, where the church and the monuments were examined, and a brief description of them given by Mr. J. R. Bramble and other members. After luncheon the church of Tinhead Bratton was visited, and the encampment at Bratton, by some believed to be the site of King Alfred's decisive victory over the Danes, explored, most of the visitors walking up the ascent and inspecting the well-known "White Horse." The return journey to Devizes was made through Steeple Ashton, whereby an opportunity was provided for viewing the church, Keeril with its church and fine examples of ancient timbered houses, and Foulshot Church with its interesting belfry. The long day was yet further extended by the reading of papers by Mr. J. A. Pictou, F.R.S., and Dr. Stevens. Wednesday's proceedings consisted of a visit to the church of Bishop's Cannock; an inspection of the Wansdyke, about two miles from the church; thence across the Roman road to Avebury, with a description of the megalithic circles by the Rev. A. C. Smith, to whom also the Association stands indebted for the description of the stone circle opposite the great artificial mound at Silbury, to which the party was taken through the celebrated Kennet avenue. On Thursday, Braddestoke Priory, Deantsey, and Malmesbury Abbey formed the principal portion of the programme.

THE PRIVATE COLLECTIONS OF ENGLAND.

No. LIV.—WENTWORTH WOODHOUSE, ROTTERHAM.

MORE fortunate than Dr. Waagen (to whom, as he has told the world, an accident denied full use of an opportunity of examining the pictures in this magnificent seat), we are indebted to the present Earl Fitzwilliam for ample means of studying the works which place Wentworth Woodhouse in the highest class of the private collections of England. Than Earl Fitzwilliam no one knows more about the gallery, of which he takes zealous care, and generously allows the world to see under a restriction which, although inconsiderable, is necessitated by the fact that, while most of the paintings are hung in a large gallery, which serves as a corridor of communication, many are in the rooms usually occupied at Wentworth. With a few exceptions, every fine example is well lighted. Wentworth is in every way an historic house, and was renowned before the fame of the great Earl of Strafford cast a new lustre on its hall-rooms and his love of art enriched the place with its choicest treasures. This statesman collected the Van Dycks and some few other contemporary pictures which have remained here since his time; the Lelys were added by his son. His descendant, the first Marquis of Rockingham, the well-known minister, procured the Low Country and Italian paintings, which in the middle of the last century it was the fashion to collect, as well as the Reynoldses and those masterpieces by George Stables which give a distinct character to the collection. Dr. Waagen, in his account of the gatherings of pictures formed in the last decade of the eighteenth century, confounded Viscount Fitzwilliam, whose very miscellaneous acquisitions are now at Cambridge, with the owner of the hall-rooms before us.

Arranged as these pictures are, it will, on every ground, be most convenient to describe them in their order on the walls, using the numbers of the manuscript catalogue, and without more regard to the schools than the paintings represent than is predicated by that mode of arrangement. This method brings to the front the numerous works in the Gallery, and, first among them, an interesting Van Dyck, being No. 58, a sketch for the famous group of portraits of the great Earl of Strafford and Sir Philip Mainwaring, his secretary, which we describe at length below. Though not hung in a good light, the smaller version seems a valuable example, because it exhibits the process of the artist in beginning a picture; the handling is, of course, a little free, but the study possesses the motive, composition, and effect of the finished group. There is a slight difference in the arrangements of the two paintings. The next work is by P. Wouwermans (62), and shows the interior of a stable, not a common subject with the artist. A man has mounted on a dark bay horse; the white horse, which Wouwermans would never dispense with, because his scheme of chiaroscuro depended on such a key-note, is held by a groom, while the owner speaks to a woman on our left. The door of the place is open to admit light, which contrasts strongly with the warm gloom of the stable in shadow, a darkness which is broken by rich reflections from the lustre without. Several horses are at the mangers in the background. This is an exceptionally luminous and powerful picture, much less black in the shadows than usual with the master.

A very precious portrait (69) compels the visitor's attention because it is said to represent Shakespeare. Although the features are a little pinched, there is a strong likeness between them and those of the "Chandos" picture of the poet, which is now in the National Portrait Gallery. It is said to have been copied by Sir G. Kneller from an older portrait, and given by him to "glorious John" Dryden. It is that which is referred to in the "Epistle to Sir Godfrey Kneller, Principal Painter to his Majesty," which contains the celebrated words:

Thy pictures think, and we divine their thought.

By the way, no one has developed the motive of this line with such force as Mr. Browning has in his poem called "Is a Gondola." Dryden continued:—

Shakespeare, thy gift, I place before my sight:
With awe I ask his blessing ere I write;
With reverence look on his majestic face,
Proud to be seen, but of his god-like race.
His soul inspires me, while thy pencil I write,
And I, like Tasso, under Ajax fight:
Bids thee, through me, be bold, with dauntless breast
Consume the bad, and emulate the best.

So that, as a shield against the envious critics of Kneller, Dryden said that—

Old as she is, my Muse shall search behind,
Bear off the bad, and intercept the wind.

It is something to have met with the cause of this splendid achievement of the "Muse, old as she is."

A neighbouring group of portraits of "The Italian Poets" (64) is the work of Giorgio Vasari, and probably that which is mentioned in the "Life of Vasari by himself as having been executed at Florence in 1544:—"There I painted some pictures, and among them one which afterwards became the property of Luca Martini, wherein there are the portraits of Dante, Petrarch, Guido Cavalcanti, Boccaccio, Cino da Pistoia, and Guittone d'Arezzo, the likenesses being accurately copied from other portraits. There were subsequently many copies of these heads made from this work." The last part of this statement explains the existence of other pictures of this class, of which one is in the library of Oriel College, Oxford, No. 227 of the Manchester Art Treasures; the names of the persons represented in it are given thus: Ficinus, Poliziano, Petrarch, Boccaccio, Dante, and Cavalcanti; the picture was engraved by Jerome Cock—a rare plate. From the Orleans Collection a similar picture was sold to Mr. T. Hope for one hundred guineas (Buchanan, i. 32), and by Mr. H. T. Hope lent to the British Institution, 1848, No. 110. The last was engraved by Cathelin and Mondet. Earl Fitzwilliam's version comprises life-size, three-quarters-length figures in earnest conversation. Dante is on our right, and wears a red dress; his face is shown in profile, thus illustrating the authority for the likeness. His features are in full light, and his right forefinger indicates the name of Laura, which is on the cover of a book held by Petrarch, who wears a white dress and red hood; the latter leans eagerly forward towards Dante, and speaks with animation. A globe is on the table, with a closed book, to indicate that the roll of poets' names was made up. It is right to add that the names of other persons represented in this picture have been given as Boccaccio, Ariosto, Tasso, and Vasari himself. Vasari was born twenty-eight years before Tasso, who came to the world in 1544, the very year in which, as the painter recorded, as above, he executed his "Italian Poets." There is a mistake somewhere. Cino da Pistoia and Guido Cavalcanti were friends of Dante, and Fra Guittone d'Arezzo was a contemporary of this poet. Verses by all these bards are translated by Mr. D. G. Rossetti in "Dante and his Circle," 1874.

We were next attracted by a charming Guido (65), one of the best of his works, of which few are first-rate. A boy of eight years old, called "Cupid," is sleeping naked on a couch covered by red velvet. There are many versions of this often-repeated motive, which doubtless was one of those to which the craft of Ercole di Guido as a copyist was directed. That before us is a masterpiece of eclecticism: the carnations are tenderly and sweetly painted, and defective only in being a little cold in the greys, a slight shortcoming of the period of Guido's practice which is represented by this picture. But alas for eclecticism! This is but a charming painting of a boy sleeping—not the fiery-hearted Cupid of the great masters of the Renaissance, nor the "long-limbed" lad of antiquity. Yet it is all that the artistic attainment of the time of the painter, acting on a conscientious and conservative, but cold and unsympathizing, temperament, could effect.

It is a long step from Guido to John Philip, R.A., whose capital picture called "The Widow" (68), a portrait of his landlady at Seville, is next in order in our notes. This is a life-size, three-quarters-length figure in a black dress, and really a large sketch of high value for tone and the breadth of effect and the richness of the carnations it exhibits. It was bought in 1807. Near the Guido is a good copy (67) of the famous "Tribute Money" by Titian, now at Dresden. There are numerous copies of this work: one of the best is in the Grosvenor Gallery; others are to be found in the Uffizi and the Academy of St. Luke, Rome. A large and striking gallery picture by Guercino is called "Hagar and Ishmael" (69). Hagar, as is not unfrequent in the works of this master, whose misfortune it was to be born too late, has a magnificent physique and a noble air and presence; she is weeping near the sleeping boy. The angel, a graceful but rather weak figure, appears in the design, and does not add to its strength, although he is distinguished by Guercino's grace of action; the angel points to the spring. Of course Hagar is the fine element here; this figure shows a superb reading of the subject, but still it is deficient in dignity and grandeur. Guercino's conception is not sufficiently elevated, although he has given a striking picture of a finely formed and noble young mother who has been bitterly wronged. This picture needs attention. A bust portrait (70) of a girl with fair hair bears the name of Mlle. de la Tremouille, and is, although dry and hard, interesting as a specimen of French portraiture of the middle of the seventeenth century. By Guercino (I) is No. 71, a small head of the Magdalen, a study valuable for richness of impasto. The motive of the expression is forced; the left hand has been repainted.—A Claude (74) is now in a state unfavourable for inspection. A temple is on our right, a group of beautiful trees in the middle, beyond which is an open and glowing vista of a champagne country with remote hills, water, and woodland; more foliage is on our extreme right, a bridge in the middle distance; a shepherd and shepherdess are driving their flock in front. The picture is now obscure, but was originally, we think, an unusually fine example. Thirty years ago, when Dr. Waagen saw it, it was in the same condition; it is therefore, doubtless, irrecoverable.

By Schalken is a Virgin and Child (75), a candlelight piece of life-size, half-length figures, embodying a very happy idea in the Dutch vein of the painter's time. The Virgin has the babe on her knee, and supports him with her left arm, holding the candle with her right hand. There is nothing ignoble in the design or execution of this fine picture, but, on the contrary, a simple, tender, and pathetic motive is rendered with solidity and learning. Physical beauty of a high order is alone wanting to make this a first-class painting, as it is a first-rate example of the artist's powers. "Christ crowned with Thorns" (76) is by Annibale Carracci. It comprises the bust of Christ and the head of the executioner who places the crown, thus giving the gist of the subject according to the compendious mode of the Bolognese School, and in this respect the work is an extremely valuable example of a leading and admirable characteristic of the class it belongs to. If the painter had been as fortunate in the subject as he was wise in putting his idea into execution, this would have been an admirable picture. But his idea of Christ is feeble, although the learning employed in rendering that idea cannot be questioned. Insight, although not of a noble kind, and pathos appear in the fine expressiveness of the purple lips of our Saviour, while the look of his eyes is weak, even for a melo-dramatic conception. They are "turned up" according to Guido's most conventional fashion, while the hands, which should have partaken of the agony of mockery and humiliation, are nerveless and out of keeping with the expression of the face, affected though that be. That the colour and chiaroscuro, the purely technical qualities of this picture, are remarkably well managed, severally and together, suffices to give us a true notion of the merits of academical training, such as that to which all the Carracci owed much, and which formed so large a portion of their art that it has been doubted if without it they would have gained the reputation they possessed and still, in some degree, retain.—A Salvator Rosa comes next, and is a large landscape, called 'The Tribute Money' (77) because of its figures. It is really a fine view of a sea-shore, with ships running before the wind, their white sails distinct on the deep blue water; a great rock is on our left, with a convent on its summit. The design is so grand and dignified that it cannot fail to impress the spectator. It is especially noteworthy for a noble inspiration, and for the vastness of the atmosphere pervading the view over the sea to where the horizon shines in golden lustre.—A 'Holy Family' (78), by Andrea del Sarto, is a fine and uncommonly warm picture of his middle period, more than ordinarily resembling a Paolo Veronese in its colour and wealth of tone, golden and ruddy carnations. Christ, a whole-length figure, is on the Virgin's knee; both are in profile to our left. She turns with a playful and lifelike expression to the front, an attitude which in its graceful charm is very like that we owe to Veronese. St. John and two other figures are on our left.

Another 'Holy Family' (79) is by Palma Vecchio, and comprises half-length figures of the Saviour, Virgin, SS. John and Catherine, the last a nobly conceived figure of great beauty and thoroughly Venetian character. It is a charming example in which one sees distinctly the influence of the Bellini on the painter. This affects the sentiment expressed by the design not less than some qualities of the execution. On the whole it is undoubtedly one of the finest examples of a master whose works are comparatively rare in England. Christ is on the knee of his mother and he holds the globe, while St. John, with his labelled cross, approaches them. The figures of the children are exquisitely pretty, soft, and naïve. The Catherine is, of course, Palma's fair and wholly Venetian daughter Violante, a plump and voluptuous damsel, whose abundant golden hair is bound about her head and lies in rolls on her shoulders. There is a seductive and amorous expression in her features, and the morbidity of her flesh is in keeping with it; her carnations have not lost a tint of the rose or a tinge of her warm Venetian blood. She stands in an attitude of despondency, but is quite unmoved at heart, and thinks only of the golden light on her broad brows and the gleaming of her hair, and of the rosy and creamy colours of her flesh. Orange and blue robes signify not only the Magdalen's repentance, but the sumptuous taste of the lady and her father's vigorous eye for colour. The picture is very fine indeed, a glorious piece of colour. The Virgin's face has the charm of soft, sweet, and gracious maternity, and its contours and colours are lovely.

'A Girl and a Man with a Parrot' (80) proves the force of Venetian influence, in the mode of Carpaccio, on Dutch practice, which has dictated the choice of models and a subject. An old man holds the bird on one hand, while with the other he feeds it with grapes taken from a dish which the damsel carries. It is a capital example of the same skill which produced Lord Darnley's admirable painting of similar character, and both are by Jordaens, wholly sunny, masculine, and lustreously powerful. The latter was at the Royal Academy in 1877, and both were at Manchester twenty years before. The Cobham picture is rather more brilliant, not quite so well drawn, and perhaps cleaner than that at Wentworth Woodhouse. A second Salvator, 'Jason and the Dragon' (81), betrays an undramatic idea of the subject. The hero is on a rock behind the dragon and administers the charm to it. He strongly resembles one of Salvator's brigands. The chief light of the picture falls on the white sleeves of his shirt, which serve as foci for that purpose. Rosa etched this design with his own hands. The picture has darkened to an unusual degree. Dr. Waagen was probably right in attributing to Innocenzo da Imola a Raphaelesque picture of the 'Virgin and Child,' which bears the number 83 in this gallery. Very sweet and simple in design, elegant and careful, and possessing exceptional warmth of colour, it is rightly ascribed to the school of Raphael. Some lack of strength in the motive does not affect this ascription. No. 84 is a second Guercino, and in an oval represents busts of his son and daughter; it is a most agreeable and perfectly genuine picture. The girl's face is very ingenuous in its expression, and in its features curiously like her father's angels and other beauties, especially as regards the "sunny" eyes, fair and broad forehead, and the floppy hair which clusters about it. But the head of the boy by no means equals this. The draughtsmanship is imperfect, the expression is almost feeble.

By Il Sodoma is a 'Virgin, Child, and St. John' (85). The Virgin is a half-length figure, with Christ, at full length, standing in her arms. John is behind, and points to Christ. It is a very fair example of Bassi, who is much less known in this country than he deserves. His graceful "airs" and nice composition, the beauty of the Virgin's somewhat précieuses features, her dainty attitude, are elements which perfectly illustrate the peculiar motive of the painter, who was unequal in his efforts, at times indicating the possession of very high powers indeed, at other times falling far below the standard of Earl Fitzwilliam's picture—a work which shows the strong influence of the school of Da Vinci on this Sienese master, whose art is often wonderfully full of life and stately, almost antique beauty, rendered with something of the finikin Lombard manner. An "heroic" Van Dyck next commands attention. It represents 'Rinaldo and Armida' (82); she stoops over the sleeping knight. It is a capital picture, and nearly equal in merit to the beautiful example of the same class which Mr. Harford lent to the Royal Academy last winter, called 'Hermionia putting on Clorinda's Armour' (130). Hermionia was evidently painted from Margaret Lemon, Van Dyck's beautiful mistress, whose portrait is at Hampton Court. Michael Angelo da Caravaggio has the credit of having painted the fine portrait of a man (87) in a black dress embroidered with gold, and wearing a fur cap. It is a good example of a very grave yet animated character, without any exaggeration of expression, action, or painting. The last-named element is massive, and illustrates a grand style. The carnations are ruddy, and the flesh shadows are, as usual with the painter, of a deep brown.—We pass next to a rocky landscape (102) with gipsies, painted by Old Teniers, which may be compared with his works in the Wynn Ellis Gift to the National Gallery. It closely resembles them, and displays his taste for such subjects. A round tower is in the middle distance, beyond is an open space; a lowering autumnal sky indicates an approaching storm, and this feature, as is generally the case with the artist, is the most striking portion of his picture, which is superior to most of his productions in possessing a fine glowing tone.

We conclude this part of the subject with a selection of good pictures from the large body of portraits of eminent persons with which Wentworth Woodhouse is richly stored. A 'Portrait of Montrose' has a handsome, intelligent, and energetic face. That of Sir

Horace Vere has hair all compact, as if with the constant wearing of a helmet. Next is Margaret Clifford, seventh Countess of Derby. After this we recognize the last Thomas Wriothesley, fourth Earl of Southampton, Lord High Treasurer, a fine and masculine Lely (or Wissing); Dr. W. Spencer, by Mrs. Mary Beale, in an oval cartouche; a whole-length figure of Catherine Stanley, Marchioness of Dorchester, and sister of the Countess of Strafford; Sir William Fitzwilliam, Earl of Southampton, 1537-43, a very good picture, showing this distinguished peer holding a staff as Treasurer of the Household to Henry VIII. Near these are the whole-length portraits of the first Lord and Lady Fitzwilliam; the second Earl of Strafford, in armour, and having a very kindly and gentle face: it looks like a good Dobson, but is much chilled; Arabella, Lady Wentworth, afterwards Countess of Strafford, half length, in a dead-leaf dress and blue scarf, her hair in the mode introduced by Henriette Maria, ascribed to Cornelius Jonaen, but looks very like an exceptionally snubbed Lely (she was the second wife of Thomas, Viscount Wentworth, afterwards Earl of Strafford; there is another portrait of this lady, which was at the Academy in 1875); the first Marquis of Rockingham, in a circle; Lady Anne Wentworth, by Lely, a whole-length figure in a white satin dress, a charming picture of a girl walking. The Lady H. M. Stanley (122) is a child in white, seated on a pillow, with grey curtains behind the figure, and having both hands extended. This picture has impressed our memory because it is most delicately and prettily painted, with rare animation in the attitude and great spirit in the expression, and because it is remarkable for beautiful modelling and extreme delicacy of finish. Chromatically speaking, it is what we should now call a study in warm white with the carnations in perfect keeping, thus producing admirable colour of a character very uncommon indeed in a work of the class with which it cannot but be associated. It is mentioned in the second Earl of Strafford's will as the likeness of "my deare wife at 9 months." A red coral hangs by a white ribbon before the child, who wears a laced cap set back from her ears. This admirable picture and most interesting portrait is worthy of Van Dyck, but it is strongly suggestive of the fine, grave, and learned mode of old Dutch portraiture in which Van Somer excelled, and which flourished until the more attractive and animated, if less sound, style of Rubens and Van Dyck superseded it. No. 125 is another portrait of the same person, a girl of nine years old, holding flowers, and indisputably a good Van Dyck. This last picture, like the former, is mentioned in Lord Strafford's will, "My deare wife at 9 years."

The next paper of this series will describe the remaining pictures and portraits in Wentworth Woodhouse.

First Art Society.

Among the pictures destined for the Royal Academy next year is a portrait of the Earl of Wharfedale by Mr. Poynter.

THE death is announced, on the 9th inst., of Mr. T. S. Robins, a member of the Institute of Painters in Water Colours. This artist was one of the original members of this society, and for many years his marine pictures and landscape subjects have been eminently popular.

CANON GREENWELL is at present investigating the contents of some Irish barrows and is staying at Portrush.

WE have to record this week with regret the death of Mr. H. Clark Pidgeon, President of the Sketching Club and a very old member of the Institute of Painters in Water Colours. Mr. Pidgeon, who died at a somewhat advanced age on the 6th inst., was born in March, 1807. He was educated at Reading under the famous Dr.

Valpy, and originally destined for the Church. But that project was abandoned, and after a short trial of a business pursuit at Isleworth, his natural tastes for art and archaeology, which he had manifested at a very early age, led him into more literary paths. For some time he edited the Derbyshire Chronicle, and wrote, among other works, a treatise on the Eton Montem, which attracted considerable attention at the time of its production. Art studies led Mr. Pidgeon to Paris, and he subsequently filled the professorship of the School of Drawing at the Liverpool Institute. Here he contributed very considerably towards the formation of the Historical Society of Lancashire and Cheshire in co-operation with Mr. J. Mayer and Dr. Hume. In 1851 Mr. Pidgeon returned to London, and worked with great success in preparing the designs on wood for the Illustrated London News during the Great Exhibition, which was so extensively illustrated in that periodical, and from that date up to within a very recent period he was a constant exhibitor at the Institute.

On the 14th inst., exactly 632 years after the famous structure was begun, the great Dom at Cologne was finished by placing the highest stones on the towers. The date for the ceremonial celebration of this event is not yet named.

A STATUE of Field-Marshal Wrangel, by Prof. Keil, has just been cast, and is to be set up in Berlin, another of the many statues of warriors which give the Prussian capital such a belligerent aspect.

MUSIC

The National Music of the World. By the late H. F. Chorley. Edited by Henry G. Hewlett. (Sampson Low & Co.)

THE following extracts from Mr. Hewlett's preface to this work sufficiently explain its appearance, though they do not account for the delay which has been allowed to occur since Chorley's decease:—"The four lectures upon which the following essays are based were read by the author at the Royal Institution in 1862, and subsequently delivered at Manchester and Birmingham. Encouraged by the popular success which they achieved and the eulogies passed upon their merits by some of his most distinguished musical contemporaries, Chorley resolved to publish them, and had partially prepared them for the press not long before his death. . . . The knowledge that in offering these essays to the world I am giving effect to the wish of my deceased friend removes the uneasiness which one who is responsible for the publication of a posthumous work may naturally feel, lest the established reputation of its author should thereby suffer." Mr. Hewlett need be under no apprehensions respecting Chorley's reputation. Apart from his critical acumen, this was gained by reason of his possession of qualities which for want of a more descriptive term may be called truly English, and which assured for him the respect even of opponents. His free and fearless statement of his own convictions on art matters made his opinion greatly sought after at a time when musical criticism generally was more timid and certainly less enlightened than at the present day. That his views respecting some eminent composers were peculiar cannot be denied, and a few passages in the present volume read strangely enough by the light of our more recent experiences and sympathies; but it is by no means probable that he would have eliminated, or even modified, these expressions, for he never spoke lightly or carelessly, and his opinions once formed were maintained with a tenacity which commanded consideration if it could not always carry agreement. The subject of this posthumous work is a vast one, especially as Chorley has included in his use of the term "national music" not merely traditional or folk music, but the art product of each country in its most matured and characteristic form. Anything like exhaustive treatment must, therefore, not be anticipated, and the author admits that his essays are mere sketches, the very richness of the theme rendering it intractable. Indeed, to follow it out consistently would be to write a history of music, if not of musicians. The four lectures deal with music from the East, South, North, and West respectively. Of these the first is the least satisfactory, partly by reason of Chorley's honest and characteristic contempt for tradition. "I dare to believe," he says, "that the music of the Greeks was so much foolishness, if it be measured against their colossal drama, their divine sculpture; and nurture a secret and deep irreverence against the harpers, pipers, and symphonists, whose strange forms in the monumental sculptures of Egypt have set speculation so eagerly to work, and have beguiled so many ingenious people into conceiving that the art of music was with them something rich, complete, and attractive; the key to the cipher being untowardly lost." Amiable enthusiasts on Greek music may feel deeply offended at such blunt scepticism, but the balance of proof is decidedly in favour of Chorley. In the second essay the author is on more congenial ground, and discourses pleasantly on Italian and French music, the matter being for the most part both uninteresting and interesting, while the opinions are also in the main incontrovertible. Thus far the work had undergone revision by Chorley. The remaining lectures are printed as originally delivered in 1862. That on 'Music from the North' includes Germany, a method of procedure justifiable on ethnological grounds. Here some disappointment may be felt at the fragmentary nature of the treatise, a shortcoming which, of course, was inevitable. The last section contains some valuable results of inquiry into the rich field of Welsh, Irish, and Scotch national music. Throughout the work the reader will find occasional evidences of its having been compiled more than a decade since. Only three sopranos of European reputation, gained after Northern training, are mentioned, and Theresa Tietjens is not one of these. Among English singers of renown the name of Clara Novello does not appear, and M. Gounod is named as "the newest French composer to whom, in default of more real genius, Europe is beginning to look for its operas." In spite of all imperfections, however, this book may be read with much pleasure and profit, not the least of its charms being the homely but intense earnestness of the writer, whose zeal for the truth and hatred of that which is degraded or false are displayed in every sentence.

Musical Studies. By Francis Hueffer. (Edinburgh, Black.)

THE desire which animates men of letters to secure their minor utterances from the oblivion which sooner or later overtakes all essays contributed to the daily press, or even the monthly and quarterly magazines, is natural in itself and in certain cases laudable. The republication in book form of light and gossip articles intended at the outset merely to amuse the casual and unthinking reader is to be deprecated on various grounds, among which may be the reputation of the author, whose shallowness must stand the risk of being exposed by submitting his fugitive thoughts to the fierce light which beats on the domain of permanent literature. No such danger is to be apprehended from the present volume, which consists of essays contributed to various journals on themes of the highest moment connected with music and musical literature. The author's preface sets forward his case in such a fair and impartial light that we cannot do better than quote it:—"The present volume is part of an unmistakable movement in modern literature. The vast development of periodical publications within the last quarter of a century has drawn the best literary and scientific workers into its vortex. . . . If even illustrious scientific men give way to this general tendency of the age, the musical critic may claim the same indulgence for his modest offering. The æsthetic literature regarding music in this country is, indeed, so scanty, and so wholly out of proportion with the general and serious interest of late taken in the art, that any earnest and conscientious discussion of musical topics should not be wholly unwelcome." With this reasoning it is impossible to disagree, and it only remains to ascertain whether the contents of the book merit the position which the author seeks to obtain for them. As regards the main portion we can readily answer in the affirmative. The article on Thayer's 'Beethoven,' for example, is in itself a valuable contribution to Beethoven literature, and that on Chopin constitutes an admirably clear and concise résumé of the Polish musician's life and personal idiosyncrasies. Here it may be said that the evidence which assigns Chopin's birth to 1809 is by no means universally accepted. The fact that his sister, who was in Paris at the time of his death, acquiesced in the date—1810—inscribed on his tomb in Père-la-Chaise has weight with many, and their case is strengthened by the monument inaugurated a few months since at Warsaw, which agrees with that in Père-la-Chaise, notwithstanding the testimony of M. Karasowski in favour of the earlier date. The essay on the life and teaching of Schopenhauer is written with sufficient lucidity to render the philosophy of the chief apostle of despair comprehensible to the most ordinary reader. It will be understood from these remarks that Dr. Hueffer's aim is popularity, but it is popularity in the very best sense of that much abused word. The essays are eminently readable, though the subjects are treated in the most thoughtful and earnest spirit, with just a trace of cynicism giving piquancy to the style, but not sufficiently developed to leave an unpleasant impression on the mind.

Henry Smart's Compositions for the Organ. Analyzed by John Broadhouse. (Rees.)

IT is difficult to realize the motives which prompted the issue of this little volume, the contents of which were originally published in the pages of the Musical Standard. The organ music of the late Henry Smart is so widely known and so generally appreciated by organists as to render any special efforts in favour of its popularization entirely superfluous. Furthermore, its clearness of outline and refined simplicity make the task of analysis comparatively useless. Mr. Broadhouse is an enthusiast, and, like most hero-worshippers, is more than once in danger of defeating his object by exaggerated, not to say fulsome, laudation. He attributes to Smart qualities which discriminating critics would certainly hesitate to assign to him. The composer was possessed of a vein of true melody, and his music is distinguished by elegance of style, easy, unstudied musicianship, and symmetry of structure calculated to charm, if not to greatly impress, the listener. In his organ works there is an infinity of melodic beauty, and his part-writing is always pure and never complex. Elaborately constructed fugues were not his metier, and, speaking generally, his organ music occupies a legitimate position between the pedantry of the modern German and the flippancy of the modern French schools. But when Mr. Broadhouse speaks of the originality, the majesty and grandeur of Smart's writings, he strays beyond the limits of just and impartial criticism. His book is embellished by an excellent photographic portrait of the deceased composer.

Musical Society.

It may interest some of our readers to learn the dates and such particulars as are at present available of the principal musical events of the coming season. The Crystal Palace Concerts will begin on Saturday, October 9th, and the ante-Christmas series will end on December 18th. The first performance at St. James's Hall will be, as usual, Mr. Walter Bache's pianoforte recital, which will take place on Monday afternoon, November 1st. The Monday Popular Concerts will be given on November 8th, 15th, 22nd, 29th, December 6th, 13th, January 3rd, 10th, 17th, 24th, 31st, February 7th, 14th, 21st, 28th, March 7th, 14th, 21st, 28th, April 4th and 11th; and the Saturday performances on November 13th, 20th, 27th, December 4th, 11th, 18th, January 25th, 1st, 8th, 15th, 22nd, 29th, February 5th, 12th, 19th, 26th, March 5th, 12th, 19th, 26th, April 2nd and 9th. The Sacred Harmonic Society's concerts will be given at St. James's Hall on the following dates:—December 3rd, 17th, January 21st, February 11th, March 4th, 25th, April 8th, 29th, and May 20th. Sir Michael Costa will retain his position as conductor, and it is intended to render the season especially interesting by the introduction of novelties and important revivals. The band and chorus will undergo careful revision. Mr. F. H. Cowen's orchestral concerts on Saturday evenings at St. James's Hall will take place on November 13th and 27th, December 4th and 18th. A special feature will be the production at each concert of at least one important work by an English composer. We cordially wish Mr. Cowen success in his spirited undertaking.

ACCORDING to present arrangements Her Majesty's Theatre will open for the autumn Italian opera season on Saturday, October 16th. Of the details it would be as yet premature to speak.

MR. CHARLES HALLÉ will give a series of orchestral concerts in February and March, probably on Saturday evenings.

M. LANGOURAUX announces a series of four orchestral concerts to be given at St. James's Hall on Tuesdays, March 8th, 15th, 22nd, and 29th. The Parisian chef d'orchestre has special claims on the sympathies of English musicians by his enthusiastic, but it is to be feared fruitless, efforts to popularise the music of Handel and Bach in the French capital.

THE Philharmonic Society's concerts are to be reduced in number from eight to six. The dates are as follows: February 24th, March 10th and 24th, April 7th, May 15th and 29th. Nothing is as yet known concerning the possible resignation of Mr. Curns as conductor.

THE Richter Concerts are fixed for May 2nd, 9th, 16th, 19th, 23rd, 30th, June 2nd, 13th, 20th, and 23rd. The report to which we alluded with reference to a cycle of performances of German operas has now taken another shape. It is said that efforts will be made to bring over a complete German company for the production of Wagner's 'Ring des Nibelungen.'

MR. WILHELM GANZ's orchestral concerts will take place on April 30th, May 14th and 28th, June 11th and 25th.

THE first performance of Berlioz's 'Faust,' under Mr. Charles Hallé's direction, will be on Saturday, November 20th. Miss Mary Davies, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Santley will be the soloists.

MR. CARL ROSA's London season will, it is hoped, be given at Her Majesty's Theatre early in the ensuing year, but nothing has been definitely arranged up to the present time.

THE London Ballad Concerts will take place on Wednesday evenings, November 24th, December 1st, 8th, 15th, January 12th, 19th, 26th, February 2nd, 9th, 16th, 23rd, March 6th, 13th, 20th, and 27th; and on Saturday mornings, January 1st, May 7th, 21st, June 4th and 18th.

A PRIZE competition for symphonies has just been concluded at Turin. No less than ninety-four scores were sent in, and the prizes were gained by Signor Uberto Bandini, of Rome, and Signora Olimpia Bini-Manugaldi, of Bologna.

THE new National Theatre at Rome will probably be inaugurated in November next.

DURING a hurricane which prevailed at Bayreuth on July 26th, the roof of the Wagner theatre suffered considerable damage.

DRAMA

Le Théâtre des Jésuites. Par Ernest Boysee. (Paris, Henri Vaton.)

NOR all the censures and anathemas which from the earliest time the Christian Church—not without some warrant, it must be owned, from pagan authorities—has hurled against the drama and the stage have sufficed entirely to frighten away from them those with most respect for authority. So strange a fascination and witchery has the unreal life of the stage exercised over humanity, those even who have formed the most exalted or ascetic theories of existence have been unable wholly to shake off its influence. Side by side accordingly with condemnations of stage plays, of mimes, and of histrions have constantly appeared projects for turning to profitable account that powerful and pathetic aspiration of the individual after the contemplation of a life less cabined and commonplace than his own, which has asserted itself ever since the first dramatic representation grew at the Dionysiac festival out of the utterances of the parted choir. When the profession of actor was absolutely and justly infamous; when the supposed necessity of competing with the sanguinary spectacles of the arena brought on to the stage orgies fitting only the obscene rites of Chemos or of "Moloch homicide"; when lascivious exhibitions provoked the satire of Juvenal; and when, to give full effect to the sufferings of the dying Hercules, a living man was burned to death before the people,—even then, while men like St. Basil, St. Augustin, Tertullian, and St. Gregory Nazianzen were lifting up their voices in denunciation, the power of the stage was acknowledged, and the attempt to regenerate and purify it was commenced. Augustin himself owns how tempting he found theatrical spectacles in his youth; Thomas Aquinas speaks of the functions of the player as being serviceable under certain conditions; and Gregory Nazianzen has been credited with the authorship of the first Christian tragedy, Χριστὸς πάσχει, the 'Passion of Christ.' Those North-country ecclesiastics and merchants accordingly who are striving to elevate the stage have ample precedent for their efforts and full justification for continuing their not less praiseworthy than futile exertions. Luther himself spoke in favour of the performance of the comedies of Terence as a part of school education, not only on account of the familiarity with Latin to be thus obtained, but because in a stage representation the various ranks and callings of men are displayed in a manner from which youth may learn the lesson how to behave itself in the position it occupies.

Among those who have taken the keenest interest in the stage and the drama have always been the Jesuits, as among the keenest opponents of both have been their arch-enemies the Jansenists. During the many years in which the training of youths belonging to the highest families of France was in their hands, the fathers used the stage as a means of education with a boldness and a success which have nowhere else been equalled. Little attention has been paid by any one except Dr. Doran to their exertions, and it is curious that the year which witnessed a fresh banishment of the Jesuits from France seen also the first detailed analysis of their labours. No-wise content were the Jesuit fathers with such representations of classic dramas as have prevailed in other countries. They aspired to be authors as well as teachers, and near the middle of the seventeenth century they commenced to supply their pupils with the plays in which a public appearance had to be made. Wherever in France Jesuit colleges were established some form of dramatic entertainment was probably given. At the Collège de Clermont, however, subsequently known as the Collège de Louis le Grand, the most ambitious performances were attempted. Here it was that the dramatic reputations which still survive were established, and it is concerning the spectacles here exhibited that Loret, the famous rhyming chronicler, has left us his naïve and amusing revelations.

In 1564, after a keen struggle with the University and with the Parliament of Paris, the College of Clermont was established. Thirty years later, after the attempt of Jean Châtel (a pupil of the Jesuits) upon the life of Henri IV., the order was expelled the kingdom. During their first residence a theatre appears to have been erected in the College. In a letter written on the 11th of October, 1579, by one of the fathers to the Father General, it is told how on the fête of St. Remi, after the eloquent discours of Père Castor, "il y eut un acte public de théologie et de philosophie, que suivit la représentation d'un drame dont le sujet était Hérode." The origin of the representations, of which this is the earliest recorded instance, was, of course, the same as that of the regular drama. Both sprang from the mysteries or miracles plays, which throughout civilisation formed the origin of the drama as it reasserted itself after the decay of letters. Centuries before the foundation of the Society of Jesuits scholars had taken part in these performances. There is reason for believing that the first English miracle play of which anything is known, the miracle play of 'St. Katherine,' which was performed at Dunstable some time previous to 1119, was acted in part by scholars. Geoffrey, subsequently Abbot of St. Albans, under whose direction it was given, was at one period a member of the University of Paris, and it is probable that he saw there performances by youths of sacred plays. The representation at Dunstable is the first M. Boysee is able to chronicle. He fixes the date at 1119 or 1120. It was, however, most probably some years earlier, since in 1119 Geoffrey was created Abbot of St. Albans, and the performance was given before he assumed the religious habit.

Upon the association of the scholars of the University with the Cleros de la Basoche, the Enfants sans Soucy, and other organised companies, M. Boysee has an introductory chapter, the only fault in which is its brevity. With this branch of the subject he is, however, but remotely concerned, his task commencing when, as he says, the Jesuits attempted to bring regularity and decency as well as good literature into the dramatic games of youth.

In 1603, nine years after their first banishment, the Jesuits reappeared by the authorization of Henri IV. in France. Not until 1618 did they resume possession of the College of Clermont, to remain there until their second expulsion from France in 1762. The practice of supplying dramatic representations was formally ratified in the "Ratio Studiorum," which was despatched from Rome in 1683. The passages which refer to this portion of the scheme of education are as follows:—"Que le sujet des tragédies et des comédies, lesquelles doivent être latines et très-rare, soit sacré et pieux; qu'il n'y ait entre les actes aucun intermède, qui ne soit latin et décent; qu'aucun personnage ou costume de femme n'y soit introduit." Not too closely, as will be seen, did the Society adhere to these rather stringent regulations. That species of compromise with conscience with which the enemies of the Jesuits have always taxed the order, the kind of casuistry which has made the term "Jesuitry" more than equivalent to that of "pious fides" in the mouth of the Roman, seems to have extended to their dealings with this "Ratio Studiorum," which M. Boyssac calls the charter of their order. Something more than mere toleration of Jesuitry appears to be indicated by M. Boyssac when he states how the provisions of the Papal plan were evaded:—"Ils n'étaient pas sans excuse. A côté de leur règle écrite ils avaient cette règle supérieure de s'accommoder aux temps, aux usages et aux besoins de la société." How the requirements of society could be furthered by the performances in ballet of the aristocratic youth of France, and by a rehearsal upon the boards of the Opera in company with professional dancers of the pieces in which it was to appear, is not clearly explained by M. Boyssac. This erudite defender of the brethren seems to think the whole matter too simple to stand in need of vindication.

Tragedy, chiefly in Latin, and ballet on a scale of extreme splendour, constituted the principal feature in these entertainments. Comedy, though not unknown, was accustomed to appear in disguise, behind such names as drame comique, tragi-comédie, &c. "L'usage de la comédie," says Père Jouvancy in the "Ratio Docendi et Discendi," "doit être rare et prudent dans les écoles chrétiennes et religieuses, à cause de la bouffonnerie qui est propre à ce genre et qui est peu compatible avec l'éducation pieuse et libérale de la jeunesse." Still, though purely comic subjects ought to be banished, such themes as the return of the prodigal son and others in which the plot was edifying might, in the opinion of this grave authority, be tolerated. Père Porée, the most brilliant representative of the comic side of the Jesuit drama, calls his pieces fabulae. Full recognition of the value of the comic vein in Porée is found in Saint-Marc Girardin, who, after comparing him with Dancourt and Picard, says:—"Sa plaisanterie est fine et mordante, sa gaieté est franche, naturelle, toujours de bon goût, digne vraiment de la gaieté des enfants qui lui servaient d'acteurs, de cette gaieté du jeune âge, où il n'y a encore ni cynisme ni mauvaiston ni grossièreté." Following Père Porée came Père Lejay, who, though he had less of comic verve than his rival, wrote some effective comedies or, as he chose to call them, dramas. With these two authors may be named Du Cerceau, who wrote in French and in verse, and obtained in consequence a measure of popularity much in advance of what was enjoyed by other members of the company. His play "Les Incommodités de la Grandeur" was acted at the Tuileries before the young King Louis XV., and his works were frequently reprinted. Pastoral plays were sometimes, but rarely, given.

The first tragedies of which any record exists as having been played at the Collège de Clermont were by Père Berthelot. They are two in number, are respectively entitled "Neamas ou Procopius Martyr" and "Jonathas," and were both represented in the year 1635. Collections of tragedies that had been performed appeared much earlier in the century. In 1650 a regular chronicle is commenced, and we find in that year not only a tragedy, "Taprobana Christiana," by Père Gabriel Cossart, but interludes consisting of dancing. Concerning the performance of the following year, in which a ballet was introduced, Loret has something to say. After speaking of the new poem in Latin, a language which he owns elsewhere wholly puzzles him, which was presented by "plusieurs jeunes filozofes," he tells how

On y vit aussi plusieurs danses,
Ballets, postures, et cadences,
Où maints fils de princes et seigneur
Y parurent avec honneur.
Non pas tant pour leurs riches vestes
Qu'il les rendoient tout-à-fait laides,
Que pour la disposition,
La grâce, la belle action,
L'agréable mine, l'adresse,
La gaillardise et la jeunesse
De ces aimables damoiseaux,
Dont la plus-part étoient fort beaux.
Entre ces jeunes personnages
Tous de hauts et nobles lignages,
Armagnac, Soissons, Chateaufort,
Et d'autres, jusqu'à plus de neuf,
Furent charmés et ravirés,
Et firent bien tout ce qu'ils firent.

Loret then contrives to tell how he sat vis-à-vis of the king in a chamber of the Collège, and saw des pâtés fort bons,

Des poulets, langues et jambons,
Salades, fruits et confitures,
Avec de belles créatures.

So occupied was he with a refection altogether outside his customary fare, and wholly to his taste, this most prosaic of rhymesters neglects to supply the names of the pieces he witnessed. We have ventured on giving so long an extract from a man who is to French society of the seventeenth century a species of rhyming Pope because it conveys a full idea of what in the performances at the Collège provoked most admiration and most censure. To supply a list of the plays which every succeeding August until the year 1761 came before the public, or to give the names of the authors, would be as wearisome as futile. From Loret we learn how popular were the entertainments, how large a share of them was assigned to ballet, and how high names were borne by those who took part in them. The list of actors, indeed, includes the most distinguished names in the French nobility, with a few foreigners and one or two Englishmen. With Rochefoucauld, Montmorency, Richelieu, Bussy Rabutin, La Trémouille, Choiseul, we find such names as Guillaume Herbert de Montgommery de Londres, Jacques Bulkeley de Londres, Walter Bellean de Dublin, Jean Dromont de Milford d'Écosse, Guillaume Widdrington d'York, and even George Smith de Londres.

Some specimens of workmanship which M. Boyssac supplies do not speak highly for the originality of the reverend authors. A translation from "Philochoerus seu Avarus," a drama of Père Lejay, is scarcely more than a paraphrase of the outcries of Harpagon when he finds himself robbed. In the ballets more invention is shown, and the subjects of these are often not less ingenious than elaborate.

That the Jesuits should not pass unrebuked was to be expected. A bon mot said to have been addressed by Dancourt, who, like Molière, was at one time a pensionnaire of the Collège de Louis le Grand, to Père La Rue, his former master, who urged him to abandon his vocation of comedian, had considerable vogue. "Ma foi! mon père," Dancourt is reported to have said. "Je ne vois pas que vous me deviez tant blâmer de l'état que j'ai pris. Je suis comédien du roi; vous êtes comédien du pape. Il n'y a pas tant de différence de votre état au mien." The term "comedians of the Pope" appears to have adhered to the fathers. Among the bitterest opponents of the theatrical representations were, of course, the old enemies of the Jesuits, the Jansenists. In "Les Nouvelles Ecclésiastiques" no opportunity was lost of protesting against the scandalous conjunction of the pupils with opera dancers, who in course of time came to take constant part in the ballet, and the subjects chosen and the teaching afforded were the subject of severe and not always too loyal condemnation.

Much care was taken with dresses and decorations, and the performances in this respect might compare with those given on the regular stage. It is needless to say that no advance in respect of appropriateness of costume was made by the fathers, and the dresses at the Collège theatre, as at the Théâtre Français, were those of the day. The incongruity of this was perceived by so commonplace an observer as Loret, who in his feuilleton of the 9th of August, 1653, describing a performance of the martyrdom of Ste. Suzanne—not to be confounded with the chaste Susanna of the Apocrypha—tells how the representatives of the martyr wore patches

Sur son teint
De formes rondes et longuettes,
Ainsi qu'on en voit aux coquette,
Que comme à l'heure du trépas
La dite sainte n'ôta pas:
Car, quand d'une sanglante espée
Sa belle teste fut coupée
Pour n'adorer pas les faux dieux,
J'aperçus de mes propres yeux
Ces mouches de couleur de more
Qui sur sa joue étoient encore.

M. Boyssac writes as an apologist for the Jesuits, and his admiration for them constantly asserts itself. In his preface he declares that he has wished to abstain and has abstained from all "préoccupation de polémique," and he maintains that such arguments as his book contains in favour

MISS AMELIA B. EDWARDS'S NEW NOVEL.

Now ready, at all the Libraries, in 3 vols.

LORD BRACKENBURY.

By AMELIA B. EDWARDS,

Author of 'Barbara's History,' 'Debenham's Vow,' &c.

HURST & BLACKETT, Publishers, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

NEW WORK BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE GAMEKEEPER AT HOME.'

Now ready, crown 8vo. 5s.

ROUND ABOUT A GREAT ESTATE.

By RICHARD JEFFERIES,

Author of 'The Gamekeeper at Home,' 'Wild Life in a Southern County,' 'The Amateur Poacher,' 'Greene Ferne Farme,' 'Hodge and His Masters.'

London: SMITH, ELDER & Co. 15, Waterloo-place.

NEW NOVEL BY SARAH TYTLER.

Now ready, at all the Libraries,

OLIVER CONSTABLE: Miller and Baker.

By SARAH TYTLER,

Author of 'Citoyenne Jacqueline,' 'Scotch Fire,' &c.

3 vols. post 8vo.

London: SMITH, ELDER & Co. 15, Waterloo-place.

This day is published, 8vo. with 4 Maps, price 20s.

HISTORY OF THE INDIAN MUTINY, 1857—1859,

Commencing from the Close of the Second Volume of Sir JOHN KAYE'S 'HISTORY of the SEPOY WAR.'

VOL. III.

By Colonel G. B. MALLESON, C.S.I.,

Author of 'History of the French in India,' 'Historical Sketch of the Native States of India.'

London: WM. H. ALLEN & Co. 13, Waterloo-place, S.W.

NOTICE.

NOW READY,

VOL. I. SIXTH SERIES,

OF

NOTES AND QUERIES.

With Copious Index, price 10s. 6d.

JOHN FRANCIS, 20, Wellington-street, Strand, London, W.C.

SOLDIERS of the VICTORIAN AGE. By C. R.

LOW. 3 vols. demy 8vo. 30s.

CURIOSITIES of the SEARCH-ROOM. A Collection of Serious and Whimsical Wills. By the Author of 'Flemish Interiors,' &c. Demy 8vo. 16s.

NEW NOVEL BY CAPTAIN HAWLEY SMART.

BELLES and RINGERS. By Hawley Smart.

1 vol.

CHAPMAN & HALL (LIMITED), 193, Piccadilly.

E P P S'S C H O C O L A T E E S S E N C E.

Product of a special refining process. It is Chocolate devoided of its over-richness and substantiality. Sugarless, and, when made, of the consistence of Coffee. An Afternoon Chocolate. Each packet is labelled

JAMES EPPS & CO.
Homoeopathic Chemists, London.

THE

NEW WORKS OF FICTION, AT ALL LIBRARIES.

EACH IN THREE VOLUMES.

NOTICE.—New Novel by the Popular Author of 'Love's Conflict,' 'Women against Woman,' 'Petronel,' &c.

The FAIR-HAIRED ALDA. By

FLORENCE MARRIAT, Author of 'Love's Conflict,' 'Women against Woman,' &c. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

The Scotsman says:—"The plot is wrought out with unquestionable vigour."

JACK ALLYN'S FRIENDS. By

G. WEBB APPLETON, Author of 'Catching a Tartar' and 'Frozen Hearts.' 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

The Graphic says:—"A novel which combines the merits of Miss Braddon with those of Bret Harte." Jack Allyn's Friends is just the book to commend itself to thousands of holiday-seekers this summer weather."

The Scotsman says:—"Mr. Appleton knows how to write novels of absorbing and unflagging interest, and of remarkable cleverness."

HOLYWOOD. By Annie L. Walker,

Author of 'A Canadian Heroine,' 'Against Her Will,' &c. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

The Graphic says:—"Hollywood" is a book that deserves to be read. . . . We must congratulate Miss Walker on a steady improvement."

LORD GARLFORD'S FREAK. By

JAMES B. BAYNARD, Author of 'The Rector of Oxbury.' 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

The Morning Post says:—"A very amusing novel, which deserves, for more reasons than one, to rank higher than the ordinary run of current works of fiction."

The ACTOR'S WIFE. By Edmund

LEATHER, Actor. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

The Graphic says:—"Mr. Leather possesses both culture and good feeling. His work bears evidence of careful thought and no small amount of interest."

The BURTONS of DUNROE. By

M. W. BREW. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

The Graphic says:—"None of the descriptions we have read can in any way compare for fidelity to the account of the eviction of the McGuirens. A very interesting and well-written book."

John Bull says:—"The book is deserving of popularity. . . . We see no reason why 'The Burtons of Dunroe' should not reach the honours of future editions."

The Scotsman says:—"The personages are delineated with realistic force."

CHARLIE: a Waif's History, told by Himself. By Mrs. WOODWARD. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

The DEAN'S WIFE. By Mrs. Eiloart,

Author of 'The Curate's Discipline,' 'How He Won Her,' &c. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

AFTER a DARK NIGHT—The SUN.

By C. G. HAMILTON. 2 vols. 31s. [This day.

CARMELA. By the Princess Olga.

CANTACUZENE, Author of 'In the Spring of My Life.' Translated by EUGENE KLAUS, with the Author's approval. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

AMY WYNTER. By Thomas A.

PINKERTON, Author of 'Crossford.' 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

[This day.

London: SAMUEL TINSLEY & Co. 31, Southampton-street, Strand.

"That useful resuscitant of dead knowledge, ye kept NOTES AND QUERIES, the antiquaries' newspaper."
Quarterly Review.

Berys SATURDAY, 24 Pages, Price 4d. of all Booksellers.

NOTES AND QUERIES:

A Medium of Intercommunication for Literary
Men, Artists, Antiquaries, Genealogists, &c.

"When found, make a note of."—CAPTAIN CUTLER.

CONTAINING EVERY WEEK AMUSING ARTICLES
ON SOME OF THE FOLLOWING SUBJECTS:

ENGLISH, IRISH, and SCOTTISH HISTORY,

Illustrated by Original Communications and Inedited Documents.

BIOGRAPHY,

Including unpublished Correspondence of eminent Men, and unrecorded Facts connected with them.

BIBLIOGRAPHY,

More especially of English Authors, with
Notices of rare and unknown Editions of their Works, and Notes on Authorship of Anonymous
Books.

POPULAR ANTIQUITIES and FOLK- LORE,

Preserving the fast-fading Relics of the old Mythologies.

BALLADS and OLD POETRY,

With Historical and Philological Illustrations.

POPULAR and PROVERBIAL SAYINGS,

Their Origin, Meaning, and Application.

PHILOLOGY,

Including Local Dialects, Archaisms, and Notes
on our old Poets.

GENEALOGY and HERALDRY,

Including Histories of Old Families, completion
of Pedigrees, &c.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES, QUERIES, and REPLIES,

On points of ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY, TOPO-
GRAPHY, FINE ARTS, NATURAL HISTORY, MIS-
CELLANEOUS ANTIQUITIES, NUMISMATICS,
PHOTOGRAPHY, &c.

Published by JOHN FRANCIS, 20, Wellington-street,
Strand, W.C.

And may be had, by order, of all Booksellers and Newsreaders.

Post. 5s. cloth, 4s. 6d.; royal 32mo. cloth, 3s.
THE DAILY BOUND. Meditation, Prayer, and
Prises, adapted to the Course of the Christian Year.
London: J. Whittaker, 11, Warwick-lane.

BABYLONIAN LITERATURE.—LECTURES delivered at the ROYAL INSTITUTION. By Rev. W. H. RAY, M.A.
Deputy Professor of Comparative Philology, Oxford; Author of "An Assyrian Grammar," "The Principles of Comparative Philology," &c.
Demy 8vo. cloth, 4s.

"Those who would know more of the literature of Babylon and their wonderful contents must refer to Mr. Ray's book in which most of what is known of them at present is summed up." Times.
London: S. Bagster & Sons, 16, Paternoster-row.

TRÜBNER & CO'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

CHEAP EDITION OF MR. ARNOLD'S NEW AND FORM ON BUDDHISM AND BUDDHISM
THE LIGHT OF ASIA; or, the Great Resurrection. Being the Life and Teaching of Gautama, Prince of India and Founder of Buddhism. Crown 8vo. pp. xvi+280, Illustrated £2. 6d.

CHINESE BUDDHISM: a Volume of Sketches, Historical, Descriptive, and Critical. By the Rev. JOSEPH
EDMOND, D.D. Post 8vo. cloth, 12s.

THE LIFE or LEGEND of GAUDAMA, the Buddha of the Burmese. With Annotations, the Ways to Nirvana, and Notice on the Phoenician, or Burmese Monks. By the Right Rev. P. HUGHES, Bishop of Ramatha, Vicar Apostolic of Ava and Pegu. Third Edition. Folia. post 8vo. cloth, 21s.

THE OBER-AMMERGAU PASSION PLAY.—1880.
MIRACLE PLAYS and SACRED DRAMAS:
an Historical Survey. By Dr. KARL HASE. Translated from the German by A. W. JACKSON and Edited by the Rev. W. W. JACK-SON, Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford. Post 8vo. cloth, 8s.

THE ENGLISHMAN and the SCANDINA-VIAN, or a Comparison of Anglo-Saxon and Old Norse Literature.
By FREDERICK METCALF, M.A., Fellow of Lincoln College, Oxford. Translator of "Gulliver and Candide," Author of "The Oxonian in Iceland," &c. 8vo. cloth, 12s.

LINGUISTIC and ORIENTAL ESSAYS.
Written from the Year 1846 to 1875. By ROBERT NEEDHAM
CUST, late Member of Her Majesty's Indian Civil Service, Hon.
Sec. R. Asiatic Society, and Author of "The Modern Languages of the East Indies." Post 8vo. pp. xii+484, cloth, 12s.

THE GREAT AFRICAN ISLAND: Chapters on Madagascar. By the Rev. JAMES SHIRKE, Jun., of the London Missionary Society. Author of "Madagascar, its People," &c.
Demy 8vo. with Maps and Illustrations. cloth, 12s.

THE BIRDS of CORNWALL and the SCILLY ISLANDS. By the late HENRY HENRIE SMITH
Edited, with an Introduction, Appendix, and First Memoir, by Author, by JAMES EDMOND HARTING, F.L.S., F.Z.S. Post 8vo.
With Portrait and Map. cloth, 12s.

RECOLLECTIONS of TRAVEL in NEW ZEALAND and AUSTRALIA. By JAMES COOTE CRAWFORD, late Member of the Legislative Council of New Zealand; Resident Magistrate, Wellington. 8vo. with Maps and Illustrations.
cloth, 12s.

POLITICAL ECONOMY for the PEOPLE.
By JOHN LANCHELOT SHADWELL, Author of "A System of Political Economy." Crown 8vo. limp cloth, 1s. 6d.

THE CITIES and TOWNS of CHINA. A
Geographical Dictionary. By G. M. H. FLATFAIR, of Her Majesty's Consular Service in China. 8vo. pp. 508, cloth, 8s.
London: TRÜBNER & Co. Ludgate-hill.

THE ANGLO-EGYPTIAN BANKING COM-
PANY (Limited), having Branches at Alexandria, Cairo, and Lancaster (Cyprus), is prepared to transact every description of General Banking Business in those Places. O. F. A. Secretary.
London: 27, Abchurch-lane, E.C.

SPECIAL DEPOSIT RATES.

G. BARKER & CO.
FAXEES.
25 and 27, MARK-LANE, LONDON.
(Established 1823.)
CURRENT BANKING.—THE BANK OF ENGLAND.
DEPOSITS of 100 and upwards received and Receipts issued—
On demand 2 1/2 per cent. per annum.
Seven Days Notice 3 1/2 " " " "
14 Days Notice 4 1/2 " " " "
21 Days Notice 5 " " " "
3 Months Notice 6 " " " "
As Extra Bonus of 1 per Cent. allowed on Sums remaining on Deposit
Three complete Months.
Current Accounts opened on the usual terms, and every description of Banking transacted.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD-STREET
Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.
Insurances effected in all parts of the World.
JOHN J. BRUMFIELD, Secretary.

SUN FIRE OFFICE.
Thames-side-street E.C. Charles Cross & W.
Oxford-street (corner of Vere-street), W.
Established 1710.
Home and Foreign Insurances effected.
Sum insured in 1879 £20,000,000.
FRANCIS H. NELSON, Secretary.

LOSS OF TIME IS LOSS OF MONEY.

ACCIDENTS CAUSE LOSS OF TIME,
And may be Provided against by a Policy of the
RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY
The Oldest and Largest Accidental Assurance Company.
High Hon. Lord KINNAIRD, Chairman.
Subscribed Capital, £1,000,000. Moderate Premiums.
Bonus allowed to Tenants of Five Years standing.
A fixed sum in case of Death by Accident, and a Weekly Allowance in the event of injury.
ONE MILLION and a HALF has been paid as COMPENSATION.
Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64, Cornhill, London. WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

EAGLE INSURANCE COMPANY,
10, FINE FINE, LONDON.
For LIVES ONLY. ESTABLISHED 1807.
Accumulated Funds £2,043,423
Also a Subscribed Capital of more than £1,500,000
Reports, Prospectuses, and Forms may be had at the Office, or from any of the Company's Agents, post free.
GEORGE HUMPHREYS, Actuary and Secretary.

NOTICE.—MARKS, DUBLACHER BROS.
105, OXFORD-STREET, W.
ANTIQUARY WORKS of ART and general Objects of Decoration. The authenticity of every Object guaranteed.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S STEEL PENS.

Sold by all Stationers throughout the World.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS
THROUGHOUT ON
MORRIS'S HIGH SYSTEM.
The Original, Best, and most Liberal.
Cash Prices.
No extra charge for time given.

Illustrated Price Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post free.
P. MORRIS, 2nd, 3rd, 5th, Tottenham Court-road; and 10, 20, and 21,
Marshall-street, W.C. Established 1822.

P. MORRIS begs to announce that the whole of the above Premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious Warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites from £1. 2s. to £5 Guinea.
Drawing-room Suites, from £1. 10s. to £5 Guinea.
Dining-room Suites, from £1. 7s. to £5 Guinea.
And all other Goods in great variety.
P. MORRIS, 2nd, 3rd, 5th, Tottenham Court-road; and 10, 20, and 21,
Marshall-street, W.C. Established 1822.

KNIVES, FORKS, and SPOONS.

THE PERFECT SUBSTITUTE for SILVER.
THE REAL NICKEL SILVER, when strongly SILVER-PLATED, cannot be distinguished from silver.

With ordinary usage this quality will wear 20 years.

Best Quality, strongly Plated.	Fiddle, Head or Silver	Head or Silver	King's or Shell
Table Forks per doz.	1 10 0	1 10 0	1 10 0
Table Spoons per doz.	1 10 0	1 10 0	1 10 0
Dessert Forks per doz.	1 10 0	1 10 0	1 10 0
Dessert Spoons per doz.	1 10 0	1 10 0	1 10 0
Tea Spoons per doz.	1 10 0	1 10 0	1 10 0

A SECOND QUALITY of Fiddle Pattern Table Spoons or Forks, 2s. per dozen. Dessert, 12s. Tea Spoons, 12s.

CUTLERY WARRANTED.

Knives, Scissors or Shavers, Blades of the Finest Steel.	Table Cutlery, Head or Silver	Dessert Cutlery, Head or Silver	Carvers, Head or Silver
3 1/2 in. Ivory Handles, per doz.	12 0 0	12 0 0	12 0 0
4 in. do.	12 0 0	12 0 0	12 0 0
4 1/2 in. do.	12 0 0	12 0 0	12 0 0
5 in. do.	12 0 0	12 0 0	12 0 0
5 1/2 in. do.	12 0 0	12 0 0	12 0 0
6 in. do.	12 0 0	12 0 0	12 0 0
6 1/2 in. do.	12 0 0	12 0 0	12 0 0
7 in. do.	12 0 0	12 0 0	12 0 0
7 1/2 in. do.	12 0 0	12 0 0	12 0 0
8 in. do.	12 0 0	12 0 0	12 0 0
8 1/2 in. do.	12 0 0	12 0 0	12 0 0
9 in. do.	12 0 0	12 0 0	12 0 0
9 1/2 in. do.	12 0 0	12 0 0	12 0 0
10 in. do.	12 0 0	12 0 0	12 0 0
10 1/2 in. do.	12 0 0	12 0 0	12 0 0
11 in. do.	12 0 0	12 0 0	12 0 0
11 1/2 in. do.	12 0 0	12 0 0	12 0 0
12 in. do.	12 0 0	12 0 0	12 0 0

CARRIAGE PAID to any Railway Station.

Samplers at above rates post free.

WILLIAM S. BURTON, General Furnishing
Furniture, 20, Oxford-street, W., &c.
Catalogue, containing 250 Illustrations, post free.

ALLEN'S SOLID LEATHER PORTMANTEAUS.

ALLEN'S VICTORIA DRESSING BAG.
ALLEN'S STRONG DRESS BASKETS.
ALLEN'S REGISTERED ALBERT DISPATCH BOX.
ALLEN'S NEW CATALOGUE of 500 Articles for Continental Travelling, post free.
27, West Strand, London.

A POLLINARIS WATER.

"Laurel Laminar Apollinaris."—Review, Book IV. Cde 2.
GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1875.
ANNUAL SALE, £200,000.

APOLLINARIS COMPANY, Limited, 11, Regent-street, London, S.W.

LOTS 110 and 111.—LOT 110, very soft OLD
PALE SHERRY at 20s. and LOT 111, very soft OLD OROBORO
SOLEIRA, pale gold, at 32s per dozen. SHERRIES of the old style, well-known by age, very soft, and entirely free from the fluency which has been so detrimental in the consumption of Sherry. These exceptionally large Lots are placed in the hands of the Association for forced realisation and are offered to the Public, while on the special Lot List, at greatly reduced prices, instead of being sold by Auction.—The LONDON
CO-OPERATIVE WINE ASSOCIATION Limited, 10 and 12, John-street, Adolph, W.C. (removed from 44, Strand).

M. G. H. JONES,

SURGEON-DENTIST,
27, GREAT RUSSELL-STREET, LONDON
(Opposite the British Museum).
Will be glad to forward his Pamphlet on Painless Dentistry, free, enclosed by post, which explains the most unique system of the adjustment of Artificial Teeth without pain.
Consultation free, from 10 to 5.

OLD Dr. JACOB TOWNSEND'S SARSAPA-
ILLA. The best Natural Medicine for the Blood, Scrofulic Disorders, Gout, and all Skin Diseases. In bottles, 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., and 11s., of all Chemists. Chief Depot, 131, Piccadilly, E.C.
DEAN, STEEL & Co.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this Pure Solution as the best remedy for ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEARTBURN, HEAD-
ACHE, GOUT, and INDIGESTION; and as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants.

THE GARDENERS' CHRONICLE:

A Weekly Illustrated Journal

(ESTABLISHED 1841),

DEVOTED TO ALL BRANCHES OF GARDENING AND RURAL PURSUITS GENERALLY.

Every Friday, price Fivepence; post free, Fivepence-halfpenny.

The Number for THIS DAY, August 21, contains—

A GUIANAN SAVANNA. (Illustrated.)
GARDENING at BRANCEPETH CASTLE.
MARKET GARDENERS' GRIEVANCES.
FLOWERS, FLORAL DECORATIONS, and FLOWER GIRLS.
DELABECHEA RUPESTRIS. (Illustrated.)
The BLUE GUM TREE.
The FRUIT CROPS of 1880.
CHILDREN'S GARDENS.

The LIFE of PLANTS.
The PEA MIDGE. (Illustrated.)
BUSH BEARING.—The GARDEN PINK.

Also,

HOME and FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE—NOTICES of BOOKS—NATURAL HISTORY—GARDEN OPERATIONS—RE-PORTS of SOCIETIES, &c.

SUBSCRIPTIONS, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE,

Including postage to any part of the United Kingdom :

12 Months, £1 3s. 10d.; 6 Months, 11s. 11d.; 3 Months, 6s.

Foreign Subscription (excepting India and China), including postage, £1 6s. for 12 Months; India and China, £1 8s. 2d.

P.O.O. to be made payable at the King-street (Covent-garden) Post Office, London, to W. RICHARDS.

Cheques should be crossed "Drummond."

OFFICE: 41, WELLINGTON-STREET, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

NOW COMPLETE, SELECT INDEX OF PLANTS.

The Publisher of the Gardeners' Chronicle recommends Subscribers who wish to have extra Copies of the Numbers containing the

SELECT INDEX OF PLANTS FROM 1841 TO THE END OF 1878, TO SECURE THEM AT ONCE.

The following is a List of the Numbers:—

1879.—OCTOBER	11, 25	1880.—JANUARY	10, 24	1880.—MAY	... 8, 29
NOVEMBER	8, 15, 29	FEBRUARY	... 7, 21	JUNE	... 19
DECEMBER	... 13	MARCH	... 20, 27	JULY	... 10
		APRIL	... 3	AUGUST	... 7

Price 5d. each; post free, 51d.

W. RICHARDS, 41, WELLINGTON-STREET, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

THE LIBRARY OF ROMANCE.

Each Number illustrated with at least SIX ENGRAVINGS from Drawings by the best Artists;

EVERY SATURDAY, price One Penny; or, in Monthly Volumes, price Sixpence, PASCAL BRUNO,

By ALEXANDRE DUMAS,

With Twenty-five finely executed Engravings, is now on Sale, complete in One Volume, price Sixpence; or, in Four Numbers, One Penny each.

On SATURDAY, August 28th,

No. V. of the

LIBRARY OF ROMANCE

Will contain Part I. of

THE CORSICAN BROTHERS,

By ALEXANDRE DUMAS;

TO BE COMPLETED IN FOUR PARTS.

Two pages of the LIBRARY of ROMANCE will henceforth be reserved for Advertisements, at a uniform rate of EIGHT POUNDS a Page.

Published by PROVOST & Co. 40, Tavistock-street, Covent-garden.

Editorial Communications should be addressed to "The Editor"—Advertisements and Business Letters to "The Publisher"—at the Office, 20, Wellington-street, Strand, London, W.C.
Printed by E. J. FRANCIS, Athenæum Press, Took's-court, Chancery-lane, E.C., and Published by JOHN FRANCIS, at No. 20, Wellington-street, Strand, W.C.
Agents: for Scotland, Messrs. Bell & Balfour, and Mr. John Macdonald, Edinburgh;—for Ireland, Mr. John Robertson, Dublin. Saturday, August 21, 1880.

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 28, 1880.

[illegible]

THE MIDDLESEX HOSPITAL.—THE WINTER SESSION WILL OPEN ON MONDAY OCTOBER 26th, with the DISTRIBUTION OF PRIZES in the New Lecture Theatre. The Medical School, which is now being considerably enlarged, provides the most complete means for the instruction of students preparing for the University of London, the Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons, and the other Licensing Bodies.

TWO ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS, of the annual value of £50 and £25 per annum, payable for Two Years, will be competed for on OCTOBER 26th and 27th.

Further information may be obtained from the Dean of the Hospital, MEDICAL OFFICE, at the Hospital.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL and COLLEGE.

THE WINTER SESSION will begin on FRIDAY OCTOBER 23rd. The Clinical Practice of the Hospital comprises a course of 750 Lectures, delivered by the Senior Lecturers in the various Departments. Students can reside within the Hospital, subject to College Regulations. For all particulars applications may be made to the Warden of the College, the College, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, E.C.

A Handbook forwarded on application.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL and COLLEGE.

OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS.

THREE SCHOLARSHIPS are offered for Open Competition at St. Bartholomew's Hospital. The Examination will begin on FRIDAY OCTOBER 23rd, at 10 o'clock, in the Lecture Theatre. The subjects of Examination are: Anatomy, Chemistry, Physics, Surgery, and a subsidiary subject of the value of 100 marks, open to Candidates under 25 years of age. The other conditions and subjects are the same as the above.

1. The Anatomical Examination (value £50), open to Candidates who have not entered at any English Medical School. Subjects: Human Anatomy and Latin, and any two of the following Languages: the spoken of the Candidates Greek, French, German. The Candidates must be required to give at St. Bartholomew's Hospital.

2. The Chemistry Examination (value £25), open to Candidates who have not entered at any English Medical School. Subjects: Chemistry and Latin, and any two of the following Languages: the spoken of the Candidates Greek, French, German. The Candidates must be required to give at St. Bartholomew's Hospital.

3. The Physics Examination (value £25), open to Candidates who have not entered at any English Medical School. Subjects: Physics and Latin, and any two of the following Languages: the spoken of the Candidates Greek, French, German. The Candidates must be required to give at St. Bartholomew's Hospital.

The successful Candidates for the above Four Scholarships are eligible for attending lectures for the Instruction of the School, viz. First Year: The 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, 31st, 32nd, 33rd, 34th, 35th, 36th, 37th, 38th, 39th, 40th, 41st, 42nd, 43rd, 44th, 45th, 46th, 47th, 48th, 49th, 50th, 51st, 52nd, 53rd, 54th, 55th, 56th, 57th, 58th, 59th, 60th, 61st, 62nd, 63rd, 64th, 65th, 66th, 67th, 68th, 69th, 70th, 71st, 72nd, 73rd, 74th, 75th, 76th, 77th, 78th, 79th, 80th, 81st, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 87th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 93rd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 97th, 98th, 99th, 100th, 101st, 102nd, 103rd, 104th, 105th, 106th, 107th, 108th, 109th, 110th, 111th, 112th, 113th, 114th, 115th, 116th, 117th, 118th, 119th, 120th, 121st, 122nd, 123rd, 124th, 125th, 126th, 127th, 128th, 129th, 130th, 131st, 132nd, 133rd, 134th, 135th, 136th, 137th, 138th, 139th, 140th, 141st, 142nd, 143rd, 144th, 145th, 146th, 147th, 148th, 149th, 150th, 151st, 152nd, 153rd, 154th, 155th, 156th, 157th, 158th, 159th, 160th, 161st, 162nd, 163rd, 164th, 165th, 166th, 167th, 168th, 169th, 170th, 171st, 172nd, 173rd, 174th, 175th, 176th, 177th, 178th, 179th, 180th, 181st, 182nd, 183rd, 184th, 185th, 186th, 187th, 188th, 189th, 190th, 191st, 192nd, 193rd, 194th, 195th, 196th, 197th, 198th, 199th, 200th, 201st, 202nd, 203rd, 204th, 205th, 206th, 207th, 208th, 209th, 210th, 211st, 212th, 213th, 214th, 215th, 216th, 217th, 218th, 219th, 220th, 221st, 222nd, 223rd, 224th, 225th, 226th, 227th, 228th, 229th, 230th, 231st, 232nd, 233rd, 234th, 235th, 236th, 237th, 238th, 239th, 240th, 241st, 242nd, 243rd, 244th, 245th, 246th, 247th, 248th, 249th, 250th, 251st, 252nd, 253rd, 254th, 255th, 256th, 257th, 258th, 259th, 260th, 261st, 262nd, 263rd, 264th, 265th, 266th, 267th, 268th, 269th, 270th, 271st, 272nd, 273rd, 274th, 275th, 276th, 277th, 278th, 279th, 280th, 281st, 282nd, 283rd, 284th, 285th, 286th, 287th, 288th, 289th, 290th, 291st, 292nd, 293rd, 294th, 295th, 296th, 297th, 298th, 299th, 300th, 301st, 302nd, 303rd, 304th, 305th, 306th, 307th, 308th, 309th, 310th, 311st, 312th, 313th, 314th, 315th, 316th, 317th, 318th, 319th, 320th, 321st, 322nd, 323rd, 324th, 325th, 326th, 327th, 328th, 329th, 330th, 331st, 332nd, 333rd, 334th, 335th, 336th, 337th, 338th, 339th, 340th, 341st, 342nd, 343rd, 344th, 345th, 346th, 347th, 348th, 349th, 350th, 351st, 352nd, 353rd, 354th, 355th, 356th, 357th, 358th, 359th, 360th, 361st, 362nd, 363rd, 364th, 365th, 366th, 367th, 368th, 369th, 370th, 371st, 372nd, 373rd, 374th, 375th, 376th, 377th, 378th, 379th, 380th, 381st, 382nd, 383rd, 384th, 385th, 386th, 387th, 388th, 389th, 390th, 391st, 392nd, 393rd, 394th, 395th, 396th, 397th, 398th, 399th, 400th, 401st, 402nd, 403rd, 404th, 405th, 406th, 407th, 408th, 409th, 410th, 411st, 412th, 413th, 414th, 415th, 416th, 417th, 418th, 419th, 420th, 421st, 422nd, 423rd, 424th, 425th, 426th, 427th, 428th, 429th, 430th, 431st, 432nd, 433rd, 434th, 435th, 436th, 437th, 438th, 439th, 440th, 441st, 442nd, 443rd, 444th, 445th, 446th, 447th, 448th, 449th, 450th, 451st, 452nd, 453rd, 454th, 455th, 456th, 457th, 458th, 459th, 460th, 461st, 462nd, 463rd, 464th, 465th, 466th, 467th, 468th, 469th, 470th, 471st, 472nd, 473rd, 474th, 475th, 476th, 477th, 478th, 479th, 480th, 481st, 482nd, 483rd, 484th, 485th, 486th, 487th, 488th, 489th, 490th, 491st, 492nd, 493rd, 494th, 495th, 496th, 497th, 498th, 499th, 500th, 501st, 502nd, 503rd, 504th, 505th, 506th, 507th, 508th, 509th, 510th, 511st, 512th, 513th, 514th, 515th, 516th, 517th, 518th, 519th, 520th, 521st, 522nd, 523rd, 524th, 525th, 526th, 527th, 528th, 529th, 530th, 531st, 532nd, 533rd, 534th, 535th, 536th, 537th, 538th, 539th, 540th, 541st, 542nd, 543rd, 544th, 545th, 546th, 547th, 548th, 549th, 550th, 551st, 552nd, 553rd, 554th, 555th, 556th, 557th, 558th, 559th, 560th, 561st, 562nd, 563rd, 564th, 565th, 566th, 567th, 568th, 569th, 570th, 571st, 572nd, 573rd, 574th, 575th, 576th, 577th, 578th, 579th, 580th, 581st, 582nd, 583rd, 584th, 585th, 586th, 587th, 588th, 589th, 590th, 591st, 592nd, 593rd, 594th, 595th, 596th, 597th, 598th, 599th, 600th, 601st, 602nd, 603rd, 604th, 605th, 606th, 607th, 608th, 609th, 610th, 611st, 612th, 613th, 614th, 615th, 616th, 617th, 618th, 619th, 620th, 621st, 622nd, 623rd, 624th, 625th, 626th, 627th, 628th, 629th, 630th, 631st, 632nd, 633rd, 634th, 635th, 636th, 637th, 638th, 639th, 640th, 641st, 642nd, 643rd, 644th, 645th, 646th, 647th, 648th, 649th, 650th, 651st, 652nd, 653rd, 654th, 655th, 656th, 657th, 658th, 659th, 660th, 661st, 662nd, 663rd, 664th, 665th, 666th, 667th, 668th, 669th, 670th, 671st, 672nd, 673rd, 674th, 675th, 676th, 677th, 678th, 679th, 680th, 681st, 682nd, 683rd, 684th, 685th, 686th, 687th, 688th, 689th, 690th, 691st, 692nd, 693rd, 694th, 695th, 696th, 697th, 698th, 699th, 700th, 701st, 702nd, 703rd, 704th, 705th, 706th, 707th, 708th, 709th, 710th, 711st, 712th, 713th, 714th, 715th, 716th, 717th, 718th, 719th, 720th, 721st, 722nd, 723rd, 724th, 725th, 726th, 727th, 728th, 729th, 730th, 731st, 732nd, 733rd, 734th, 735th, 736th, 737th, 738th, 739th, 740th, 741st, 742nd, 743rd, 744th, 745th, 746th, 747th, 748th, 749th, 750th, 751st, 752nd, 753rd, 754th, 755th, 756th, 757th, 758th, 759th, 760th, 761st, 762nd, 763rd, 764th, 765th, 766th, 767th, 768th, 769th, 770th, 771st, 772nd, 773rd, 774th, 775th, 776th, 777th, 778th, 779th, 780th, 781st, 782nd, 783rd, 784th, 785th, 786th, 787th, 788th, 789th, 790th, 791st, 792nd, 793rd, 794th, 795th, 796th, 797th, 798th, 799th, 800th, 801st, 802nd, 803rd, 804th, 805th, 806th, 807th, 808th, 809th, 810th, 811st, 812th, 813th, 814th, 815th, 816th, 817th, 818th, 819th, 820th, 821st, 822nd, 823rd, 824th, 825th, 826th, 827th, 828th, 829th, 830th, 831st, 832nd, 833rd, 834th, 835th, 836th, 837th, 838th, 839th, 840th, 841st, 842nd, 843rd, 844th, 845th, 846th, 847th, 848th, 849th, 850th, 851st, 852nd, 853rd, 854th, 855th, 856th, 857th, 858th, 859th, 860th, 861st, 862nd, 863rd, 864th, 865th, 866th, 867th, 868th, 869th, 870th, 871st, 872nd, 873rd, 874th, 875th, 876th, 877th, 878th, 879th, 880th, 881st, 882nd, 883rd, 884th, 885th, 886th, 887th, 888th, 889th, 890th, 891st, 892nd, 893rd, 894th, 895th, 896th, 897th, 898th, 899th, 900th, 901st, 902nd, 903rd, 904th, 905th, 906th, 907th, 908th, 909th, 910th, 911st, 912th, 913th, 914th, 915th, 916th, 917th, 918th, 919th, 920th, 921st, 922nd, 923rd, 924th, 925th, 926th, 927th, 928th, 929th, 930th, 931st, 932nd, 933rd, 934th, 935th, 936th, 937th, 938th, 939th, 940th, 941st, 942nd, 943rd, 944th, 945th, 946th, 947th, 948th, 949th, 950th, 951st, 952nd, 953rd, 954th, 955th, 956th, 957th, 958th, 959th, 960th, 961st, 962nd, 963rd, 964th, 965th, 966th, 967th, 968th, 969th, 970th, 971st, 972nd, 973rd, 974th, 975th, 976th, 977th, 978th, 979th, 980th, 981st, 982nd, 983rd, 984th, 985th, 986th, 987th, 988th, 989th, 990th, 991st, 992nd, 993rd, 994th, 995th, 996th, 997th, 998th, 999th, 1000th, 1001st, 1002nd, 1003rd, 1004th, 1005th, 1006th, 1007th, 1008th, 1009th, 1010th, 1011st, 1012th, 1013th, 1014th, 1015th, 1016th, 1017th, 1018th, 1019th, 1020th, 1021st, 1022nd, 1023rd, 1024th, 1025th, 1026th, 1027th, 1028th, 1029th, 1030th, 1031st, 1032nd, 1033rd, 1034th, 1035th, 1036th, 1037th, 1038th, 1039th, 1040th, 1041st, 1042nd, 1043rd, 1044th, 1045th, 1046th, 1047th, 1048th, 1049th, 1050th, 1051st, 1052nd, 1053rd, 1054th, 1055th, 1056th, 1057th, 1058th, 1059th, 1060th, 1061st, 1062nd, 1063rd, 1064th, 1065th, 1066th, 1067th, 1068th, 1069th, 1070th, 1071st, 1072nd, 1073rd, 1074th, 1075th, 1076th, 1077th, 1078th, 1079th, 1080th, 1081st, 1082nd, 1083rd, 1084th, 1085th, 1086th, 1087th, 1088th, 1089th, 1090th, 1091st, 1092nd, 1093rd, 1094th, 1095th, 1096th, 1097th, 1098th, 1099th, 1100th, 1101st, 1102nd, 1103rd, 1104th, 1105th, 1106th, 1107th, 1108th, 1109th, 1110th, 1111st, 1112th, 1113th, 1114th, 1115th, 1116th, 1117th, 1118th, 1119th, 1120th, 1121st, 1122nd, 1123rd, 1124th, 1125th, 1126th, 1127th, 1128th, 1129th, 1130th, 1131st, 1132nd, 1133rd, 1134th, 1135th, 1136th, 1137th, 1138th, 1139th, 1140th, 1141st, 1142nd, 1143rd, 1144th, 1145th, 1146th, 1147th, 1148th, 1149th, 1150th, 1151st, 1152nd, 1153rd, 1154th, 1155th, 1156th, 1157th, 1158th, 1159th, 1160th, 1161st, 1162nd, 1163rd, 1164th, 1165th, 1166th, 1167th, 1168th, 1169th, 1170th, 1171st, 1172nd, 1173rd, 1174th, 1175th, 1176th, 1177th, 1178th, 1179th, 1180th, 1181st, 1182nd, 1183rd, 1184th, 1185th, 1186th, 1187th, 1188th, 1189th, 1190th, 1191st, 1192nd, 1193rd, 1194th, 1195th, 1196th, 1197th, 1198th, 1199th, 1200th, 1201st, 1202nd, 1203rd, 1204th, 1205th, 1206th, 1207th, 1208th, 1209th, 1210th, 1211st, 1212nd, 1213th, 1214th, 1215th, 1216th, 1217th, 1218th, 1219th, 1220th, 1221st, 1222nd, 1223rd, 1224th, 1225th, 1226th, 1227th, 1228th, 1229th, 1230th, 1231st, 1232nd, 1233rd, 1234th, 1235th, 1236th, 1237th, 1238th, 1239th, 1240th, 1241st, 1242nd, 1243rd, 1244th, 1245th, 1246th, 1247th, 1248th, 1249th, 1250th, 1251st, 1252nd, 1253rd, 1254th, 1255th, 1256th, 1257th, 1258th, 1259th, 1260th, 1261st, 1262nd, 1263rd, 1264th, 1265th, 1266th, 1267th, 1268th, 1269th, 1270th, 1271st, 1272nd, 1273rd, 1274th, 1275th, 1276th, 1277th, 1278th, 1279th, 1280th, 1281st, 1282nd, 1283rd, 1284th, 1285th, 1286th, 1287th, 1288th, 1289th, 1290th, 1291st, 1292nd, 1293rd, 1294th, 1295th, 1296th, 1297th, 1298th, 1299th, 1300th, 1301st, 1302nd, 1303rd, 1304th, 1305th, 1306th, 1307th, 1308th, 1309th, 1310th, 1311st, 1312nd, 1313th, 1314th, 1315th, 1316th, 1317th, 1318th, 1319th, 1320th, 1321st, 1322nd, 1323rd, 1324th, 1325th, 1326th, 1327th, 1328th, 1329th, 1330th, 1331st, 1332nd, 1333rd, 1334th, 1335th, 1336th, 1337th, 1338th, 1339th, 1340th, 1341st, 1342nd, 1343rd, 1344th, 1345th, 1346th, 1347th, 1348th, 1349th, 1350th, 1351st, 1352nd, 1353rd, 1354th, 1355th, 1356th, 1357th, 1358th, 1359th, 1360th, 1361st, 1362nd, 1363rd, 1364th, 1365th, 1366th, 1367th, 1368th, 1369th, 1370th, 1371st, 1372nd, 1373rd, 1374th, 1375th, 1376th, 1377th, 1378th, 1379th, 1380th, 1381st, 1382nd, 1383rd, 1384th, 1385th, 1386th, 1387th, 1388th, 1389th, 1390th, 1391st, 1392nd, 1393rd, 1394th, 1395th, 1396th, 1397th, 1398th, 1399th, 1400th, 1401st, 1402nd, 1403rd, 1404th, 1405th, 1406th, 1407th, 1408th, 1409th, 1410th, 1411st, 1412nd, 1413th, 1414th, 1415th, 1416th, 1417th, 1418th, 1419th, 1420th, 1421st, 1422nd, 1423rd, 1424th, 1425th, 1426th, 1427th, 1428th, 1429th, 1430th, 1431st, 1432nd, 1433rd, 1434th, 1435th, 1436th, 1437th, 1438th, 1439th, 1440th, 1441st, 1442nd, 1443rd, 1444th, 1445th, 1446th, 1447th, 1448th, 1449th, 1450th, 1451st, 1452nd, 1453rd, 1454th, 1455th, 1456th, 1457th, 1458th, 1459th, 1460th, 1461st, 1462nd, 1463rd, 1464th, 1465th, 1466th, 1467th, 1468th, 1469th, 1470th, 1471st, 1472nd, 1473rd, 1474th, 1475th, 1476th, 1477th, 1478th, 1479th, 1480th, 1481st, 1482nd, 1483rd, 1484th, 1485th, 1486th, 1487th, 1488th, 1489th, 1490th, 1491st, 1492nd, 1493rd, 1494th, 1495th, 1496th, 1497th, 1498th, 1499th, 1500th, 1501st, 1502nd, 1503rd, 1504th, 1505th, 1506th, 1507th, 1508th, 1509th, 1510th, 1511st, 1512nd, 1513th, 1514th, 1515th, 1516th, 1517th, 1518th, 1519th, 1520th, 1521st, 1522nd, 1523rd, 1524th, 1525th, 1526th, 1527th, 1528th, 1529th, 1530th, 1531st, 1532nd, 1533rd, 1534th, 1535th, 1536th, 1537th, 1538th, 1539th, 1540th, 1541st, 1542nd, 1543rd, 1544th, 1545th, 1546th, 1547th, 1548th, 1549th, 1550th, 1551st, 1552nd, 1553rd, 1554th, 1555th, 1556th, 1557th, 1558th, 1559th, 1560th, 1561st, 1562nd, 1563rd, 1564th, 1565th, 1566th, 1567th, 1568th, 1569th, 1570th, 1571st, 1572nd, 1573rd, 1574th, 1575th, 1576th, 1577th, 1578th, 1579th, 1580th, 1581st, 1582nd, 1583rd, 1584th, 1585th, 1586th, 1587th, 1588th, 1589th, 1590th, 1591st, 1592nd, 1593rd, 1594th, 1595th, 1596th, 1597th, 1598th, 1599th, 1600th, 1601st, 1602nd, 1603rd, 1604th, 1605th, 1606th, 1607th, 1608th, 1609th, 1610th, 1611st, 1612nd, 1613th, 1614th, 1615th, 1616th, 1617th, 1618th, 1619th, 1620th, 1621st, 1622nd, 1623rd, 1624th, 1625th, 1626th, 1627th, 1628th, 1629th, 1630th, 1631st, 1632nd, 1633rd, 1634th, 1635th, 1636th, 1637th, 1638th, 1639th, 1640th, 1641st, 1642nd, 1643rd, 1644th, 1645th, 1646th, 1647th, 1648th, 1649th, 1650th, 1651st, 1652nd, 1653rd, 1654th, 1655th, 1656th, 1657th, 1658th, 1659th, 1660th, 1661st, 1662nd, 1663rd, 1664th, 1665th, 1666th, 1667th, 1668th, 1669th, 1670th, 1671st, 1672nd, 1673rd, 1674th, 1675th, 1676th, 1677th, 1678th, 1679th, 1680th, 1681st, 1682nd, 1683rd, 1684th, 1685th, 1686th, 1687th, 1688th, 1689th, 1690th, 1691st, 1692nd, 1693rd, 1694th, 1695th, 1696th, 1697th, 1698th, 1699th, 1700th, 1701st, 1702nd, 1703rd, 1704th, 1705th, 1706th, 1707th, 1708th, 1709th, 1710th, 1711st, 1712nd, 1713th, 1714th, 1715th, 1716th, 1717th, 1718th, 1719th, 1720th, 1721st, 1722nd, 1723rd, 1724th, 1725th, 1726th, 1727th, 1728th, 1729th, 1730th, 1731st, 1732nd, 1733rd, 1734th, 1735th, 1736th, 1737th, 1738th, 1739th, 1740th, 1741st, 1742nd, 1743rd, 1744th, 1745th, 1746th, 1747th, 1748th, 1749th, 1750th, 1751st, 1752nd, 1753rd, 1754th, 1755th, 1756th, 1757th, 1758th, 1759th, 1760th, 1761st, 1762nd, 1763rd, 1764th, 1765th, 1766th, 1767th, 1768th, 1769th, 1770th, 1771st, 1772nd, 1773rd, 1774th, 1775th, 1776th, 1777th, 1778th, 1779th, 1780th, 1781st, 1782nd, 1783rd, 1784th, 1785th, 1786th, 1787th, 1788th, 1789th, 1790th, 1791st, 1792nd, 1793rd, 1794th, 1795th, 1796th,

MR. MURRAY'S LIST OF BOOKS, FOR SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, AND STUDENTS.

DR. SMITH'S SCHOOL DICTIONARIES.

CONCISE DICTIONARY of the BIBLE. 21s.	SMALLER CLASSICAL DICTION- ARY. 7s. 6d.	SMALLER LATIN-ENGLISH DIC- TIONARY. 7s. 6d.
SMALLER DICTIONARY of the BIBLE. 7s. 6d.	SMALLER DICTIONARY of ANTI- QUITIES. 7s. 6d.	ENGLISH-LATIN DICTIONARY. 21s.
CLASSICAL DICTIONARY. 18s.	LATIN-ENGLISH DICTIONARY. 21s.	SMALLER ENGLISH-LATIN DIC- TIONARY. 7s. 6d.

MURRAY'S STUDENT'S MANUALS.

SEVEN AND SIXPENCE EACH.

Old Testament History.
New Testament History.
Ancient History.
Ecclesiastical History.
English Church History.
Roman History.
Greek History.

Gibbon's Rome.
Hume's England.
Hallam's Middle Ages.
Hallam's England.
History of France.
Ancient Geography.
Modern Geography.

English Language.
English Literature.
Specimens of English Literature.
Modern Europe. [In preparation.]
Blackstone.
Moral Philosophy.

DR. WM. SMITH'S SMALLER MANUALS.

THREE AND SIXPENCE EACH.

Scripture History.
Ancient History.
Ancient Geography.

Rome.
Greece.
Classical Mythology.

England.
English Literature.
Specimens of Eng. Literature.

EDUCATIONAL SERIES.

LATIN COURSE.

Principia Latina. Pt. I. 3s. 6d.
Appendix to Pt. I. 2s. 6d.
Principia Latina. Pt. II. 3s. 6d.
Principia Latina. Pt. III. 3s. 6d.
Principia Latina. Pt. IV. 3s. 6d.
Principia Latina. Pt. V. 3s.
Young Beginners' 1st Latin Book. 2s.
Young Beginners' 2nd Latin Book. 2s.
Student's Latin Grammar. 6s.
Smaller Latin Grammar. 3s. 6d.
Tacitus. Selections. 3s. 6d.

FRENCH COURSE.

French Principia. Pt. I. 3s. 6d.
French Principia. Pt. II. 4s. 6d.
Student's French Grammar. 7s. 6d.
Smaller French Grammar. 3s. 6d.

GERMAN COURSE.

German Principia. Pt. I. 3s. 6d.
German Principia. Pt. II. 3s. 6d.
Practical German Grammar. 3s. 6d.

ITALIAN COURSE.

Italian Principia. Pt. I. 3s. 6d.
Italian Principia. Pt. II. 3s. 6d.
[Nearly ready.]

GREEK COURSE.

Initia Græca. Pt. I. 3s. 6d.
Initia Græca. Pt. II. 3s. 6d.
Initia Græca. Pt. III. 3s. 6d.
Student's Greek Grammar. 6s.
Smaller Greek Grammar. 3s. 6d.
Greek Accidence. 2s. 6d.
Plato. Selections. 3s. 6d.

ENGLISH COURSE.

English Grammar. 3s. 6d.
Primary English Grammar. 1s.
Primary History of Britain. 2s. 6d.
Modern Geography. 5s.
English Composition. 3s. 6d.

* * DETAILED CATALOGUES SENT GRATIS BY POST ON APPLICATION.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle-street.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

RECENT BOOKS OF GENERAL INTEREST.

•• Fresh Copies of these and many other New and Choice Books continue to be added to MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY as the demand increases, and arrangements are made with the leading Publishers for an ample supply of the principal Forthcoming Books as they appear.

- Life of H.R.H. the Prince Consort*, by Sir Theodore Martin—The Life and Work of St. Paul, by Canon Farrar.
Memoir of Mrs. Tait—McCarthy's History of Our Own Times, Vols. III. and IV. (nearly ready).
Life of Bishop Wilberforce—Memorials of Frances Ridley Havergal—The Letters of Charles Dickens—Senior's Conversations.
Memoirs of Madame de Rimousin—History of the Zulu War, by Frances Colenso—Memoir of Sir James Outram.
Memoir of Rev. Henry Venn—Siquin's Country of the Passion Play—Ingram's Life of Edgar Allan Poe.
Sketch of the Life of Eliza Burritt—Sir Joshua Reynolds, by F. S. Pelling—Autobiography of Sir Gilbert Scott.
Guillot in Private Life, by Madame de Witt—Renan's Hibbert Lectures—Renan's Origin and Growth of Religion.
Sister Dora: a Biography—A Ride in Petticoats and Slippers, by Capt. Colville—The Old Régime, by Lady Jackson.
Life in the Rocky Mountains, by Isabella Bird—Our Home in Cyprus, by Mrs. Scott-Stevenson.
Two Worlds are Ours, by Hugh Macmillan—Memoirs of Edward and Catharine Stanley—Life and Work of Mary Carpenter.
Browning's Dramatic Idyle—Dixon's Royal Windsor—Political Questions of the Day, by S. C. Buxton.
Contemporary Portraits, by E. de Praesenat—Hamilton's Memoirs of Frederick the Great—Mackenzie's History of the Nineteenth Century.
Five Weeks in Iceland, by C. A. de Fonblanque—A Trip to Manitoba, by Mary Fitzgibbon.
Byron, by John Nichol—A Tramp Abroad, by Mark Twain—Russia and England, by O. K.—Russia before and After the War.
Dr. Stoughton's Introduction to Historical Theology—Heroes of the Cross, by W. H. D. Adams.
Rough Ways made Smooth, by R. A. Proctor—The River of Golden Sand, by Captain Gill—Our Future Highway, by Commander Cameron.
Balton's Recollections of an Old Actor—Baird's Rise of the Huguenots—Mrs. Brassey's Voyage in the Mediterranean.
Deep unto Deep, by Rev. Sir Emilinus Bayley—Up the Amazon, by E. D. Mathew—Parker Gillmore's Ride Through Hostile Africa.
The Ode of Life—The Philosophy of Religion, by Professor Caird—The Reign of Queen Anne, by J. H. Burton.
Mind in the Lower Animals, by Dr. Lindsay—Parables of Our Lord, by Dr. Calderwood—Ephphatha, by Canon Farrar.
Life of Dr. Duff—Life of Bishop Selwyn—Italy and her Invaders, by Thomas Hodgkin.
Studies of Famous Women, by Matilda Betham-Edwards—Groom's History of the English People, Vol. IV.
Husk's Notes on S. Prout and W. Hunt—Watson's Sketches in the Hunting Field—Dr. Abbott's Oxford Sermons.
The Racehorses in Training, by William Day—Ball's Jungle Life in India—My Chief and I in Natal, by Atherton Wyld.
Sibree's Madagascar—Mallison's History of the Indian Mutiny, Vol. III.—Charley's National Music of the World.
The Munster Circuit, by J. B. O'Flanagan—A Study of Shakespeare, by A. C. Swinburne—Amateur Theatricals, by Lady Pollock.
Hellenica: a Series of Essays—Campaigning in South Africa, by Capt. Montagu—Oppert's Corea.
Glimpses Through the Cannon-Smoke, by Alexander Forbes—Early Man in Britain, by W. Boyd Dawkins.
Sylvan Spring, by Francis G. Heath—Rest Awhile, by Dean Vaughan—Autobiography of Prince Metternich—Life of Bishop Milman.
Thoughts in My Garden, by Mortimer Collins—Cyprus as I Saw It, by Sir Samuel Baker.
Lectures on Art, by E. J. Poynter—Sir Edwin Landseer, by F. G. Stephens—Chronicles of Chelsea, by Rev. A. G. L'Estrange.
The Theatres of Paris, by J. B. Matthews—Old-Testament Prophecy, by Dr. Stanley Leathes.
The Collects of the Day, by Dean Goulburn—Life of Sir James Brooke, by Spenser St. John.
Gipsy Life, by George Smith—Swinburne's Songs of the Springtides—New and Old, by J. A. Symonds—Critical Essays, by Bayard Taylor.
Food and Feeding, by Sir Henry Thompson—A Study of Shelley, by John Todhunter.
Holidays in Home Counties, by E. Walford—Life and Letters of Cicero, by Rev. G. E. Jeans—Round About a Great Estate.

The above List, with the Addition of all the Best Recent Works of Fiction, will serve to indicate the Character of the whole Collection.

SEE MUDIE'S LIBRARY CIRCULAR for SEPTEMBER.

All the Books in Circulation in MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY may also be obtained from
MUDIE'S LIBRARY, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
 And (by order) from all Booksellers in connexion with the Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (LIMITED), New Oxford-street,
 CITY OFFICE, 2, KING-STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S NEW WORKS.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE. Contents for SEPTEMBER, 1880.

1. ADAM and EVE. (Continued.)
2. LIFE in the HOMERIC AGE.
3. A LITTLE BOHEMIAN. Part I. By Mrs. G. W. Godfrey.
4. A RAY of CYPRUS.
5. ALFRED DE MURST.
6. THAT NIGHT in JUNE.
7. LETTERS from CONSTANTINOPLE.
8. MILITARY and WORKINGWORTH.
9. THE REBEL of the FAMILY. By Mrs. Lynn Linton. (Continued.)

* * * * *
  Copies for binding the volumes of Temple Bar can be obtained at all Bookellers, price 6s. 6d. per volume.

BY MORTIMER COLLINS

THOUGHTS in MY GARDEN. By MORTIMER COLLINS. Edited by EDMUND YATES. With Notes by the Editor and Mrs. MORTIMER COLLINS. In 2 vols. crown 8vo. 2s.

"Whether by mistake or from design the best of Mr. Mortimer Collins's works has been reserved for final publication. Indeed, nothing gives so full or so fair an idea of his genius and talent as the essays, notes, and poems now presented to the world under the title of 'Thoughts in my Garden.'"
 —St. James's Gazette.
 "Those who can appreciate freshness of thought, vigour of intellect, and keen observation of men, topics, and current events, can hardly do better than procure these charming volumes."
 —From and St. James's Chronicle.

BY MISS DE FOWLER

FIVE WEEKS in ICELAND. By MISS DE FOWLER. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

"Graphic, rare, and interesting."
 —St. James's Gazette.

BY THE REV. J. C. BOYCE, M.A.

NIGH UNTO the END; or, a Passage in Sacred Prophecy now in Course of Translation into History considered. By the Rev. J. C. BOYCE, M.A. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

BY MARY FITZ-GIBSON

A TRIP to MANITOBA. By MARY FITZ-GIBSON. In 2 vols. 10s. 6d.

POPULAR NOVELS, AT ALL LIBRARIES.

LIZZIE of the MILL. From the Original by Mrs. CHRISTINA TYRELL. Translator of 'So Surrender, &c.' In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'CUT ADRIEN'

PIOUS FRAUDS; or, the Dawn of Love. By ALBERT DE FOWLER, Author of 'Cut Adrien,' 'A Thangled Shain,' &c. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

MISS THOMAS'S NEW NOVEL.

The VIOLIN PLAYER. By Bertha THOMAS. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

"Miss Thomas's art as a story-teller is unmistakable, and her grasp of character deeper and more complete than we find in many novels of those ambitious pretensions."
 —Full Staff Gazette.

"Miss Thomas's new novel is a success. She has chosen a satisfactory theme, and produced a well-constructed story. In studies of character the book is unusually rich, and she understands the artistic temperament thoroughly. It is clear that she possesses the gift of novel-writing."
 —Athenæum.

LADY M. MAJENDIE'S NEW NOVEL.

FASCINATION. By Lady Margaret MAJENDIE. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

"The book deserves its title most completely, for it is seldom that one becomes so entirely engrossed in the progress of a modern novel. There are scenes in the book of such power and interest as but seldom conceived by any but the first of artists."
 —Edinburgh Review.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE FIRST VIOLIN.'

Just ready, in 3 vols. crown 8vo.

THE WELLFIELDS.

By JESSIE FOTHERGILL.

Author of 'Probation' and 'The First Violin.'

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington-street,
 Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

HURST & BLACKETT'S LIST.

MONSIEUR GUIZOT in PRIVATE

LIFE (1771-1874). By his Daughter, MADAME DE WITT. Translated by Mrs. SIMPSON. 1 vol. 8vo. 15s.

"Madame de Witt has done justice to her father's memory in an admirable record of his life. Mrs. Simpson's translation of this eminently interesting book is in accuracy and grace worthy of the original and of the subject."
 —Saturday Review.

"Madame de Witt has accomplished her task with taste and judgment."
 —St. James's Gazette.
 "This work is replete with interesting reminiscences, and the reading public may be congratulated on having a literary treat provided for them."
 —Edinburgh.

TALES of OUR GREAT FAMILIES.

SECOND SERIES. By EDWARD WALFORD, M.A. 3 vols. 15s.

"The social rank of the persons whose lives and characters are delineated in these tales, and the inherent interest of the stories is undoubtedly, will ensure its widespread popularity."
 —Edinburgh.

The VILLAGE of PALACES; or,

CHRONICLES of CHILSEA. By the Rev. A. G. L'ETREANGE.

3 vols. crown 8vo. 15s.

"A most charming book."
 —Standard.

THE NEW NOVELS.

MISS AMELIA R. EDWARDS'S NEW NOVEL.

Now ready, at all the libraries, in 3 vols.

LORD BRACKENBURY.

By AMELIA R. EDWARDS.

Author of 'Barbary's History,' &c.

The TENTH EARL. By John BER-

WICK HARWOOD, Author of 'Lady Perle,' &c. 3 vols.

"The Tenth Earl is very amusing reading."
 —John Bull.

"A fascinating novel. The plot is deeply interesting and the characters are true to nature."
 —Quarterly Review.

A VERY OPAL. By C. L. Firkis.

"A thoroughly amusing novel. The characters are sketched with a firm hand, and the plot is tapestry and well worked out."
 —Sunday Times.

FORESTALLED. By M.

KETTEREDWARDS, Author of 'Elmy,' 'Bridget,' 'Holidays in Eastern France,' &c. 3 vols. 15s.

"Those who can appreciate a quiet, logical, interesting and carefully written story will welcome 'Forestalled' with satisfaction. The tale is not only told, and contains numerous now of reflection, now of description, which apart from all questions of dramatic interest, are for their own sake well worth reading."
 —St. James's Gazette.

WOOLERS and WINNERS. By Mrs.

G. LINNÆUS BANKS, Author of 'The Manchester Man.' 3 vols.

"A thoroughly readable, fresh, and wholesome novel. The story is interesting and well told."
 —John Bull.

A MODERN GREEK HEROINE.

"A very clever novel. The story may be read with interest from beginning to end."
 —Standard.

MERVIN O'CONNOR. By the Earl of MERVIN, Author of 'The Earl of Mervin,' &c.

MISS BOUVERIE. By Mrs.

MOLMURTON, Author of 'Motherwort Rectory,' &c. 3 vols.

ST. MARTIN'S SUMMER. By

MURRAY SMITH, Author of 'The Last Days,' &c. 3 vols.

Just ready.

BOOKS FOR THE COUNTRY.

Each Work complete in 1 vol. price 6s. (any of which can be had separately), elegantly printed and bound, and illustrated by

Mr. J. GILBERT MILLAR, HUNT, LEACH, FOUNTAIN, POTTER, WHEAT, SANDS, R. HUGHES, ALANBOURNE, &c.

HURST & BLACKETT'S

STANDARD LIBRARY

IN COMPLETELY REVISED EDITIONS OF POPULAR AND STANDARD WORKS.

Some of the Works and Authors.

John Hall's History and Memoirs. By the Hon. Mrs. Norton.

The Conquest and the Queen. By Mark Warburton.

Nathaniel. By Mrs. Leveson.

A Woman's Thoughts about Women. By the Author of 'John Hall's.'

Adam Lind's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Ben-Nick's Wise Words. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Curious Women's Pages. By Mrs. Oliphant.

A Life for a Life. By the Author of 'John Hall's.'

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Darwin. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sir B. Burke's Family Romance. By Mrs. Oliphant.

The Laird of Northby. By Mrs. Oliphant.

The Englishman in Italy. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Nothing New. By the Author of 'John Hall's.'

Frank's Life of George d'Albion. By Mrs. Oliphant.

The Valley of a Hundred Years. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Burke's Romance of the Forest. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Adam Lind's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Grandmother's Money. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Jefferson's Book about Doctors. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Leigh Hunt's Old Court School. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Margaret and her Bridegroom. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Nick's Old Judge. By Mrs. Oliphant.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 29, 1880.

CONTENTS.

THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION: THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS	265
HALL OF INTERNATIONAL LAW	266
NICHOL'S MONOGRAPH ON BYRON	266
THE TREATIES OF R. JOWAN IN JAPAN	266
MARLEY'S NOTES ON GAMES	267
JACK'S SELECTED POEMS FROM THE AFTER ORATORS	268
NOVELS OF THE WEEK	269
HISTORICAL AND ANTIQUARIAN PUBLICATIONS	269
LIBRARY TABLE—LIST OF NEW BOOKS	271
NOTES FROM LONDON: THE FIRST TWO EDITIONS OF "RUMINO AND JULIET," WELLINGTON COLLEGE, THE COLLEGE BOOKS IN THE GARDEN'S LIBRARY	271-272
LIBRARY Gossip	274
BOURNE—MITCHELL ON THE PART IN THE PRINCE; LIBRARY TABLE, ANTHROPOLOGICAL NOTES, MARTIN, &c.	274-275
PINK ARTS—LIBRARY TABLE: THE BRITISH ARCHÆOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION; THE PRIVATE COLLECTIONS OF ENGLAND, "THE BEARDED ANCHOR," ANCIENT SCULPTURED MONUMENTS, Gossip	277-282
MUSIC—PIANOFORTE MUSIC BY HAYDN, SCHUBERT, &c.	282-284
DRAMA—HALLIWELL-PHILLIPS'S SHAKESPEARE MEMORANDA, Gossip	284

LITERATURE

Address delivered at the Swansea Meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, August 26th, 1880. By Prof. Andrew Crombie Ramsay, LL.D., F.R.S., President.

SINCE the late Prof. Phillips presided over the British Association at the Birmingham meeting in 1865, no geologist has, until this year, been honoured by a call to the presidential chair. Yet during these fifteen years the geologists of this country have been toiling as restlessly as ever, and the progress of their science has unquestionably been rapid, solid, and brilliant. If proof of this activity were needed, they could point exultingly to the growing bulk of the volumes issued by the Geological Society of London. With a stream of fresh matter thus constantly pouring in, it would be easy enough to frame an address on the recent progress of British geology, nor would it be by any means an unsatisfactory task to review the present state of the various branches of geological science as developed in this country. But the distinguished geologist who opened the meeting of the British Association last Wednesday evening wisely abstained from dealing with any of these topics. Rising above the passing events in the scientific world—events which are chronicled in technical journals, and thus become known all the world over almost as soon as they occur—Prof. Ramsay fastened his attention upon a single principle, "the recurrence of certain phenomena in geological time," and worked out this principle with an ingenuity of resource and a wealth of illustration which unmistakably disclosed the hand of a master.

Exactly a quarter of a century has passed since Prof. Ramsay broached the idea of a recurrence of glacial phenomena in the earth's history. Unless we are greatly mistaken, this idea may be recognized as the germ of the present address. Geologists have satisfied themselves, as every one knows, that, at a comparatively recent period, Arctic conditions must have prevailed over a large portion of the northern hemisphere, and to this period they have assigned the name of the Glacial Epoch, or, as Dr. James Geikie calls it, the Great Ice Age. In 1855 Prof. Ramsay showed that certain conglomerates of the Permian series contained ice-scratched stones and ice-borne blocks, which he regarded as distinct evidence that glacial conditions must have prevailed in that far-distant stage of the world's history known as the Permian period. At that time most geologists shook their heads at the notion, and quietly pooch-pooched it as nothing more than a crotchet. Was it reasonable to suppose that glacial conditions were rife in those early Permian days, when our earth had scarcely cooled down from its primitive condition of an igneous globe? But our views of geological time have widened of late years, and most of us are nowadays inclined to believe that "this old and crazy earth" must have been tolerably ancient even in the Permian age, and that it is not likely that any trace of its original heat was then lingering in its surface rocks. Gradually, however, Prof. Ramsay's acute interpretation of the scratched blocks in the old breccias made an impression on geological opinion, and other observers strengthened his position by bringing forward similar evidence from different quarters. The late Prof. Gastaldi detected traces of Miocene glaciers in Northern Italy; other geologists have found in Cretaceous and in Jurassic rocks certain boulders which appear to have been transported by means of ice; relics of Permian glaciers have been detected in India, in South Africa, and in Germany; conglomerates of the Old Red Sandstone have offered evidence of glacial transport; and the Lower Silurian rocks of Wigornshire and Ayrshire contain large boulders which it is strongly suspected have been dropped by icebergs in the mud of an old sea bottom. But of all evidences of ancient ice action yet recorded, the most interesting is unquestionably that which the President of the Association announced as having been recently detected by Prof. Arch. Geikie in the north-west of Scotland. For a distance of about ninety miles the old Laurentian rocks, which are the most ancient stratified deposits yet recognised with certainty in any part of the world, exhibit surfaces which are distinctly roches moutonnées—that is to say, the surfaces have been smoothed and rounded by the grinding action of glaciers. But it will naturally be said that, though the rocks themselves are very ancient, the glaciation may have been effected quite recently. Such an objection, however, is precluded by the fact that the old ice-worn surfaces are clearly seen to pass beneath Cambrian sandstones, thus proving beyond cavil that the glaciation was of pre-Cambrian date.

Here, then, is a string of facts, or rather of scientific conclusions, all tending to show that at various periods of geological time, from the Laurentian age onwards, glacial conditions have recurred, and that consequently the particular epoch which geologists call the glacial period is only a glacial period—one of a series of cold epochs, and not an exceptional episode in the history of our planet. Indeed, a glacial epoch on a small scale is still in progress in the Antarctic continent.

This example will serve to show the interesting nature of the subject with which Prof. Ramsay so skilfully deals. The title of his discourse, 'The Recurrence of Certain Phenomena in Geological Time,' might lead to the conclusion that it was a very technical subject, hardly to be understood outside the doors of Section C.; but, in truth, any one who will examine the address must admit that it is by no means destitute of popular interest, and that, notwithstanding its necessarily scientific character, it may yet be easily "understood of the people." In fact, the main object of the discourse is to show that nothing exceptional is recorded in the pages of geological history; that so far as the geologist can penetrate backwards the whole course of nature has been strictly uniform; that there have been no violent powers brought spasmodically into play in order to produce striking geological phenomena; that the forces which are every day at work in our midst are precisely the same in kind, and probably also in degree, as those which have been at work throughout all geological time; that the world to-day is much the same—man's influence of course excepted—as it was at other periods of the earth's history; and that, in fine, since geological time began, "all things continue as they were."

It may possibly be said that this, after all, is but the well-known doctrine of geological uniformity—the doctrine which was so boldly conceived by Hutton, so eloquently illustrated by Playfair, and so forcibly taught by Lyell. But it must be confessed that strict "uniformitarianism" has been rather eclipsed of late, and it is therefore refreshing to find so able an advocate as Prof. Ramsay stoutly defending its principles, and doing battle against the relics of catastrophism. In the early days of geology, when men first began seriously to ask how the rocks had been fashioned, it was perhaps natural that they should invoke forces of the most potent kind, and play with the rocks at the dictate of their fancy. So long as violent paroxysms were recognized as a legitimate part of geological machinery, there was no difficulty in heaving up a mountain in one place and opening a yawning chasm in another. The early geologists recognized the play of titanic forces, and looked upon the earth as plastic in its childhood—

So youthful and so flexible then
You moved her at your pleasure.

But does the geologist, after all, know anything about the childhood of the world? The modern cosmogonist, turning to the astronomer and physicist, gratefully accepts the nebular hypothesis, or any other crumb they may be pleased to bestow. Prof. Ramsay, however, if we understand his address aright, would keep geology distinct from cosmogony. At any rate, he is silent about the early stages of the earth's history, and maintains that whatever may have been the state of the world before authentic geological history began, all the formations known to geologists are comparatively recent, and do not exhibit signs of the action of any powers different from those which are around us at the present day. Even the Laurentian rocks are believed to have been deposited "far from the beginning of recognized geological time." In fact, if they are stratified deposits, they must have been produced by the breaking up of yet earlier rocks. There is much truth even to-day in what Edward Forbes said many years ago:—

"Geologists and paleontologists are too apt to fancy that they have been favoured with " sight of the world in its swaddling clothes. If we do not much mistake, the Titans were mature giants ere they beat out the oldest stratum on which the geological hammer has yet rung."

Not pretending, then, to any profound insight into the opening chapter of the world's history, the simple-minded geologist is content to look at the rocks as he finds them, and to inquire whether the physical forces with which he is acquainted are competent or not to account for their origin. Prof. Ramsay tells us that even now there linger among us the relics of the belief that the physical powers which produced the older strata differ from those which are at present in action; but for his own part he believes that there has been no difference in kind, or even in degree. Marine deposits have been in course of formation throughout all geological time, and are still being spread over every suitable part of the ocean bottom. Metamorphic action, in like manner, has been generally active: its effects are conspicuous among the Laurentian, Cambrian, and Silurian strata, to a smaller degree in the Devonian and Old Red Sandstone, and, although not known in the Permian, are frequent again throughout the Mesozoic series. As to volcanoes, they have evidently played an important part in all geological ages, and as a matter of course were invaluable to the old-fashioned theatrical geologists in producing their startling effects. Even sober-minded men have assumed that the volcanic forces were formerly at play on a much larger scale, and that our present volcanoes are but the puny representatives of their gigantic ancestors. It is, therefore, important to listen to Prof. Ramsay when he says:—

"As far as my knowledge extends, at no period of geological history is there any sign of their having played a more important part than they do in the epoch in which we live."

Whether, then, it be in metamorphic action, in volcanic forces, or in the upheaval of mountain chains, the geologist is led to believe that similar events have been repeated throughout all known geological time.

Turning next to an entirely different subject, Prof. Ramsay discussed the occurrences of deposits of rock-salt and other saline minerals. These salts are not precipitated in the open ocean, but are thrown down on the evaporation of inland salt lakes, like the Dead Sea or the Great Salt Lake of Utah. Lakes of this character appear always to have existed in one part of the world or another, and therefore rock-salt may be found of almost any geological age. It is true that in this country our great deposits of salt occur in rocks of Triassic age; but then all the world is not fashioned precisely on the pattern of Great Britain. Thus in India the great deposits of the Salt Range are believed to be of Lower Silurian age; in North America there are vast quantities in a division of the Upper Silurian known as the Salina group; in Germany it is found both in the Dyas and in the Trias; elsewhere it occurs in Jurassic and Cretaceous rocks; while in Poland and in Transylvania its home is in the Tertiaries. Clearly, then, a recurrence of salt-forming conditions may be traced throughout all the period included in our geological record.

Another suggestive subject is found in the mode of occurrence of freshwater strata. It is worth noting that lacustrine deposits are apt to betray their origin by the accident of colour. The grains of sand or of mud which have settled at the bottom of the old lakes are not unfrequently associated with more or less peroxide of iron, from which they receive a reddish tint, each grain being enwrapped in a delicate pellicle of the oxide. It is hardly reasonable to suppose that such an action as the precipitation of ferrous carbonate, and subsequent decomposition of this salt so as to yield the ferric oxide, can go on in an open sea, and consequently the red colour of a rock suggests its lacustrine origin. As far back as 1830, when most people looked upon the Old Red Sandstone as a marine formation, the late Dr. Fleming, of Edinburgh, suggested that it might be of freshwater origin. Later on Mr. Godwin-Austen, from the absence of marine shells and from the character of the fossil fish, took the same view of its formation. And quite independently of either of these authorities Prof. Ramsay arrived at a similar conclusion. Moreover, he has been so bold as to suggest that even the red and purple Cambrian strata may, in like manner, have been deposited in freshwater lakes. It is easy to follow the changes in physical geography which would account for the passage of the marine Silurians into the freshwater beds of the Old Red Sandstone. A portion of the Silurian sea might be separated from the main ocean, and thus become somewhat like the Caspian and Black Seas of the present day, which we know to have undergone great physical changes, the Black Sea having been at one time united to the Caspian, and the Caspian to the Aral.

If the Caspian and the great lakes in the area of inland drainage in Central Asia were to be freshened by increase of rainfall, we could trace a passage from imperfectly marine to perfectly freshwater conditions, such as marked the advent of the Old Red Sandstone epoch. Writing upon this very subject several years ago, Prof. Ramsay used language which might be repeated with singular fitness on this occasion, as bearing immediately upon the subject of last Wednesday's address:—

"Like the recurrent circumstances which have attended the rise and fall of empires throughout all historical time, so geological history has often more or less repeated itself somewhere or other on the surface of the earth; and in this modern phase of Asiatic physical geography it seems to me that we have, so far as it has gone, a repetition of events which, with minor variations, have happened again and again in old-world geological epochs."

Passing from lacustrine to terrestrial conditions, it may be remarked that although the latter, from their very nature, are but rarely represented in the geological record, we may yet repeatedly detect traces of old land surfaces in the history of the earth's strata. The coal measures represent in the British area a great terrestrial epoch, but the conditions for the formation of coal were not peculiar to the Carboniferous period. In other parts of the world there are important coal-fields differing widely in geological age from our own deposits. Even in this country it is possible to point to traces of anthracitic coal in rocks as old as the Lower Silurian age: witness the layers of anthracite occasionally found in the slates of the Isle of Man and of Dumfriesshire. On the other hand, we find lignite, or imperfectly formed coal, abundantly developed in strata of Tertiary age. The conditions necessary for coal production have therefore frequently recurred in the earth's history, and offer an apt illustration of Prof. Ramsay's argument. Even the venerable rocks of Canada, which belong to the Middle Laurentian series, contain deposits of graphite or black lead, which may possibly represent the altered carbonaceous residuum of vegetable matter.

From what has now been said on the various geological topics touched upon by Prof. Ramsay, it will be gathered that the burden of his discourse might be expressed in the words of the ancient Preacher: "The thing that hath been, it is that which shall be; and there is no new thing under the sun." So far as we can trace the course of nature backwards, it has been on the whole constant and regular, equable and uniform. Age after age there has been a recurrence of like conditions, and that which has so frequently struck the geologist as being peculiar and exceptional—such as the coal formation or the glacial epoch—is found, on wider examination, to be nothing novel, but merely a repetition of what has occurred in other areas or at other times in the same area. Very different is all this from the rash teaching of those geologists who even at the present day dogmatize about the beginning of the earth's history, and the peculiar characters of this or that geological period, as though the world had witnessed a succession of physical scenes, each different from the rest. It is, of course, not to be denied that if we really could penetrate to the actual beginning of our planet's history and watch the early stages of its evolution, we should have to admit a state of things entirely different from what is known to the rational geologist. Then probably we should find ourselves in the presence of igneous and other forces, which, if not absolutely different from what we know, would yet be vastly more intense in nature and potent in action. But there is little reason to believe that our dim gropings into the earth's crust have yet led us into those very early pages of the record. At any rate, we are content to listen without quibble to so distinguished a geologist as the Director-General of the Geological Survey, who, after having spent a long life in daily work among the rocks, tells the greatest scientific assembly in the world that, "from the Laurentian epoch down to the present day, all the physical events in the history of the earth have varied neither in kind nor in intensity from those which we now experience."

International Law. By William Edward Hall. (Oxford, Clarendon Press.)

An excellent chapter appended to Mr. Hall's treatise (Appendix I.) discusses the "formation of the conception of international law." The true mode of forming a clear and sound conception of its character and foundations is the historical one, which shows how it grew up, from what sources it has actually emanated, what changes it has undergone and how they have been brought about, what common rules states observe in their dealings with one another, and what diversities of principle and practice, on the other hand, exist. Mr. Hall's historical sketch in the appendix referred to supplements a chapter in Sir Henry Maine's 'Ancient Law' which Mr. Hall's readers would do well to consult. When the superiority of the Empire, the arbitral position of the Papacy, and feudal relations between the sovereigns of different states ceased to supply in some degree the place of an international code, and when at the same time the higher order of minds became more alive to the horrors of warfare, a series of publicists addressed themselves to the task of supplying the demand for a body of principles and regulations which the rulers of nations would recognize. Grotius was neither the first nor the most original of these writers, but he was the most successful. The foundations on which he erected his system are now seen to be in a great measure unstable. It was, however, fortunate for humanity that their instability was not seen until his doctrines had worked themselves into national thought and international usage. Yet the weight which his work and those of some of his immediate successors acquired led later publicists to mistake their own position and vastly to overrate their authority. One is reminded of "the unflagging self-assertion" by which, as Sir H. Maine observes, the ancient Brehons of Ireland sought to maintain their influence, when one listens to the claims of some modern writers on international law "to defend the weaker states, to control the spirit of war, and to stay the arm of the belligerent when it would encroach upon the liberties of the neutral." No turgid rhetoric of this kind is found in Mr. Hall's treatise, nor does he attempt to deduce binding rules from a fictitious "law of nature." International law is, according to his exposition, simply a body of more or less generally recognized principles and usages, and its origin and growth are referred to no higher sources than the character and moral development of nations, and the conditions under which their relations with one another have been moulded. The definition, however, of international law at the beginning of Mr. Hall's introductory chapter can hardly be called perfectly clear and appropriate:—

"International law consists in certain rules of conduct which modern civilized states regard as being binding on them in their relations with one another with a force comparable in nature and degree to that binding the conscientious person to obey the laws of his country, and which they also regard as being enforceable by appropriate means in case of infringement."

Nothing surely is gained by comparing the authority of international law in nature and degree with that of municipal law over the mind of "the conscientious person"; its influence is derived chiefly from considerations of reciprocity and expediency; and the conscience of sovereigns and statesmen is too variable and uncertain to allow of any uniform rules. It would have been better to say, as Mr. Hall actually does a few pages further on, that "international law consists simply in those principles and definite rules which states agree to regard as obligatory." We think, too, that the chapter which stands as "Appendix I." would more properly have been placed at the beginning of the book, taking the place of the "Introductory Chapter"; and this is the order in which students would do well to study it.

The laws of war were made originally by belligerents, but in modern times the interests of neutrals have begun to exercise a considerable influence. This influence, however, is, for obvious reasons, operative chiefly in relation to maritime hostilities, the sea being a common thoroughfare. We might expect, therefore, to find the usages of maritime war milder than those of warfare by land. A powerful body of writers and politicians, however, maintain that the reverse is the case, and that the capture of private property at sea is without parallel in injustice and inhumanity. Mr. Hall's arguments on the other side are forcible, and will probably elicit a rejoinder from publicists like M. de Laveleye. We shall content ourselves with giving Mr. Hall's chief argument on a question which belongs to international policy, not to international law, in his own words:—

"It is enough to place the incidents of capture at sea side by side with the practice to which it has most analogy, namely, that of levying requisitions. By the latter private property is seized under conditions such that hardship to individuals—and the hardship is often of the severest kind—is often inevitable. In a poor country with difficult communication an army may so eat up the food as to expose the whole population of a large district to privations. The stock of a cloth or leather merchant is seized; if he does receive the bare value of his goods at the end of the war, which is by no means necessarily the case, he gets no compensation for interrupted trade and the temporary loss of his working capital. Or a farmer is taken with his carts and horses for weeks and months, and to a distance of a hundred or two hundred miles; if he brings back his horses alive, does the right to ask his own government at some future time for so much daily hire compensate him for a lost crop or for the damage done to his farm by the cessation of labour upon it? It must be remembered also that requisitions are enforced by strong disciplinary measures, the execution of which may touch the liberty and the lives of the population, and that in practice those receipts which are supposed to deprive requisitioning of the character of appropriation are not seldom forgotten or withheld. Maritime capture, on the other hand, in the words of Mr. Dana, 'takes no lives, sheds no blood, imperils no households, and deals only with the persons and property voluntarily embarked in the chances of war for the purpose of gain, and with the protection of insurance.'"

Mr. Hall's exposition of international law divides itself into three main branches, relating to (1) "the law governing states in their normal relations"; (2) "the law governing states in the relation of war"; (3) "the law governing states in the relation of neutrality." Exception may be taken to a proposition or an argument here and there, but the treatise as a whole fulfils its purpose meritoriously. Works on international law are generally received with most favour when the political horizon is lowering and the eagles are gathering together. Some omens of this kind are not wanting to further the acceptance of Mr. Hall's book.

English Men of Letters.—Byron. By John Nichol. (Macmillan & Co.)

This should be a useful book. There are few more difficult tasks than to unravel the coil of legend and innuendo which has collected round the personal life of Byron, nor is it likely to be performed more admirably than here. Prof. Nichol has brought to his labour great research, infinite patience, absence of prejudice, and a temper that does not allow itself to be ruffled even by the missionary of Argostoli or the "Bessarid of Boston." He has retold the fascinating and romantic story by the light of sound common sense, reviving the stock data from such recent biographies as the memoirs of Lord Melbourne and the valuable though dull life of Dr. Hodgson. It is, indeed, the last-mentioned friend who has supplied our author with the watchword of his essay; throughout the pages of Prof. Nichol's life of the poet we seem to be for ever reminded of Hodgson's beautiful and charitable note to one of Byron's fanfaronades, "The poor dear soul meant nothing of all this." This is undoubtedly the key to much of the worst Byronic scandal, a singular affectation of viciousness and a no less singular incontinence of fancy, neither of which, unhappily, is incompatible with brilliant powers, but which are, fortunately, rarely united with genius so splendid as Byron's. There is no doubt that the comparatively merciful verdict which Prof. Nichol passes upon the successive dark points in the poet's life is in the main not merely judicious, but strictly accurate. He passes, however, too lightly over the worst degradation in Byron's career, the truly appalling life he was leading at Venice in 1819, about which there is the most conclusive testimony from Shelley, who was neither timid nor pharisaical. Still, though the worst be imagined, it must now be generally conceded by all fair-minded persons that the dissipations of Byron's life should be looked upon as private and even venial faults, infinitely outweighed by his generous energy, by his love of liberty and elevated thought, and by the unselfish heroism of his death. Had he been spared for five years to rule the Greeks and display his unrivalled qualities as a master of men, all Europe would have been at his feet, and we should have heard as little of his sins as we do of the far more execrable offences of Napoleon. We note as a sign of Prof. Nichol's tact that his references to Mr. Trelawny's 'Reminiscences' are made to the first edition of that work, published in 1858, and not to the later issue. Another point on which Prof. Nichol shows acuteness is in perceiving that Leigh Hunt observed Byron's character with more penetration than Moore, though affection helped the portraiture in the one case, and hatred warped it in the other. It is almost inevitable that a biographer approaching Leigh Hunt from the side of Byron should conceive anger and scorn of a character that from that point of view, at least, does present nothing that is lovely. Prof. Nichol, who can be tolerant of Southey, has perhaps scarcely due patience with Leigh Hunt, who was by temperament less fitted to deal with the fiery energy of Byron than with the vices or virtues of any other human being. On the whole, however, judging this book by the standard of Mr. John Morley's original announcement, it is decidedly one of the most valuable and careful of the whole series.

The critical portion is not quite so much to our taste as the biographical. It is written with good sense, but with a reserve that is sometimes almost excessive. Prof. Nichol seems occasionally so afraid of falling into enthusiasm as to deny to Byron a place among great poets. At the same time he prefers to him no one since Milton, and this process of weeding seems at last to bring the reader into the state of mind of the old Calvinistic lady who was "na so supe o' Joek." We feel inclined to turn from praise to judiciousness, but so cold, to the magnificent periods of Mr. Swinburne's first great essay—an essay which, apart from the truth of its analysis and the force of its penetration, struck many readers at the time as a new starting-point in criticism, a suggestion that light and fire, not darkness and frost, were the elements most proper for a critic to clothe himself in before proceeding to cut up a great dead poet. Prof. Nichol passes the metrical 'Tales' in review with a few excellent words for each, but he says nothing, or next to nothing, about the sentimental and humorous lyrics written at the same time. What he does say seems to be little to the point. It is true only in a limited degree and of certain examples that Byron's lyrics "sometimes open well, but cannot sustain themselves like true song-birds, and fall to the ground like spent rockets." From this startling condemnation he exempts five or six, among which he does not include "Hume! Hodgson, we are going," "Through cloudless skies, in silvery shewn," "There's not a joy the world can give," "So, we'll go no more a-roving," or "Ye isles of Greece," five lyrics which display an absolute mastery of five different branches of lyric art, and which should make a critic cautious about denying Byron's power of song, though it was a power which he did not always choose to exercise. Mr. Swinburne has come much closer to the heart of the matter:—

"One native and incurable defect grew up and strengthened side by side with his noblest qualities: a feeble and faulty sense of metre. No poet of equal or inferior rank ever had so bad an ear. His smoother cadences are often vulgar and facile; his fresher notes are often incomplete and inharmonious. His verse stumbles and jingles, stammers and halts, where there is most need for a swift and even pace of musical sound. The rough, sonorous changes of the songs in the 'Deformed Transformed' rise far higher in harmony and strike far deeper into the memory than the lax, easy lines in which he first indulged; but they slip too readily into notes as rude and weak as the rhymeless, tuneless verse in which they are so loosely set, as in a cheap and casual frame. The magnificent lyric measures of 'Heaven and Earth' are defaced by the coarse obtrusion of short lines with jagged edges."

All this admits of no reply, yet we are left by it far from Prof. Nichol's position. Byron's ear was faulty, but it was not absent, or he would not be a poet at all. He was distinctly a great lyricist, but not one of those poets whose music we can trust on all occasions, like Shelley. Of the truth and harmony of Shelley's verse we are always sure; when his inspiration quits him, as it must quit every poet sometimes, we feel it in the haziness or poorness of his thought; but the peculiarity of Byron was that he showed that he was mortal first of all in the technical part of his poetry.

Nor had this anything specially to do with his power as a lyricist; it is even more marked in his sudden lapses into lame and broken blank verse. In the most elevated and inspired of his dramas, 'Cain,' we come upon such lines as these on almost every page:—

To look the Omnipotent tyrant in His everlasting face, and tell him that His evil is not good;
and, more execrable still,

My Adah, my Ours and beloved,— errors which a schoolboy scarcely commits in his first copy of verses.

In treating of 'Don Juan,' Prof. Nichol has rightly given that astounding poem its place at the summit of Byron's attainment, but when he comes to speak of the metre in which it is written, he passes Frere by with the single remark, "Byron's choice of this measure may have been suggested by Whistlercraft," while he does not even mention 'Anster Fair.' Yet as early as 1812 William Tennant, a Fifeshire poet to whose extraordinary talent justice has never been done, published his mock-heroic poem of that name, composed in a measure which would be pure stichus rime if the last line were not an Alexandrine. The following specimen will show how near Tennant comes to Byron's manner:—

I wish I had a cottage snug and neat
Upon the top of many-fountained Ide,
That I might thence, in holy fervour, greet
The bright-gowned Morning tripping gopherside,
And when the low Sun's glory-buskin'd feet
Walk on the blue wave of the Ægean tide,
Oh! I would kneel me down, and worship there
The God who garnished out a world so bright and fair.

This was published just before Byron awoke to find himself famous as the author of the opening cantos of 'Childe Harold.' Prof. Nichol coincides with the view which we have ourselves enlarged upon in these columns, that the stichus rime stanza is a dance closing with a "breakdown." In summing up early impressions for and against 'Don Juan,' we think that he should not have omitted to note that Keats turned from it, sickened, we are told, by its cynicism. This want of appreciation balances to some extent Byron's genuine contempt for Keats's early work. These two great poets were scarcely formed to do justice to each other.

But this is carping for carping's sake. When a book is so good as Prof. Nichol's there is little to be said about it, except to recommend it as widely as may be. We have noted two insignificant errors. It was, of course, not any Mrs. Gray, but Gray the poet, writing to the Rev. Norton Nicholls, who said, "We can only have one mother." Dr. Georg Brandes, the eminent Danish critic, is not "Professor" Brandes simply because clerical obstruction has withheld from him that chair of Literature at the University of Copenhagen which has been vacant ever since Hauch died in 1870, no other candidate venturing to come forward while so prominent a man is in the field. The deadlock is absurd, and little creditable to the good sense of the Danes.

Opyacules et Traité d'Abou'l-Walid Marwan ibn Djanah de Cordoue. Texte Arabe, avec une Traduction Française. Par Joseph et Hartwig Derenbourg. (Paris, Imprimerie Nationale.)

DURING nearly three centuries Hebrew grammarians and asotytes were working on a false and delusive system. The study of Hebrew grammar proper (for, as has already been said in the Athenæum in a notice of Dr. Berliner's essay on grammar in the Talmud, the Talmudical schools did not then cultivate Hebrew grammar in the true sense), it is now generally admitted, sprang up when the Karaites revolted against the authority of the Talmudists, at the end of the seventh or the beginning of the eighth century, and tried to explain the text of the Pentateuch literally, rejecting the forced interpretation of the Talmudical schools. It is, indeed, difficult to explain how it came about that men of the tenth century, like the famous R. Saadyah Gaon, the Rabbanite, and his contemporary David ben Abraham, the Karaite, who wrote extensive commentaries on the Bible and voluminous dictionaries in Arabic, should have overlooked the system of triliteral roots, at that time already fully developed by Arabic grammarians and adopted in all the Mussulman schools, and should have based their grammar on roots of one or two letters. It cannot be said that these authors and their immediate successors refused to accept the system of the Arabs out of mere obstinacy, because it came from a foreign source, since they adopted the grammatical terms of that school. Anyhow, it is a fact that R. Saadyah, David ben Abraham, R. Hayya Gaon, not to speak of minor authors, both Rabbanites and Karaites, in the East, as well as Menahem ben Saruk and Dunash ben Labrat and their pupils in Morocco and Spain, still clung to roots of one and two letters.

It was only towards the end of the tenth century that, as later grammarians express themselves, "God raised the spirit" of Judah ben David (Abu Zekaryah Yahya) Hayyudj of Fez, who wrote for the first time treatises in Arabic in which he introduced the triliteral system for all Hebrew words. These were afterwards made accessible to the Jews at large by the Hebrew translations of Abraham ibn Ezra, which have been edited by Ewald and Dukes, and of Moses ibn Jikalia, published some years ago by the Rev. J. W. Nuss. The original Arabic texts, however, which are to be found in the rich Bodleian Library, lie still in manuscript. Judah of Fez was soon followed by men of eminence in Spain, and more especially by the famous R. Jonah (Abu-l-Walid) ibn Janah of Cordova, who at first commented upon him and rectified many errors (for it is obvious that the author of a new system cannot be right everywhere), completing also gaps left in R. Judah's treatises. R. Jonah, as may be seen from his grammar and his dictionary, which he composed after commenting on R. Judah's treatises, was a sound comparative Semitic philologist (useful even in our advanced time for this study), kept aloof from the Agadic interpretation of the Talmudical school, and was, above all, a first-rate Arabic scholar. He is, it is true, accused but just in his criticisms upon R. Judah of For; he always keeps within the limits of politeness, and he shows everywhere his veneration for his master.

One of R. Judah's admirers, Samuel the Prince (han-Nagid), minister of the Caliph Abdrahman III. and his successors at Cordova, was greatly irritated by R. Jonah's criticisms, and pronounced publicly against him in letters addressed to friends. Some of these have been discovered lately in the Imperial Library of St. Petersburg, and from them we see that the eminent minister speaks of the great grammarian of Cordova in rather arrogant language. Samuel was, no doubt, a man of talent, as is shown by the remains of his poems published lately by Dr. Harkavy from a unique MS. in the Library of St. Petersburg, but he was not much of a grammarian, to judge from the extracts which are quoted in his name and which are put together in the preface to the present volume. To Samuel's letters R. Jonah answered by others addressed to his friends, in one of which he lost his temper and employed strong invective against his antagonist. Of this letter, which might have thrown much light on some historical persons of the time, only four pages have been discovered at St. Petersburg up to the present time. MM. Dorenbourg in the present volume have published R. Jonah's comments and letters in Arabic from the unique Bodleian MS., together with one of Samuel's letters and the fragment of R. Jonah's answer in Arabic from MSS. in the St. Petersburg Library, with a French translation and copious notes. It would be superfluous to say that the edition of the text as well as the translation is as correct as possible, the editors being well known as first-rate Arabic scholars. In the introduction, which covers no less than 124 pages, M. Joseph Dorenbourg (for, to judge from his previous essays and articles on Hebrew grammar and literature, we must attribute this to him) gives the whole history of the grammatical schools in Spain in the tenth century and the first half of the eleventh, for which imprinted documents abound, many to be found in the Library of St. Petersburg, but more in the Bodleian. Not only will the reader find in these pages new material for the Jewish history of the time, but also many original remarks on Hebrew grammar, which may be recommended to the notice of modern writers on the subject. The alphabetical tables of the roots and the Biblical passages explained by Abu-l-Walid in his opuscule will much facilitate the use of this elaborate volume. We miss with regret an index to the extensive preface as well as another of the authors mentioned by Abu-l-Walid in his opuscule.

R. Jonah's works were translated into Hebrew by various authors, but they lost their popularity through later compilations by the Kimhis and others. In fact, but few libraries possess MSS. of R. Jonah's grammatical and lexicographical writings. They are, however, not yet antiquated; modern scholars quote them often. The Bodleian is, perhaps, the only library which possesses MSS. of all his works with the exception of his letter against Samuel. The dictionary published lately by the Delegates of the Clarendon Press and the present volume of opuscule are edited from Bodleian

MSS. The grammar alone remains unpublished in its original language. Let us hope that the University of Oxford may use their splendid press for the publication of the treasures heaped up in the Bodleian Library, and not rely upon the National Printing Office at Paris or the presses of Germany for making known their MSS. in various languages, and more especially those which relate to Biblical studies. There is now a nucleus of Semitic scholars at Oxford, and all that they want is encouragement and facilities for publishing the results of the labour which they undertake for the love of knowledge alone.

Notes on Game and Game Shooting. By J. J. Manley, M.A. ('The Bannar' Office.)

This volume appears appropriately at the beginning of the shooting season. It discourses pleasantly of hares and rabbits, of game birds proper, of quails, snipe, and woodcock. Although rooks are admitted to the honour of a chapter, deer are wholly omitted, and the author apologises for giving no notes on wild-fowl shooting on the ground that the subject is far too wide to be included in a volume like the present. In this we entirely concur, and take upon ourselves to assure him that if at some future time he writes on wild-fowl shooting in the tone and with the good sense which mark these essays, his notes will be generally acceptable. Few books, indeed, are more grateful to the country dwellers who are fond of natural history as well as of capturing game than those which give accounts of their favourite quarry, together with practical remarks on the mode of catching or shooting it. Such volumes, if written in a genuine, unaffected style, are indeed treasures during wet weather in the country, and, besides delighting pater-familias, hand on to his sons those traditions of fair sport, hard work, and skill, together with abhorrence of inhumanity and cruelty, which have produced so many fine riders and excellent shots. Whatever favours open-air exercise and manly sport is a direct gain to the vigour of the race; and we dissent altogether from those who deem the slaughter of the greatest number of birds and beasts the surest criterion of sport. A ramble with a spaniel or old setter over a wild country in autumn, obtaining hare, it may be, a partridge or two, there a rabbit, and adding a snipe or wild duck every now and then to a modest bag, is infinitely more enjoyable than shooting hecatombs of terrified pigeons at Hurlingham or blazing away with two or three guns at pheasants from some "warm corner" in October. Luckily Mr. Manley is much of our mind, although he has a slight hankering for battue shooting, upon the curious plea that "if there were no battue shooting there would be little or no pheasant breeding," forgetting that it is the crowding of numbers of these semi-domesticated pheasants in coverts which leads to the worst poaching affrays. If pheasants were suffered to breed in safety on wild ground and in plantations within reasonable limits, which should satisfy true sportsmen as distinguished from mere shooting machines, the greatest temptations to poaching would be removed. Hodge would not care to meet his city friends by the snug fireside of the Black

Bull, in order to arrange a nocturnal plan of plundering the preserves, unless the abnormal tastes of his squire for shooting more pheasants on a given afternoon than could any other gentleman in the county invited the venture.

Mr. Manley has an apposite anecdote or good story for every bird that falls, some pleasant recollection for every weary tramp on stubble or heather, a caution or hint which is ever in season. That man must be both a good naturalist and a good sportsman who learns nothing from his pages; and it may be added as a great commendation that, unlike some sporting books, his chapters are not cumbered with perpetual details of eating and drinking and smoking. Not that the writer cannot enjoy a good dinner after his day's sport; and, in the spirit of Isaac Walton, having taught how to take our game, he is careful also to tell how to cook it. When he avows his liking, however, for a hot luncheon while partridge shooting, and contrasts the delights of "hot soups, stews, hashes, or pies and hot potatoes—they will keep hot four hours wrapped in flannel"—with "a hasty snatch of bread-and-cheese under a hedge," most sportsmen will disagree with him. A cold lunch need not necessarily be so bare a scramble as his alternative implies. It is amusing to find the author in one chapter deploring the indiscriminate slaughter of hares throughout the year, and insisting on the necessity of a close time being provided in Hagland as in Ireland if the hare is to be saved from extermination; while in the next he enlarges on the enormity of the Government Hares and Rabbits Bill, and prophesies that if carried in its original form it will cause more ill feeling than all the present game laws. Such contradictions, however, are not unusual in essays contributed, as were these, to the pages of a newspaper.

Desultory as they seem, there is a certain order in these chapters. They commence with a few words on the etymology of the bird or animal treated; then follows its natural history, with poetical and other allusions; the mode of shooting and pursuing it comes next, together with practical remarks drawn from the author's experience; and these are the most original and useful parts of the book. Finally, the creature's "gastonomic merits" are discussed. The etymologies are clearly out of place in such slight essays as these, and to run through the gamut of Hesychius, Suetonius, Pilon, Schrevelius, and even Sanscrit vocabularies, before reaching the directions how to rear, pursue, and shoot hares or partridges, is much like having to see them skinned, plucked, drawn, basted, larded, and the rest of it before being allowed to eat them for dinner. These disquisitions on the derivation of our game birds' nomenclature are at once too slight to be of real use to the philologist and too ponderous to tempt the casual reader. Like poachers, Mr. Manley's natural enemies, they are perpetually laying snares all round his domain. Thus the derivation of the word "partridge" tempts him into an unavailing joke which ought to be omitted in a future edition, while the misprints which proceed from rashly meddling with "a little learning" constitute the blemishes of the book. Temminck is transformed into "Temminell" in one page, in another our old friend Markwick poses as "Marwick." The Greek word, again, which lies at the root of the Scolopacidae does not "signify a long pointed state," but "stake"; and the reference to "Cas. i. 50" for lepus in the sense of "darling" will puzzle the best of scholars until some little research shows it should be "Plautus, Casina i. 50." The meekest of readers, too, will resent the repetition of a cluster of poetical quotations within fifty pages. It is a pity that Mr. Manley should give way to this inflated style, for he can write fairly well when he chooses. Thus many besides sportsmen will sympathize with the following passage on the pheasant:—

"The nest of the parent bird had been commenced when the bleak March winds were whistling through the nearly naked boughs, and January mows yet lay in white patches between the spreading roots of the gnarled oaks and towering elms, and in many a nook and hollow of the wide woodland. When the primrose buds were just beginning to show themselves, and a faint odour, like a promise and foretaste of delicious things to come, was wafted from the mossy violet beds; when all nature was listening for the first cry of the cuckoo to tell that spring was really come; when now and then a solitary songster sent forth an interrupted strain in preparation for the vernal chorus,—then it was that the short husky crow of the cock pheasant was heard in the woods, telling of love and rivalry; then the little brown hen flitted and plumed her sober-coloured wings, and began to beat herself and prepare for the maternal duties which she knew must ere long devolve upon her, and her alone, for her liege lord, to whose presence she was now invited, will take no share in them."

The hints for shooting different game birds are remarkable for good sense. This is the very book which a tyro should peruse before sallying forth with a breech-loader to terrify his comrades by its contents being sent here, there, and everywhere, amongst and around them. And if a host with the directions here given cannot manage to display the generalship necessary for arranging a successful raid on partridges with the kite when constant shooting has made them suspicious and wild, it is certainly not Mr. Manley's fault. These sketches are a useful addition to the country house library. The author rambles, gun in hand, over ground which few have regularly invaded with literary intent since the days of Hawker. It should be added that Mr. Temple's illustrations are mostly characteristic, and one or two are excellent.

Selections from the Attic Orators: Antiphon, Andocides, Lysias, Isocrates, Isæus. Edited with Notes by R. C. Jebb, M.A., LL.D. (Macmillan & Co.)

This luxurious volume may be considered under at least two aspects. In its avowed capacity of a companion volume to Prof. Jebb's history of the development of Attic prose it exhibits exact conformity with the eternal fitness of things. Again, viewed, as it is sure to be, as an anthology of Attic prose from Thucydides to Demosthenes, it cannot entirely escape the condemnation meted out to all fragmentary editions. From this aspect of the book Dr. Jebb's admirers will turn with hope to the hypothesis that it is a harbinger of a new English edition of the Attic orators from the hand that has given the highest guarantee of competence to execute successfully that arduous task. The design of the work is to "give a series of the most characteristic and interesting passages from these orators," choosing these passages so as to give unity to the series by interpreting "as completely as possible the part of each author in the general evolution of Attic prose style," and at the same time taking "care that these passages should also possess intrinsic interest as illustrations of Greek thought, politics, or manners." Thus the critic is directly challenged to pronounce judgment on the 'Selections' and selections. He is told "it has cost some time and labour." This statement will admit of easy credence, and we can in turn assure Prof. Jebb that it would be difficult to find fault with the choice of pieces and extracts. We are very glad to see the extant portion of Lysias's 'Olympiacus' and Isocrates' 'Against the Sophists,' given in entirety, the passage from Lysias's 'Against Theomnestus' giving examples of old Attic words which had become obsolete, and the best part of Isæus's 'On the Estate of Ciron.' It is natural that Isocrates should take the lion's share of the space, alike on account of the varied nature of his extant works and of the historic interest of some of them. Leaving the question of literary judgment, further pursuit of which would lead over old ground, we come to the philological aspect of the volume. Few remarks are needed on the general style of an editor so well known and approved as Prof. Jebb; but we may venture to express the opinion that he shows signs of increased experience as a teacher and of unceasing progress in maturity of scholarship. He has manfully withstood frequent temptations to tamper with the recorded text, and is careful to exhaust all the resources of interpretation before venturing upon alteration: e.g., he retains ἀνδρὸς τεθνεώτος καὶ ἐκβαλλομένου, Antiphon, 'On the Murder of Herodes,' § 28, "when a man had been killed, and was being thrown overboard," while Blass would either omit καὶ or insert ἐνταβέμενον before it. Again, in 'Tetralogia,' I. a. § 2, it is proposed in a note to keep the reading of the Oxford MS. N., δοτὶς οὖν τοῦτον ὑπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ ἐξωθέντος [other MSS. ἐξωθείς] τοῦ βίου ἡμῶν ἀνόμεν τινὰ ἀποκτείνει, κ.τ.λ.,—"our life having been graced with these gifts by the god,"—while Blass, less happily, alters τοῦτον to τὴν, -θέντος (or -θείς) to -θίντων, after Sauppe. It is a pity to have given the altered version in the text. We may here observe that it is needlessly modest for an editor to make a rule of never introducing any conjecture of his own into the text, especially if he admits superfluous interpolations by other editors. Fortunately modern restorations have their sometimes baneful effect circumscribed here by conspicuous brackets. In Lysias's 'Against Theomnestus,' § 12, we venture to defend the text, which is marked as unsound, οἰκοῦν ἀποκτενὸν ἂν εἴη τὸν δέξαντα κτείνει φέροντα ἀνδροφόνον εἶναι, ὅτι δὲ δίκων, ὡς ἐκτείνει τὸν φεύγοντα διωρόμεντο. Prof. Jebb says after δέξαντα κτείνει some word is lost equivalent to ἀπολογεῖσθαι or ἀποφύγειν, and would move τὸν φεύγοντα into the place of the τὸν before δέξαντα. We think that διωρόμεντο is understood by anticipation of διωρόμεντο, and that we have here a relic of native roughness which has escaped the sacrilegious file and cement of grammarians and scribes.

There is abundant evidence that Prof. Jebb's respect for the records is not due to lack of critical power, but to a sober, sensible estimate of the proper functions of an editor. Nothing can be simpler and brighter than his correction of αὐτῶν to ἀτυχῶν, Lysias's 'Olympiacus,' § 4, φιλομεκῆν μὲν ἔστιν εἰς πραττόμεν, γυνῆαι δὲ τὰ βέλτιστα τῶν αὐτῶν. We must take some credit to ourselves for the improvement in the explanation of the involved passage from Andocides' 'On the Mysteries,' § 57, εἰ μὲν γὰρ ἦν δοῦν τὸ ἔτιρον ἰλάσθαι, κ.τ.λ., as to which we dissented from Prof. Jebb in our review of his 'Attic Orators.' Perhaps with a view to schoolboys there should be a note on τοιοῦτος ὢν, p. 1, § 1, as πολυπράγμων καὶ φιλόνομος is not directly expressed in the preceding clause. On p. 13, § 28, to support τι αἶμα, Soph. 'A.I.' 468, καὶ δρῶν τι χρηστὸν, is quoted; but surely χρηστὸν is an explanatory addition to the phrase δρῶν τι. Is not εἰς τῆς Μηθουμνίας τι χωρίον, p. 10, § 21, more to the point? There is room for question whether δράσαντες τι καὶ κινδυνεύουσι, Thuc. I. 20, and the passage quoted from Shilleto's note are quite à propos to χρῆ γὰρ ἀναμνησθέντες τὰ γεγονημένα καλῶς βουλευσώμεθα, p. 31, § 29, for here the idea of the verb is not, as in the other cases, objectionable. Surely the use of the participle is gerundive. A cross reference is wanted to § 34, to which this note applies far better. The hopelessness of perfect accuracy in revision is well illustrated by the date, 370 B.C., given to Isocrates' 'Encomium on Helen,' most probably a misreading of Prof. Jebb's own "379," as he gives the limits 380 B.C. and 376 B.C. This mistake is repeated four times in all by Prof. Jebb. Far more interesting than these minutiae is the historical point involved in the discussion of Andocides' 'On the Peace with Lacedæmon,' § 31. Prof. Jebb thinks that the orator made the aid given by Athens to Argos come after the Sicilian war. What he does say with a view to his rhetorical arrangement is that the choice of Egestæans instead of Syracusans as allies came before the persuasion of the Athenians by the Argives. He speaks of an embassy from Syracuse (or perhaps overtures of a private nature to leading politicians). The rejection of the Syracusan advances might well be regarded as the choice which involved the subsequent alliance with Egestæ. We have then a record of an historical event not, we believe, elsewhere recorded. The Syracusan offers of alliance were probably made about 424 B.C. The combination against Athens under Hermogenes would naturally follow the failure of the attempt to secure amity with Athens. With regard to the following phrase applied to the Athenians, πράμμενοι δὲ παρὰ Λακεδαιμονίων μὴ δοῦναι δίκην, for forming the confederacy of Delos and building the city walls (p. 34, § 38), Andocides' statement is scarcely "baseless and absurd." We hold it to be very probable that the affair of Themistocles' embassy did not terminate without some conciliatory disbursement to the overreached Lacedæmonians. It is extremely unlikely the orator would have dared to invent so unpalatable a charge. A time before the reduction of Naxos seems to be referred to, not "the thirty years' truce between Athens and Sparta (445 B.C.)."

In setting before us valuable illustrations of Attic oratory and Athenian life, as has been his avowed object, Prof. Jebb has proved eminently successful. The number and length of the notes evince liberality tempered by judgment. The position and context of the extracts are indicated by short introductions. There are brief essays on the style of each orator. Special attention ought to be called to the fact that Prof. Jebb has had the laudable patience to compile his indexes himself. Pleased as scholars will be to note the respectful tone in which Prof. Jebb speaks of their old friend Dobson, they will certainly hope that he contemplates superseding him. The more recent German editors have left much to be done in a new edition of the Attic orators, and somewhat besides to be undone.

NOVELS OF THE WEEK.

White Wings. By William Black. 3 vols. (Macmillan & Co.)

Wait a Year. By Harriette Bowra. 3 vols. (Sampson Low & Co.)

My Boys. By Scriba. (Remington & Co.)

In 'White Wings' Mr. Black takes his readers once again to the familiar shores and seas of the west coast of Scotland. Is it necessary to say more? Here Mr. Black is at his best, and to any one who knows the places it is always a pleasure to have them recalled by his vivid description. But how does all this strike those readers who have never seen the west coast of Scotland? Surely to them there must be a good deal of sameness in the glories of Canna and Haakeval and Loch Houra, and how can it make any difference to them whether the yacht drops her anchor at Orinan or Tobermory or Stornoway? Still, Mr. Black's own delight in yachting and his love for the West Highland seas and coast seem so genuine and so thoroughly animate his writing that they may well be imagined to carry along even the reader who hates the sea and to whom Oban is unknown. Others may truly admit that the next best thing to being among the Western Islands, though doubtless there is a great interval, is reading Mr. Black's new yachting romances. But then it would hardly be treating Mr. Black with the respect which is his due to say nothing about the higher qualities required in a novel, the construction and characters. His collection of puppets, to use Thackeray's word, does not often receive new members. There is still the writer who is perennially arch, and lives in pretended dread of Queen Titania and her imperious ways. In 'White Wings' her particular epithet is "midge-like," and she is generally called "our Admiral-in-Chief." Then, of course, there is the girl whom Mr. Black has often drawn, and a charming picture she always is—the "good gay girl," as Mr. Browning called such another, with the spirit and courage of a dozen men, who goes about singing odd snatches of all sorts of songs, and has perhaps too great a tendency to be caught with a tear glistening in her eye. Then there is another character who is nearly always, if not without exception, to be found in Mr. Black's book—the character who must be called, for want of a better word, the bore. He is the person into whose mouth are put all those odds and ends of miscellaneous knowledge which Mr. Black possesses, both of an experimental and speculative kind, and upon whom is thrown the burden of the set jokes. These, indeed, are sometimes very good, and one at least in these volumes has local colour about it, for it certainly may be heard any day passing about on board the Highland steamers. The bore in 'White Wings' is distributed between a Scotch laird, who acts the part of Providence at the proper moment, and the jeune premier, who is a young Scotch doctor with a European reputation. Naturally the learning is put into his mouth, but the jokes are given some to him and some to the laird, the most pointless being, of course, assigned to the latter. The story, it must be confessed, has no great interest, and, like the breezes to which yachtsmen are well accustomed, it is hardly strong enough to carry the reader on to the end of the voyage, sinking as it does almost to a dead calm in the middle of the last volume.

So far as the incidents in Miss Bowra's novel justify a moral conclusion, it would seem to be that a year's probation is highly desirable in matrimonial engagements. It was most fortunate for the good clergyman, Mr. Warren Sinclair, that the fashionable beauty, Helen Lestock, gave him time for reflection, as the same period afforded him excellent reason for getting handsomely rid of her, and for making the acquaintance of the virtuous heroine. He is all the more disposed to recognize the moral beauty of Mona's character that a terrible accident in the Alps, in which his life is barely preserved, has given rise to serious reflections. This episode is well described, and, indeed, the story on the whole is by no means badly written, though the weakness of most of the characters is suggestive of making bricks without straw. Some power there is in the portrait of Mona's father, and the last days of parent and child together are pathetically dealt with; Mrs. Moreton, too, and Graves the churchwarden are fine examples of different types of vulgarity, while Capt. Orde has some character, though he is a very sketchy figure; but, on the whole, the dramatis personæ, though not ill conceived, seem ill finished, and do not interest us much. The story does not hang, however, and is sufficiently well told. Perhaps the too hesitating hero and his unamiable fiancée prevent our interest from being commensurate to the amount of skill displayed; while the incident of Edward Moreton's wrong-doing is too painful to be artistic in a book of this sort.

Scriba is a fairly animated story-teller of an unambitious sort. She "runs on" about her boys quite in the fashion of a notable second-rate sort of maiden aunt. Such phrases as "don't trouble" for "don't trouble yourself," "by then it was time for her to go," "either one of" a multitude, sufficiently indicate the status of Miss Patience Home. The story she tells of the nephews whom she educates hinges upon an audacious case of personation by a young lady, whose stratagem is obvious from the first to the meanest capacity. Ada Blair escapes better than she deserves when her trick is discovered, and marries one of the boys. There is an unpleasant flavour of "the deceased husband's brother" question hanging about the book, but the author disclaims any polemical intention.

HISTORICAL AND ANTIQUARIAN PUBLICATIONS.

History of the Parish and Burgh of Laurencekirk. By the Rev. W. R. Fraser. (Blackwood & Sons.)—To not a few, we daresay, even in these days of School Boards, the following story would not be altogether inappropriate: "Many years ago an Aberdonian in India met an Englishman, who asked him if Aberdeen was in Scotland. Being informed that it was, he rejoined, 'Oh, you come from Scotland; do you know a Mr. Laurence Kirk who makes snuff-boxes?' Although it was hard to discern the necessity of a book of almost four hundred pages being devoted to such a limited area, still we were inclined to be hopeful when we read in Mr. Fraser's preface the sensible remark that, "if fairly executed, these local expositions contribute to accuracy in that wider field of history, a knowledge of which is universally regarded as one of the elements of intellectual culture." The work is divided into six parts: (1) the parish and its landowners; (2) history of the burgh; (3) noteworthy families and parishioners; (4) church and school; (5) distinguished men; (6) miscellaneous. Mr. Fraser, evidently possessing little idea of what was needed if he desired to fulfil his promise of furnishing fresh local information and promoting accuracy in the "wider field of history," appears to have dispensed with original research, and accordingly provides in the preface a list of writers to whom his information is due. Douglas's 'Peerage' and a number of subordinate "authorities" are lumped together, and by picking isolated facts from them regarding the parish and persons connected with it he has written a history of Conveth or early Laurencekirk. He might at least have taken pains to consult the cartularies of Arbroath and Brechin, both of which have been printed by the Bannatyne Club. Four of the leading families are the Keiths, Berkeleys or Barclays, Falconers, and Middletons. The compiler commences his account of the first with the legend of the Catti, which ascribes to that "valiant tribe of the Germans" the origin of the names Caithness and Keith; and he has obviously never heard of the seven ancient divisions of Pictland, which, according to the legend of the Pictish Chronicle, derived their names from the seven children of Cruithne. Of a piece with this is his statement that Mearns is said to denote "little hills." He also says that Burnton is Burntown, not the Burn-town of "what may be called genteel conversation," because the forms Brunstoun and Bryntown occur in early charters, as if that circumstance did not rather point to an origin in some person of the name of Brun or Brown. In a paragraph of equal naïveté on the origin of the name Scotland we are reminded that "the Scots were originally from Ireland," but the author does not appear to know that the family of Allardice, of which he also writes, originally bore the name of Scott. In a quotation from a charter granted in the reign of William the Lion, or perhaps from somebody's translation of the charter, in the register of Arbroath, "fen" appears as the equivalent of "feudum," and the translation of the three lines given is ambiguous enough to be called inaccurate. This charter—where the name of Walter Scott (of Allardice) appears—is otherwise of considerable importance, because of the perambulation and assize recorded in it, and because of the names (e.g., Dufcolok de Fetherham) of the parambulators and witnesses. The short paragraph which follows that just referred to informs the reader that "Humphrey de Berkeley was succeeded by his only child, a daughter, named Richenda, who, in the reign of Alexander II., renewed and confirmed the donations which her father had made." Not a word here about her being married to Robert filius Warnebaldi, or about the interesting series of charters connected with this alienation and the confirmation by King Alexander in 1246, which conflicts with Richenda's charters (these not mentioning Convent at all), or about the alleged descent of the Earls of Glencairn from Robert filius Warnebaldi, or about the fact that in 1264 a claimant to the mill "which formerly belonged to Richenda," &c., appeared in Hugh dictus Heem, to whom the convent of Arbroath, in return for the renunciation of this claim, granted the head of Latham in the "achyre" of Arbroath. Of Constanca de Midilton the author says that "she was probably the daughter of Unfridus de Middleton." Yet the convent of Arbroath made the following entry in the register: "Duximus significandum quod Constanca de Middleton filia quondam Roberti Tybaldi et Marie uxoris sue, et Adam filius dictæ Constance nuper ad monasterium nostrum ad factu decemant." Mr. Fraser strays far from Kincardineshire and probability when he tells us that "a Gilbert Middleton, the Northumberland outlaw, was 'probably one of the family.'" The name of Convent, as well as those of Falconer and Hallerton, surrounded as these lands were by several thanages, afforded Mr. Fraser an opportunity of enlightening his Laureatean readers on a most instructive subject, but a paragraph on pp. 5 and 6 shows how slight an acquaintance he has with these matters. The rest of the volume calls for no particular notice. Some information is given about the Banisms of the district, but nothing beyond a dry abstract of the life of Beattie, the "illustrious" poet and antagonist of Hume, while some of the "miscellaneous" stories are remarkable not for their humour, but their vulgarity.

The Wiltshire Archaeological and Natural History Magazine, August, 1880, (Devizes, H. F. Bull) maintains its character of being one of the most interesting of provincial antiquarian publications. We use the word "publication" advisedly, for though representative of a society the magazine can be bought by non-members. An article in the present number by the Rev. Canon Jackson, F.R.S., 'On Savernake Forest,' contains, besides much curious lore on forest laws (gathered mostly from Manwood), some illustrative extracts from the apparently inexhaustible collection of documents at Longleat. Information on Savernake Forest itself is in the article rather conspicuous by its absence, but we can pardon what is not for the sake of what we get instead. A good map of the Savernake district is supplied, and among the few incidents related in connexion with the forest is the visit of James I. to the neighbourhood. That sovereign was passionately fond of hunting, having, as every schoolboy knows, been attended by as many dogs as courtiers on his way from the Scottish to the English crown. He was frequently at Wilton to hunt with the then Earl of Pembroke. On one occasion the king came to Savernake, and a young gentleman of good family, named Waldron, was killed in his presence in Tottenham Park by the rebound of a stag. Of the famous (at least locally) Savernake tenure horn, an anecdote related by Lord Charles Bruce, M.P., at a recent meeting of the Wiltshire Society, will illustrate the prestige. In Lord Bruce's boyhood the king (what king?) stayed two or three days at Savernake House, and just at his Majesty's departure his (Lord Bruce's) grandfather expressed a hope that he had been pleased with the entertainment. The king replied that he had been much pleased, but that there was one thing yet undone. "You have forgotten," his Majesty said, "to blow your tenure horn. When a king of England comes here and that horn is not blown, your property passes to the Crown." It need hardly be added that a Jericho blast of the horn immediately followed, and the estate was saved. According to the old forest law, spaniels and greyhounds could be kept only under the royal licence. If found unlicensed, they were at once maimed. The dog was induced to set one of his fore feet upon a block of wood, a man smiting it clean off at the next moment. By a charter dated A.D. 1253 the Abbot of Glastonbury's tenants were allowed to keep their dogs exempt from being thus mutilated. 'On British Stone and Earthworks on the Marlborough Downs' is the title of an excellent paper by the Rev. A. C. Smith, M.A., but it contains a record of much ignorant and wanton destruction. The Ancient Monuments Bill touches but comparatively few of our antiquities. To quote Sir John Lubbock's speech at the last (twenty-fifth annual) meeting of the Wilt Society: "In spite of all that has been done, there still remains much to do; in fact, to use the graphic simile of Sir George Balfour in the House the other day, 'What has been done in comparison with what remains to do is really but a flea-bite in the ocean.'"

Major H. G. Raverty has just brought out the seventh and twelfth fasciculi of his Tibet-i-Nasiri, which treat mainly of the later events of the reign of Chinghis Khan. These are, first, his crossing the river Jihun or Orxus and his military operations in Ghur and Khurasan and the advance of Sultan Jalal-ud-din mu Ghazni. The capture of Walkh (=Zulak, fortress near Baman, not Balkh) and of the chief cities of Khurasan is next related, as well as that of the forts of Kal-yun and Fwar, two places which lay in (so to us) very imperfectly known regions north-east of Herat. From Major Raverty's details it may be inferred that the great fortress of Kal-yun must be identified with Kala-Nau, a place described by Vambery and others, but Fwar we have searched in vain for. The fact is nobody has ever explored Ghur, a country which is full of the most interesting historical associations. Eldred Pottinger skirted it on the north-west, and General Ferner says he passed through "Zerni, the capital of Ghur"; but Major Raverty throws grave doubts on the credibility of the general's narrative, an opinion in which we believe another authority, Sir H. Rawlinson, shares. The capture of several other forts is described in the present fasciculi, and the topographical and other details are so precise that we imagine there should be little difficulty in fixing them if the country were examined by a European, which, however, is not very likely in the present state of Afghan politics. We are next furnished with an account of Chinghis Khan's return to Turkestan, which the author is distinctly of opinion did not take place by the Baroghil Pass, as Dr. Bellow says, but by the same route as the conqueror had adopted on his invasion, i.e. via Baman. Then follows the account of the death of Chinghis Khan, and of the subsequent deeds of his sons, which include the despatch of the Mongol forces into Irak and against Ghazni and Lahore. The fasciculi are undoubtedly a most important contribution to the later history of Chinghis Khan, and the criticisms and corrections of Major Raverty, Bellow, and other authorities are extremely valuable.

Apart from its intrinsic merits, Dr. Vollgraff's monograph on the Greek Writers of Roman History deserves notice from the fact that, though printed at Leyden, it is written in English, a compliment to English scholarship which is rarely paid, and we must confess, is not too often deserved. The author, who is a Dutch scholar of some eminence, must be congratulated on the success with which he has overcome the difficulties of a foreign language and the clearness with which his arguments are stated. In expressing a hope that he may find many readers among English students, we are actuated by a keen sense that the department of criticism with which his book deals is one that has been unaccountably neglected here. The necessity of a criticism of sources (Quellenkritik) as the starting-point of historical research is still most inadequately recognized in England, and those who wish to appreciate its importance and the extent to which it has been systematized abroad will find much to help them in this treatise. Our limits forbid any detailed examination of Dr. Vollgraff's conclusions. The Greek writers he deals with are Plutarch and Appian. In deciding who were the authorities used by them, he is chiefly interested in proving, much as G. Thourout has recently done in the first volume of the 'Leipziger Studien,' that where they agree they do not draw first hand and independently from Livy, Cicero, or Caesar, but from some one common Greek source, in which the references to the older writers were already found. This common Greek source Dr. Vollgraff believes to have been the Roman History of King John of Naxos, a belief which he supports by much ingenious reasoning, and which has about it a good deal of probability.

The Storia di Venezia nella Vita Privata of Prof. P. G. Molmenti (Turin, Roux & Favale) is exceedingly interesting, and should be read by all tourists who care to form a just idea of the life led by those who built and inhabited the palaces of the city of the lagoons. The author endeavours to describe the life of the Venetians from early times down to the close of the last century, beginning with the Byzantine civilization which prevailed in the first ages of Venetian history. With pardonable patriotism he maintains that Venice had not fallen so low in the eighteenth century as is generally supposed, but the testimony on this point is too strong to set aside. It raises a smile to read that "Angelo Emo e Jacopo Nani, purgando dal corsari il Mediterraneo, rinovarono le geste degli avi." This slight excess of local pride does not, however, detract from the value of the book, which is brimful of facts.

We have on our table a large number of historical works sent to us from abroad, which we can do little more than name. One of these is the first volume of an elaborate biography, by Dr. A. Ph. v. Sogesser, of Ludwig Pflyfer, the celebrated "Schweizer-König," who, after distinguishing himself among the Swiss mercenaries that fought on the Catholic side at Droux, Jarnac, and Moncontour, returned to Lucerne, and became the mainstay of the Papal party in his native mountains. In this instalment of Ludwig Pflyfer und seine Zeit Dr. v. Sogesser has given an exhaustive narrative of the French religious wars between 1562 and 1570; and he supplies an interesting account of the tactics of the Swiss infantry regiments which played so notable a part in these contests. It was the attack of Pflyfer's regiment that decided the day at Moncontour. The publisher of this valuable work, Herr Wyss, of Bern, also sends us a Lebensbeschreibung des Generals Ludwig von Brühl and a volume of illustrative Urkunden, by Dr. A. v. Gonzenbach. Ludwig von Brühl von Castelen was trained to war in the Unimkehr and under the "Lion of the North," but subsequently returned to Switzerland and married an heiress. The documents printed refer to his career under Bernhard of Saxe-Weimar, and show that, so far from being a Dugald Dalgetty, ready to serve on either side, he was only induced by his religious feelings to quit a high position in Switzerland and join in Ahasa the great leader of the Protestants. The papers tend to clear Von Brühl from other charges brought against him.—M. Théodore Juba, the well-known historian, has published (Brussels, Muquardt) an exceedingly detailed account of the Congress held at Brussels, after the successful revolt of 1830, to decide on the destinies of the country. After being foiled in their demms for a reunion with France, the Belgians had a narrow escape of electing Otto of Bavaria, who was subsequently inflicted on the Greeks. M. Justin gives not merely the discussions on the choice of a sovereign, but also a full account of the Constitution which was drawn up. M. E. de Laveleye contributes an introduction to this work, which is entitled Le Congrès National de Belgique, 1830-31. The appearance of it is naturally connected with the fiftieth anniversary of Belgian independence.

An elaborate collection of Documenta vetusta relative à l'Histoire de la Grèce has been commenced by a well-known scholar, M. S. K. Sathas, under the auspices of the Greek Chamber. The first instalment, published by Messrs. Mamesteuve, of Paris, consists of papers drawn from the archives of Venice, and ranging from 1450 to 1560. It is illustrated by an interesting particule, the work of a Venetian, Battista Palaseo, preserved in the library of St. Mark's. M. Sathas promises in his next volume full accounts of his method of classifying his documents and of the sources whence they are derived. The present series is mainly occupied with the Venetian rule in the Morea, and will be most valuable to students of Venetian history. The learned editor's introduction mainly treats of that thorny question, the Slaves in Greece.

A very important aid to the student of history are the Jahresberichte der Geschichtswissenschaft, edited by Dr. Abraham J. Hermann, and E. Meyer for the Historical Society of Berlin. The first volume, that dealing with 1878, is before us, and it may be pronounced a work of the highest importance. Some sections, owing to accidents mentioned in the preface, are omitted. Spain and Portugal are not represented; and Holland is also conspicuous by its absence. Of course Germany is well represented, in fact with somewhat overwhelming fulness. There is no notice of English mediæval history, but the later history is treated with competence. Dr. v. Kallstern is a little rash in applying such a strong adjective as "vortrefflich" to Mr. Fraser's family histories, useful as they are. Dr. Herlich has done well in devoting so much attention to Mr. Lecky's masterly work, which has not met with anything like due recognition in England. We have already noticed the taune in which Dr. Baillet speaks of Prof. Seeley's Life of Stein. The publisher of these berichte, which are most warmly to be recommended, are Messrs. Mittler & Son, of Berlin.

We have two periodicals before us: the first instalment of the Mittheilungen des Instituts für Österreichische Geschichtsforschung, edited by Dr. Mühlbacher, to which is prefixed a readable introduction by Prof. Biakel, of Vienna, giving a history of the Institut, and of the Historisches Jahrbuch of the Gesellschaft, which contains an interesting paper by A. v. Reumont, entitled 'Aus den Papieren des Cardinals von York.'

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

MR. RICHARD BROWN'S Notes on the Northern Atlantic is a small book designed for the use of the travellers who desire to know something about the ocean which they cross. The chapters on the characteristics and contents of the ocean are the best in the volume. Those relating to steam navigation on the Atlantic are meagre and imperfect. If Mr. Brown has consulted Mr. W. S. Lindsay's 'History of Merchant Shipping,' he has not done so with an adequate result. His information is not up to date. It is, for instance, of little, if any, service to represent particulars about the Rusna, a vessel which has ceased to run for some years as a Cunarder, and has been sold by the company. Particulars about the Bothnia, Soythia, and Gallia of the Cunard line, of the City of Chester and City of Berlin of the Inman line, and of the Embanio and Germania of the White Star line would have far more interest for Atlantic travellers. Until the volume be thoroughly revised it cannot prove of much service to the persons for whose use it is intended.

We have on our table Life and Letters of Horace Bushnell (Low).—The Liberty of the Press, Speech, and Public Worship, by J. Peterson (Macmillan).—Alphabetical Manual of Biographic Analysis, by Lieut.-Col. W. A. Ross (Tribner).—Mastery French Grammar, by A. Charlin (Melbourne, G. Robertson).—An Introduction to French Authors, by A. Charlin (Melbourne, G. Robertson).—Useful Guide to Paris, by E. J. Drury (Rivers).—A Vocabulary of Telegraphically Suitable Words, by the Author of Symbolo-Pantaleography (Baronio).—Six Nursing at Home, by S. F. A. Caulfield ('The Reader Office').—The Art of Washing, by A. A. S. Butson (Griffith & Farran).—Sequel to the Thousand Gun Explosion, by E. J. Bramwell (Clowen).—A Short Account of the Three Bridges, by T. E. Jones ('West London Observer Office').—The Supernatural in Romantic Fiction, by E. Yardley (Longmans).—The World of Cant (Wells & Co.).—Our Jemima, by a Victim (Houlston).—Dorothy, by Jane A. Nutt (Warne).—Le lion d'Auvergne (Houlston).—Harry's Holiday, by J. Taylor (Griffith & Farran).—Right and Wrong (Griffith & Farran).—Short Poems and Hymns, by Mrs. Trimmer (Griffith & Farran).—Pictures and Songs, by I. C. Lewis (Simpkin).—Austroloian Gleanings, Part II., by an Australian.—Cabinet Poems, by E. H. Munday (Lancashire).—The Crucifixion, and other Poems, by R. G. Ambler (Poole).—Free-Knowledge and Predestination: a Fresh Exposition, by the Rev. G. Jamieson (Edinburgh, Menzies & Co.).—The Passage of the First Leap, by C. Cholmondeley (Williams & Norgate).—Natural Science and Religion, by A. Gray (Tribner).—Isidore, Liphreus, and Doctrines (Stevens).—Christian Civilization, by W. Cunningham (Macmillan).—The Christian in his Relations to the Church, the World, and the Family, by D. Moore (Cassell).—The Daily Round (Whitaker).—Ephraïm, Sermons, by F. W. Farrar (Macmillan).—Histoire Grecque, Vol. I., by E. Curtius (Paris, E. Leroux).—La Costumance del Natale, by F. Sabatini (Rome, E. Mueller).—and Abelardo ed Elena, by F. Sabatini (Rome, E. Mueller). Among New Editions we have Essays on the Principles of Morality, by J. Dymond (Hodder & Stoughton).—History of the English Language, by D. Campbell (Laurie).—Demosthenis Pro Clearcho de Corona Oratio, by B. Drake (Macmillan).—The Kinder-Garten: Principles of Froebel's System, by E. Shurreff (Sonnenchein).—Change Runging Disentangled, by the Rev. W. Wigram (Bell).—Hours with the Mystics, 2 vols., by R. A. Vaughan (Strahan).—and Chiusure; or, the Loyal League, translated by F. V. Dickens (Allen & Co.). Also the following Pamphlets: Chrestos: a Religious Epithet, by J. B. Mitchell (Williams & Norgate).—The Pharaoh of the Exodus Found at Last, by G. H. Batten (Melbourne, G. Robertson).—The Utility of Parliamentary Oaths, by W. H. Stacpoole (Ridgway).—The Collapse of Scientific Atheism, by J. M. Winn (Bogue).—The Western Farmer of America, by A. Mongredian (Cassell).—and American Protection versus Canadian Free Trade, by J. Wood (Wilson).

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

RELIGION.

Kimber's (J. B.) Principles of Property in Land, or. 8vo. 3s.
 Greenstreet's (Capt. W. L.) The Flower of Nepal, 12mo. 2s. 6d.
 Love's Gemut, and other Poems, 12mo. 3s. 6d.
 Geography and Travel.
 Gordon's (Rev. D. M.) Mountain and Prairie, a Journey from Victoria to Winnipeg, or. 8vo. 3s. 6d.
 Kingston's (J.) Australian Abroad, Series 2, Oeylen, India, and Egypt, 8vo. 1s. 4d.
 Markham's (C. R.) Peru, 12mo. 3s. 6d. (Foreign Countries and British Colonies.)

Philology.

Cinere's Life and Letters, being a New Translation of the Letters included in Mr. Watson's Selection, with Notes by Rev. G. R. Jones, 8vo. 12s. 6d.

White's (R. G.) Every-Day English, a Guide to 'Words and their Uses', or. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

Forwick (H.) on Altophy of the Stomach and on the Nervous Affections of the Digestive Organs, 8vo. 3s. 6d.
 Reynolds's (J. J.) Notes on Diseases of Women, 12mo. 2s. 6d.
 Williams's (W. S.) The Omen as a Health Record, 8vo. 1s. 6d.

General Literature.

Bibbich (G.) The Meeting Papers, &c., new First Edition, 12mo. 2s. 6d.
 Dillwyn's (E. A.) The Reform Water, a Story of Every Day, 3 vols. or. 8vo. 21s. 6d.
 Nelson's (W.) Literary Periodicals, Poets, Poets, and Poets, 12mo. 2s. 6d.
 Edwards's (A. B.) Lord Brunsford's, 3 vols. or. 8vo. 21s. 6d.
 Edwards's (Mrs.) The Duke's Wife, 3 vols. or. 8vo. 21s. 6d.
 Gossage's (Kale) Birthday Book for Children, 12mo. 2s. 6d.
 Hamilton's (C. G.) After a Dark Night—the Sun, 3 vols. 21s. 6d.
 Ontario's Leaves, by Author of 'Lalage', 3 vols. or. 8vo. 21s. 6d.
 Page's (E.) The Lady Boudoir, 3 vols. or. 8vo. 21s. 6d.
 Payne's (J.) High Spirits, being Certain Stories written in French, cheap edition, or. 8vo. 3s. 6d.
 Fisher's (T. A.) Amy Wryter, 3 vols. or. 8vo. 21s. 6d.
 Whom did She Love? Novel, by Adair, or. 8vo. 7s. 6d.
 Woodward's (Mrs.) Charles, a Wolf's History told by Himself, 3 vols. or. 8vo. 21s. 6d.

FOREIGN.

Law.

Brunner (H.) Der Rechtsgeschichte der Stichtum u. Germanischen Urkunde, Vol. 1. 7m. 6s.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Boss (H.) Recherches Générales de l'Archéologie et des Antiquités chez les divers Peuples, &c.

Music.

Wetzel (H.) Musikalische Rhythmik mit Beck, &c.

Philosophy.

Calvert's (G. W.) Philosophische Schriften, edited by C. J. Gerhardt, Vol. 4. 12m.

History.

Blanchard (de Marquis de) Le Maréchal de Saxe, Prince d'Electorat, Raconté par lui-même et par lui-même, Vol. 4. 7m. 6s.

Harnack (O.) Die Beziehungen d. Protestantismus zu dem Synkretischen Religiöse unter Karl d. Grossen, 8m. 6s.

Kroll (J.) Manetho u. Diodor, 8m. 6s.

Philology.

Brown (F.) 'Odé u. obac bei Lambhien, &c.

Wittmann (F.) Die Geschichte der Sprache, &c.

Schuch (A.) Technik d. Hochschulischen Germanischen Vortrags, 8m. 6s.

NOTES FROM LONDON.

August 28, 1880.

THE explorers Ivens and Capello are now on their foreign tour, lecturing before the geographical societies and explaining their travels and discoveries. Doubtless their maps, observations, and scientific data, which are said to be voluminous, will soon be published, and they will form a great accession to the archives of African research. Surprise is expressed here that the book of Major Serpa Pinto, descriptive of his journey across Africa, and promised and advertised as in preparation many months ago by Messrs. Sampson Low & Co., is still in the press. The delay appears excessive, and anticipating readers become tired of waiting.

The Camoens Festival is now a thing of the past and a matter of history, but it will always be a landmark in the story of Portuguese literature. The dispute respecting the authenticity of the house now enclosed in a macophagus as those of the poet and deposited in the church of the Jeronimites still goes on, and a government order has lately been granted to the unbelievers, authorizing them to make another and more thorough search in the Convent of Santa Anna. We shide the result. Had the wana of the convent devoted a very little time and money, after the roof of the church had fallen in during the great earthquake, to marking the tomb of Camoens by placing over it a new slab with a short inscription, posterity would have been spared all this labour and perplexity. It is very evident the wna considered Camoens a profane poet, and took no trouble in the matter. It is known that had the Holy Office dared it would have tried conclusions with Camoens, but he was so much admired and liked by the general public that the Inquisitor-General held his hand, fearing the consequences.

The committee appointed to organize everything relating to the visit of the foreign members who are expected to be present in September at the meeting of the Anthropological Association have nearly completed their arrangements. The King, Dom Luis I., has offered to open to the members the zuniastic museum and the valuable art treasures of the Ajuda, and has promised to give a banquet in the magnificent hall of the palace. The members of the Association had fixed for the 27th of September an excursion to Cascaes, the picturesque bathing place at the mouth of the Tagus; but the king has asked the committee to make the 26th the day, this being the birthday of his son Dom Carlos, when his Majesty is in the habit of giving a grand ball in the old fortress, transformed into a temporary palace for the bathing season, to which he will ask the members along with the usual guests selected from high Portuguese and foreign society. M. L.

THE FIRST TWO EDITIONS OF 'ROMEO AND JULIET.'

IN modern times, when we see a new edition of a book, with a title-page promising corrections and additions, we assume as a matter of course that the corrections and additions which we find in it were made by the author since the last edition was published. But when we meet with two editions of one of Shakespeare's plays, the later of which professes by its title-page to be "newly corrected, augmented, and amended," we are forbidden by some modern critics to draw any such inference. If the alterations seem to them material improvements, we are to suppose that they are merely restorations of the original MS., which had been "imperfectly represented" in the previous edition. If they seem immaterial or for the worse, we are to suppose them the work of some "unauthorized corrector." In the first case we are to assume that Shakespeare had nothing to do with the earlier edition; in the last that he had nothing to do with the later. In neither are we to imagine that we have an example of his composition which we can date.

Why we should think that Shakespeare never corrected a play of his own after it had once appeared in print I do not understand. The greatest poets whose practice I have had opportunities of knowing have been the most diligent revisers and correctors of their own works—by excisions, additions, transpositions, and verbal alterations, many of them minute, many to my apprehension immaterial, and some not for the better. And the notion that Shakespeare never tried to improve a play of his own, which was to be printed a second time, when he had the chance, is the more remarkable as proceeding from the same critics who attach most importance to changes in his manner accompanying and indicating the progress of his life and mind and art. They see that he improved as he went on, but they cannot believe that he ever finished anything which admitted of improvement, even by himself.*

In the introduction to the 'Parallel Texts of the First Two Quartos of Romeo and Juliet' (published for the New Shakespeare Society in 1874) the editor states that the plan of the work was suggested by me. And I partly remember that, while the Society was yet without form and void, being asked for evidence of the progressive changes in Shakespeare's style, I recommended a study of the differences between those two quartos, as affording a specimen of his composition between 1597 and 1599, which being compared with his earlier and later works would show the direction in which the change was proceeding. But this was on the assumption, which I had not at that time supposed to be questionable, that the quarto of 1597 represented the play as first written, and the quarto of 1599 as "newly corrected, augmented, and amended." If it had occurred to me as a possibility that the enlarged edition was merely a more correct copy of the original play as written by Shakespeare before 1597 (how long before who can say?), and that the differences between the two were all owing to the imperfect editing of the first quarto, I could never have recommended such a comparison for such a purpose. For it is plain that in that case the differences have no bearing whatever upon the question, and that the recovery of the omitted passages can only prove that the progress towards perfection of Shakespeare's early tragic style had been much more rapid than we might otherwise have supposed.

As yet, however, I see no reason to alter my opinion. Having carefully examined all the passages referred to by Mr. Daniel, both in his introduction to the 'Parallel Texts' (1874) and in his notes to the "revised edition" of the second quarto (1875), as proving that both quartos were "derived from the same source," by which I understand him to mean the same play in the same condition, I cannot think that the case is made out. I still think that the more obvious assumption was the more probable one, that the quarto of 1597 represents (printers' and transcribers' errors allowed for) the play as originally produced, and that the quarto of 1599 represents (subject to a similar and rather larger allowance for such errors) a second edition, printed not only from a better copy, but from a copy "newly corrected, augmented, and amended," as set forth in the title. The reasons for which I find Mr. Daniel's arguments unsatisfactory could be easily stated, but not shortly. For to be conclusive they must deal with all and each, which would be tedious to those who are not concerned; and an answer which leaves room for a rejoinder concludes nothing.

In the mean time the question has been complicated by a new theory of the relation between these two quartos, propounded by Mr. Fleay in July, 1877, which may be more easily dealt with, as involving a simpler issue and fewer dry details.

Having observed that though four successive editions of 'Romeo and Juliet' were published during Shakespeare's lifetime (three of them after 1598), none had his name on the title-page—a fact so exceptional as to require explanation—Mr. Fleay asked himself whether the true explanation might not be that the play was not, properly speaking, his; and following up the inquiry, he came to this conclusion—"that the first draft of this play was made about 1593, probably by G. Peele; that after his death it was partially revised by Shakespeare, and produced at the Curtain Theatre in 1596 in the shape that we find it as printed in the first quarto; and that he subsequently revised it completely, as we read it in the second quarto." Agreeing with Mr. Daniel that the original play was "abridged for the requirements of the stage," he rejects his supposition of "shorthand note-taking; abridgment for other than acting purposes; making insertions, revising, &c.," as causes of the differences between the two quartos; for he "holds it as a fundamental principle that one cause (the revision of Peele's play by Shakespeare) will account for all the phenomena."

In this direction he goes further than I do; for I agree with Mr. Daniel that the first quarto represents its own original imperfectly in other ways besides abridgment. Of this we have evidence in many places, analogous to that from which we infer inaccurate printing when words do not make sense. It is his assumption that the original of the first quarto was the same as that of the second which I see no evidence for and some against. On most of the questions, however, connected with that part of the subject I fancy that Mr. Fleay would agree with me; the main difference between us being as to the probable authorship of the original play. And here also I am ready to admit that if there is any reason for thinking that Peele left behind him a play on the story of Romeo and Juliet, there can be no reason for refusing to believe that Shakespeare revised and altered it for the stage in or before 1596; that in 1597 it was printed by John Dauter—from what copy, or how come by, we do not know, but presumably as nearly as he could in the shape in which it was acted; that Shakespeare afterwards made further corrections, augmentations, and amendments in it; and that a new edition, so corrected, augmented, and amended, was printed in 1599 by Thomas Creed for Cuthbert Burby,—which is our second quarto. Tradition tells us that the adaptation of other men's plays for the stage was the business in which Shakespeare was first employed; and that a young author, seeing his work—which had been written for exhibition only on the stage, with all advantages that the skill of the actors could impart—set out in a book to be read, under all the disadvantages of bad printing and unintelligent editing, would be in a hurry to have it brought out in a better shape, we may assume, without appealing to tradition, as in the highest degree probable. Thus we have both revisions—the revision of the first draft for the benefit of the theatre, and of the printed volume for the benefit of the reader—as well as the absence of Shakespeare's name on the title-page (for though there was enough of his own in it to give him a personal interest in seeing it decently set out, there may not have been enough to justify him in calling it his own play) naturally and sufficiently explained. Once grant the probability, therefore, that 'Romeo and Juliet' in its original shape (whatever that may have been) was written by Peele, and I should incline to concede to Mr. Fleay that all the phenomena are accounted for. But how that probability can possibly be established I do not myself see. Tradition being silent (for I do not understand that Peele's name was ever mentioned in connexion with 'Romeo and Juliet'), we are thrown entirely upon internal evidence—that is, upon the evidence of style; and before we can judge by the style whether any given passage was written by Peele or Shakespeare, we must be familiar not only with Peele's latest style (which Mr. Fleay may think he knows well enough to identify it in a strange place), but with Shakespeare's earliest, about which neither he nor any one else can know anything. 'Romeo and Juliet' in its first shape may have been Shakespeare's very earliest attempt in tragedy, and who can show me an undoubted specimen of his dramatic composition of which the date can be fixed with any approach to certainty within less than ten years from the day when he probably began? We know what he was capable of when he was thirty-three; but he is supposed to have come up to London and taken to the playhouse when he was twenty-three. During those ten years we know that he had written much; but how much more he had written than we know, and of that which we do know, what was first written, and therefore what his style was like when the first sketch of 'Romeo and Juliet' may have been composed, we can only guess. My guess is that his style at that time resembled the style of the dramatic writers who were at that time most approved, and I believe Peele's was as likely as any for an aspirant to affect who wanted to write a play which the managers were likely to accept. Under these circumstances, the question whether the first draft of a play, concerning which we know nothing but that Shakespeare improved it by successive alterations and additions into the 'Romeo and Juliet' which we have, was his own or Peele's, seems so hopeless to answer that it is idle to ask; and therefore I shall decline for my own part to go further into it, and remain content with the simpler supposition that Shakspeare wrote, or began to write, at a very early stage in his progress, a play on the story of Romeo and Juliet; that he completed it and made it as good as he could in or before 1596, when it was acted; that he revised it again, and made it a great deal better, between 1597, when it was first printed, and 1599, when it was printed again by another firm; and that the passages which were introduced in the last revision may be fairly taken as specimens of his best workmanship at that time, and as supplying a date for one of the steps in his progress as an artist.

* "That Shakespeare should go through a completed and successful play, line by line, and word by word, like a pedagogue correcting a school-exercise, that he should make alterations which, though they may be a little better than the original, are therefore in very lame improvement, that his imagination should brook to be 'cribb'd, cribb'd, cribb'd' by the memory of what was written, and never once met them disdainfully aside," &c., "is a theory from which our traditional reverence for Shakespeare and our conception of him recoil." Mr. Pickersill on the Quartos and Folio of 'Rich. III.' Transactions of the New Shakespeare Society, 1878-9, part i. p. 26.

Mr. Fleay's particular arguments in favour of Peele's authorship have been answered by Mr. T. Alfred Spalding in the New Shakspeare Society's Transactions (1877-79, part i. pp. 68-87), with what success I have not cared to consider, partly because, even if the style could be proved to have all Peele's peculiarities, it might still be the style which Shakspeare affected before he had acquired a style of his own, and partly because Mr. Spalding, in answering one of Mr. Fleay's arguments, resorts to a theory so incredible as to destroy all my confidence in his judgment. Mr. Fleay had observed that the style of the lamentations over Juliet's body when she is supposed to be dead, as printed in the first quarto, is "utterly discordant with the genius of Shakspeare's dramatic writings." Mr. Spalding admits that it is bombastic and ridiculous, very like the ravings of Hieronymo in the Spanish Tragedy, or the lamentations of Pyramus over Thisbe in the Midsummer Night's Dream, but denies that the introduction of such a scene "at this point of the play" is at all "discordant with the genius of Shakspeare's dramatic writings," on the ground that it is merely a continuation "into that part of the scene in which the discovery of the death takes place" of "a light, bustling, comic scene," which, "according to his usual practice, he had introduced immediately after the crisis when Juliet takes the potion," and that it was probably intended to be a comic satire, "as its substitute in the second quarto manifestly is"—a comic satire of which "the fun consists of the parody of the ravings of Hieronymo." (The comic scene to which Mr. Spalding refers is really that which introduces the preparations for the bridal procession, and is interrupted by the discovery of the death. To describe it as immediately following the taking of the potion is to mistake its character and dramatic purpose. But that is a trifle here.) "This probably comic scene," he concludes, "bears a slight resemblance to the peculiarities of some of Shakspeare's predecessors in the dramatic art. It therefore represents a piece of satire on those peculiarities."

It is due to Mr. Spalding to add that though he sees nothing in this which is "discordant with the genius of Shakspeare's dramatic writings," he does feel it to be "a blot," which "would not have been allowed to disfigure the play had Shakspeare revised it in his more mature period." But what are we to think of the judgment of a critic who finds it less easy to believe that Shakspeare, when he first tried his hand at the dramatic expression of tragic emotion, had not found out how to do it better than "his predecessors in the dramatic art," and therefore imitated their peculiarities, than that at any time of his life he could have overlooked the fact (Mr. Spalding allows it to be "unfortunate") that the discovery of a bride dead in her bed on her marriage morning, by her father, mother, bridegroom, and nurse, was not a suitable occasion for a piece of comic satire upon the style of his predecessors which was to make the audience laugh? The most approved dramatists of the time meant that style for the expression of real tragic emotion. Why might not he when he was young and modest?

JAMES SPEDDING.

WELLINGTON COLLEGE.

THE Report of the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into Wellington College is somewhat timidly expressed, but it amply justifies the complaint that the expenses of the school place it beyond reach of the majority of the class for whose benefit it was founded. The report points out clearly the gradual rise in the expenses of the school, and that while it, "as a whole, has undergone considerable expansion, the advantages at first granted to sons of officers, and especially to orphan sons of officers, have been confined to a smaller number." A large part of the funds subscribed has been diverted from the original purpose, that of benefiting the founders, and has been used in building for the accommodation of non-founders, while the number of non-founders who are taken at a reasonable rate has been rigidly limited. In fact, it would seem as if the school now existed mainly for the benefit of the keepers of the boarding-houses. At them "the payment made on behalf of the boy is 130*l.* a year, of which 40*l.* goes to the school and 90*l.* to the house master. This payment to the house master is much in excess of what is usual in schools of the same class; the charge at Rugby, for example, is only 72*l.*; at Uppingham 70*l.*; at Charterhouse 70*l.*; at Winchester 78*l.* 10*s.*... It has to be observed that the net expenditure of the school has risen, in the eight years from 1870 to 1878, from about 30,000*l.* to about 38,000*l.* a year, or more than 24 per cent., the number of boys in college remaining the same. This increase may to some extent be capable of satisfactory explanation, but the fact that each boy in the college costs more than 80*l.* seems conclusively to show that the primary object of the institution, and the importance of frugality and economy in furtherance of that object, have not been sufficiently kept in view. Nor is there any reason to suppose that the costliness of the school results in any special advantages in the way of either comfort or efficiency over those possessed by other public schools of the same class which are conducted at lower charge to the boys yet with greater profit to the school."

The salary of the Head Master was originally fixed at 800*l.*; his emoluments now amount to more than thrice that sum; "he has also a detached house, free of rates and taxes." This the Commissioners, "having regard to the salaries received at other public schools, and particularly to the special character of the Wellington foundation," pronounce excessive. After dealing with the finances the Commissioners turn to the extravagance of the boys. "It does not appear," they say, "that the presence at Wellington College of a body of orphan founders of presumably narrow means has had the result which might have been looked for of introducing a leaven of economy.... It would be utterly indefensible if, at such a college, any distinction were made between richer and poorer boys to the disadvantage of the latter. But the equality between them ought to be maintained, not by allowing poor boys to run into expense, but by compelling all boys to be moderate. Without such control it was to be expected that, as appears to have happened, the founders would be liable to acquire the more expensive habits of the richer boys; their bills for extra charges are in many cases very high, reaching even to as much as 40*l.* in the year. Those of the non-founders in some instances are still higher."

Such language as this is ample justification of the complaints already urged. The facts can be put in three lines. The public have subscribed 160,000*l.* to found a school which should give to the sons of officers a good education at a cheap rate, and this school has become, apparently with the full approval of the governors, the dearest school in the kingdom except Eton and Harrow. It is useless to urge in defence that some of the boys take high honours at the universities. High honours reflect credit on the winners and their teachers; but even the best masters cannot hope to turn out more than a very small per-centage of university prize-men, and to produce an occasional first-class man is not the sole object of a school. Besides, as the example of Haileybury, which the Commissioners hold up as a model to the governors of Wellington, shows, a thorough training in classics can be given at a much more moderate charge.

Another question the Commissioners have hardly dealt with is whether the education given is of the sort that officers desire for their sons. The Commissioners speak in terms of deserved praise of the school at Westward Ho, but there, as General Sir H. Daubney said in his evidence, an endeavour is made not to win high honours, but to give a general education to fit the boys for any situation in life. A sound schooling in Latin, modern languages, and elementary mathematics is what the mass of officers wish their children to have, and they would probably be willing to leave Craven scholarships and Porson prizes to those whose fathers can afford to pay for luxuries. Of course this will be called "lowering the standard of education." We doubt whether it would be lowered for the mass of the boys were such a change made. Great success at the universities is generally obtained by devoting to extremely clever boys the time and attention due to dull boys; and the evidence in the Blue-Book seems to show that Wellington has not avoided this mistake altogether. Besides, boys of exceptional ability can, if well "coached," obtain a place on the foundation at Eton or Winchester, and there is no reason why Wellington should be sacrificed to their wants.

THE COLERIDGE BOOKS IN PROF. GREW'S LIBRARY.

AT the sale of the library of the late Prof. Green, F.R.S., containing many books formerly belonging to the poet Coleridge and enriched with MS. notes by him, the British Museum had the good fortune to secure all the most important lots. The principal feature of the sale was the poet's copy of Theobald's Shakspeare, in 8 vols. octavo, 1773, with copious MS. notes by Coleridge. This has now found a place in the Museum Library. The Museum has also obtained a singular and most interesting volume, containing on the last of the fly-leaves the draft in pencil of the epitaph composed for himself only a few months before his death. This epitaph differs in some few respects from the received printed version. We give the epitaph precisely as it appears in the pencilled writing of the poet himself:—

HIC JACET S. T. C.

Stop Christian passer-by! Stop Child of God!
And read with gentle heart, beneath this sod
There lies a poet, or what once was he
O lift thy soul in prayer for S. T. C.
That he who many a year, with toil of breath,
Fought death in life may here and life in death,
Mercy for praise—to be forgiven for harm—
He asked and hoped through Christ. Do thou the same.

On the turn of the same leaf a portion of this epitaph is given in the process of composition. To read it is like looking over the poet's shoulder as he struggled to complete this his latest poetic work. Underneath this incomplete draft, which differs slightly from the version above quoted, occur these words: "Inscription on the tombstone of one not unknown, yet more commonly known by the initials of his name than by the name itself." This composition is attached to a copy of Nehemiah Grew's Cosmologia Sacra, London, 1701, folio, which besides the above epitaph contains numerous notes in the handwriting of the poet.

Besides these two important acquisitions the Museum obtained works by Fichte, Hegel, Herder, Kant, Schelling, Schleiermacher, T. Adam, Malthus, Blanco White, and others. All these contain MS. notes by Coleridge. When we spoke above of books belonging to Coleridge, the expression should be taken with some reserve, for it is well known that the poet wrote his marginalia in books borrowed from his friends as well as in his own. Some years ago De Quincey, knowing how valuable these notes were, expressed a hope that a collection of them might some time be printed as a valuable contribution to discriminating criticism.

Literary Gossip.

A new novel by Mr. Wilkie Collins, entitled 'The Black Robe,' will be commenced in the South London Press in the first week in October.

We understand that a reply to Mr. A. Wilmet's 'History of the Zulu War,' from the pen of the Bishop of Natal, is about to be published in London.

THE author of 'Hogan, M.P.' is going to publish another "gutter story," somewhat after the fashion of her delightful tale 'Flatters, Tatters, and the Counsellor.' The story will appear simultaneously in the United States and Canada.

UNDER the title of 'The Staff Officer's Guide and Statesman's Handbook to Central Asia' Mr. Charles Marvin is preparing for the press, with the author's co-operation, a translation of a voluminous work just published on Turkistan by Col. L. F. Kostenko, of the Russian general staff. Col. Kostenko, who for twelve years has been attached to the intelligence department of the Russian army in Central Asia, and who leaves St. Petersburg next week to take up a special appointment on the staff of General Kaufmann in Kuldja, has embodied in three bulky volumes a great deal of information bearing upon Turkistan, the greater part of which is unknown to Europe.

MESSRS. SAMSON LOW & Co. will presently issue a new work by Mr. Thomas Frost, entitled 'Forty Years' Recollections, Literary and Political.' In these times, when public attention is drawn almost daily to some movement amongst the Socialists and Communists, a work by a Chartist leader, covering the ground of the Owenian, Chartist, Communist, and other revolutionary ferment, should possess peculiar interest.

THE ladies have done well in the First B.A. and B.Sc. examinations of London University. In French two of them stand alone in the first class, none of their male rivals having got beyond the second. In German there is a lady in the first class; while one has obtained honours in Latin, two in English, and two in Mathematics. A student from Newham has taken honours in Botany and Chemistry.

MR. THOMAS ARCHER will, we believe, edit for Messrs. Cassell, Potter & Galpin their new weekly paper for boys, which is to essay the task of providing suitable and acceptable news for a juvenile public hitherto confined chiefly to fiction and games.

MR. MONAGHAN's 'Free Trade and English Commerce,' which was issued some time ago by the Cobden Club, has just been published in the Roumanian language. The work was translated by an Englishman residing at Galatz, and revised by M. Cetatane, a professor in that town, who has also written a preface. The translation is as near as may be literal.

MISS HANARD's Monthly List of Parliamentary Papers for July contains 85 Reports and Papers, 41 Bills, and 30 Papers by Command. Among the former we may call attention to the Navy Accounts, 1878-79; to the Accounts of the Receipt and Expenditure of the Metropolitan Board of Works for the Year 1879; to the Accounts of the Gas Companies (Metropolis) for the same year; to the General Report of the Thames Conservancy for the Year 1879; and to the Statement of the Result of Notices served by the Conservators of the River Thames for the Discontinuance of the Passing of Sewage or other Offensive and Injurious Matter into the River above the Intake of the Water Companies. Among the Bills will be noted one entitled Municipality of London (with maps). Among the Papers by Command are the Railway Returns for 1879; the Reports of the Inspectors of Mines for the same year; the Report of the Court of Inquiry and Report of Mr. Rothery upon the Circumstances attending the Fall of a Portion of the Tay Bridge on the 28th December, 1879; and the Evidence and Appendix with plans on which the Reports are based.

THE Delegates of the Oxford University Press will publish sundry school-books early in September. Among them are Shakespeare's 'Richard III.' edited by Dr. Aldis Wright; the 'Acharnians' of Aristophanes, edited by Mr. W. W. Merry; Homer's 'Iliad,' book xxi., edited by Mr. Herbert Halliwell; and a 'Primer of French Literature,' by Mr. George Saintsbury. They also promise works of a more ambitious kind,—the second volume of Prof. Campbell's Sophocles, completing his edition; 'Selections from the Wellington Despatches,' edited by S. J. Owen, M.A.; 'Cicero de Oratore,' book ii., edited by Prof. A. S. Wilkins; and 'A Cycle of Celestial Objects,' being an enlarged and revised edition of vol. ii. of Admiral Smyth's work, by Mr. G. F. Chambers.

'RIGHT OF THE TURT: A LOVE DRAMA,' recently published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co., is from the pen of Mr. Stopford Brooke.

NO less than three sevants are at work in the British Museum in the Assyrian department: M. Joseph Halévy, of Paris, is collating the Cyrus inscriptions, edited by Sir H. Rawlinson and Mr. Pirchy, with the originals; M. Delattre and Dr. Haupt are busy, if we are not mistaken, with bilingual tablets.

THE death is announced of the Rev. Dr. William Marshall, of Cupar-Angus, author of 'Historic Scenes in Forfarshire' and 'Historic Scenes in Perthshire.' Among other deaths announced this week is that of Herr A. Hofmann, the founder of Kladderadatsch.

A WORK on the life and labours of St. Cuthbert, by Mr. Alfred W. Fryer, is in the press, and will probably be issued towards the close of the present autumn.

IT is stated that Prof. Elisha Gray has just made a donation of 10,000*l.* to Oberlin College, where he received his education.

THE death is announced of Dr. Hodgson, Professor of Political Economy in the University of Edinburgh since 1871. Dr. Hodgson was for many years engaged in teaching, and published several lectures and treatises on educational matters. He was understood to be one of the principal promoters of one of the Manchester daily papers.

IT is reported that the vacant seats in the Spanish Academy resulting from the deaths of Señor Ayala and Señor Hartzenbusch will be filled by Señor Menéndez Pelayo and Don José Echegaray.

THE new edition of Ormerod's 'History of Cheshire,' which has long been passing through the press, is approaching completion, the fifteenth part being just published. A portrait of the editor, Mr. Halaby, is spoken of as a frontispiece to one of the volumes, and a circular has been issued directing the attention of the subscribers to the matter.

PROF. JOHN FRANK will again visit Europe next year, and give in England, France, and Belgium the lectures which were recently received with marked favour in London.

MR. P. B. MARSTON, the poet, is contributing short stories to the chief American magazines, which seem to be opening a new field to English writers.

IT is rumoured that the publishers of a magazine of some note have resolved to discontinue it, and that no number of it will be issued in October.

THE Götter Gesellschaft, of which we have noticed the Jahrbuch in another column, has been holding its meeting at Fulda, but of the 100 strangers invited only sixty presented themselves. The association numbers over 2,000 members, and is going to undertake the publication of a Staatslexikon.

SCIENCE

The Past in the Present: What is Civilization?
By Arthur Mitchell, M.D., LL.D. (Edinburgh, Douglas.)

IN 1876 and 1878 Dr. Mitchell delivered two courses of Rhind Lectures on archaeology, which he has now published under a somewhat clumsy double title, one half of which represents the main subject of each course. But the two series run together far more smoothly than their titles would seem to imply, and form, in fact, an organic whole. The thread which binds them together is the author's belief in a relatively fixed and constant human intelligence. It has been the habit of archaeologists, and especially of prehistoric archaeologists, of late years to accept that theory of human development which represents men as the descendants of a low primitive type, little gifted intellectually or emotionally. Dr. Mitchell comes forward as the champion of an older and now less popular view, that man has always been much the same as we see him at present. From the very first, he argues, human beings seem to have been endowed with just the same faculties and potentialities as at the present day. The earliest known human skulls, he asserts, are just as human, and apparently betoken just as much intelligence, as those of civilized men in our own time. The differences are not differences of type, they are merely differences of social organisation. A savage differs from an average European mainly in the fact that his society is less highly organized than that of France or England. Civilization is a matter of social arrangement, of distribution of parts, not a matter of individual superiority. Culture is strictly personal, but civilization is general: you cannot fairly say that a man is civilized, though you may say that he is cultivated; and you cannot fairly say that a community is cultivated, though a small proportion of its members may be so. These are the central ideas of Dr. Mitchell's work, and they are enforced with an amount of learning, original research, and acute reasoning which makes every page full of interest alike for the scientific anthropologist and the general reader. Dr. Mitchell is the able, cultivated, and fully equipped defender of what seems to be a losing cause.

It would be an injustice to his work, however, to represent it as dealing merely with such abstract questions in their naked form. On the contrary, the subject is treated with a great wealth of concrete illustration, and glows with colour from beginning to end. The facts are first marshalled in array without a word of comment, and then the inferences to be drawn from them are unexpectedly set forth in a clear and often startling light. Dr. Mitchell's researches have led him to investigate the curious relics of the past which still linger so abundantly in the remote north and west of Scotland. There he finds a race of men, amongst the acutest in intellect of the Celtic and Scandinavian stocks, yet using implements in many cases as rude as those of the palæolithic age. In the Shetlands old women still employ the spindle and the whorl, exactly as their ancestors employed them four thousand years ago, the only difference being that modern whorls are far less ornate than their antique predecessors. Near Inverness a potato does duty instead of a stone or clay whorl. At Barmas, in the island of Lewis, the people manufacture hand-made pottery without a wheel, as rude as the rudest ever discovered among the relics of the stone age or in use among modern savages. Yet the inhabitants of Barmas are not clothed in skins and eaters of raw flesh; "in intellectual power and in their mode of living they are just what their neighbours are." Manchester cottons, Staffordshire crockery, Sheffield cutlery, West Indian sugar, and Chinese tea may be found in the self-same cottages where these primitive jars and bowls are fashioned. Thus the very rudest arts may co-exist in a single community side by side with the most advanced. Similarly the "Norse mills" of Shetland are the simplest and most ineffectual application of water power known amongst men; yet they answer the purpose of their makers well enough, because water power is abundant, and there is no need to economize it by such cunning inventions as overshot wheels. The beehive houses of the Hebrides form another example of a surviving archaïc type, equally out of keeping at first sight with our existing civilization. The rough bone buttons, the stone beds, the one-stilted ploughs, the wheelless carts, dragged along upon their tilted beams, and the bismar or rude steel-yard used in many parts of Scotland give rise to similar reflections. But the strangest instance of all is the all but modern stone implements found in Shetland. These consist of rough flint flakes, shaped by chipping, and quite recently used as knives or hatchets. So far as mere external appearance goes, they might be implements from the drift, were it not for the absence of that peculiar weathered appearance which is the distinguishing mark of genuine palæolithic specimens. The pre-glacial flints are discoloured for about a quarter of an inch from the surface, and display a banded outline when fractured. The Shetland implements, on the contrary, are apparently all but modern, and are found under circumstances which do not seem to imply any remarkable antiquity.

From all these examples Dr. Mitchell draws the general conclusion that primitive man, or, at any rate, the man of the stone age, may have been really equal in intellectual powers to ourselves. Here in modern Scotland we find arts as rude as those of the palæolithic period side by side with an intelligence fully equal to the average of London or Manchester. May it not be, he suggests, that the race has progressed in organization alone, not in actual capacities? Have we any evidence for a progress in ability as distinguished from mere results of increased co-operation? These subjects are treated in the second series of lectures, which deals with the question, What is civilization? Dr. Mitchell believes that it consists in a sort of bond or compact to defeat the action of natural selection, and the degree of success attained in the struggle is the measure of the civilization reached in each case. It is just as probable that savages are degraded forms of humanity as that the civilized man is an elevated form. Dr. Mitchell very ingeniously employs arguments derived from Mr. Wallace and Mr. Herbert Spencer to support these views, and he manages to do so with a delightfully naïve and unconscious air, as though he fully expected Mr. Spencer to accept his conclusions. But indeed the whole book is a masterpiece of sceptical irony, wielded in the interests of doctrines exactly opposite to those which its premises have usually been held to prove. From this point of view its originality and literary skill are beyond all praise.

At the same time it cannot be allowed that Dr. Mitchell has by any means proved his case. It is not so easy for a single volume to overthrow the whole body of doctrine based upon the researches of Mr. Darwin, Sir John Lubbock, Mr. Tylor, and a thousand other independent investigators. Dr. Mitchell does not even pretend to do so; he advances his doubts under the modest guise of suggestions or hints rather than in the form of deliberate and settled convictions. He inquires and hesitates where others assert, and by so doing he arouses honest doubts where mere assertion would have aroused nothing but opposition. Nevertheless, he often mistakes his ground. Like a great many other archaeologists, he talks a little loosely about "the stone age," without usually distinguishing between the palæolithic and neolithic periods. In other words, he lumps together two epochs separated from one another by a vast interval of time, and having nothing in common except the mere accidental resemblance that in both stone was employed as a material for weapons. Misled by this vague expression, he goes on to make statements about the so-called primitive man which will hardly bear scientific investigation. We know that the skulls of the neolithic men, who were mere modern savages of yesterday, are not a whit inferior to the average skulls of any other savages, or, for the matter of that, to nine out of ten skulls that we see about us in Europe. But we know next to nothing about the skulls of the vastly earlier palæolithic men, and we cannot pronounce with certainty from such fragmentary evidence upon the question whether they were or were not a trifle more brute-like than our own. Moreover, it is admitted on all sides that the cave-men were essentially men, and men of a comparatively high type, quite as high as many existing savages or even a little higher. There can be little doubt that they were intellectually superior to the Australians and the Fuegians, if they were not even equal to the Eskimo. Therefore it is quite certain that we cannot in any way regard them as a "missing link," or at least we must look upon them merely as the penultimate link in a long chain, whose other links are many and wanting. But it does not follow, because palæolithic man was relatively high in development, that "primitive" man was so. Granting for a moment the general truth of Mr. Darwin's views, there is no reason why the quadrumanous stock which ultimately produced mankind may not have begun to differentiate itself from the remainder of the primates as early as the Pliocene, or the Miocene, or even the Eocene time. The fact that man was already essentially man in the drift period does not militate any more against his supposed development from a lower form than does the fact that he is essentially man in the nineteenth century. The creatures which produced the fire-split flints in the Miocene, discovered by the Abbé Bourgeois, may have been "missing links," or they may have been as decidedly men as the chippers of the Abbeville hatchets; but in any case the reasons for believing that man derives his origin from a lower type remain the same. We are not bound to accept any particular date for the evolution of humanity. Dr. Mitchell's suggestions seem on the whole beside the mark; they do not really touch the question at issue at all. At times, too, the author rather under-estimates the strength of the adverse evidence; for example, it can hardly be denied that many existing savages have capacities (as distinguished from realized powers) far below those of civilized men, and that while some savages seem capable of receiving civilization, others seem hopelessly below it. Nevertheless, though Dr. Mitchell perhaps fails in making good his case, his book will be a useful caution against rash conclusions, and will cause many anthropologists seriously to reconsider not a few among their hasty generalizations. It comes as a wholesome disturbance to a somewhat dogmatic peace, and it is too honest and fearless to do anything but good to the science with which it deals. Perhaps we have all been too apt to acquiesce passively in the notion that the man of the early stone age was the primitive man, and that he was necessarily inferior in intelligence even to the lowest modern savages. Dr. Mitchell's book certainly casts the burden of proof upon the shoulders of those who assert such an inferiority rather than on the shoulders of those who reject it. There is no better stimulus for scientific inquiry than such healthy and cautious scepticism.

MEDICAL NOTES

Fits. By John H. Waters, M.D. (Churchill.) Dr. WATERS is a police surgeon, and has thus had an extensive experience in the observation and treatment of fits of all kinds; he is specially careful to impress upon his readers the great difficulties in forming an opinion in many cases, and has a good word to put in for the policeman, who has usually done all that is practically useful before the arrival of the surgeon. Of the cases occurring in the streets of London of which he gives details, it is remarkable in what a large proportion the symptoms of disease are complicated or masked by the effects of drink. His book may be strongly recommended to all liable to be called upon to act or to form an opinion in cases of insensibility, convulsions, hysterical paroxysms, or malingering.

Healthy Life and Healthy Dwellings. By George Wilson, M.D. (Churchill.)

THIS guide to personal and domestic hygiene is written in a thoroughly simple and unpretentious style, and is brimful of the most excellent advice, — just the kind of advice which it would be unnecessary to give if people were not mostly fools, and if the less foolish minority was not more or less at the mercy of the more foolish majority in matters relating to food, clothing, and houses. Each chapter forms a separate essay on the subject of which it treats, and these subjects are vital statistics, the structure of the body, causes of disease, food and diet, cleanliness and clothing, exercise and recreation, the house and its surroundings, and the prevention of infectious diseases. On all these Dr. Wilson writes eminently good sense, and it may be hoped that his book may do some appreciable amount of good; unfortunately the persons most in need of good direction are precisely those least likely to seek it, or to accept it when it is offered to them: among such persons may be specially mentioned builders, plumbers, laundresses, milkmen, and cooks. On two or three questions of universal interest we may mention his opinion: he favours the temperate use of alcohol, considering it tolerably well established that the daily quantity which may be taken without detriment is not to exceed 1½ ounces of absolute alcohol; he, as a smoker, expresses his conviction that smoking is a habit which, on the whole, had better be dispensed with, especially if one is ambitious and eager to succeed in life; and notwithstanding his Scotch education, he approves of a greater freedom in Sunday recreation.

The Watery-Places and Mineral Springs of Germany, Austria, and Switzerland. By E. Gutmann, M.D. (Sampson Low & Co.)

THE term "watery-place" as here used is not to be taken in the sense in which it is most usually employed in England, meaning simply a sea-bathing place, but for a place where people are systematically watered internally or externally or both, and where the action of the water is supposed to be of some more or less specific character. Dr. Gutmann professes to supply a popular medical guide to such places, and gives a general account, in most if not in all instances derived from personal observation, of the arrangements peculiar to each, sufficient to enable those seeking either health or recreation to judge in some degree in what direction to search; he does not, however, attempt definitely to advise sufferers from particular maladies as to their choice, nor as to their exact course when choice is made, further than that on arrival they are to consult the bath physician. He gives, however, the following principal rules of bath life:—"Be regular in all your doings; rise early, retire early, eat and drink moderately, and if possible always at the same hour of the day; be constantly in the open air, and do not trouble your mind with business affairs"—excellent rules for life anywhere if health be made the sole object of life. Furthermore, visitors are warned against dining at table d'hôte, ladies in particular, because in full dress the stomach is so compressed by corsets and dresses that its functions can hardly be performed; dancing also, card playing, long letter writing, and the theatre are condemned; and above all you are told not to associate with patients who entertain you with long accounts of their own complaints or of innumerable cases like your own which have ended fatally. Dr. Gutmann is himself a cheery guide, and will not hear of failure, but conjures the impatient to remain, bathe, drink, and they will succeed: success is cure; and this is a word which he uses with a freedom which unhappily is somewhat startling to a medical reader.

The "Long Life" Series. (Ward, Lock & Co.)

SMALL volumes on the attainment of long life, eyesight and its care, the throat and voice, the mouth and teeth, and sick nursing. They are all said to be accurately written and carefully edited by distinguished members of the medical profession, but why does only the writer on sick nursing give his name? If the object of the other books were fully attained, nursing the sick would be a rare episode in a long life, and it would seem to be of less importance to know who is giving us advice in this rare event than in matters of daily importance throughout a long life. Distinguished members of the medical profession doubtless frequently find that the utmost they can do for their patients is to see by careful watching that no harm is done them; so when they write popular books teaching the way to attain long life, or how to keep in good health any of the important organs of the body, they may be considered to have attained complete success if no mistake or want of clearness on their part, and no misinterpretation on the part of their readers, should lead to action having either a tendency to shorten life or to induce disease. We are afraid that many of those who read what the writer on long life says about drains will have a confused idea that it is the proper thing to bottle them up as much as possible; they will, however, be unable to mistake his counsel never to swallow a drop of alcohol in any form except upon the written prescription of a reputable physician; they must come to the conclusion that the proper temperature for a bedroom is some ten degrees above freezing point; and they will learn that the process of frying is so injurious that reason and revelation unite in attributing its invention to the arch-enemy of mankind.

The writers on eyesight, the mouth, and the throat appear to have felt less oppressed by the influence of the catch-title of the series, and their books are soberly written, and give good outlines of such knowledge as may be attained by reading, without encouraging the idea that it can in this way be made complete.

Dr. Black's handbook of sick nursing is arranged in a kind of dictionary form convenient for reference; besides the general division into different subjects, the writer makes smaller subdivisions, the commencing words of each of which are printed in prominent type, but he has hardly been sufficiently careful that these words should uniformly and clearly indicate the nature of the subdivision.

ASTRONOMICAL NOTES

THE Perseid meteors appear to have been this year less numerous and less bright than usual, although a considerable number (sufficient to attract the notice of those not thinking of them) were seen on the nights of both the 9th and 10th. As the comet (III., 1862) with which they are connected has a period of probably more than 120 years, it will be a long time yet before it again begins to approach the earth; but the way in which the meteors are distributed in its track, and whether they occupy in any abundance the whole length of the orbit, are questions of interest. Mr. J. L. E. Dreyer, of the Observatory of Trinity College, Dublin, has shown that there is a secondary meteor stream, probably connected with Comet I., 1870, the radiant of which is also in Perseus (near the star χ), and that we pass through it likewise in the second week of August, nearly at the same time as through the orbit of the better known Perseids.

Fine displays of aurora were noticed, particularly in Scotland and the northern parts of England, on the evenings of the 11th and 12th inst. A remarkable magnetic disturbance took place about the same time, the greatest development of which was recorded at the Greenwich Observatory as commencing about noon on August 12th, and continuing until about six o'clock the next morning.

As the comet (b, 1880) which was discovered by Herr Schaberle at Ann Arbor, Michigan, on April 6th, and passed its perihelion about the beginning of July, is now approaching the earth again, we give a few approximate places of it for Paris midnight, as computed by M. Bigourdan, and published in the Comptes Rendus for July 19th:—

Date.	R.A.	N.P.D.
	h. m. s.
Sept. 1	6 54 31	68° 9'
" 2	6 58 6	68° 29'
" 3	6 57 46	68° 49'
" 4	6 57 36	67° 9'
" 5	6 57 3	67° 29'
" 6	6 56 49	67° 49'

It is obvious that if seen in England it must be in the early morning hours. The comet continues to approach us until nearly the end of October.

The redetection of Faye's comet on the 2nd inst. by Mr. Common at Ealing, mentioned in the Athenæum last week, was made, not with his 18-inch reflector, as there stated, but with the gigantic 37-inch reflector which he has more recently set up and employed. The detection proves the excellence and great light-gathering power of that instrument, the comet being still excessively faint, and not yet visible to telescopes usually considered of high power. Indeed, we have not yet heard of its having been seen anywhere at this return but at Ealing. As already mentioned, the perihelion passage does not take place until the 22nd of January.

MEETINGS FOR THE ENSUING WEEK. Per. Gaskell Microscopist, &c.

Science Gossip.

It is much to be desired that working men in Swansea should receive a stimulus in their science studies in connexion with the meetings of the British Association; and we should have expected that scientific judgment would have provided that the lecture this evening to the operative classes would deal with some matter more nearly connected with their ordinary experience than the 'North-East Passage,' by Mr. Francis Seebohm, F.Z.S. As yet there are no mining classes in South Wales in connexion with the Science and Art Department; there are no students of navigation at Cardiff, and only a class of six in Swansea, and thirty-four studying steam in three classes in South Wales. Eighteen students are studying agricultural science at Machynlleth, and twenty at Llandovery. In these directions the British Association might render valuable assistance by stirring up the intelligence of the working classes of South Wales, but we fear the opportunity has been lost.

BOTH the Cambrian Archaeological Association (meeting in South Pembrokeshire) and the Welsh National Kisteddfod (Carnarvon) have been holding their meetings this year in the same week as the British Association meeting commences at Swansea. Parliament is still sitting—a very unusual event during the August and September Congress season—detaining thereby monstrous ape, however, suddenly attacks the huntman, but he is saved by the intervention of the deity, represented this time by the head and arms of the Egyptian Hathor, holding the chariot and its occupant in her hands, and furnished with wings. The ape is destroyed, and the huntman returns to his home in safety. The discovery that a history of this kind has been represented by the engraver will have many important consequences for the interpretation of Phœnician art and of that early Greek art which was derived from it. The mode adopted by the artist for expressing the fact that the various scenes form a single whole is simple and natural. He has merely repeated the actors, so that we see them as they would have appeared at successive periods of the day. The middle zone, which M. Ganneau leaves unnoted, is occupied by figures of horses with birds flying above them, apparently in order to denote that they are in motion. The most noteworthy peculiarity of this zone is that the tails of the horses are artistically represented as palm leaves. A discussion of the inner zone or medallion is reserved for another volume; but the conclusion M. Ganneau would have us draw from it is evident. A man with a pointed beard, like those of the Amorites or Hittites on Egyptian monuments, is represented bound to a stake with his hands tied behind him. In front is a beardless Egyptian grasping another beardless man by the arm, and thrusting at him, it would seem, with a spear, while a dog bites his heel. Below the same figure is seen extended on the ground, with the same dog still biting the heel. The three scenes have been designed after Egyptian models, and M. Ganneau suggests that they are the basis on which the Greek legend of the conflict between Héracles and Geryon was constructed. This brings us to the main thesis of M. Ganneau's work, for which the cup of Palestrina furnishes the text. He proposes a new and striking theory to account for certain portions of Greek mythology. Many of the myths, he holds, were popular interpretations of scenes and figures engraved on Phœnician works of art, which found their way in early times into the hands of the Greeks. The same scenes and figures would naturally give rise to more than one misinterpretation, and consequently to more than one myth. In this way we can explain the extraordinary likeness sometimes existing in the myths of countries between which there can have been little or no communication, as well as the introduction of Semitic myths at all into Greece. In fact, there is an ocular mythology as well as an aural one. The ordinary process of explaining the picture from the legend must be reversed in many cases, and we ought to explain the legend from the picture. The theory is certainly attractive, but it needs to be applied, as M. Ganneau himself recognises, with very great caution. Though in some cases the Phœnician artist may have represented in metal the real events of human life, we know that in many cases he has introduced the figures and scenes of the mythological world. No doubt there is much in Greek mythology which came from a Semitic source, but we must carefully distinguish between myths that were imported into Greece ready made and already depicted by Phœnician art, and myths that were invented by the Greeks to explain the figures on metal vases and such-like objects. Assyrian discovery has made it easier to do this than might be supposed. The Assyrian and Babylonian originals of many of the Greek legends that came to Greece through the Phœnicians are now known, and we are beginning to determine what share the Assyrians, the Phœnicians, and the Greeks severally had in throwing them into the shape in which they have been handed down. Had M. Ganneau paid more attention to recent Assyrian literature, he would not have wished to explain the labours of Héracles by his new theory; the prototypes of the conflict with the giant Geryon, of the gardens of the Hesperides, and of the lion of Nemea were all celebrated by the poets of Chaldaean centuries before the first intercourse took place between the Phœnicians and the Greeks. But the statement of his new theory is not the only part of M. Ganneau's work from which the student of archaeology will gain instruction and profit. His pages are full of happy suggestions and lucid reasoning. We may take, for example, his suggestion that a central medallion of an engraved bowl, like that of Palestrina, gave the first idea of coined money, costly objects of this sort having once served as a medium of barter, or his inquiry into the character of the Phœnician goddess Tanit and her Greek equivalent. He has fully made out his case in favour of the old view respecting the expression "Tanit the face of Beal," which occurs in Phœnician inscriptions. The title here given to the goddess was not derived from a locality so named, but denoted the visible form of the Sun-god conceived as a feminine power. It is under this form that the goddess comes to the rescue of the huntman on the Palestrina cup. As M. Ganneau shows, the Homeric scholar also will find much to interest him in the study of the relics of Phœnician art. Thus the Palestrina cup is the best possible commentary on the description of the shield of Achilles; and the discovery of the way in which the successive acts of a history are represented, by repeating the figures of the actors, throws light on the narrative form in which the poet has cast his account of the various scenes depicted on the shield. There is great probability, too, in M. Ganneau's belief that the earliest Greek vases are simply attempts by native artists to imitate in clay the ornamented metal vases of Phœnician trade. This, at all events, will explain the choice of colours used in decorating them. It will also explain how the Phœnician alphabet came to be introduced into the West. The names written over the figures represented by the Phœnician artists were copied by the Greek potters along with the figures themselves, and formed short and easy lessons in the alphabet for the makers and purchasers of the wares. Up to the last the Greeks preserved a recollection of the fact by using the same word, γράφειν, to signify both designing the figures and writing their names over them.

L'Année Artistique, 1879, par V. Champier (Paris, Quantin), is the second instalment of a series of which we have already praised the first issue. It contains an elaborate artistic official directory for France, a record of events during the past year which are important to artists and archaeologists, an elaborate review of the Salon, and obituaries and criticisms, some of which, so far as they relate to English painters, are in questionable taste. For instance, it is said of P. F. Poole, "See tableaux ont toujours été mélodramatiques, et souvent, on voulait attendre au sublime, il est tombé dans le ridicule." The bibliography of the year, although by no means complete, is extensive enough to be serviceable.

THE BRITISH ARCHAEOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION.

THE labours of the Association on Wednesday, the 18th inst., included a visit to the vast conical barrow of earth at Silbury Hill, which was opened in 1777 by the Duke of Northumberland and Col. Drax, who sank a shaft from the top downwards through the centre, under the idea of its being a place of sepulture, but no remains were found. In 1849 it was again examined, with no better result. On that occasion a tunnel was cut horizontally, following as nearly as possible the surface of the natural ground on which the hill had been raised. After penetrating for eighty-seven yards the centre was reached, and, in order to make a thorough exploration of the central mass of earth, a gallery was carried half way round and various recesses made in the sides. The opinion seems to gain ground now that this mound and the ancient stone circle at Avebury mark the sites of the principal places of ceremony for the more ancient inhabitants of Mercia, to whom the latter place itself may have stood as a kind of ecclesiastical capital. In the evening a paper was read by Mr. E. P. Loftus Brock upon the discovery of a Viking's ship in Norway, in which he claimed a sepulchral origin for the vessel, naval heroes in the age to which this relic belonged being frequently buried with their weapons in their ships. Frotho II., King of Denmark, made a law to the effect that his admirals and principal commanders should be thus inured to death. Several vessels of the kind have been discovered, one in 1862, another in 1863, and a third in 1867, which is still preserved at Christiansia. The figure-head is beautifully carved in the form of a sea-dragon, in accordance with the conventional custom. Three small boats have also been found and some are richly carved. In the forepart, near the mast, the burial chamber, which had contained the bones of the deceased warrior wrapped in silken clothes, was found to have been disturbed. The length of the ship is seventy-nine feet, and its date may be attributed to the close of the eighth century. Its position was such that the prow, turned towards the seaboard, was ready to cleave the waves and sail away to the sea when Odin summoned the great chief on the Last Day.

The proceedings on Thursday, the 19th inst., took the Congress members to Chippenham, en route for Langley Burrell, Christian Malford, and Bradenstoke Priory. This religious foundation owes its origin to Walter, son of Edward of Salisbury, sheriff of Wiltshire, and grandson of Walter d'Evereux, one of the companions of the Conqueror. After the death of his wife, Sibylla de Cheworth, the founder assumed the habit of the order, and retired here. His grave is in the priory church near the chancel. There is a valuable Register Book of the priory in the British Museum, containing a very large number of documents relating to the history and possessions of the establishment. This book is well worthy of being published by the Wiltshire Archaeological Society, which has already done so much for the history of religious houses in the county. From the Itinerary of King John it may be seen that the monarch was often at Bradenstoke, and there is a tradition that Henry II. was crowned three times in a chapel in the vill of Braden. The majestic ruins of Malmesbury Abbey were next visited by the party, who could not fail to be struck by the contrast between the style of architecture effected by the Regular Benedictines and that adopted by the Austin Canons at Bradenstoke. The mitred abbey of Malmesbury, on the site of, and indeed a growth out of, a small Saxon monastery, was in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries one of the finest and richest monastic institutions of the country. The Benedictines—who formed, as it were, the High Church or Ritualistic party, in contradistinction to the severer-minded Cistercians, who were gradually reforming the luxurious styles of elaborate building, gorgeous tracery, and interior decoration, and the highly ornamental and imposing religious services of the order from which they had sprung—were then at the height of their power and influence, and Malmesbury Abbey was one of their greatest strongholds in England. One especial feature claims a passing note here. The library of the abbey, commenced by William of Malmesbury—who appears to have organized a regular system of exchange of books, getting copies of rare manuscripts from foreign houses of his order in return for copies of such books as he himself had either written for, or purchased on behalf of, his abbey—was maintained with considerable spirit by his successors, but at the time of the Dissolution all these works were scattered to the winds. It is recorded that spely illuminated Service Books were sold as waste at the gates of the monastery. Aubrey, the historian of Wiltshire, and Mollat, who has written an interesting account of the abbey, speak with great feeling of the disgraceful and unnecessary destruction of these literary relics. According to the former authority, "The abbey manuscripts flew about like butterflies." The charters and vellum leaves of the older books were found useful in many ways, and the gloves of the town, of whom there were an immense number, found many opportunities of turning their cheaply gotten parchments to a practical, if not very dignified, account. The great central tower of this abbey was at one time surmounted by a lofty spire. This fell within the memory of persons who recounted the event to the antiquary Leland. With it there fell much of the eastern portion of the abbey church, the choir, and the Lady Chapel. The western tower also fell at a subsequent period, and ruined the western front. On the occasion of the rejoicing in the town at the return of Charles II., May 29th, 1660, the noise of the artillery so shook the building that one of the remaining pillars of the central tower and the parts above it fell down the same night. The south porch, and doorway with its elaborate series of Norman sculptures, not unlike similar architectural work at Glastonbury—almost a twin abbey to Malmesbury, and always in the closest spiritual union and fraternal intercourse with it—are perhaps as fine as any things of the kind in England.

In the evening a paper was read by Mr. Morgan, F.S.A., 'On the "Gevinsens" in Wiltshire,' in which he discussed the topographical position and political influence of the inhabitants of the county during the earliest centuries of the Christian era. Another paper was read by Dr. J. S. Phémé, 'On the Existing Analogies of Stonehenge and Avebury,' in which the author of the lecture, who appealed from time to time to a large collection of beautifully elaborated diagrams, pointed out the remarkable fact that Stonehenge is a structure of at least two periods widely separated. The materials and dimensions of the earlier structure differ altogether from those of the later and grander erection. It is not mentioned by writers of antiquity, unless one passage, very doubtful as to locality, be admitted; yet it must have been well known to the Romans, as Roman pottery and other remains have been found on the site, although it has never been mentioned by their writers. Nevertheless the site is clearly a very central position amongst the great sepulchral memorials of the ancient British people, and possibly was a sacred locality to a still earlier race. "My impression is," he said, "that as the Romans consolidated their power by alliance with, or granting freedom to, the nobles of the countries they governed; as they considered the worship of the local deities of other lands meritorious, and no abrogation of, or deduction from, the honours claimed by their own deities of Rome, they could show this in no more comprehensive way than by restoration or augmentation of that temple in Britain which was in the centre of the deceased nobility of the land, and in the vicinity of what was clearly the great wardroom or gathering place of the British at Avebury. On the other hand, there is evidence enough to show, both in the mortise and tenon construction and in the vastness of the stones (those of Stonehenge are smaller than the great monoliths in Brittany), that the artificers, or at least the designers, may have been of Phœnician origin; the monuments of the inhabitants of the Balearic Islands being Pelægic of the oldest type. The Pelægi were a people with whom the Phœnicians were in communication, and all the features of Stonehenge and Avebury have analogies in the islands between the African continent and Europe. In any case, that Stonehenge is not a purely British structure is clear. Dr. James Fergusson, who is not fond of attributing great antiquity to any monuments, allows that the remains on these islands may be coeval with the period of the Trojan war. Having repeatedly examined the route of the ancient traffic in tin through Gaul, I feel clear in stating that they seem to follow a line from Africa, where several trilithons exist, by the Atlantic shore and islands to Britain, a tradition being found on the coast in Brittany, at St. Nazaire, and one in the Ile d'Ouessant. Dr. Fergusson admits the art of the construction (i.e. the design) may have travelled from Africa to Ireland, and thence to Wiltshire, in which I think he is right."

Friday, the 20th inst., brought a very interesting day's work. Passing through Kinford, near Chisbury Priory and camp with detached outwork of peculiar style and unusual size, and through Northcote with its fine Norman church, the members arrived at Amesbury. The church there is one of the finest in the district, cruciform in shape, with a square central tower, Norman windows, and arches. Here stood a Benedictine monastery, of which scanty notices exist, but it appears to have been specially in request as a place of retreat for ladies of the royal blood, although in 1177 King Henry II. expelled the inmates on account of their unsatisfactory proceedings. In later days Mary, daughter of Edward I., in company with thirteen young ladies of noble birth, took the veil in 1293, in 1296, Eleanor, the dowager queen of Henry III., professed, and dying in 1303, was sumptuously interred by Edward I., her son, who came from Scotland for the purpose of being present at the ceremony. Stonehenge was the next place of rallying, but the studies of the Association were somewhat marred by the concurrent visit of some picnic and pleasure parties, whose sports ill accorded with the aims of the archaeologists. The Rev. A. C. Smith, in describing the temple, said that when it was perfect it consisted of two circles and two ellipses of upright stones, concentric, and enclosed by a bank and ditch, and, outside this boundary, of a single upright stone and processional avenue. The entrance to the cluster faced north-east, and its avenue is still to be traced by banks of earth. One stone, called the "Friar's Heel," sixteen feet high, is supposed to have been a gnomon. The outer circle consisted of eighty stones, fixed upright at intervals of about three and a half feet, connected at the top by imposts, which formed a continuous corona, or ring of stone, at a height of sixteen feet. Within this was the grandest part of Stonehenge, the great ellipse formed of five, or, in the estimation of others, seven, triliths, the largest attaining the great elevation of twenty-five feet. Again, within the space bounded by these triliths was the inner elliptical compartment, consisting of nineteen granite posts, and in the cell thus formed stood the altar stone, or the stone of astronomical observation. At the present time the outer circle consists of sixteen uprights and six imposts, the inner circle of seven uprights, the great ellipse of two perfect triliths and two single uprights, the ellipse of six blocks, and within the cell remains the so-called altar stone. No one, wonderful to say, proposed new theories with regard to the origin, date, or use of this remarkable ruin, the mystery of which remains for a future solution, if haply any may be found. Earl Nelson said he should like to see those stones that had fallen within the memory of man, and whose original positions were unquestioned, carefully replaced.

In the return journey a visit to the camp of Vespasian, an interesting Roman relic of considerable dimensions, was included, and the party returned to Devizes by the way of Redbone. The evening meeting was devoted to a paper by Mr. J. T. Sargant, F.S.A., 'On Ancient Fortifications,' especially with reference to Devizes Castle. Devizes Castle stands on a huge mound, and it presented many points in common with other castles erected about the same time by Bishop Roger of Salisbury, who reconstructed old castles on the plans adopted by the Norman military architects. It was too much the fashion to describe the entrenchment as British, Roman, Saxon, or Danish, as the case might be; but the fact was the commanding position would commend itself at any period to those who had to defend themselves. Such a castle was probably the stronghold of a nation and the residence of its king. Kent had four of these strongholds. There is a theory that these mounds were merely Roman works thrown up for general survey, but many mounds were found in very low-lying positions surrounded by a wall, which showed that they were intended for habitation. All the old mediæval castles had not a donjon or keep, like Devizes. Many other Danish and Saxon castles in England were placed by the banks of rivers, and most of them on artificial mounds. Fortified mounds were found of many types, and they showed the exigencies of the people who inhabited them. The natural mound in some places was surrounded by a ditch and solum, which in their turn were fortified with stockades and palisades. They were also supplied with means of retreat. On the weaker side of the mound the ramparts were escoted. There were many instances in which the original fastness was enlarged, as at Old Oswestry, Dorchester, &c. When Vespasian came to subdue the great western land he found that it bristled with earthworks of the most formidable kind, which had to be stormed before the Roman legions could pursue their march westwards. They might now fairly surmise that on this march Vespasian came across Devizes, and from the discoveries it might be assumed that that great soldier long occupied it as a commanding post. Subsequently the adjacent forests abated the great Alfred, but those forests were now gone, and the chalk bluffs that witnessed his victories, and which still bear the emblems of his country, now fringe smiling corn-fields, orchards, and fertile pastures.

Saturday was the concluding day of the Congress, and devoted to a comprehensive series of antiquities. The day commenced with an inspection of the early Norman church at Bromham, dedicated to St. Nicholas, with a late chantry chapel, evidently built after the similar chapel in a corresponding situation in the parish church at Devizes, the south side of the chancel. This chantry was built by Richard Beauchamp, Lord St. Amand, and contains a fine alabaster effigy, sadly hacked with deep gashes and disfigured with the names and initials of iconoclastic visitors; some enamelled brasses; an altar tomb in honour of Almeric de Sancto Amando; a brass to the memory of John Baynton, the cousin of Richard Beauchamp, who died in 1542; and an elaborate tomb on the south side, to the memory of Sir Edward Baynton, who died in 1578, and his two wives, Agnes Rye and Anne Packington. The vestry, which is on the north side of the tower and approached by six steps, has a semicircular Norman arch, and over it a quaint incised slab, on which is a skeleton in its shroud, placed to the memory of Ferdinand Hughes in 1640. In the vestry are two half-length figures of Hugh Webbe, the rector in 1617, and his daughter-in-law. There are interesting examples of a period not very well represented in this class of sculpture. Proceeding in accordance with the programme, the party halted at the side of a freshly reaped field of barley, where a band of farm labourers were busy at work removing about nine inches of earth from a fine Roman mosaic pavement recently discovered. Roman remains, including two urns and a coin of Carausius, were found on this site forty years ago. The pavement consists of several square yards of intricate scroll work, ivy leaves, and the well-known dolphin symbols. It is thought that this pavement may be the same that was described in 1810 by Sir Richard C. Hoare (whom, by the way, by a slip of the pen, we called Sir Henry last week), but the conjecture is not yet verified. Some angular masonry has been excavated on the immediate site, which is expected to yield considerable results when it has been fully explored. The urns found here have been deposited in the museum belonging to the Wiltshire Archaeological Society in the town of Devizes, where the unrivalled "Stonehenge urn" and a large collection of funeral urns and drinking vessels from this prolific county have been deposited. When a Wiltshire Greenwell arises he will have difficulty in finding fictilia that will surpass the immense urns which have been found in the county, either in beauty of shape or perfection of pattern and symmetry.

The visit to Bowood enabled the Association to see the magnificent collection of noted masters in the possession of the Marquess of Lansdowne, among them Rembrandt's 'Sunset at the Mill,' Reynolds's 'Strawberry Girl,' Murillo's 'Portrait of an Ecclesiastic,' Caracci's 'Virgin and Child,' and works of Salvator Rosa, Ruysdael, Domenichino, Wouwermans, Cuyp, Claude, Wilkie, Titian, Berchem, and Hogarth. In one of the valleys within the park a tessellated pavement, with remains of baths and other appendages belonging to a Roman villa, has been lately discovered. After a hasty glance at Bowden Conduit House, respecting the age of which there was considerable divergence of opinion, varying from the fourteenth to the sixteenth century, the party went to Bewley Court, now a squalid farmhouse, with a trace of fifteenth century work shown in a circular chimney and some carved timbers in the roof of the old hall. Lacock Abbey formed the next halting-place. Here the ruins are carefully and intelligently preserved by the present owner, Mr. Talbot, who welcomed the party and pointed out the architectural features of this ancient nunnery. Although much disfigured by Sir William Sherrington in the sixteenth century, the various alterations made in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries to the old thirteenth century building are very apparent. The locutorium, kitchen or naus day-room, is a fine specimen of Early English work; the chapter house, sacristy, and refectory, all well known for their architectural details, together with Malmesbury Abbey, form the finest monastic sites visited by the Association on this occasion, which has been distinguished more for its prehistoric and Roman character than its wealth of mediæval relics. In the grounds of Lacock, near the small lake or fish pond in the immediate vicinity of the abbey, stands a very remarkable bronze caldron on three feet, capable of holding nearly eighty gallons. This magnificent specimen of the founder's art, all cast in one piece, is of sharp and elegant outline and massive form. Around the widest part of the circumference is a ribbon, on which is the following inscription, recording the maker's name, date, and place of origin:—"A Petro Waghevens in Mechlinia effusus factusque fueram, anno domini millesimo quingentesimo Deo Laus et Gloria Christo."

The Congress, which was favoured with fine weather throughout the week, was brought to an end by an evening meeting in the Town Hall, where the maces were exhibited and some interesting particulars of them given by Mr. Lambert, F.S.A., and the members of the Corporation. A gold ring in perfect condition, lately dug up at Potterne, was shown. It bears on the bezel a rudely chased representation of the Holy Trinity according to the more common manner of representation adopted by mediæval artists. The Almighty seated on a throne holds the crucified Son before him, and over the shoulder of the Father is seen the Dove of the Holy Spirit. There is an indistinct Lombardic letter in the field on the right. Mr. Birch described the series of charters belonging to the town. In the course of his remarks upon the earlier ones he observed that the loss of three charters given by Matilda the Empress, conferring important privileges, was a fact to be deeply deplored. Out of the thirty or forty charters of this sovereign known to archaeologists, a large number are dated at Devizes, thereby showing that a considerable period of the queen's history was spent in the neighbourhood of the town. Mr. G. R. Wright, the Secretary of the Congress, pointed out the urgent necessity of some modification in the law relating to treasure trove, and gave an example where the authorities of the Treasury, acting within their undoubted right, acquired some gold and silver antiquities at the price of the metals in weight, and then disposed of the objects to a museum at the enhanced archaeological value, thereby making a considerable profit. Lord Nelson expressed a hope that the Association would set in motion some means of securing the sadly dilapidated circles of Stonehenge and Avebury from further injury and desecration, for, if no other practical result should arise from the labours of the Congress, it would deserve lasting credit if by any means it could procure the future immunity of these venerable relics of an unknown antiquity from the reckless treatment to which they are now constantly subjected. Such treatment was witnessed on Friday in last week by the party of archaeologists at the time of their visit.

There are several practical lessons to be learned at these annual archaeological gatherings. The bringing together of between one and two hundred persons for mutual instruction in archaeology is in itself sure to produce good results, by stimulating their individual tastes and pursuits in this direction; the benefit to the fortunate owners of local antiquities of every class, by the opportunity that is afforded to them of getting independent and, it may generally be said, accurate opinions on the merits of their treasured relics, is not small; and, lastly, the advantage to the Archaeological Association itself is considerable. And this for two reasons. The pecuniary gain to the society, be it large or small, is scrupulously devoted to the publication and illustration of new and unpublished accessions to the known antiquities of our country; and each congress, in its yearly turn, largely affects the character of the forthcoming volume of Proceedings, in which its principal actions and results are chronicled, and the most important papers printed in extenso. The journal of the Association will thus, we may feel sure, be largely leavened with the results of the Devizes Congress, now just successfully concluded.

THE PRIVATE COLLECTIONS OF ENGLAND.

NO. LV.—WENTWORTH WOODHOUSE, BATHURST.

HAVING made notes on the more important treasures in the Gallery at Wentworth Woodhouse, and omitted works which, although valuable, do not possess supreme attractions, we may, in the first instance, proceed to describe the pictures in the Billiard Room, using the numbers of the manuscript catalogue, and, as before, following the order of the examples on the walls.

The masterpieces of George Stubbs, the Liverpool painter, who, as Mr. Wornum said, "preceded Morland by a generation," are in that resplendent drawing-room which takes its name from Whistler's jacket, a golden bay horse, whose portrait we have yet to deal with. In the Billiard Room, however, are numerous smaller pictures of celebrated racehorses by Stubbs, all of which are painted in such a manner as to show the extraordinary powers of the artist, and prove that his shortcomings were due to the circumstances under which his education was obtained, to the peculiar character of the man,—he was almost as "English" as his contemporary Hogarth,—and to the kind of encouragement which fell to his lot and with which he could by no means dispense. Many prints have been made from Stubbs's designs and portraits of horses, to say nothing of those energetic pictures of lions and tigers which made Fuseli say that "his tigers for grandeur have never been equalled; his lions are to those of Rubens what lions are to jackals." Stubbs etched some plates of animals with wonderful spirit. Nevertheless, good as these things are, and learned as is the artist's monograph 'On the Anatomy of the Horse,' which, by the way, was one of Landseer's text-books, the reader may take our word for it that he who has not been to Wentworth has no idea of what Stubbs could do. It is to be remembered that this self-taught, self-centred, somewhat obstinate man was born in 1724—that is, nearly fifty years before James Ward, and nearly eighty years before Landseer. His forerunner in this country was Wyke; his immediate predecessor abroad was that fine draughtsman and painter of horses Cornelius Van der Meulen, who worked for Louis XIV. Both of these men had been trained in schools of art. Not so Stubbs, every inch of whose canvas declares the fact that he was his own teacher. Like all self-centred men, Stubbs was outside his special studies extremely ignorant, and this accounts for his self-sufficiency and the narrowness of his mood in design. But the force and tenacity of such a character as his could not but master all he aimed at, and these portraits of horses are marvels of delicate drawing and smooth, careful painting, with clear and bright colour of a very limited scale, and modelled without impasto, but with rare fineness and soundness. The figures are generally flat because their scheme of light and shade is weak, or rather primitive. Primitive, too, were Stubbs's notions of composition and chiaroscuro; his modes of grouping were simple, but they were by no means without a sense of grace. On the whole, it was not fair scornfully to call him a painter of portraits of horses, for he was very much more than that, although it was unfortunate that he could rarely contrive to add the landscape backgrounds of his figures, and was compelled to employ one Lowen for that purpose. On this account the pictures in the Billiard Room at Wentworth which have no backgrounds are more valuable than those which have. It seems to have been Stubbs's custom to finish the figure of a horse within its outlines with the utmost minuteness, so that it appears stuck on the canvas, after which his assistant did the rest as well as he could. Of this habit Nos. 141 and 142 are valuable examples. Usually Stubbs painted with thin pigments on a rather dark brown or stone-coloured canvas; in many instances this ground has "come through," to the injury of the paintings.

Ostade's 'Boors Carousing' (163) which might have taught Stubbs a good deal, is a fine and exceptionally large picture. The many figures it contains were designed with extraordinary spirit and admirably placed on the canvas. It is a masterpiece of rich light and shade, at once luminous and profound; the chiaroscuro is somewhat complex and the finish delicate. The last-named quality is seen in the white hood of the woman who is being kissed by a man, and in some accessories of the composition. We know of no better Ostade in this country, and it is well worth while to spend an hour in studying its many merits. No. 151 is a good Canaletto, a 'View of the Grand Canal, Venice,' not one of the artist's best pictures, but a very sunny and solid instance of the painter's abilities when employed without the stimulus of a special inspiration.

We now proceed to notice, without regard to locality, but following the usual course, the greater works of this collection. No. 160 is a good Bolognese picture, a classical landscape of dramatic inspiration and in style academical. Here is a capital 'Roman Ruins' (152), by Pannini, which, however, suggests the inspiration of Zuccarelli. There are pictures at Nostel Priory which are worth comparing with these.

The student of style who wishes to appreciate Van Dyck's pathos and his power in reading character must on no account omit to see the famous 'Earl of Strafford and Sir Philip Mainwaring,' No. 19 in this gallery, which was at the National Portrait Exhibition in 1886. It is the painter's masterpiece of its class, and the original of numerous copies. More than once engraved by noteworthy hands, full justice has never been done to the noble conception it embodies. The gloomy, half-resentful, profoundly sad, but far from fierce look of the great earl, which is the key-note of the piece, has been but faintly reflected by any burin, while the tone, general and local colour, chiaroscuro, and other strictly technical qualities for which it is remarkable are best seen in the picture. The two figures sit at a table; the earl is dressed in black silk, and holds in one hand a letter, the whiteness of which is important in the schemes of colour and tone which are illustrated by the painting. There is a rather illegible inscription on the paper, but one supposes its purport to be originally important enough to be read, because there can be no doubt the motive of the design turns on this document, as if it were the pivot of the artist's conception of his work—in fact, the subject of his picture, for such this example is, being a production of far more ambitious nature than a simple portrait. The left hand of Strafford is placed on the arm of his chair lightly, but firmly, and in a manner which was evidently habitual with the earl. It is as if the paper possessed the utmost importance, and demanded prompt decision on the part of the statesman, who must at the moment depicted take one course or the other, and thenceforth follow it without hesitation, without ever turning back again, be the issue what it may. We cannot help feeling that Van Dyck meant this, for he has shown how the earl, almost lost in a brief pause of overmastering thought, has turned partly from his companion, the attentive if not officious secretary, who, pen in hand, watches his chief, ready to write what the minister may dictate, but he does not see the face of Strafford as we may see it.

How Van Dyck saw that impressive face who can tell? Was the sumptuous painter of Strafford's counsel? Did he imagine the scene which is here depicted, or simply evolve this masterpiece of design out of some glimpses at a momentous incident of which chance made him a spectator? We think the last hypothesis likely to be nearest the truth, and that the painter, whose insight into the characters of Charles and his queen had something of the force and nature of prevision of their careers and fates, saw in the stern and thoughtful face of the great minister more than most men of that time were able to see, although, indeed, there were not wanting those who predicted of Strafford at least as much as any one may read between the lowering lines of this superb portrait. No other work of Van Dyck's is half so profound. There is nothing of Rubens's surpases it. Rembrandt's portraits, or some of them at least, make us feel that if we knew as much of their subjects as we do of Strafford, they, too, might impress us as this picture does. It cannot but strike the visitor who turns from the remarkable likeness to those of King Charles and Queen Henrietta, which are among the chief ornaments of these walls, that among the troubles of Strafford's spirit must have been an immeasurable contempt for the hard, narrow craft of the "martyr," and the frivolous and shallow yet cruel nature of the queen. When they left the owner of this face to die as a scapegoat, what was his thought of them? The face is a wonder, and grows on the spectator, who has been, so to say, admitted to the secret company of this picture. Its expression grows sterner, grimmer, and darker, as if an iron will stiffened in the heat of anger. Yet the face depicted here, however resolute, is by no means cruel, and is the antithesis of all that is low and insinuous. This work has not been surpassed as a triumph of penetrative imagination. Its secret lies in the set square jaw, which pushes itself a little forward; in the nostril, which under compression now curves more than habit has dictated; while the chin is big and square, and the black eyes dilate in the shadow of the massive brows, about the summit of which the short thick hair curls crisply. The very costume is austere, and without any of those ornaments which attracted the eyes of men to Strafford's royal master. Van Dyck emphasised the severe spirit of his chief subject by giving to Mainwaring the aspect of a man of active ability, but of somewhat slight nature. His eager eyes seem to "float" in his head, he has a thin face and pointed chin, his mouth is full, the lower lip is a little underhung, the eyebrows are arched, the forehead is high and narrow. His dress contrasts with his master's. It is of a bright rich red, decorated with a massive gold chain and some jewellery. The picture has not escaped rubbing, so that the carnations may have lost some of the clear and golden tones which originally belonged to them: this was doubtless due to old and injudicious restoration; it has evidently been well cared for of late. The colour, both local and general, is of the most beautiful quality. The hands are worthy of Holbein for their expressiveness, of Velasquez for their execution. The figures are of a somewhat large life size, and would be visible to the middle of the legs if the table were away. See another Van Dyck of Strafford described below.

No. 17 is a 'Prince Rupert,' by Lely, a three-quarters-length figure in a buff coat, one hand being on his sword; the head is turned to our left, the face in three-quarters view, the light from our right. It is of Lely's best time, a warm-toned and masculine portrait, closely resembling the work of Hannemann, but too animated for him, and a better example than the likeness of a later date and in Garter robes which was lately bought by the National Portrait Gallery. It is certain that Lely must have painted numerous portraits of "Prince Rupert," as the people whom he harried and burned out of their houses called the berserker of his day. An even better Lely is a fine portrait of Anne Hyde, Duchess of York, which shows how near the artist at his best contrived to approach Van Dyck. It is a life-size figure, not quite to the feet, in a splendidly painted white satin dress, seated near a red curtain, and wearing a large white collar. There is a genial simper on the lady's face, which is doubtless due to the artist. On the whole this is the best Lely we have seen.

A contrast to this masculine work is supplied by Reynolds's graceful and somewhat weak study in oil, or repetition of the figures of the Shepherds in the popular transparency of the west window of New College Chapel, Oxford. The picture is well known and better in quality than the window. The figures, one of which is that of Sir Joshua himself, are life size and numbered 26. No. 27 is the 'Shepherd Boy,' produced for the same window, a very pretty example, quite in Reynolds's way. Both of these works were at the Academy in 1875. A good Van Dyck of the better class of Court portraits is the seated, life-size figure of Queen Henrietta Maria (36) in her favourite sea-blue dress, of which we find representations elsewhere, as in the group at Lord Grantley's seat near Ripon, in other likenesses, single figures, at Windsor and at Mulgrave Castle. Her Majesty affected this colour after her darkening complexion made the white satin in which she originally delighted too "trying," as the ladies say. The colour goes charmingly with her present tint, and is skillfully contrasted by the red rose, emblem of England, she holds in her lap. The jewels, such as buttons and clasps, here worn by Henrietta Maria are the same as those depicted at Grantley Hall. A gold chain and large pearl pendant adorn the neck. The figure is posed with all Van Dyck's ease and grace towards our left, the face being to the front. The carnations have become a little yellow; the rouge to which the queen was addicted is delicately hinted in the picture, which would doubtless gain much if it could be placed in a better light. See below for a finer portrait of the queen.

Another Reynolds represents Charlotte, Countess Fitzwilliam, married in 1770, daughter of the Earl of Beesborough, seated in a chair, with her powdered hair in large curls, and wearing a crimson cloak trimmed with brown fur. The countess holds in her lap a muff of the same fur. The carnations of the picture have faded greatly, and this seems to have affected the modelling and made the features look leaner than they otherwise would. We have omitted to note the name of the artist of a capital portrait of Charles II. at the age of fourteen, in armour, which has been, we believe, engraved. Unless our memory is false the three-quarters-length, life-size portrait of James Stanley, Earl of Derby, here to be seen is one of those numerous versions of Van Dyck's picture at Knowsley, the frequency of which attests the general admiration felt by his contemporaries for this distinguished royalist.

By Van Dyck is No. 5, the whole-length, life-size portrait of the great Earl of Strafford to which we have already alluded. He is clad in black armour, holds a leading staff in his right hand, and has placed his left hand on the head of a large grey deerhound; the animal eagerly watches his master's face, which, the helmet being removed, is bare. The helmet stands on a pedestal at the owner's side. The face is pale; and as the features are a little puffed, the picture suggests ill health. The expression is much less stern than in the likenesses named above, but the work is most "serious" in all respects and is an entirely noble portrait. There is a third version of the likeness of the earl here, attributed to Van Dyck, but doubted by Dr. Waagen, who, however, admits that his survey of Westworth Woodhouse was very hasty. In this instance the right hand of the figure is on his helmet. Another Van Dyck, one of the finest versions, if not the finest, of a fine picture, is that portrait of Laud (6) which Earl Fitzwilliam lent to the Royal Academy in 1875. It is in a circle and shows the archbishop, probably at the time when he was Bishop of London, in the ordinary episcopal costume, a black cap and ample robes of white lawn, which, swelling from his little form, greatly enhance its size—a result which Van Dyck artfully aided by representing somewhat less than the whole of the figure, and avoiding the introduction of anything by which its scale could be determined. This is a fine and masculine example of the painter's wonderful faculty of reading character. The reddish complexion, the little eyes, short, stiff bristles which serve for moustaches and beard, impart a look of fierceness to the prelate which is less in degree than other portraits of him display. In this case there is less peevishness than usually occurs in the likenesses of Laud. The firm and precise modelling and handling and the fine style of the master are here in perfection. Another version of this portrait, which has been engraved, is said to equal that before us, and is now at St. Petersburg. A whole-length likeness of the second Earl of Strafford in armour is fine in its way, and shows a handsome, somewhat weak face. Cornelius Jonson's capital portrait of a boy, being the young Henry, Duke of Gloucester, son of Charles I. (10), is in an oval, placed over a door, and was hastily mistaken by Dr. Waagen for a Lely. The critic forgot to compare the dates thus brought into question, but he did not omit to notice that it is a "very animated and careful" picture. Of course, being Jonson's, it is almost too careful; yet it is less hard than usual, and is, on the whole, a really beautiful portrait, delicately finished and uncommonly warm in colour.

A superb Van Dyck follows here, and, having been given by Henrietta Maria to the great Earl of Strafford, is one of the most remarkable heirlooms at Wentworth, where it has remained since the day it arrived. It is a whole-length, life-size group. At the side of the queen stands Geoffrey Hudson, the well-known dwarf page. He carries her Majesty's monkey on his shoulder, while the lady strokes the back of the animal with one hand. She wears the above-named sea-blue silk dress, which is superbly painted, and has the most lustrous quality, greatest richness, and breadth of tone and colour. Her black hat has a wide rim, is decorated with a large trailing white feather, and is set coquetishly on one side of her head. Her breast-ribbon is of bright red colour, a large white lace collar covers her shoulders, a kerchief of silver tissue is over her bust. A charm of splendid colour pervades the picture even now, and this must have been much more potent in old days. Its solidity, unusual firmness, and finished treatment, to say nothing of the comparative youth of the queen, prove this to be an early example of Van Dyck's art in England. The carnations and some other parts of the work have darkened slightly; it needs much light. This painting was mentioned by Walpole. See the Catalogue of the Royal Academy Exhibition, Old Masters, 1878, No. 100.

No. 9 is by Mytens, a whole-length, life-size portrait of Charles I. in robes and a hat: a good example of the painter's prosaic but grave style in art, which might profitably be compared with the noble whole-length, life-size picture of Charles which is one of the chief ornaments of the collection at Cobham, and the work of that most learned master Van Somer. The expression of the last-named portrait is graver, and there is more intellect in the look than either Mytens or Van Dyck imparted to the features of King Charles. Mytens's portrait is full of character. The regalia is at Charles's side. The next example is another Mytens (13), a first-rate portrait of George, Lord Baltimore, signed, and dated 1627, the same peer whose likeness by C. Jonson we saw at Windlestone Hall and described with other works belonging to Sir William Eden. Earl Fitzwilliam's picture was at the Academy in 1875, and shows the colonising peer standing with one hand at his hip, the other pendant, a favourite attitude of Mytens's. "My lord" wears a black cloak and body dress, and a white ruff; his figure is firm and upright, spontaneously designed to represent a man of energy and ready animation.

The next Van Dyck is numbered 15, and is the portrait of Arabella, Strafford's second wife, a whole-length, life-size figure, in the queen's greenish-blue silk dress, lined with white velvet and embroidered with gold. She is in the act, which was not uncommonly used by the artist at one stage of his career, of stepping up a portico and drawing aside a voluminous deep red portière. Although the face might have been lovelier, the painter has expended much art on the treatment of the whole example; especially fine are the robe and the attitude. It is a noble specimen of comparatively late date and somewhat ornate style of treatment. We now approach a picture which is antithetical to Van Dyck's, but nevertheless of unusually fine quality, being Lawrence's life-size, whole-length portrait of the fourth Earl Fitzwilliam, seated in a red leather chair, with a great scroll of paper at his side, a work which is full of expression and characteristic grace in the high sense of the phrases: a first-rate piece of Lawrence's art, and, so far as the accessories are concerned, wisely left unfinished, as Lawrence left it at his death.

Charles, Viscount Milton, afterwards Earl Fitzwilliam, a boy of five years old, walking in a park with a goat, which he caresses, at his side, is by Sir Joshua. The child holds a stick and is looking to our left; he wears a blue petticoat and sash, a white pinafore, and long brown fair hair lies on his shoulders. One of the latest productions of Reynolds, this charming work is now a good deal faded. We do not remember that it has been engraved. Among the other Reynoldses here is that famous version of the 'Hercules strangling the Serpents of Juno' for which the father of the little Viscount Milton gave the painter a great sum of money. The design is one of the most energetic and unaffected of all those in which Reynolds indulged his inclination for historical art. Indeed, we think it is the only first-rate proof of his success in such efforts, and immeasurably superior in that respect to the much over-praised 'Puck' which is at St. Petersburg. At present the 'Hercules' is intensely hot in colour; the carnations, to use Reynolds's own phrase, look as if they had been "boiled in brandy"; but, with all this exaggeration, there can be no question about the vigour and breadth of the work. It is well known by engravings. Another famous engraved Reynolds is here in the very dignified whole-length, life-size portrait of Charles, Marquis of Rockingham, the minister, standing by a table, and wearing his Garter robes. The flesh, which was painted with unusual smoothness and care, has suffered greatly by the fading of the carnations. Vertue engraved the interesting picture of the children of the great Earl of Strafford, William, the second earl, and the Ladies Anne and Arabella Wentworth, all dressed richly, as if for a masque, and all standing. It bears the name of Van Dyck. The same two young ladies appear in a capital, very carefully and nicely painted Lely of the Van Dyck type, with richness of impasto which is unusual, wealth of character, and animation of motive. Among other portraits are the following: the family of the Earl of Rockingham, ascribed to Hogarth; the Countess Fitzwilliam by Reynolds, in a landscape; and the younger Burke, a gift to the friend of the subject.

The life-size, whole-length portrait in profile to our left of the famous racer Whistler, by G. Stubbins, to which we have before alluded, is the most striking ornament of the magnificent drawing-room to which the animal's name has been given, a palatial chamber enriched with decorations of pure and pale blue and silver, and containing the unfinished Lawrence. The horse is a bright, rather dark bay of the most exquisite grooming, finished and painted wonderfully, and such a marvel of modelling and execution as to be worthy of a great master. Its drawing is a triumph of a noble and elegant if somewhat laboured style. The attitude is that of rising on the hind feet, as if in the élanage. The horse, only fully finished to the outlines, appears on the canvas without a background; the accessories and background, whatever they were intended to be, were never introduced. Whistler ran with abundant glory at York and Newmarket in 1754, and was never beaten. We noticed some excellent pieces of modern sculpture, including R. Wyatt's pretty figure of the nymph with the hare and greyhound, a charming example of real and pure taste, far superior to the pseudo-classicism of Gibson.

Our renewed thanks are due to the Earl and Countess Fitzwilliam for facilities in describing the pictures at Wentworth Woodhouse. The next subject of these papers will be the collection of works of art at Duncombe Park, Helmsley, the property of the Earl of Faversham, who has kindly allowed us to examine his famous Hogarth, Rembrandt, Hobbins, C. Dolci, Guido, Rubens, Claude, and Rosa, as well as that magnificent piece of sculpture, the so-called 'Dog of Alcibiades.'

'THE BEARDED ARCHER.'

125, Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

THE Athenæum of May 22nd has just reached me, in which the letter of Dr. W. Deecke respecting the 'Bearded Archer' strongly attracted my attention. At first sight I was glad to learn that the inscription had at last been read, and very much pleased to know that it had fallen to the lot of Dr. Deecke to decipher it. But on looking more closely I found that I was compelled to differ from his views almost entirely; and it seems matter of duty to communicate my ideas on the subject.

While in London in 1875 I studied the stone itself with much care at such times as I could spare for the purpose within the space of about two weeks. I also took accurate copies, and besides was kindly furnished with two remarkably fine squeezes, which were prepared under the immediate eye of the late George Smith, with whom I twice went over the characters on the stone itself, and who declared that my two squeezes showed "everything that is to be seen on the stone itself." Thus my material to work from is without suspicion.

The forms of the characters on the stone are generally quite peculiar, though most of them are plain; and all of them have a degree of clearness in form that is quite uncommon in a Cypriote inscription. Long ago its manifold variants of known forms enabled me to read other inscriptions, although it was as a whole, and is yet, as I think, undeciphered.

For the sake of brevity I here append my transliteration of the characters, denoting those I consider unknown by a *, and numbering those which I refer to below. The numbers in parentheses mark the lines:—

- (1) i. ye. ro. ta. to. se. a.
- (2) ri. pa. o. o. se. ta. a'. e. ro. i. wo. a'. na. o. to.
- (3) te'. to. te'. i. na. mu. to. to. u. a'. a'. i. to. n'. ke. a'. ye. i. o. se. ya.

The character "ye" is, of course, Deecke's "je" Anglicized. This power or transliteration of this character is still somewhat in dispute; but I leave it undisturbed here, especially as I myself incline to agree with Dr. Deecke. As to the others, it will be observed that my transliteration agrees with his except in a', a', te', a', e', a', and perhaps in n'.

As to the differences, a' is clearly not "te" if te' has that power. No irregularity of writing elsewhere known in Cypriote would countenance such an assumption. Neither does it at all resemble any known form of the character for "te," much less the recognized te on the stone. What it is I am not decided. It is most like the character which Deecke elsewhere reads "ze" and Ahrens "she." Again, te' is absolutely identical with te'; and Dr. Deecke has no justification for reading one "te" and the other "ke," as he does. The character te occurs elsewhere on the stone also, and is wholly unlike this. Again, a' is read by Dr. Deecke as "ro." But ro, always a very distinct character, occurs quite clearly elsewhere on the stone, but never, either on the stone or elsewhere, in this shape. If an "r" syllable at all, it is ro; but it can hardly be that. It is more like the ye of the stone than any other character thereon. It is somewhat obscure, but it has somewhat the shape which the much varying "le" would be expected to take in an inscription whose affinities are like this one. I am only surprised that Dr. Deecke did not take it for an inverted "je." The character I have marked a' is read as "i" by him. This is not strange, as the difference in the ordinary writing makes the difference between the two to consist in prolonging a stroke below a certain intersection point for a. But both a and i occur elsewhere on the stone, in forms so distinct (that for i being unusual) that they are not to be confounded; and on the stone, though cracked at just this point, the lower stroke of the a is unmistakable, and the other peculiarities of its shape agree. It is a and not "i." The next character, a', is read by him as "o." This contradicts the rest of the stone and Cypriote writing generally. It is one of the puzzles of the stone, but looks most like an incomplete li.

It is a character different—intentionally different—from the three o's elsewhere on the stone. As to o, Dr. Deecke reads it as "to"; but this cannot be. The to on the stone is a very peculiar form, probably the parent of the very diverse forms which occur on the Curium armlets of Ethenander, on the one hand, and, say, the British Museum bilingual on the other. But this character is unlike all of them. It may be to or po; but to is scarcely to be thought of. As to o, Dr. Deecke is probably correct. This is one of the troublesome characters. In ordinary inscriptions its typical form is nearest to that of the to and te; and these two would by most experts be read as no on a later inscription, but the general style of the characters on this stone teaches otherwise.

The unusual clearness and good preservation of this inscription remove all doubt as to what marks compose or make up the characters; the difficulty lies solely in knowing what syllables they represent. Thus this criticism has much more solid ground to rest upon than if made with reference to a blurred inscription.

It results from the preceding statements that out of the forty-two characters which compose the inscription, Dr. Deecke has forced the reading of at least six of them, against the testimony not only of other inscriptions, but of this stone also. Thus not only his reading of the separate words vāte, Πρω(1), δῆκε, via, and βαί fall, and with them all the mythology and some of the facts of his interpretation, but so much uncertainty is introduced into the rest of it as to make the whole need revision.

Dr. Deecke is quite right in stating that this inscription has not yet been published correctly. The caricature in Schmidt's 'Sammlung' is very misleading. And though I cannot agree with Dr. Deecke in his belief that he has deciphered the inscription completely, I am highly pleased with his brilliancy and boldness. Nor would I willingly say a word detractory; I esteem his work in Cypriot decipherment far too highly for that, to say nothing of his repeated courtesies to myself personally.

With regard to the character ye or "ja," it is of rare occurrence, and except on this stone is not known to occur except in juxtaposition to i. It appears to occur in the same juxtaposition, but with relative position reversed, on a newly discovered inscription in the Canale Collection in New York. This inscription is one of between sixty and seventy characters, and came to light on cleaning a neglected surface of the stone on which occurs the low relief sculpture of a chamber; the same that is figured at the bottom of Tav. iv. of 'Le Ultime Scoperte nell' Isola di Cipro,' by General di Canale.

ISAAC H. HALL.

* We have been unfortunately obliged to delay till now the publication of this letter.

ANCIENT SCULPTURED MONUMENTS.

UNDER the new Irish Church Act many of the old ruins and monuments were handed over to the Board of Works to be repaired and preserved. During these works certain facts have come to light to which I would direct the attention of Sir J. Lubbock and others interested in the preservation of our ancient stone monuments.

During the excavations at the Seven Churches, Glendalough, of St. Kevin, the workmen came on inscribed stones. When first raised, on some the inscriptions were quite distinct and sharp, but unfortunately, apparently from being so long buried, these stones seem to have been saturated with water, and when they dried they rapidly weathered. A curious cross with inscription, found at the Reefert Church, was weathering rapidly; but before it was quite destroyed it was moved into St. Kevin's Kitchen, where many other objects of interest are also under cover. A curiously inscribed slab at Templenaskellig has not, however, been so fortunate, because as it dried the surface split off in films, and when I last visited the place it was fast going to ruin. This is also taking place elsewhere. At Devenish, Lough Erne, a beautifully carved freestone cross was exhumed, and as its socket was found in the graveyard, it was replaced in its original site; but what is the result? It is rapidly crumbling away. At these ruins a number of carved stones were dug up and collected into one place; as, however, they are loose, they are knocked about and damaged by visitors.

These facts suggest that carved building stones for which no place can be found should be built into a wall, so that they cannot be knocked about and damaged, while carved monumental stones that are exhumed must be very carefully treated; if possible, they ought to be put under cover, but if this cannot be done, they should be saturated with some solution to preserve them. In many places inscribed slabs could conveniently be ranged along one of the walls of some of the buildings, they ought never to be laid flat, as the weather has then more effect on them; besides, it is impossible to prevent thoughtless persons from walking on them, the latter having been the means of defacing many a monument.

It seems remarkable that wherever the English element is strongest in Ireland the ancient monuments are most destroyed, as the people appear to consider a monument only as a stone, and a ruin as a quarry. Thus ruins in the co. Wexford are rare, many of the old churches and most of the cromlechs having altogether disappeared, while the rest have been shamefully treated. The same thing occurs in the co. Mayo, famous in ancient times for its colleges and churches, all the former, except a portion of Burrischoole, having been taken away, and some of the latter, the rest being more or less dismantled. In Meath, not many years ago, one of the carns of the De Danann was carted away to build farm fences, the curiously carved stones and slabs forming the chambers having been broken up; fortunately, however, most of these De Danann monuments are on the adjoining property, belonging to Mr. Napper, of Loughcrew, where they are safe. The farmer and improver (!) has no soul for archaeology; he begrudges the little bit of "ground wasted" and the stones in those "nasty old things."

G. HENRY KIRWAN.

FINE-ART Gossip.

A volume of plates, one hundred in number, is to be published by way of memorial of Viollet-le-Duc, in return for subscriptions received in order to commemorate this great architect. The plates will comprise architectural designs, sculptures, decorations, carpentry, metal, and glass works, all of which were designed by the deceased, and most of them executed.

The intended International Exhibition of New York has received the sanction of the Congress of the United States. It will be held in 1883, and is expected to be bigger than any show of the kind yet seen.

The New York Publishers' Weekly announces "the first of a series of papers on the archaeology of Missouri, to be published under the auspices of the Archaeological Section of the St. Louis Academy of Science. This important work, entitled 'Archæological Remains and Ancient Pottery of Southern Missouri,' by Prof. W. B. Potter and Dr. Edward Evers, two members of the society, contains a general description of the south-eastern Missouri district and the pottery which has been found in such abundance in the burial mounds of that region, and is illustrated by twenty-nine full-page lithographic plates."

The Magazine of Art is to be enlarged in October next, and to become a skilling monthly.

DON MANUEL AZULAS, whose death was announced a few weeks since from Madrid, was a distinguished archaeologist, and the first to call public attention in Spain to archaeological studies. He held up to the time of his decease an important post in the Biblioteca Nacional, of which the late Señor Hartmanbusch was director.

Excavations for drainage in Cirencester, opposite the old church, are revealing large masses and cores of ancient walling, and a great amount of Roman and mediæval relics, chiefly coins and scutella. They will probably be deposited in the town museum.

A CORRESPONDENT sends a cutting from the Dublin daily Express, which states that a large megalithic monument is being destroyed in Sligo. The tenant has already removed three of the stones of the circle "for to help to make a fence." The land on which this vandalism is being perpetrated belongs, it is said, to Mr. Evelyn Ashley, M.P.

Ms. MacLachlan sends us a catalogue of paintings, sculptures, &c., in the University of Glasgow, compiled by Dr. John Young. The University appears to possess some interesting portraits.

HERR ADOLF GÖTTKE, of Dresden, who, it may be remembered, got up the Rafael Autelung last year in the Saxon capital, publishes the prospectus of a 'Rafael-Werk, Sammelische Tafelbilder und Fresken des Meisters in Nachbildungen nach Kupferstichen und Photographien.' Explanatory letter-press will be supplied by Prof. W. Lübke.

A VALUABLE bronze tablet, containing a decree of the Emperor Honorius, has been discovered at Pesaro.

MUSIC

WAGNER'S WORK BY LUDWIG WAGNER.

Studies and Preludes, Op. 27; Suite des Dansees, Op. 41; Walzer, Op. 44; Sonata in E Minor, for Piano and Violoncello, Op. 46; Thema und Variationen, Op. 48; Zwei Menuetten, Op. 49; Phantasiestücke, Op. 50; Tarantella and Polonaise, Op. 51; Zwei Sonatinen, Op. 52; Schöne Polnische Nationalitäten. (Angerer & Co.)

SOME three or four years ago, at one of the Saturday Crystal Palace Concerts, Mr. Dannreuther played a pianoforte concerto in a flat minor by Xavier Scharwenka, a Polish musician until then unknown even by name in this country, and the general impression created was that a new composer of no ordinary merit had come to light. When the performance was repeated, with Herr Scharwenka at the piano, the verdict in his favour was strengthened. But since that time hope has yielded somewhat to disappointment, for comparatively little of importance has been heard from the same source, and Herr Scharwenka is still most favourably known as the composer of the flat minor concerto. It would be idle and illogical to blame a musician for not producing works of importance, for reticence may sometimes proceed from a knowledge of weakness. When Sterndale Bennett was taxed with his comparative unproductiveness, he replied that he wrote whenever the spirit moved him, and that more rapid composition would only result in the accumulation of mediocre music, by which his reputation would suffer injury. If we may judge by the pile of compositions before us, Herr Scharwenka feels that his ability finds most fitting exercise in writing for the pianoforte. As regards the majority of these works, however, only a few words of criticism are desirable. The 'Studies and Preludes' are six in number, each being developed at considerable length. As useful practice for tolerably advanced players they may be commended. The 'Suite des Dansees' and the 'Waltzes' are for four hands; the former is in four movements, namely, Alla Marcia, Menuetto, Gavotte, and Bolero. They will be found brilliant and effective, although their art value is inconsiderable. On the other hand, the Sonata for piano and cello is an important work. The first movement, allegro ma non troppo, is, on the whole, the best. The subjects are very attractive, and the interest is sustained with much vigour, the general character of the movement being agitated, not to say dramatic. Intense and long-drawn expressiveness is the main feature of the cadenza in c, and much would depend upon the executants for producing the full effect. The finale, sempre ma non troppo, is discursive and laboured, the vagueness of outline being such as to leave an unsatisfactory impression on the listener. Still, the sonata in its entirety is a work of considerable merit, and should be heard in public whenever an opportunity occurs. The next item on our list is a theme in D minor, on which is built nineteen cleverly written but rather dry variations. The last variation is considerably extended, and the piece finishes with the subject fortissimo in the tonic major. The 'Minuets,' 'Phantasies,' 'Tarantella and Polonaise,' will be found useful for teaching purposes, being agreeable and of no great difficulty. There is no great interest in the two sonatinas, but some of the Polish dances (mazurkas) are charming. Others are vague and uninspired, the tonality being constantly shifted in the most arbitrary and purposeless manner. The influence of Chopin is observable in these pieces, but on the whole the national element is not very powerfully developed in Herr Scharwenka's music.

Musical Society.

It is said that the opening performance at Her Majesty's Theatre on October 16th will be 'La Favorita,' in which Madame Trebelli will impersonate the title rôle.

M. Massenet has finished his new opera, 'Herodas.' It will be produced at La Scala, Milan, in January next.

The Welsh National Birteddod has been held at Carnarvon during the present week, under the presidency of Lord Penrhyn, lord lieutenant of Carnarvonshire. The results of the few musical contests of more than local interest will be given in next week's Athenæum.

The eccentric violinist, Ole Bornemann Bull, died last week at Bergen, his native place. Born in 1810, he was destined by his father to the priesthood, but early evinced a passion for the violin, on which he might have excelled in a legitimate manner but for an unconquerable tendency to indulge in what Spohr, his preceptor for a while, styled beurrerie. He thus became more a virtuoso than an artist, and more a charlatan than either. By clever advertising and strolling in remote parts of the world, where musical taste is still in an embryo condition, he amassed a considerable fortune, which his restless spirit would not permit him to enjoy in peace.

MISS MINNIE HAVE intends, it is said, to make a professional tour in Germany during the autumn, commencing at Hamburg and Bremen.

MOULIER DUFRANC has made a successful debut at the Paris Opera in 'La Juive.'

DRAMA

Shakespeare Memoranda.—Memoranda on Lord's Labour's Lost, King John, Othello, and on Romeo and Juliet. By J. O. Halliwell-Phillips, F.R.S. (Privately printed.)

THE Shakespearean gleanings which are of most interest in this brochure of Mr. Halliwell-Phillips are those which have reference to allusions in 'Love's Labour's Lost' and to the sources and original history of the play itself. The brief allusion to the calculating feats of the horse of the Scotchman Banks, which, from another of its many accomplishments, was known as the dancing horse, has given occasion to the author to bring together, as the result of much curious research, a collection of more detailed and multifarious notices of the animal and its trainer than contemporary literature provides of Shakespeare himself. After astonishing the Londoners at the "Bel-savage without Lud-gate" and the "Cromes Keys, Gracious Streets," Banks took his horse to France, and had to thank his ingenuity in making it do obeisance to a crucifix for his escape from a dangerous charge of magic brought by the Capucins at Orleans. This incident was quite sufficient to originate the story that he and his horse were burned together at Rome by command of the Pope.

With respect to the play itself, one question of interest is as to what historical incident, if any, may underlie the fantastic story as it is delivered on the stage. Mr. Hunter is quoted as having first pointed out the account in the Chronicles of Monstrelet of a negotiation between the King of Navarre and the King of France for an exchange of territory, and that in Aquitaine, and in consideration of payment of the very sum of two hundred thousand gold crowns which is in question in the play. The identification is so far complete, but what is still to seek is an historical suggestion for the whimsical vow of seclusion of the king and his courtiers, or, failing this, a precedent in fiction. For the further question as to the previous treatment, in novel or drama, of the vow and its collapse, Mr. Halliwell-Phillips can still only report a blank; he justly sets aside the inferences of Douce in favour of a French novel as even less plausible than those which may be drawn "from the characters of the Pedant and the Braggart, both so called in the early copies," as hinting derivation from an Italian drama.

Whether Shakespeare worked in this instance upon cruder material of an earlier dramatist—always a possibility, especially in the case of a play of his first period—is altogether unknown; but it is certain that the play as we have it combines both crude and mature work of his own. The first folio follows the quarto of 1598 without any correction of errors, and the title-page, which Mr. Halliwell-Phillips reproduces in fac-simile, declares it to be "newly corrected and augmented by W. Shakespeare." The "pleasant conceited comedy" had been presented in this form before her Highness at Whitehall during the previous Christmas holidays. Mixture of styles sufficiently confirms the witness of the title-page that we have an early play which has been retouched extensively by the poet's later and more practised hand. Remarkably enough, it is in the very finest speech in the play, the enthusiastic declamation of Biron at the end of the fourth act, that we find, as Mr. Halliwell-Phillips observes, "parts of the author's first sketch mixed up with the text of the corrected drama." Lines and thoughts which had been recast were, it is clear, by inadvertence left unobliterated, and remain to introduce confusion and repetition. A lapse of this kind is an occasion to test the perspicacity of editors, and Mr. Halliwell-Phillips contributes the good service of a protest against Capell's erasure, which was inconsiderately followed even by Dyce, of the four lines beginning,

Learning is but an adjunct

To his observations on the most manifest case of retention of remodelled lines, those commencing,

For when would you, my lord, or you, or you?
may be added something which bears upon the question as to even the earlier form of Shakespeare's comedy having owed obligations to a dramatist earlier still. The lines, From women's eyes this doctrine I derive;
They are the ground, the books, the academes
From whence doth spring the true Promethean fire, reappear, as is justly stated, in the same speech lower down, transformed:—

From women's eyes this doctrine I derive;
They sparkle still the right Promethean fire;
They are the books, the arts, the academes
That show, contain, and nourish all the world.

Now it is to be remarked that the association of the Promethean fire with the Academy cannot be in its origin fortuitous; it must be due to some scholar who knew that, among other expressive dedications at the Academy of Plato, there was an altar of Prometheus, from which the competitors in the torch race annually took their fire and started on their course in the direction of Athens (Pausanias, i. 30). The traces of familiarity with this suggestive incident are clearly legible between the lines first quoted, but it was as manifestly disregarded, and therefore certainly not known, by Shakespeare, who gave to them their later and, indeed, in consequence, less expressive form.

Dramatic Society.

THE death of Mrs. Charles Kean deprives the present generation of one of the few links that unite the stage of to-day with that of the past. Though her retirement did not take place until after the death of her husband in 1868, her reputation was established in the first half of the century, when the poetic drama, as represented by Sheridan Knowles, was still in vogue. Her performances in 'The Wife' and in 'Love' by that prolific dramatist are still recalled, while her creation of the heroine of Lord Byron's 'Sardanapalus' and Talfourd's 'Ion' won her a reputation likely to endure. Eminently natural and impulsive in style, she formed a striking contrast to Miss Helen Faucit, the one of her contemporaries with whom it is natural and customary to compare her. As Ellen Tree Mrs. Kean made her first appearance in London at Drury Lane Theatre, playing Violante in 'The Wonder.' In her retirement Mrs. Kean has enjoyed much consideration.

'THE MAN OF CROMWELL,' a version by Mrs. Gore of 'Le Serment de Thérèse,' first produced at the Haymarket in 1836, with Mr. Webster, Vining, and Buckstone in the principal parts, has been revived at the Adelphi. Mr. Fernandez played the rôle of Sergeant Austerlitz, which is quite within his range; Miss Pateman was Thérèse, Miss Clara Jocks Manette her sister, and Mr. Pateman Walter.

MR. S. LEE is going to follow his recent article in the Gentleman's Magazine on 'The Original of Shylock' with 'A New Study of "Love's Labour's Lost,"' embodying some original investigations into the sources of its chief incidents. It will be curious to see if Mr. Lee has discovered anything that has escaped the industry of Mr. Halliwell-Phillips.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—J. W.—W. J. L.—E. W.—received.
No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

NEW WORK BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE GAMEKEEPER AT HOME.'

ROUND ABOUT A GREAT ESTATE.

By RICHARD JEFFERIES,

Author of 'The Gamekeeper at Home,' 'Wild Life in a Southern County,' 'The Amateur Poacher,' &c.

Crown 8vo. 5s.

NEW VOLUME BY ROBERT BROWNING

DRAMATIC IDYLS.

SECOND SERIES

By ROBERT BROWNING.

Fcap. 8vo. 5s.

LIFE OF LIEUT.-GENERAL SIR JAMES OUTRAM.

By Major-General Sir FREDERIC J. GOLDSMID, C.B., K.C.S.I.

2 vols. demy 8vo. 32s. with Illustrations and Maps.

"As a biography the book must take a permanent place. It will live among us like the justly-acquired fame of James Outram himself, and help, as it did, to uphold the good and honest."—Daily Telegraph.

"Mr Frederic Goldsmid may be congratulated on the success with which he has written his very valuable and interesting book."—Fort Mail Gazette.

NEW VOLUME BY MATTHEW ARNOLD.

PASSAGES from the PROSE WRITINGS of MATTHEW ARNOLD.

Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Contents. 1. Literature—2. Politics and Society—3. Philosophy and Religion.

MIXED ESSAYS. By Matthew Arnold. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 9s.

Contents: Democracy—Equality—Irish Catholicism and British Liberalism—Porro Unum est Necessarium—A Guide to English Literature—Falkland—A French Critic on Milton—A French Critic on Goethe—George Sand.

NEW and OLD: a Volume of Verse. By John Addington Symonds, M.A.

Author of 'Renaissance in Italy,' &c. Crown 8vo. 5s.

ENGLISH TREES and TREE PLANTING. By William H. Ablett.

Demy 8vo. 12s. 6d.

"To country gentlemen the book will be invaluable. Monografts and the classic London are still excellent guides, but the forester's library would be incomplete without this well-written treatise."—Examiner.

"Calculated to be of great service to such as need a practical guide to English forestry."—Law Stock Journal.

A SELECTION from the POETRY of ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING.

Second Series, uniform with the First Series. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.; gilt edges, 8s. 6d.

A SELECTION from the POETICAL WORKS of ROBERT BROWNING.

Second Series, uniform with the First Series. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.; gilt edges, 8s. 6d.

PHILOSOPHY of CHARLES DICKENS. By the Hon. Albert S. G. Canning.

Author of 'Philosophy of the Waverley Novels,' 'Religious Strife in British History,' &c. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

"A book that is well worth reading."—Whitwell Review.

"The author has done his work with taste and judgment."—Queen.

"Full to overflowing with true criticism and sound common sense."—English Churchman.

RECOMMENDED AS A PRIZE BOOK FOR SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

THE BISHOP of S. ANDREWS ON SHAKESPEARE.

SHAKESPEARE'S KNOWLEDGE and USE of the BIBLE. By Charles

WORDSWORTH, D.C.L., Bishop of S. Andrews, and Fellow of Winchester College. Third Edition, with Appendix, containing additional Illustrations and Tercenary Sermon preached at Stratford-on-Avon. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

"Also, bound in calf, 12s.; or in morocco, gilt edges, 16s.

RENAISSANCE in ITALY: Age of the Despots. By John Addington

SYMONDS, M.A. Second Edition. Demy 8vo. 16s.

SHAKESPEARE COMMENTARIES. By Dr. G. G. Gervinus, Professor at Heidelberg. Translated, under the Author's superintendence, by F. E. BUNNETT. Thoroughly Revised by the Translator. With a Preface by F. J. FURNIVALL, Esq. New Edition. 8vo. 14s.

NEW NOVEL.

NEW NOVEL BY SARAH TYTLER.

OLIVER CONSTABLE: Miller and Baker.

By SARAH TYTLER,

Author of 'Citoyenne Jacqueline,' 'Scotch Firs,' &c. 3 vols. post 8vo.

"An exceedingly interesting tale. We regard it as one of the best works of the gifted authoress."—Cont Journal

Now ready (One Shilling), No. 268,

THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE,

For SEPTEMBER.

With Illustrations by George Du Maurier and W. Small.

Contents.

WHITE WINGS: a Yachting Romance. (With an Illustration.) Chap. 44. "Ye are Welcome, Olemberg!" 45. The Epitaphs of Look. 46. "Flash" and "Mimosa."

THE GROWTH of SCULPTURE. By Grant Allen.

GAMES.

THE PAVILION on the LINKS. (In Two Parts.) Chap. 1. Tells how I camped in Graden Sea-Wood, and beheld a Light in the Pavilion. 2. Tells of the Nocturnal Landing from the Yacht. 3. Tells how I became acquainted with my Wife. 4. Tells in what a startling manner I was not alone in finding the Truth.

A GOSPEL about MARRIAGE: the Divorce and Transgression.

TWO BEGGARS. (A Sketch from Life.) By John Dangerfield.

THE BEASTY SIDE of LETTERS.

WASHINGTON SQUARE. By Henry James, Jr. (With an Illustration.) Chap. 18-24.

WORKS BY ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING.

POEMS by ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING. 5 vols. Twelfth edition. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.; gilt edges, 8s. 6d.

AURORA LIGHON. With Portrait. Sixteenth Edition. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.; gilt edges, 8s. 6d.

A SELECTION from the POETRY of ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING. With Portrait and Vignette.

First Series. Ninth Edition. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.; gilt edges, 8s. 6d.

Second Series. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.; gilt edges, 8s. 6d.

WORKS BY ROBERT BROWNING.

POETICAL WORKS of ROBERT BROWNING. New and Uniform Edition. 5 vols. fcap. 8vo. 5s. each.

THE ANTIPOETRY.

First Series. Fcap. 8vo. 5s.

Second Series. Fcap. 8vo. 5s.

LA SAISSIE: The Two Poets of Croisic. Fcap. 8vo. 5s.

THE ANAGENON of ARCHYLUS. Transcribed by Robert Browning. Fcap. 8vo. 5s.

PICCHIAROTTO, and HOW HE WORKED in DISTEMPER. With other Poems. Fcap. 8vo. 5s. 6d.

THE INN ALBUM. Fcap. 8vo. 7s.

RED COTTON NIGHT-CAP COUNTRY, or, TART and TOWERS. Fcap. 8vo. 5s.

THE RING and the BOOK. 4 vols. fcap. 8vo. 5s. each.

BALAUCTION'S ADVENTURE, including a Transcript from Euripides. Fcap. 8vo. 5s.

ARISTOPHANES' APOLOGY, including a Transcript from Euripides, being the Last Adventure of Balauktion. Fcap. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

PIPING at the FAIR. Fcap. 8vo. 5s.

FRINCE HOHENSTIEL-SCHWANGAU, SAVIOUR of SOCIETY. Fcap. 8vo. 5s.

A SELECTION from the POETICAL WORKS of ROBERT BROWNING.

First Series. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.; gilt edges, 8s. 6d.

Second Series. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.; gilt edges, 8s. 6d.

WORKS BY MATTHEW ARNOLD.

PASSAGES from the PROSE WRITINGS of MATTHEW ARNOLD. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

LAST SPEAKS on CHURCH and RELIGION. With a Preface. Crown 8vo. 7s.

MIXED ESSAYS. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 9s.

Contents: Democracy—Equality—Irish Catholicism and British Liberalism—Porro Unum est Necessarium—A Guide to English Literature—Falkland—A French Critic on Milton—A French Critic on Goethe—George Sand.

LITERATURE and DOGMA; or, Essay towards a better Apprehension of the Bible. Fifth Edition. Crown 8vo. 9s.

"The References to all the Bible Quotations are, in this Edition, added for the first time."

GOD and the BIBLE: a Review of Objections to 'Literature and Dogma.' Reprinted from the Contemporary Review. Entirely Revised. With a Preface. Crown 8vo. 9s.

ST PAUL and PROTESTANTISM. With an Essay on Puritanism and the Church of England. Third Edition, Revised. Small crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

CULTURE and ANARCHY: an Essay in Political and Social Criticism. Reprinted from the Contemporary Review. With a Preface and Alterations. Second Edition, 7s.

ON the STUDY of CELTIC LITERATURE. 8vo. 8s. 6d.

FRIENDSHIP'S GARLAND. Being the Conversations, Letters, and Opinions of the late Arminius Murex Ven. Thos. Trenchard.

Collected and Edited, with a Dedictory Letter to Adolpheus Lov, Esq., of the Daily Telegraph. Small crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

WORKS BY JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS.

RENAISSANCE in ITALY.

AGE of the DESPOTS. Second Edition. Demy 8vo. 16s.

THE REVIVAL of LEARNING. Demy 8vo. 16s.

THE FINE ARTS. Demy 8vo. 16s.

STUDIES of the GREEK POETS.

First Series. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

Second Series. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

SKETCHES in ITALY and GREECE. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 9s.

SKETCHES and STUDIES in ITALY. With a Frontispiece. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

MANY MOODS: a Volume of Verse. Crown 8vo. 9s.

THE SONNETS of MICHAEL ANGELO BIONARROTTI and TON. MARG CAMPANELLA. Now for the first time translated into English language. Crown 8vo. 7s.

NEW and OLD. A Volume of Verse. Crown 8vo. 9s.

Price 4d.; by post, 6d. the Number for SEPTEMBER of
THE ARTIST: a Monthly Paper for Workers,
 Teachers, Students and Amateurs in Art, and for the Art Trade.
 William Morris, 15, Fleet-street, E.C.

THE DRESDEN GALLERY.—The Weekly Publication of a Series of elaborate Reproductions, on a large scale, of the celebrated paintings in the Dresden Gallery was commenced in the ARCHITECT at Saturday, July 3rd, when Two Engravings, of the Adoration of the Magi and the Marriage of Cana, by Paul Veronese, were given. Each number is 15 in by 13 in. Price 4d., or by post 5d. Publishing Office, 175, Strand, London, W.C.; and of all Newsagents.

Published Monthly, price 1s. in crown 6s. tastefully printed on hand-made paper, with round edges, and occasionally illustrated.
 No. IX. is now ready.

THE ANTIQUARY: a Magazine devoted to the Study of the Past Edited by EDWARD WALFORD, M.A.
 Contents: 1. THE SEPTEMBER 1879.

It tells of the Overthrow of Northern Paganism. By William Foster. — The British Museum. — A Lincolnshire Peasant Clerk in the Olden Time. — Mr. Thomas Joyce's Books of Arms. — Strangeness of the Version. Edited by James Greenstreet. — The Largest Oak in Britain. By Thomas H. Trowbridge. — Smithfield. By G. Lambert, F.R.S. — The Kennel-Club. By C. M. Langley. (With Illustrations.) — A Monastic Account Book. Long. Henry VIII. — Rowlandson the Caricaturist (With Illustrations.) — An Essay on Book-Plates. By H. P. Shirley. — Horwies. — Polychrome Ransomed. — The Index to the Transactions. — Caroline von Linsinger and William IV. — The Index to the Transactions. — 1880-1890. — Tourist's Guide. — Meetings of Antiquarian Societies. — The Antiquary's Note-Book. — Antiquarian News. — Correspondence. — The Antiquary's Exchange.

London: Elliot Stock, 55, Paternoster-row.

"The greatest literary success of the century"

Now ready, price One Shilling.
SCRIBNER'S ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE, for SEPTEMBER.

Contains Twenty-five distinct Articles and Seventy Illustrations.
 "At home and abroad it is recognized as unsurpassed in its literary character, and unequalled in its art work."

Frederick Warne & Co. Bedford-street, Strand.

SCRIBNER'S ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE.

Contents for SEPTEMBER.

1. MR. PICKWICK and NICHOLAS NICKLEBY. Illustrations by A. Himmer and C. A. Vanderhoeft. Copperplate's Recollections of Canterbury. — Rochester Castle. — Bull Inn at Rochester. — White Hart Inn. High Street. — Dean's Court. — Doctors Commons. — The Abbey Gate. — Henry IV. — The Green Gate. — Mr. Cromwell's Churchyard. — Ipswich. — The Opposite side of Ipswich Street. — Gray's Inn. — Gateway. — Lincoln's Inn. — George Inn. — New Inn. — Doctober's Hall. — Pump at Doctober's Hall. — Thomas's Hall. — Thomas's Hall. — Ralph Maitland's Mission.
2. RECOMPENSE. Mary L. Mitter.
3. EIGHTY-THREE YEARS ALONE. Emma C. Henderson.
4. THE ROSE. Lord Beaconsfield.
5. WORLD-MUSIC. Frances Louisa Southwell.
6. GEORGETOWN COLLEGE, D.C. D. A. Caserio.
7. WHEN WOODS ARE GREEN. Alice Wallington Holmes.
8. RICHARD HENRY STODOLAND. A. E. Marchmont.
9. THE GUARDIAN OF THE RED DISK. Emma Lazarus.
10. THE GRANDISHER. George W. Cable.
11. PETE THE GREAT. Eugene Schuyler.
12. OVER THE HILLS. With GUYMOCK. Francis V. Greenon.
13. FORTY-FOUR. James Barry Bennett.
14. ERIENNA. B. D. H. Blanchard.
15. JEAN FRANÇOIS MILLET. — Painter and Painter. Alfred Smaller. Introduction by H. W. G. Translation by H. D. N.
16. THE LOSS OF THE "ONIDA." T. A. Lyons.
17. RICKETTS HOLLOW. Lina Radwood Fairfax.
18. THE VALUE OF VIBRATION. H. C. Wood M.D.
19. THOMAS FAINE and the FRENCH REVOLUTION. E. B. Washburn.
20. Topics of the Time. — 21. Communications. — 22. Home and Society. — 23. Culture and Progress. — 24. The World's Work. — 25. Briefs. — 26. Briefs.

Frederick Warne & Co. Bedford-street, Strand.

CASSELL'S FAMILY MAGAZINE, for SEPTEMBER, price 7d., contains:

NOW LIMITED COMPANIES are FORMED.

ENTERTAINING

A WARRIOR IN THE LOW COUNTRY.

ON ILLUMINATING AN ALBUM.

NICHOLAS CLUTTERBUCK. Sketch.

ART FURNISHING FOR MODERN HOUSES.

THE SONG BIRDS DEPARTURE.

REMARKS ON THE SEPTEMBER.

MR. MARY'S REPRESENTATIVES.

OUR FOUNDATION SCHOOLS.

PYTHAGORAS the KANTIAN.

WHAT TO WEAR. "Chat on Dress." By Our Paris Correspondent.

THE MINK. With Memo.

THE PRESERVATION OF SIGHT. By a Family Doctor.

THE GATHERER.

SERIAL STORIES

NOW VICKERS-CROFT was REDEEMED.

THE MAGAZINE of ART, for SEPTEMBER, price 7d., contains:

- ON SOME PICTORIAL ELEMENTS IN ENGLISH SPOT-LAND ARCHITECTURE. By E. Innes Reid. With 4 Engravings.
- LEAVES from a SKETCHER'S NOTE-BOOK. With 3 Engravings.
- ON THE ART OF ILLUSTRATING an ORIGINALLY FRAMED. With 9 Engravings.
- THE GIANTS at the GATES. By Leader Scott. With Engraving.
- OUR LIVING ARTISTS. — Henry Knapp Armstrong, M.A. By E. P. Jackson. With Portrait and Engraving.
- THE SALON, 1880. By John Forbes Robertson. With 4 Engravings.
- ART NEEDLEWORK. With 3 Engravings.
- THE ROYAL SCOTTISH ACADEMY'S EXHIBITION, 1880. With 6 Illustrations.
- ART IN TUNING. By Leader Scott.
- PICTURES of the YEAR. With 3 Engravings.
- Cassell, Pether, Galpin & Co. Ludgate-hill, London.

THE CARISBROOKE: a Monthly Magazine.

Portrait of ALFRED TENNYSON, Esq. — See SEPTEMBER Number.
 Published by Stephen Marshall & Co. Quinces' Hall-court, London; and 29, Quay-street, Newport, Isle of Wight.

Price 1d.

CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL, for SEPTEMBER 1.

Landowning. By W. Chambers.
 Luck.
 Sophie an Intimacy.
 Light and Life.
 Clerical Anecdotes.
 Among the Southern Highlands of Scotland.
 The Furthest Coast.
 In the Temple.
 Mrs. Fitzpatrick's Diamond Ring.
 Overwork and Underwork.
 American Hearing Houses.
 Recollections of an Equestrian Manager.
 An Indian Story.
 Wire Transways.
 Anecdotes of English Naval Life.
 Food and Feasting.
 The South African Diamond Fields.
 A Strange World.
 Young Jermyn Street.
 The Month Science and Arts.
 Four Political Places.

A LIFE'S ATONEMENT.

By D. CHRISTIE MURRAY. Chapters 26-32.

W. & R. Chambers, London and Edinburgh.

Enlarged Edition, pp. 360, bound, 1s. or 14 shillings.

HOMOEOPATHIC FAMILY INSTRUCTOR.

By DR. RICHARD and WASHINGTON EPPS.
 Describes fully and Prescribes for a Hundred Diseases.

London: James Epps & Co. 45, Threadneedle-street, and 179, Fleet-street.

Third Edition, post free, 1s.

DR. WATTS on ASTHMA. A Treatise on the only Successful Method of Curing this Disease. By ROBERT G. WATTS, M.D. F.R.S., F.R.C., &c., 5, Balgarnock-street, Cavendish-square, London.
 London: G. Mitchell & Co. Red Lion-court, Fleet-street.

Post. 6s. cloth, 4s. 6d., royal 2mo. cloth, 3s.

THE DAILY ROUND. Meditation, Prayer, and

Prayer, adapted to the Course of the Christian Year.
 London: J. Whitaker, 12, Warwick-lane.

Just published, price 1s.

FORE-KNOWLEDGE and FREE WILL: a Free Exposition.

 By the Rev. GEORGE JAMISON, B.D., Senior Minister of Old Machar.
 London: Simpkin, Marshall & Co.

BABYLONIAN LITERATURE. — LECTURES

delivered at the ROYAL INSTITUTION. By R. A. M. SAYCE, M.A. Deputy Professor of Comparative Philology, Oxford. Author of 'An Assyrian Grammar' and 'The Principles of Comparative Philology', &c.
 Demy 8vo. cloth, 4s.

"Those who would know more of the libraries of Babylonia and the wonderful contents must refer to Mr. Sayce's book in which most of what is known of them at present is summed up." — Times
 London: S. Bagster & Sons, 12, Paternoster-row.

NEW WORK FOR THE SHOOTING SEASON.

Just ready, large post 6s. 6d. pp. cloth gilt, price 7s. 6d. by post, 7s. 10d.

GAME and GAME SHOOTING, NOTES ON.

Being Miscellaneous Observations on Birds and Animals, and on the Sport they afford for the Gun in Great Britain. Including Grouse, Partridge, Pheasant, Hare, Rabbit, Quail, Woodcock, Snipe, and Books. By J. J. MANLEY, M.A., author of 'Notes on Fish and Fishing', &c., and illustrated with sporting sketches by J. Temple.
 London: The Review Office, 179, Strand, W.C.

IN AND OUT OF LONDON

The New Alphabetical Railway Guide (price 4d.) for Travellers.
 On the First of every Month.

THE LONDON and PROVINCIAL BRADSHAW:
 by Alphabetical and Tabular Arrangement. — Advertisements should be sent to:
 Adams & Francis, 59, Fleet-street, E.C.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.

ADAMS & FRANCIS insert ADVERTISEMENTS

in all Newspapers, Magazines, and Periodicals.
 Terms for transmitting business, and List of London Papers, can be had on application to:
 Adams & Francis, 59, Fleet-street, E.C.

CHARLES DICKENS'S CONTRIBUTIONS TO 'BENTLEY'S MISCELLANY.'

Now ready, in crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.

THE MUDFOG PAPERS, AND OTHERS.

By CHARLES DICKENS,

Author of 'The Pickwick Papers.'

NOW FIRST REPRINTED FROM BENTLEY'S MISCELLANY.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington-street.

E P P S ' S C O C O A.

GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame." — Civil Service Gazette.

JAMES EPPS & CO. HOMOEOPATHIC CHEMISTS, LONDON.
 MAKERS OF EPPS'S GLYCERINE SUPPLEMENTS. — Sold in Labeled Bottles only.

Just published, in 1 vol. 8vo. cloth, price 4s. 6d.
 LIBRARY EDITION (being the flesh), with a POSTSCRIPT.

THE STUDY OF SOCIOLOGY.

By HERBERT SPENCER.
 Williams & Norgate, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 30, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

Post. 6s. 6d. bound in cloth extra, price 7s. 6d. post free.

POEMS. By J. W. WILLIAMS. Author of 'Loe,' 'Joseph and Zola,' &c.

"The bulk of it is filled with a poem on the theme of 'Antony and Cleopatra,' in three cantos. It is in blank verse, of correct rhythm, and the interest is sufficient to carry on the reader without weariness. As poetry goes nowadays little is so well done." — British Med.
 London: Elliot Stock, 55, Paternoster-row, E.C.

PROF. HEER'S 'PRIMEVAL WORLD OF SWITZERLAND.' — with Geographical Map and 200 Illustrations. Edited by JAMES HEYWOOD, M.A. F.R.S. In 2 vols. 8vo. price 12s.

London: Longmans & Co.

FOREIGN STATE PAPERS, 1875-1877.

Now ready, in Imperial 8vo. pp. 600, price 12s. cloth.

CALENDAR of STATE PAPERS, Foreign Series, of the REIGN of ELIZABETH, 1575-1577, preserved in the State Paper Department of H. M. Public Record Office. Edited by A. J. CROSBY, M.A., and published under the direction of the Master of the Rolls, with the sanction of H. M. Secretary of State for the Home Department.

The period covered by the documents herein calendared is less by six months than that contained in most of the preceding volumes, comprising the years 1575, 1576, and 1577 up to June, which is chiefly owing to the increase of documents relating to the affairs of Holland and the Low Countries. The series of volumes, of which this is the eleventh, comprise a Calendar of the Foreign State Correspondence during the early part of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, deposited in the Public Record Office and elsewhere. These documents are very copious, and illustrate not only the external but also the domestic affairs of foreign countries at that period.
 London: Longmans & Co. and Trübner & Co. Oxford; Parker & Co. Cambridge; Macmillan & Co. Edinburgh; A. & C. Black; and Douglas & Foulis. Dublin. A. Thom & Co.

AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

SUSSEX STORIES. By Mrs. ROBERT O'REILLY. 3 vols.

"These Sussex tales are as pure and fresh as Miss Mitford's Hampshire 'Villages' or as Mrs. Gaskell's 'Cranford.' — Standard.
 "We should say that we have never seen better short stories." — Academy.
 "Taken like three will please all readers." — Pall Mall Gazette.

LADY LAURA. By M. E. CHRISTIE. 3 vols.

"'Lady Laura' is extraordinarily clever. The story is delightful. ... Miss Christie has written one of the most interesting books of her time." — Daily News.
 "Lady Laura" must take very high rank indeed. It is an admirable and constant in purpose as it is admirable in form. — Graphic.
 Strahan & Co. Limited, 24, Paternoster-row.

TWO SPECIAL BOOKS FOR AUTUMN TRAVELLERS.

THE COUNTRY OF THE PASSION PLAY; or, the Highlands and Highland of Bavaria. By L. G. SÉQUEN. With Maps and Illustrations, 12s.

THE BLACK FOREST: its People and Legends. By L. G. SÉQUEN. With Maps and Illustrations, 12s.

"One can hardly find a surer or a better guide than Miss Séquen. Her book, having the merit of being almost exhaustive, will never leave one at a loss." — Saturday Review.
 Strahan & Co. Limited, 24, Paternoster-row.

DIARY OF AN EARLY METHODIST.

In a few days, a Second Edition, price 6d. of PASSAGES from the DIARY of an EARLY METHODIST. By the late RICHARD BOWE, Author of 'Episodes in an Obscure Life.' &c.

The Watchman, in the course of one of the most eloquent reviews which has been given to any modern book, thus speaks of Mr. Rowe's work. — "It is difficult for a Methodist, just after reading it, to control his feelings sufficiently to criticize it. Beautiful and perfectly true. It brings all the love and glow and gladness of Primitive Methodism most vividly to our consciousness. And the fact that Godwin is not less hearty in its commendation. It says: — 'It is a charming portrait which Mr. Rowe has drawn in this diary. ... We do not know where to find a more vivid picture of the towns and villages of the time. Merely as a work of art the picture is perfect.'"
 Strahan & Co. Limited, 24, Paternoster-row.

CHEAP NEW EDITION OF MISS BRADDON'S NOVELS.

In Picture Covers, price 2s. each; cloth gilt, 2s. 6d. each.

Messrs. JOHN & ROBERT MAXWELL beg to announce as now ready an entirely New, greatly Improved, Uniform and Cheap Edition of MISS BRADDON'S POPULAR NOVELS, all of which are in print, and will be supplied in quantities, however large, at short notice. The regularly increasing demand for Miss Braddon's Novels all over the World, and the universal appreciation of their merits everywhere, are facts within the knowledge of every Bookseller and of every Exporter of Books in the Kingdom. Special inducements are afforded to Firms in the Book Trade who send out Travellers, and to all large Buyers of Books, whether for Home Use or for Exportation.

1. LADY AUDLEY'S SECRET.
2. HENRY DUNBAR.
3. ELEANOR'S VICTORY.
4. AURORA FLOYD.
5. JOHN MARCHMONT'S LEGACY.
6. THE DOCTOR'S WIFE.
7. ONLY A CLOD.
8. SIR JASPER'S TENANT.
9. TRAIL OF THE SERPENT.

10. LADY'S MILE.
11. LADY LISLE.
12. CAPTAIN OF THE VULTURE.
13. BIRDS OF PREY.
14. CHARLOTTE'S INHERITANCE.
15. RUPERT GODWIN.
16. RUN TO EARTH.
17. DEAD SEA FRUIT.
18. RALPH THE BAILIFF.

19. FENTON'S QUEST.
20. LOVELS OF ARDEN.
21. ROBERT AINSLEIGH.
22. THE BITTER END.
23. MILLY DARRELL.
24. STRANGERS AND PILGRIMS.
25. LUCIUS DAVOREN.
26. TAKEN AT THE FLOOD.
27. LOST FOR LOVE.

28. A STRANGE WORLD.
29. HOSTAGES TO FORTUNE.
30. DEAD MEN'S SHOES.
31. JOSEPH HAGGARD.
32. WEAVERS AND WRET.
33. AN OPEN VERDIOT.
34. VIKEN.
35. THE CLOVEN FOOT.
36. STORY OF BARBARA.

"No one can be dull who has a novel by Miss Braddon in hand. The most tiresome journey is beguiled and the most wearisome illness is brightened by any one of her books."

Now ready, at all Booksellers' and Bookstalls, price 2s.; cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.

THE STORY OF BARBARA: MISS BRADDON'S RECENT NOVEL.

MR. G. A. SALA'S GREAT WORK ON LONDON.

Price 2s. 6d.; cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.; illustrated with 47 Whole-Page Engravings, from designs by M'Connell, forming the most attractive description of the hours of the Day and Night in London ever published, and the cheapest.

TWICE ROUND THE CLOCK.

By GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA.

This day, now ready, price 2s.; cloth 2s. 6d.

CHEAP EDITION OF MISS DORA RUSSELL'S NEW NOVEL.

BENEATH THE WAVE.

"Miss Russell has written a clever and powerful novel, which has some excellent situations, presents some lifelike characters, and has a good backbone of plot."

Sunday Times.

CHEAP NEW EDITION OF 'LOTTIE'S FORTUNE.'

NOW READY, price 2s.; cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.

LOTTIE'S FORTUNE: a Novel.

By FREDERICK TALBOT, Author of 'Sophie Crewe,' &c.

BY M. MIKAËL GORTSCHAKOV.

Price 2s.; post free, 2s. 4d. Cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.; post free, 2s. 10d.

THE MYSTERIES OF ST. PETERSBURG.

SECRETS OF RUSSIAN LIFE AND MANNERS.

MISS MARY CECIL HAY'S NOVELS.

Price 2s. Ornamental Cover; 2s. 6d. cloth gilt.

6. NORA'S LOVE TEST.

"Nora" is good.—Athenæum. "This book has, what is very rare in novels, a distinct interest, a story."—Academy. "Bright, fresh, and sparkling. It is full of interest."—Examiner.

Also ready, uniform with the above,

- | | |
|---------------------------|---------------------------|
| 1. OLD MYDDLETON'S MONEY. | 3. VICTOR AND VANQUISHED. |
| 2. HIDDEN PERILS. | 4. THE ARUNDEL MOTTO. |
| 5. THE SQUIRE'S LEGACY. | |

MISS DORA RUSSELL'S NOVELS.

Price, boards, 2s.; cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.

- | | |
|-------------------------|------------------------|
| FOOTPRINTS IN THE SNOW. | THE VICAR'S GOVERNESS. |
| BENEATH THE WAVE | |

MR. W. S. HAYWARD'S NOVELS.

Price 2s. each; cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.

- | | |
|-----------------------------|----------------------------|
| 1. LOVE AGAINST THE WORLD. | 6. MAUD LUTON. |
| 2. HUNTED TO DEATH. | 7. THE THREE RED MEN. |
| 3. PERILS OF A PRETTY GIRL. | 8. JOHN HAZEL'S VENGEANCE. |
| 4. ETHEL GREY. | 9. BARBARA HOME. |
| 5. CAROLINE. | 10. THE SECRET SEVEN. |

Price 2s.; cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.

PUT TO THE TEST. Edited by M. E. BRADDON.
ONLY A WOMAN. Do.
ON HER MAJESTY'S SECRET SERVICE.
MISSISS AND MATRIMONY.
BARRY O'BYRNE.
OUR MARY.
KING'S PAGE.
THE ORANGE GIRL.

AUTHOR'S COPYRIGHT CHEAP NEW EDITION.

In Uniform Volumes, Picture Covers, price 6d. each; in Railway Volumes, Ornamental Boards, price 2s. each. Always in print.

AIMARD'S INDIAN TALES.

First Series, 2s. complete.

1. TRAPPERS OF ARKANSAS. 6d.
2. BORDER RIFLES. 6d.
3. FREEBOOTERS. 6d.
4. WHITE SCALPER. 6d.

Second Series, 2s. complete.

5. GUIDE TO THE DESERT. 6d.
6. INSURGENT CHIEF. 6d.
7. FLYING HORSEMAN. 6d.
8. LAST OF THE AUCAS. 6d.

Third Series, 2s. complete.

9. MISSOURI OUTLAWS. 6d.
10. PRAIRIE FLOWERS. 6d.
11. INDIAN SCOUT. 6d.
12. STRONGHAND. 6d.

Also ready, uniform with the above, price 6d. each, every Book complete in itself.

- | | | | |
|--------------------------------|-----------------------------|----------------------------------|-----------------------|
| 13. THE BEE-HUNTERS. 6d. | 17. SMUGGLER HERO. 6d. | 31. TRAIL-HUNTER. 6d. | 35. INDIAN CHIEF. 6d. |
| 14. STONEHEART. 6d. | 18. REBEL CHIEF. 6d. | 32. PIRATES OF THE PRAIRIES. 6d. | 36. GOLD-SEEKERS. 6d. |
| 15. QUEEN OF THE SAVANNAH. 6d. | 19. THE ADVENTURER. 6d. | 33. TRAPPER'S DAUGHTER. 6d. | 37. RED TRACK. 6d. |
| 16. BUCCANEER CHIEF. 6d. | 20. PEARL OF THE ANDER. 6d. | 34. TIGER-SLAYER. 6d. | |

London: JOHN & ROBERT MAXWELL, Milton House, Shoe-lane, E.C.; and at all Booksellers' and Railway Bookstalls.

Editorial Communications should be addressed to "The Editor"—Advertisements and Business Letters to "The Publisher"—at the Office, 39, Wellington-street, Strand, London, W.C.

Printed by R. J. FRANCIS, Athenæum Press, Took's-court, Chancery-lane, E.C.; and Published by JOHN FRANCIS, at No. 39, Wellington-street, Strand, W.C.

Agents: For Scotland, Messrs. Bell & Bradburn, and Mr. John Macmillan, Edinburgh;—for Ireland, Mr. John Robertson, Dublin.—Saturday, August 28, 1880.

MR. MURRAY'S LIST OF BOOKS, FOR SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, AND STUDENTS.

DR. SMITH'S SCHOOL DICTIONARIES.

CONCISE DICTIONARY of the BIBLE. 21s.	SMALLER CLASSICAL DICTION- ARY. 7s. 6d.	SMALLER LATIN-ENGLISH DIC- TIONARY. 7s. 6d.
SMALLER DICTIONARY of the BIBLE. 7s. 6d.	SMALLER DICTIONARY of ANTI- QUITIES. 7s. 6d.	ENGLISH-LATIN DICTIONARY. 21s.
CLASSICAL DICTIONARY. 18s.	LATIN-ENGLISH DICTIONARY. 21s.	SMALLER ENGLISH-LATIN DIC- TIONARY. 7s. 6d.

MURRAY'S STUDENT'S MANUALS.

SEVEN AND SIXPENCE EACH.

Old Testament History.	Gibbon's Rome.	English Language.
New Testament History.	Hume's England.	English Literature.
Ancient History.	Hallam's Middle Ages.	Specimens of English Literature.
Ecclesiastical History.	Hallam's England.	Modern Europe. [In preparation.]
English Church History.	History of France.	Blackstone.
Roman History.	Ancient Geography.	Moral Philosophy.
Greek History.	Modern Geography.

DR. WM. SMITH'S SMALLER MANUALS.

THREE AND SIXPENCE EACH.

Scripture History.	Rome.	England.
Ancient History.	Greece.	English Literature.
Ancient Geography.	Classical Mythology.	Specimens of Eng. Literature.

EDUCATIONAL SERIES.

LATIN COURSE.

Principia Latina. Pt. I. 3s. 6d.
Appendix to Pt. I. 2s. 6d.
Principia Latina. Pt. II. 3s. 6d.
Principia Latina. Pt. III. 3s. 6d.
Principia Latina. Pt. IV. 3s. 6d.
Principia Latina. Pt. V. 3s.
Young Beginners' 1st Latin Book. 2s.
Young Beginners' 2nd Latin Book. 2s.
Student's Latin Grammar. 6s.
Smaller Latin Grammar. 3s. 6d.
Tacitus. Selections. 3s. 6d.

FRENCH COURSE.

French Principia. Pt. I. 3s. 6d.
French Principia. Pt. II. 4s. 6d.
Student's French Grammar. 7s. 6d.
Smaller French Grammar. 3s. 6d.

GERMAN COURSE.

German Principia. Pt. I. 3s. 6d.
German Principia. Pt. II. 3s. 6d.
Practical German Grammar. 3s. 6d.

ITALIAN COURSE.

Italian Principia. Pt. I. 3s. 6d.
Italian Principia. Pt. II. 3s. 6d.
[Nearly ready.]

GREEK COURSE.

Initia Græca. Pt. I. 3s. 6d.
Initia Græca. Pt. II. 3s. 6d.
Initia Græca. Pt. III. 3s. 6d.
Student's Greek Grammar. 6s.
Smaller Greek Grammar. 3s. 6d.
Greek Accidence. 2s. 6d.
Plato. Selections. 3s. 6d.

ENGLISH COURSE.

English Grammar. 3s. 6d.
Primary English Grammar. 1s.
Primary History of Britain. 2s. 6d.
Modern Geography. 5s.
English Composition. 3s. 6d.

* * DETAILED CATALOGUES SENT GRATIS BY POST ON APPLICATION.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle-street.

A HIGH CLASS NEWSPAPER FOR BOYS.

On SEPTEMBER 15 will be published, NUMBER I. of

THE BOYS' NEWSPAPER.

WEEKLY, PRICE ONE PENNY.

PROSPECTUS.

EAGER as boys are for news, and keenly appreciative as they have shown themselves to be of well-digested intelligence on all the varied subjects that interest them, it has never yet been attempted to give them a Newspaper for themselves. It is perhaps beyond dispute that almost all that is going on in the world around has a very decided interest for boys, if only the account be conveyed to them in a form which commends itself to their taste and intelligence. Thus, for instance, the course of international events, the progress of legislation, the prosecution of great enterprises, the success of discoveries and inventions, the latest adventure, the most recent voyage of discovery, and such like topics, form a varied and absorbing record from week to week, not less attractive to boys than the things which more immediately concern them in the familiar worlds of School and Home, of Work and Play.

In the ordinary daily or weekly newspapers there is, however, so much that is of necessity uninteresting to and even unsuitable for boys, that this class of publication has, comparatively, but few attractions for them. But read they will and read they must, and in them, therefore, we have a vast audience ready and eager to listen to anything that from their point of view is worth listening to. It is to this large and highly appreciative audience that THE BOYS' NEWSPAPER will address itself.

THE BOYS' NEWSPAPER will be adapted for all boys—boys of all ages—inasmuch as the views and tastes of every section will be carefully considered, and their requirements suitably supplied. It will contain what they want to know and what they are accustomed most to interest themselves in; and whilst it will be essentially a Newspaper, it will differ widely from any other existing vehicle of news. Not only will all the events which grow out of the work and play of active boy life be duly reported, but there will be, in addition to some original and carefully-selected stories, a series of practical papers, and a condensed record of all that is transpiring in the outer and larger world for a place in which boys are seeking and striving to qualify themselves.

In addition to the more general news of the world's doings, such as has already been indicated as possessing great attraction for boys, THE BOYS' NEWSPAPER will provide a weekly register of all those events which come directly home to boys themselves in their immediate pursuits. Thus, it will contain news of every description from the Universities, Colleges, and Schools; particulars of Examinations, Scholarships, and Prizes; reports of Cricket and Football Matches, of Racquets and Tennis, of Athletic Sports, Bicycling, Rowing, and Swimming; and in order to make this "intelligence department" as complete as possible, THE BOYS' NEWSPAPER proposes to have correspondents at all the special centres of interest for boys throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

Week by week THE BOYS' NEWSPAPER will give practical articles by well-known experts on the various Sports and Pastimes of every season; on the keeping and management of Pets; on Carpentry, Mechanics, and other Indoor Occupations; on Natural History and other Collections; and on Home Amusements of every description.

The numberless traditions connected with School-life will form an attractive series of papers, written by "old boys"; while graphic descriptive accounts will, from time to time, be given of places full of interest to boys on account of the grand stories of the past connected with them.

Prize Schemes of a very comprehensive nature, and calculated to interest boys of all tastes, will form a characteristic feature of THE BOYS' NEWSPAPER, and an outline of these will be given in the first Number.

"Answers to Correspondents" will be dealt with very fully, and the utmost trouble will be taken to give trustworthy replies to all proper inquiries, and to afford information on all subjects of interest.

Acrostics, Puzzles, Chess and Mathematical Problems—all these will find a place, together with numerous other subjects which it is not now possible to dwell upon.

Out of these various materials then, abundant to overflowing as they are, it is determined to produce, week by week, a newspaper which, it is believed, the boys of this country will read alike with pleasure and with advantage. For THE BOYS' NEWSPAPER will be seen to be not merely a repertory of the world's news, not simply a weekly record of boys' doings, but also a journal abounding in all kinds of information, recreation, and amusement, and thoroughly representative of all that is best and noblest and most attractive in boys themselves—in short, a Journal which will be gladly welcomed in every house in the land where boys are to be found.

N.B.—A limited number of approved Advertisements will be received for THE BOYS' NEWSPAPER, terms for the insertion of which may be had on application to the Manager of the Advertisement Department, La Belle Sauvage Yard, E.C.

CASELL, PETTER, GALPIN & CO. Ludgate-hill, London.

GEORGE BELL & SONS' EDUCATIONAL BOOKS.

Complete Catalogues of upwards of 480 Educational Books of all kinds sent post free on application.

BIBLIOTHECA CLASSICA.

A Series of Greek and Latin Authors, with English Notes, Edited by Eminent Scholars, under the direction of the late G. LONG, M.A., formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, and the late Rev. A. J. MACLEANE, M.A., Head Master of King Edward's School, Bath. 8vo.

ÆSCHYLUS. By F. A. PALBY, M.A. Fourth Edition, Revised. 18s.

CICERO'S ORATIONS. By G. LONG, M.A. 4 vols. 2s. 4s. Vol. I. 18s.; Vol. II. 14s.; Vol. III. 10s.; Vol. IV. 12s.

DEMOSTHENES. By R. WHISTON, M.A., late Head Master of Rochester Grammar School. 2 vols. each 10s.

EURIPIDES. By F. A. PALBY, M.A. 3 vols. each 10s.

HOMER. Vol. I. ILIAD, I.—XII, with Introduction. By F. A. PALBY, M.A. 12s. Vol. II. 14s.

HERODOTUS. By Rev. J. W. BLAKESLEY, B.D. 2 vols. 10s.

HESIOD. By F. W. PALBY, M.A. 10s. 6d.

HORACE. By Rev. A. J. MACLEANE, M.A. 2s. 4s. By GEORGE LONG, M.A. 12s.

JUVENAL and PERSIUS. By Rev. A. J. MACLEANE, M.A., Trinity College, Cambridge. Revised by GEORGE LONG, M.A.

PLATO. By W. H. THOMPSON, D.D., Master of Trinity College, Cambridge. Vol. I. PHAEDRUS, 1s. 6d. Vol. II. SYMPOSIUM, 1s. 6d.

SOPHOCLES. Vol. I. 18s. By Rev. F. H. BLYDEN, M.A. Contents: OEDIPUS TYRANNUS—OEDIPUS COLONUS—ANTIGONE.

SOPHOCLES. Vol. II. 12s. By F. A. PALBY, M.A. Contents: PHILOCTETES—ELECTRA—TRACHINIANÆ—AJAX.

TACITUS.—THE ANNALS. By the Rev. P. FROST, M.A.

TERENCE. By E. St. J. PARRY, M.A. 18s.

VERGIL. By the late J. CONINGTON, M.A., Professor of Latin at Oxford. Vol. I. THE BUCOLICS and GEORGICS. Third Edition. 12s. Vol. II. THE ÆNEID, Books I. to VI. Third Edition. 12s. Vol. III. Second Edition. 14s.

A COMPLETE LATIN GRAMMAR. By J. W. DONALDSON, D.D. Third Edition. 14s.

An ATLAS of CLASSICAL GEOGRAPHY. 24 Coloured Maps by W. Hughes and G. Long, M.A. Imperial 8vo. 12s. 6d. London: WHITTAKER & CO.

CAMBRIDGE GREEK AND LATIN TEXTS.

Being for the most part the Texts of the Bibliotheca Classica and the Grammar-School Classics. 18mo. bound uniformly in neat cloth, with red edges.

ÆSCHYLUS. By F. A. PALBY, M.A. 8s.

CÆSAR DE BELLO GALLICO. By G. LONG, M.A. 2s.

CICERO de SENECTUTE et de AMICITIA, et EPISTOLÆ SELECTÆ. By G. LONG, M.A. 1s. 6d.

CICERONIS ORATIONES. Vol. I. In Verrem. By G. LONG, M.A. 2s. 6d.

EURIPIDES. By F. A. PALBY, M.A. 3 vols. each 8s. 6d.

HERODOTUS. By J. W. BLAKESLEY, B.D. 2 vols. each 8s. 6d.

HOMERII ILIAS. I.—XII. By F. A. PALBY, M.A. 8s. 6d.

HORATIUS. By A. J. MACLEANE, M.A. 2s. 6d.

JUVENAL et PERSIUS. By A. J. MACLEANE, M.A. 1s. 6d.

LUCRETIUS. By H. A. J. MUNRO, M.A. 2s. 6d.

SALLUSTI CRISPI CATILINA et JUGURTHA. By G. LONG, M.A. 1s. 6d.

TERENTI COMEDIE. By W. WAGNER, Ph.D. 8s.

THUCYDIDES. By J. G. DONALDSON, D.D. 3 vols. each 8s. 6d.

VERGILIUS. By J. CONINGTON, M.A. 3s. 6d.

XENOPHONTIS EXPEDITIO CYRI. By J. F. MACMICHAEL, B.A. 2s. 6d.

London: WHITTAKER & CO.

GRAMMAR-SCHOOL CLASSICS.

CÆSAR DE BELLO GALLICO. By G. LONG, M.A. 6d.

CÆSAR DE BELLO GALLICO. Books I.—III. For Junior Classes. By G. LONG, M.A. 2s. 6d.

CATULLUS, TIBULLUS, and PROPERTIUS.—SELECTED POEMS. By Rev. A. H. WRATISLAW and F. N. SUTTON, B.A. 2s. 6d.

CICERO.—DE SENECTUTE, DE AMICITIA, and SELECT EPISTOLÆ. By GEORGE LONG, M.A. New Edition. 4s. 6d.

CORNELIUS NEPOS. By Rev. J. F. MACMICHAEL, Head Master of the Grammar School, Ripon. 2s. 6d.

HOMER.—ILIAD. Books I.—XII. Edited by F. A. PALBY, M.A. 6s. 6d.

HORACE. By A. J. MACLEANE, M.A. 8s. 6d. Or in Two Parts, 2s. 6d. each.

JUVENAL.—SIXTEEN SATIRES (Expurgated). By H. PRIOR, M.A., late Scholar of Trinity College, Oxford. 4s. 6d.

MARTIAL.—SELECT EPIGRAMS. By F. A. PALBY, M.A., and W. H. STONE. 4s. 6d.

OVIDI FASTI. By F. A. PALBY, M.A. 8s.

SALLUSTI CATILINA and JUGURTHA. By GEORGE LONG, M.A. 2s.

TACITUS.—GERMANIA and AGRICOLA. By Rev. F. FROST. 2s. 6d.

VIRGIL.—BUCOLICS, GEORGICS, and ÆNEID. Books I.—IV. By Rev. J. G. SHERRARD, D.C.L. Abridged from Prof. CONINGTON'S Edition. 2s. 6d.

THE BUCOLICS and GEORGICS. In 1 vol. 8s.

VIRGIL.—ÆNEID. Books V.—XII. Abridged from Prof. CONINGTON'S Edition. 8s. 6d. Books V. and VI. separately, 2s. 6d.

XENOPHON'S ANABASIS. By the late J. F. MACMICHAEL. 6s.

XENOPHON'S CYROPÆDIA. By G. M. GORHAM, M.A., late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. 6s.

XENOPHON'S MEMORABILIA. By Rev. P. FROST, M.A. 4s. 6d.

London: WHITTAKER & CO.

PUBLIC SCHOOL SERIES OF CLASSICAL AUTHORS.

A Series of Classical Texts, Annotated by well-known Scholars, with a special view to the requirements of Upper Forms in Public Schools or University Students. Crown 8vo.

ARISTOPHANES' PAX. By F. A. PALBY, M.A. 4s. 6d.

ARISTOPHANES' ACHARNIANS. By F. A. PALBY, M.A. 4s. 6d.

ARISTOPHANES' FROGS. By F. A. PALBY, M.A. 4s. 6d.

CICERO'S LETTERS to ATTICUS. Book I. By A. PRETOR, M.A. 4s. 6d.

DEMOSTHENES' ORATIONS against the LAW of LEPTINES. By E. W. BRATTON, M.A. 2s. 6d.

DEMOSTHENES' De FALSA LEGATIONE. By the late R. CHILLEN, M.A. Fourth Edition. 6s.

PLATO'S APOLOGY of SOCRATES and CRITO. By W. WAGNER, Ph.D. New Edition, Revised. 4s. 6d.

PLATO'S PHAEDO. By W. WAGNER, Ph.D. 6s. 6d.

PLATO'S PROTAGORAS. By W. WAGNER, Ph.D. Second Edition. 4s. 6d.

PLATO'S RUTHYPHRO. By G. H. WELLS, B.A. 8s.

PLAUTUS' TRINUMVUS. By WILHELM WAGNER, Ph.D. Second Edition. 4s. 6d.

PLAUTUS' AULULARIA. By W. WAGNER, Ph.D. Second Edition, Revised. 4s. 6d.

PLAUTUS' MENECHEMEL. By W. WAGNER, Ph.D. 4s. 6d.

SOPHOCLES' TRACHINIAE. By A. PRETOR, M.A. 4s. 6d.

TERENCE. By WILHELM WAGNER, Ph.D. 10s. 6d.

THEOCRITUS. With Latin Notes. By F. A. PALBY, M.A. 4s. 6d.

CAMBRIDGE TEXTS, WITH NOTES.

Select portions of the Greek and Latin Authors with Introduction and Notes. In fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d. each, except the Ion (price 2s.).

EURIPIDES.—ALOESTIS, MEDEA, HIPPOLYTUS, HECUBA, RACCHUS, ION, GRESSES, PHORMION. By F. A. PALBY, M.A.

ÆSCHYLUS.—PROMETHEUS VINCTUS, SEPTEM CONTRA THEBAS, AGAMEMNON, PERSES, EUMENIDES. By F. A. PALBY, M.A.

CICERO.—DE SENECTUTE, DE AMICITIA, EPISTOLÆ SELECTÆ. By G. LONG.

OVID.—SELECTIONS. By the Rev. A. J. MACLEANE, M.A.

London: WHITTAKER & CO.

CLASS-BOOKS.

AUXILIA LATINA. A Series of Progressive Latin Exercises. By M. J. B. RADDELEY, M.A., Assistant-Master at the Somerset College, Bath. Part I. Accidence, 1s. 6d. Part II. Second Edition, 2s.

LATIN PROSE LESSONS. By ALFRED J. CHURCH, M.A., Head Master of the Grammar School, Bedford. A New Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

LATIN EXERCISES, GRAMMAR PAPERS, and HINTS for JUNIOR CLASSES. By T. COLLINS, M.A., Head Master of the Latin School, Newport, Glos. Second Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

UNSEEN PAPERS in PROSE and VERSE, with Examination Questions. By T. COLLINS, M.A. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

SCALA GRÆCA: a Series of Elementary Greek Exercises. By the Rev. J. W. DAVIS, M.A., Head Master of Tunworth Grammar School, and the late R. W. RADDELEY, M.A. Third Edition. Fcap. 8vo. cloth, 2s. 6d.

GREEK VERSE COMPOSITION, for the Use of Public Schools and Private Students. By G. FENSTON, M.A., Fellow of Magdalene College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

By the late Rev. P. FROST, M.A., St. John's College, Cambridge.

ECLOGÆ LATINÆ; or, First Latin Reading Book. With English Notes and a Dictionary. New Edition. 8s. 6d.

MATERIALS for LATIN PROSE COMPOSITION. New Edition. 2s. 6d.—KEY, 4s.

A LATIN VERSE BOOK. An Introductory Work on Hexameter and Pentameter. New Edition. 8s.—KEY, 6s.

ANALECTA GRÆCA MINORA. With Introductory Sentences. English Notes, and a Dictionary. New Edition. 3s. 6d.

MATERIALS for GREEK PROSE COMPOSITION. Second Edition. 3s. 6d.—KEY, 4s.

FLORILEGIUM POETICUM. A Selection of Elegiac Extracts from Ovid and Theocritus. New Edition, greatly enlarged, with English Notes. 2s.

ANTHOLOGIA GRÆCA. A Selection of Choice Greek Poetry, with Notes. By Rev. F. St. JOHN THACKERAY, Assistant-Master, Brou College. New and Cheaper Edition, with additional Notes. Neat cloth, with red edges, 18mo. 4s. 6d.

ANTHOLOGIA LATINA. A Selection of Choice Latin Poetry from Naevius to Juvenal. With Notes. By Rev. F. St. JOHN THACKERAY. New Edition, Revised. 18mo. 4s. 6d.

By Rev. H. A. HOLDEN, J.L.D., Head Master of Queen Elizabeth's School, Ipswich.

FOLIORUM SILVULA. Part I. Being Passages for Translation into Latin Prose and Verse. Eighth Edition. Post 8vo. 1s. 6d.

FOLIORUM SILVULA. Part II. Passages for Translation into Latin Prose and Verse. Ninth Edition. 8s.

FOLIORUM SILVULA. Part III. Passages for Translation into Greek Verse. Third Edition. 8s.

FOLIA SILVULÆ, sive Eclogæ Poetarum Anglicorum in Latium et Græciam conversæ. Vol. I. 10s. 6d. Vol. II. 12s.

FOLIORUM CENTURIE. Selections for Translation into Latin and Greek Prose, chiefly from the University and College Examination Papers. Sixth Edition. Post 8vo. 6s.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS, York-street, Covent-garden. Cambridge: DEIGHTON, BELL & CO.

GEORGE BELL & SONS' EDUCATIONAL BOOKS.

Complete Catalogue of upwards of 480 Educational Books of all kinds sent post free on application.

CLASS-BOOKS, &c.—(continued).

TRANSLATIONS into ENGLISH and LATIN. By C. B. CALVELEY, M.A., late Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge. Post 8vo. 7s. 6d.

TRANSLATIONS into GREEK and LATIN VERSE. By E. C. JESS, Fellow of Trinity College, Professor of Greek in the University of Glasgow. 4to. cloth gilt, 10s. 6d.

TRANSLATIONS in PROSE and VERSE from and into LATIN, GREEK, and ENGLISH. By R. C. JESS, M.A., Professor of Greek in the University of Glasgow, R. JACKSON, M.A., and W. L. CUNNETT, M.A., Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo. 6s.

BETWEEN WHILES; or, Wayside Amusements of a Working Life. Edited by the Rev. D. H. KENNEDY, D.D. Crown 8vo. 6s.

SERTUM CARTHUSIANUM FLORIBUS TRIUM SECULORUM CONTEXTUM. Cura GUILIELMI HAIG BROWN, Scholæ Carthusianæ Archidiaconi. 8vo. 12s.

SABRINÆ COROLLA in HORTULIS REGIÆ SCHOLÆ SALOPINSIÆ continuata ex viâ Scitiæ Legenda. Middlesex. 8vo. 5s. 6d.

ARISTOPHANIS COMEDIE SUPERSTITES cum DEPRIDITURUS FRAGMENTIS, Additæ Argumenta, Annotationes Criticæ, Metrorum Descriptions, Grammaticæ et Lexicæ. By the Rev. HUBERT HOLDEN, LL.D. late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, Head Master of Ipswich School, and Classical Examiner to the University of London. Third Edition.

Vol. I containing Text Expurgated with Summaries and Critical Notes, also the Fragments, 12s.
The Plays sold separately.

Vol. II. Commentaries Aristophanæ continuæ Indicum Geographorum et Historicorum, 2s. 6d.

On the ACTION of EXAMINATIONS considered as a MEANS of SELECTION. By H. LATHEAM, Fellow and Tutor of Trinity Hall, 10s. 6d.

"Mr. Latheam has placed before us a volume full of the most valuable collections of facts, opinions, and conclusions on the subject of examinations which we have ever seen."—Educational Times.

A LATIN GRAMMAR. By the late T. H. KEY, M.A. F.R.S. Professor of Comparative Grammar in University College, and Head Master of the School. Sixth Thousand. Post 8vo. 6s.

A SHORT LATIN GRAMMAR for SCHOOLS. By the late T. H. KEY, M.A. New Edition. Post 8vo. 3s. 6d.

The THEATRE of the GREEKS. A Treatise on the History and Exhibition of the Greek Drama, with a Supplementary Treatise on the Language, Metre, and Prosody of the Greek Dramatists. By J. W. DONALDSON, D.D. With numerous Illustrations. Eighth Edition. Post 8vo. 4s.

The ELEMENTS of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE. By ERNEST ADAMS, Ph.D. Fifteenth Edition. Post 8vo. 4s. 6d.

The RUDIMENTS of ENGLISH GRAMMAR and ANALYSIS. By ERNEST ADAMS, Ph.D. New Edition. Post 8vo. 2s.

QUESTIONS for EXAMINATIONS in ENGLISH LITERATURE, with a Preface containing brief Hints as to the Study of English. Arranged by the Rev. W. W. SKEAT, late Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge. 2s. 6d.

MATERIALS for GERMAN PROSE COMPOSITION. Consisting of Selections from Modern English Writers, with Grammatical Notes, Idiomatic Renditions, and an Introduction. By Dr. BUCHHEIM, Professor of German in King's College, and Examiner to the London University. Sixth Edition, Revised. With Index. Post 8vo. 4s. 6d.—KEY, 2s.

FRENCH GRAMMAR for PUBLIC SCHOOLS. By Rev. A. C. CLAPIN, M.A. Bachelier-Lecturer at the University of France. Seventh Edition. Post 8vo. 2s. 6d.

FRENCH PRIMER. Elementary French Grammar and Exercises. By Rev. A. C. CLAPIN, M.A. Second Edition. Post 8vo. 1s.

PRIMER of FRENCH PHILOLOGY, with Exercises for Public Schools. By the Rev. A. C. CLAPIN, M.A. 1s.

CAMBRIDGE SCHOOL AND COLLEGE TEXT-BOOKS.

A Series of Elementary Treatises adapted for the use of Students in the Universities, Schools, and Candidates for the Public Examinations. Uniformly printed in fcap. 8vo.

ARITHMETIC. By the Rev. C. ELGAR, M.A., late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, Mathematical Master at Rugby. Ninth Edition. 2s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY ALGEBRA. By the Rev. C. ELGAR, Mathematical Master at Rugby. Fifth Edition. 4s.

ALGEBRA. A Progressive Course of Examples. By the Rev. W. F. MACKENZIE, Head Master of the Grammar School, Warwick, and B. PROUD SMITH, M.A., Master of Chesham House College. 2s. 6d., with Answers, 4s. 6d.

ARITHMETIC. For the Use of Colleges and Schools. By A. WRIGHT, M.A. 4s. 6d.

ARITHMETIC. A Progressive Course of Examples, with Answers. By J. WATSON, M.A., Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. Fourth Edition. 2s. 6d.

An INTRODUCTION to PLANE ASTRONOMY. By P. T. MAIN, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College. Third Edition. 4s.

CONIC SECTIONS treated GEOMETRICALLY. By W. H. BESANT, M.A., Lecturer and late Fellow of St. John's College. Second Edition. 4s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY STATICS. By the Rev. HARVEY GOODWIN D.D., Lord Bishop of Oxford. Second Edition. 2s.

ELEMENTARY HYDROSTATICS. By W. H. BESANT, M.A., late Fellow of St. John's College. Ninth Edition. 4s.

ANALYTICAL GEOMETRY. By T. G. VIVIAN, Fellow of Gonville and Caius College, and Math. Master at Chesham House. Third Edition, Revised. 4s. 6d.

An ELEMENTARY TREATISE on MENSURATION. By S. T. MOORE, M.A., Fellow of Pembroke College. With numerous Examples. 2s.

THE FIRST THREE SECTIONS of NEWTON'S PRINCIPIA. With an Appendix, and the Ninth and Eleventh Sections. By JOHN H. EVANS, M.A. Fifth Edition, Revised by P. T. MAIN, M.A. 4s.

ELEMENTARY TRIGONOMETRY. With Examples. By T. F. HUDSON, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College. 2s. 6d.

GEOMETRICAL OPTICS. By W. S. ALDIS, M.A., Trinity College. 2s. 6d.

COMPANION to the GREEK TESTAMENT. Designed for Theological Students and the Upper Forms in Schools. By A. C. BARRETT, A.M., Caius College. Fourth Edit. Revised. 6s.

An HISTORICAL and EXPLANATORY TREATISE on the BOOK of COMMON PRAYER. By W. O. HUMPHRY, B.D. Fifth Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

TEXT-BOOK of MUSIC. By H. C. BANISTER. Eighth Edition. 2s.

HISTORY of MUSIC. By Rev. H. G. B. HUNT. Fourth Edition. 3s. 6d.

A TREATISE on ELEMENTARY DYNAMICS. By W. GARNETT, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College and Demonstrator of Physics in the University of Cambridge. Second Edition, Revised. 6s.

An ELEMENTARY TREATISE on HEAT. By W. GARNETT, M.A. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

EXERCISES on EUCLID and in MODERN GEOMETRY, containing Applications of the Principles and Processes of Modern Geometry. By J. McDOWELL, M.A. F.R.S. Pembroke College. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. 4s.

The GEOMETRY of CONICS. Third Edition, Revised and Enlarged. By G. TAYLOR, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

An INTRODUCTION to the ANCIENT and MODERN GEOMETRY of CONES. With Historical Notes and Prolegomena. By G. TAYLOR, Fellow of St. John's College. [Nearly ready.]

CHOICE and CHANCE. An Elementary Treatise on Permutations, Combinations, and Probability. With 20 Examples. By W. A. WHITWORTH, M.A. Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. Third Edition, Revised and Enlarged. 6s.
"No treatise is the clearest with which Mr. Whitworth starts and continues the doctrine throughout that it is almost impossible to misunderstand him."—Prof. James.

An ELEMENTARY TREATISE on SOLID GEOMETRY. By W. S. ALDIS, M.A. Third Edition, Revised. 6s.

A TREATISE on HYDROMECHANICS. By W. H. BESANT, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 4th. New Edition, Revised. 10s. 6d.

LECTURES on PRACTICAL ASTRONOMY and ASTRONOMICAL INSTRUMENTS. By the Rev. JAMES CHALLIS, Plumian Professor of Astronomy, Cambridge, and Fellow of Trinity College. 8vo. 10s.

COLLECTION of EXAMPLES and PROBLEMS in ARITHMETIC, ALGEBRA, GEOMETRY, LOGARITHMS, TRIGONOMETRY, CONIC SECTIONS, MECHANICS, &c. With Answers and Occasional Hints. By the Rev. A. WRIGHT, M.A. 12s.

FOREIGN CLASSICS.

Carefully Edited, with English Notes, Grammatical and Explanatory, and Renditions of difficult Idiomatic Expressions, for use in Schools. Fcap. 8vo.

SCHILLER'S WALLENSTEIN. Complete. Edited by Dr. A. BUCHHEIM, Professor of German in King's College, London. 6s. 6d. In Two Parts, each 3s. 6d.

SCHILLER'S MAID of ORLEANS. With English Notes by Dr. WILHELM WAGNER, Editor of the 'Aulularia' and 'Tristram' of Plautus, &c., and Translator of Tacitus' 'History of Roman Literature.' 2s. 6d.

SCHILLER'S MARIA STUART. By V. KASTNER, French and German Master at the Charterhouse, and Professor at Queen's College, Harley Street. Price 2s.

GOETHE'S HERMANN and DOROTHEA. Edited by E. BELL, M.A. Trinity College, Cambridge, and B. WOLFF. With Arguments at the beginning of each Canto. 2s. 6d.

GERMAN BALLADS, from UHLAND, GOETHE, and SCHILLER. With Introduction to each Poem, copious Explanatory Notes, and Biographical Notices. Edited by G. L. MILES-FIELD. 2s. 6d.

CHARLES XII. Par VOLTAIRE. Edited by L. DIBET. Third Edition, Revised. 2s. 6d.

AVENTURES de TÉLÉMAQUE. Par FÉNELON. Edited by C. F. BELLIS. Second Edition, Revised. 4s. 6d.

PICCOLA. By X. B. SAINTYME. Edited by Dr. DUBUC. Ninth Edition. 3s. 6d.

SELECT FABLES of LA FONTAINE. Edited by H. E. BELLIS. 12s. 6d.

GOMBERT'S FRENCH DRAMA.

Post 8vo. 1s. each; in paper wrapper, 6d.

A SELECTION of the best TRAGEDIES and COMEDIES of MOLIÈRE, RACINE, CORNEILLE, and VOLTAIRE. With Arguments in English at the Head of each Scene, and Notes, Critical and Explanatory. Edited by F. X. A. GARC.

MOLIÈRE'S 'L'Avare,' 'Tartuffe,' 'Le Misanthrope,' 'Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme,' 'Le Médecin malgré Lui,' 'Les Femmes Savantes,' 'Les Fourberies de Scapin,' 'Le Mariage Imaginaire,' 'L'École des Femmes,' 'L'École des Maris,' 'Les Précieuses Ridicules.'

CORNEILLE'S 'Le Cid,' 'Cinna,' 'Horace,' 'Polyeucte.'

RACINE'S 'Athalie,' 'Esther,' 'Phèdre,' 'Les Plaideurs,' 'Iphigénie,' 'Andromaque,' 'Britannicus,' 'Le Thébaïde,' ou, les Frères Rivaux.'

VOLTAIRE'S 'Zaïre.'

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S NEW WORKS.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

Now ready, price One Shilling.

Contents for SEPTEMBER, 1880.

1. ADAM and EVE. (Unfinished.)
 2. LIFE in the HOMERIC AGE.
 3. A LITTLE BOHEMIAN PART I. By Mrs. G. W. Godfrey.
 4. A RAY of CYPRUS.
 5. ALFRED DE MUSSET.
 6. THAT NIGHT in JUNE.
 7. LETTERS from CONSTANTINOPLE.
 8. MILTON and WORDSWORTH.
 9. THE REBEL of the FAMILY. By Mrs. Lynn Linton. (Continued.)
- * * * Cases for binding the volumes of Temple Bar can be obtained at all Bookellers, price One Shilling each.

BY MORTIMER COLLINS.

THOUGHTS IN MY GARDEN. By

MORTIMER COLLINS. Edited by EDMUND YATES. With Notes by the Editor and Mrs. MORTIMER COLLINS. In 2 vols. crown 8vo. 2s.

"Whether by mistake or from design the best of Mr. Mortimer Collins's works has been reserved for final publication. Indeed, nothing gives so full or so fair an idea of his genius and talent as the essays, notes, and poems now presented to the world under the title of 'Thoughts in my Garden.'—St. James's Gazette.

"Those who can appreciate freshness of thought, vigour of intellect, and keen observation of men, topics, and current events, can hardly do better than procure these charming volumes."—Press and St. James's Chronicle.

CHARLES DICKENS'S CONTRIBUTIONS TO
'BENTLEY'S MISCELLANY'

The MUDFOG PAPERS, and OTHERS. By CHARLES DICKENS, Author of 'The Pickwick Papers.' Now First Reprinted from Bentley's Miscellany. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.

BY MISS DE FONBLANQUE.

FIVE WEEKS IN ICELAND. By

Miss C. A. DE FONBLANQUE. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

"Graphic, rare, and interesting."—St. James's Gazette.

BY THE REV. J. C. BOYCE.

NIGH UNTO the END; or, a Passage

in Sacred Prophecy now in Course of Translation into History considered. By the Rev. J. C. BOYCE, M.A.
Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

BY MARY FITZ-GIBBON.

A TRIP to MANITOBA. By Mary FITZ-GIBBON. In 8vo. 10s. 6d.

POPULAR NOVELS, AT ALL LIBRARIES.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE FIRST VIOLIN.'

Now ready, in 3 vols. crown 8vo.

THE WELLFIELDS.

By JESSIE FOTHERGILL,

Author of 'Probation' and 'The First Violin.'

LIZZIE of the MILL. From the Original by Mrs. CHRISTINA TYRELL, Translator of 'No Surrender,' &c. In 2 vols. crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'CUT ADRIET.'

PIOUS FRAUDS; or, the Dawn of Love. By ALBANY DE FONBLANQUE, Author of 'Cut Adriet,' 'A Tangled Skein,' &c. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

MISS THOMAS'S NEW NOVEL.

The VIOLIN PLAYER. By Bertha THOMAS. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

LADY M. MAJENDIE'S NEW NOVEL.

FASCINATION. By Lady Margaret MAJENDIE. In 2 vols. crown 8vo.

NEW WORK BY MRS. HENRY WOOD.

Immediately, in 3 vols. crown 8vo.

JOHNNY LUDLOW. Second Series.

By MRS. HENRY WOOD,

Author of 'East Lynne,' &c.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington-street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

HURST & BLACKETT'S NEW WORKS.

13, Great Marlborough-street.

MONSIEUR GUIZOT in PRIVATE

LIFE (1797-1874). By his Daughter, MADAME DE WITT. Translated by Mrs. SIMPSON. 1 vol. 8vo. 15s.

"Madame de Witt has done justice to her father's memory in an admirable record of his life. Mrs. Simpson's translation of this singularly interesting book is in accuracy and grace worthy of the original and of the subject."—Saturday Review.

"This work is replete with interesting reminiscences, and the reading public may be congratulated on having a literary treat provided for them."—Obit.

TALES OF OUR GREAT FAMILIES.

SECOND SERIES. By EDWARD WALPOLE, M.A. 3 vols. 8s.

"The social rank of the persons whose lives and characters are delineated in this work, and the inherent romance of the stories it embodies, will ensure its widespread popularity."—Examiner.

The VILLAGE of PALACES; or, CHRONICLES of CHILSEA. By the Rev. A. G. LESTRANGE.

3 vols. crown 8vo. 3s.

CHEAP EDITION of YOUNG Mrs. JARDINE. By the AUTHOR of 'JOHN HALIFAX.' Forming the New Volume of HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY.

8s. bound.

THE NEW NOVELS.

MISS AMELIA H. EDWARDS'S NEW NOVEL.

Now ready, at all the Libraries. In 3 vols.

LORD BRACKENBURY.

By AMELIA H. EDWARDS.

Author of 'Barbara's History,' &c.

The TENTH EARL. By John Berwick HARWOOD, Author of 'Lady Maria,' &c. 3 vols.

"The Tenth Earl" has plot and substance, incident and vitality."—Athenaeum.

"The Tenth Earl" is very amusing reading."—John Bull.

"A fascinating novel. The plot is deeply interesting."—Court Journal.

A VERY OPAL. By C. L. Pirkis.

"A thoroughly amusing novel. The characters are sketched with a fine hand, and the plot is ingenious and well worked out."—Sunday Times.

FORESTALLED. By M.

BETHAM-EDWARDS, Author of 'Kitty,' 'Bridget,' 'Holidays in Bretagne,' &c. 2 vols. 21s.

"Those who can appreciate a quiet, original, interesting and carefully written story will welcome 'Forestalled' with satisfaction."—Spectator.

"This tale is effectively told, and contains passages, now of redoubt, now of description, which, apart from all questions of dramatic interest, are for their own sake well worth reading."—St. James's Gazette.

WOOLERS and WINNERS. By Mrs.

G. LINNÆUS BANKS, Author of 'The Manchester Man.' 3 vols.

"A thoroughly readable, fresh, and wholesome novel. The story is interesting and well told."—John Bull.

A MODERN GREEK HEROINE.

"A very clever novel. The story may be read with interest from beginning to end."—Standard.

MERVYN O'CONNOR. By the Earl of DEBART, Author of 'Kalverda,' &c. 3 vols.

ST. MARTIN'S SUMMER. By

SHERLEY SMITH, Author of 'His Last Stake,' &c. 3 vols. (Next week.)

BOOKS FOR THE COUNTRY.

Each Work complete in 1 vol. price 3s. (any of which can be had separately), elegantly printed and bound, and illustrated by

Str. J. OILBERT, MILLAR, HUNT, LEACH, POYNTER, FOSTER,
TENNILL, HANDY, R. HUGHES, GARDINER, &c.

HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY

OF CHEAP EDITIONS OF POPULAR MODERN WORKS.

Sam. Rick's Nature and Human

Lost and Saved. By the Hon. Mr.

Norton.

Barbara's History. By Amelia

H. Edwards.

Life of Irving. By Mrs. Oliphant.

No Church.

Christian's Mistake. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Adam Forster. By George Mac

Donald, LL.D.

Agnes. By Mrs. Oliphant.

A Noble Life. By the Author of

'John Halifax.'

Dixon's New America.

Robert Falconer. By George Mac

Donald, LL.D.

The Young Man's Kingdom. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Annals of an Eventful Life. By

G. W. Duerst, LL.D.

David Drummond. By George Mac

Donald, LL.D.

A Brave Lady. By the Author of

'John Halifax.'

Mac. By the Author of 'John

Halifax.'

Sam. Rick's American Home.

The Tenth Earl. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

A Rose in June. By Mrs. Oliphant.

My Little Lady. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Forster, Junior. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Life of Martin Armstrong. By Professor C. D. Yonge.

Sir Gibbels. By George Mac

Donald, LL.D.

The NEW VOLUME (now ready) comprises

YOUNG MRS. JARDINE.

By the AUTHOR of 'JOHN HALIFAX.'

EDUCATIONAL WORKS

PUBLISHED BY

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS.

GEOGRAPHICAL TEXT-BOOKS. By the Rev. ALEX. MACRAY, LL.D. F.R.S.

MANUAL of MODERN GEOGRAPHY. Mathematical, Physical, and Political, on a New Plan. 8th Thousand, Revised. Pp. 665. 7s. 6d.

ELEMENTS of MODERN GEOGRAPHY. 4th Thousand, Revised.

Pp. 303. 3s.

OUTLINES of MODERN GEOGRAPHY. 13th Thousand, Revised.

Pp. 115. 1s.

The INTERMEDIATE GEOGRAPHY. Intended as an Intermediate

Book between the Author's 'Outlines of Geography' and 'Manual of Geography.' Sixth Edition, Revised. Pp. 224.

FIRST STEPS in GEOGRAPHY. 8th Thousand, Revised. Pp. 66.

sewed 4d., in cloth, 6d.

HISTORICAL CLASS-BOOKS.

EPITOME of ALISON'S HISTORY of EUROPE. Sixteenth Edition.

Pp. 604. 1s. 6d.

The NORTHERN CHRISTIAN CENTURIES. By the Rev. James

Whit. Seventh Edition, with Index. 6s.

HISTORY of FRANCE, from the Earliest Times. By the same.

Fifth Edition, with Index. 6s.

HISTORY of INDIA, from the Earliest Period to the Close of the Company's Government. With an Account of Subsequent Events. By JOHN CLARK MARSHMAN, C.S.I. New Edition, brought down to the Present Time. Post 8vo. with a Map, 6s. 6d.

ENGLISH LITERATURE.

ENGLISH PROSE COMPOSITION. Practical Manual for the Use of Schools. By JAMES CURRIE, M.A. 2nd Thousand. 1s. 6d.

AN ETYMOLOGICAL AND PROVERBIAL

DICTIONARY of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE. Including a very copious Selection of Scientific, Technical, and other Terms and Phrases. Intended for Use in Schools and Colleges. By the Rev.

James Smyth. The Proverbs are carefully selected by the Rev. P. H. PHILL, M.A. Fifth Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

Pp. 793. 7s. 6d.

The SCHOOL ETYMOLOGICAL DICTIONARY and WORD-BOOK.

By the same. Pp. 390. 2s.

The HANDY SCHOOL DICTIONARY. For Use in Elementary

Schools, and as a Pocket Reference Dictionary. By the same.

Pp. 288. 6d.

CLASSICAL TEXT-BOOKS.

ADITUS FACILIOR in a New Latin Constraining Book, with Complete Vocabulary. By A. W. PONS, M.A. LL.B., and the Rev. G. DANIEL, M.A. Sixth Edition. 3s. 6d.

ADITUS FACILIOR in a New Greek Constraining Book, with Complete Vocabulary. By the same Authors. Second Edition.

A PARALLEL SYNTAX. Greek and Latin for Beginners, with Exercises and a Greek Vocabulary. By the Rev. HENRY W.

BUTTS-KIRKPATRICK, LL.M. Crown 8vo. 6s.

PRACTICAL ELEMENTS of the LATIN LANGUAGE, or, Latin

Form and English Words. By JOHN BORN, M.A. Second Edition.

Pp. 164. 1s. 6d.

AGRICULTURE.

CATECHISM of PRACTICAL AGRICULTURE. By HENRY

SYMES, F.R.S., Author of 'The Book of the Farm.' New Edition. With Engravings. 1s.

PROFESSOR JOHNSTON'S CATECHISM of AGRICULTURAL

CHEMISTRY. A New Edition Revised and Extended by CHARLES A. CANNON, M.D. F.R.C.S.I., &c. With Engravings, 1s.

PROFESSOR JOHNSTON'S ELEMENTS of AGRICULTURAL

CHEMISTRY and GEOLOGY. Revised Edition, Revised and brought down to the Present Time by CHARLES A. CANNON,

M.D. F.R.C.S.I., &c. Post 8vo. 6s. 6d.

TEXT-BOOKS of ZOOLOGY and PALEON-

TOLOGY. By HENRY ALLEYNE NICHOLSON, M.D. D.Sc.

M.A., &c. Professor of Natural History in the University of St. Andrews.

A MANUAL of ZOOLOGY, for the USE of STUDENTS. With a General Introduction on the Principles of Zoology. Fifth Edition Revised and greatly Enlarged. Pp. 816, with 264 Engravings. 14s.

TEXT BOOK of ZOOLOGY for the USE of SCHOOLS. Third Edition, Enlarged with 188 Engravings. 6s.

INTRODUCTORY TEXT BOOK of ZOOLOGY, for the USE of JUNIOR CLASSES. Fourth Edition, Revised and Enlarged. 4s.

OUTLINES of NATURAL HISTORY. By HENRY ALLEN, Esq., being

Descriptions of a Progressive Series of Zoological Types. Second Edition. With 62 Engravings. 1s. 6d.

The ANCIENT LIFE HISTORY of the EARTH. An Outline of the Principles and Leading Facts of Palaeontological Science.

With a Glossary and Index. With 270 Engravings. 10s. 6d.

TEXT-BOOKS of GEOLOGY and PHYSICAL

GEOGRAPHY. By DAVID PAGE, LL.D. F.R.S. F.G.S. &c.

INTRODUCTORY TEXT-BOOK of GEOLOGY. With Illustrations and Glossary. Eleventh Edition. 2s. 6d.

ADVANCED TEXT BOOK of GEOLOGY. Descriptive and Industrial

With Engravings, and Glossary of Scientific Terms.

Sixth Edition, Revised and Enlarged. 7s. 6d.

The CRUST of the EARTH. A Handy Outline of Geology. Sixth Edition. 1s.

INTRODUCTORY TEXT-BOOK of PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY

With Sketch-Maps and Illustrations. Ninth Edition. 2s. 6d.

ADVANCED TEXT-BOOK of PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY. With

Engravings. Second Edition. 3s.

ELEMENTS of PHYSIOGRAPHY and PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY.

With copious reference to the Instructions recently issued by the Science and Art Department. By ALLEN SMITH, Esq., LL.D.

With numerous Illustrations. 16th Thousand, pp. 160.

1s. 6d.

MATHEMATICS, &c.

PRIMER of GEOMETRY. A Handy Introduction to the Properties of Euclid. By FRANCIS CUTHBERTSON, M.A. LL.D. Third Edition. 1s. 6d.

TREATISE on ARITHMETIC with numerous Exercises for Teach-

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 1880.

CONTENTS.

SHELLEY'S PROSE WORKS	307
GOODKROFF'S RIDE TO HERAT	309
THE JENI ITS IN IRELAND	300
THE ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA, VOL. X. AND XI.	301
SPECIMENS OF THE ENGLISH DIALECTS	302
NOVELS OF THE WEEK	303
SCHOOL BOOKS	304
LIBRARY TABLE—LIST OF NEW BOOKS	305-306
JEREMIAH RICH; "THE MELLANCHOLY JACQUES"; MR. W. H. WILLS	306-307
LITERARY Gossip	307
SCIENCE—LIBRARY TABLE; BRITISH ASSOCIATION, SWANSEA, ASTRONOMICAL NOTES, SOCIETIES, Gossip	308-311
FINE ARTS—THE DISCOVERIES AT OLYMPIA, 1878-79; THE PRIVATE COLLECTIONS OF ENGLAND; MR. WALTON; NOTES FROM ATHENS; Gossip	311-315
MUSIC—MISCELLANEOUS MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS; Gossip	315-316
DRAMA—THE WEEK; Gossip	316

LITERATURE

The Prose Works of Percy Bysshe Shelley.
Edited by Henry Buxton Forman. 4 vols.
(Reeves & Turner.)

Nothing can exceed the care with which these volumes have been edited. Nor is the plan adopted in the arrangement of the pieces less admirable. Such of Shelley's prose writings as were issued by himself are here given in chronological order, their title-pages are reproduced with an exactness that may be called Chinese, and whenever the minutest change has been made, it has been recorded in a foot-note with as much earnestness as though the welfare of a kingdom depended upon the displacing of a letter. The posthumous pieces, most of which were comprised in Mrs. Shelley's issue of 1840, follow in a separate section. It will be remembered that in Mr. Forman's edition of Shelley's poetry the division "Juvenilia" was adopted, in which were placed the poems preceding 'Alastor.' This division has been abandoned in the arrangement of the prose works, and Mr. Forman explains why:—

"Between 'Queen Mab' and 'Alastor' there is a great gulf fixed, because they must be judged as works of art; but the prose works which he published illustrate the practical side of his character more than the poetic side, the development of his intellectual powers rather than the growth and culture of those moral forces which constitute the poetic temperament. . . . None of us can do anything for his glory as a poet—it is assured, eternal, and radiant; but I submit that the practical boy and man is not yet half appreciated."

It must be confessed that this latter sentence, coming as it does from a leading Shelleyite, has an unpleasantly ominous sound. Most people will shudder when they contemplate the time, not far distant, when, for the sake of peace and quietness, they will have to accept Shelley not only as the greatest poet of his time, but as a profound philosopher, and even a brilliant man of affairs. On this subject, however, we shall have more to say further on.

We have noticed in the worshippers of Shelley a disposition to make a scapegoat of 'Queen Mab.' The truth is, however, that 'Queen Mab,' whatever may be its defects, is more entirely typical of Shelley's genius than any other of his poems. Shelley's genius was more aerial than any other man's, and it is this quality which has been mistakenly called metaphysical. In one of his letters published by Mr. Trelawny he declares that he has no apprehension whatever of metaphysical ideas, and certainly his poetry shows it. Yet he views the earth from the air; looking from the "cloud-grottoes of the sylphs," he sees a panorama that other poets are blind to. In this aerial quality he was and is unique, and of it 'Queen Mab' is fuller than is any other of Shelley's poems. That it is marred by imperfections need not be said, but it promises the glorious poetry to follow as clearly as "the rosebud promises the rose."

Every essay and every fragment of an essay published in any of the books upon Shelley (of which there is already a library) will be found here, besides much that has never been before published, notably 'The Necessity of Atheism,' reprinted from the copy of the tract in the possession of Sir Percy and Lady Shelley. Yet in these days, when a man's private letters are considered his principal prose works, the book is, from the high point of view of the bibliographer, incomplete. No admirer of Coleridge is content till he has enriched his Coleridge library with a copy of Coleridge's every letter, even to the missive about "broad beans"; and assuredly no worshipper of Shelley will fail to be wretched at the thought that this beautiful collection of Shelley's prose works is without the letters embedded in Hogg's eccentric 'Life of Shelley' and in the 'Shelley Memorials.'

The volumes are enriched by several valuable illustrations. The etching by Mr. W. B. Scott of Miss Curran's famous portrait of the poet is admirable. But what evidently pleases Mr. Forman most of all is a certified copy of the poet's pedigree, of which he says:—

"The pedigree speaks for itself to any careful reader; and a glance at the shield of twenty-one quarterings on the following page will, to those who have the slightest knowledge of heraldry, be highly significant in regard to the ancestry of England's great Republican, Percy Bysshe Shelley."

It is difficult to know what this means, but we are none the less impressed by it. The quarterings of a poet have no doubt been too much neglected in criticism. The accomplished herald can trace 'Prometheus Unbound' through the blood of the Sussex squires of the seventeenth century with the same facility that the biologist can, according to a high authority, trace 'Paradise Lost' through the various modifications of protoplasm.

Most of Mr. Forman's remarks are judicious, well expressed, concise, and such as most persons will readily agree with. One remark in particular will not fail to strike the reader as being unanswerably true. The reading world, says Mr. Forman, "is at last in possession of a far greater mass of work from the hand of Shelley than it had any reason to expect." Had Mr. Forman been less modest he might have gone further and said that, thanks to his own labours and those of Mr. W. M. Rossetti and Mr. Garnett, the reading public is in possession of a far greater mass of work from the hand of Shelley than it had any reason to want.

No doubt there is a certain psychological interest in realizing the fact that a writer may begin with 'Zastrozzi' and 'St. Irvyne,' and end with 'Epipsychidion' and 'Prometheus Unbound.' And from this the presumptuous critic might learn—if he were not too incorrigible to learn anything—that man as "an animal that writes" is never, even in his lowest development, to be despised; that the author of the "penny dreadful" may be an epic poet in the bud; and, moreover, that the long-expected poem of the age is to be looked for, not from a writer who begins with prose as delicate as Mr. Matthew Arnold's or Cardinal Newman's, but from a master of that more vigorous and picturesque style adopted by the author of 'Ada the Betrayed' and 'Varney the Vampire; or, the Feast of Blood.' Indeed, it is doubtful whether even this kind of literature could produce fustian so unmitigated, balderdash so senseless, as the opening pages of what a genuine admirer of Shelley places at the head of his prose works:—

"Torn from the society of all he held dear on earth, the victim of secret enemies, and exiled from happiness, was the wretched Verexzi! All was quiet; a pitchy darkness involved the face of things, when, urged by fiercest revenge, Zastrozzi placed himself at the door of the inn where, undisturbed, Verexzi slept. Loudly he called the landlord. The landlord, to whom the bare name of Zastrozzi was terrible, trembling obeyed the summons. 'Thou knowest Verexzi the Italian? He lodges here.' 'He does,' answered the landlord. 'Him, then, have I devoted to destruction,' exclaimed Zastrozzi. 'Let Ugo and Bernardo follow you to his apartment; I will be with you to prevent mischief.' Cautiously they ascended—successfully they executed their revengeful purpose, and bore the sleeping Verexzi to the place, where a chariot waited to convey the vindictive Zastrozzi's prey to the place of its destination. Ugo and Bernardo lifted the still sleeping Verexzi into the chariot. Rapidly they travelled onwards for several hours. Verexzi was still wrapped in deep sleep, from which all the movements he had undergone had been insufficient to rouse him. Zastrozzi and Ugo were masked, as was Bernardo, who acted as postilion. It was still dark, when they stopped at a small inn, on a remote and desolate heath; and waiting but to change horses, again advanced. At last day appeared—still the slumbers of Verexzi remained unbroken. Ugo fearfully questioned Zastrozzi as to the cause of his extraordinary sleep. Zastrozzi, who, however, was well acquainted with it, gloomily answered, 'I know not.' Swiftly they travelled during the whole of the day, over which Nature seemed to have drawn her most gloomy curtain. They stopped occasionally at inns to change horses and obtain refreshments. Night came on—they forsook the beaten track, and, entering an immense forest, made their way slowly through the rugged underwood. At last they stopped—they lifted their victim from the chariot, and bore him to a cavern, which yawned in a dell close by. Not long did the hapless victim of unmerited persecution enjoy an oblivion which deprived him of a knowledge of his horrible situation. He awoke—and overcome by excess of terror, started violently from the ruffians' arms. They had now entered the cavern; Verexzi supported himself against a fragment of rock which jutted out. 'Resistance is useless,' exclaimed Zastrozzi. 'Following us in submissive silence can alone procure the slightest mitigation of your punishment.'"

Mr. Forman endeavours with much ingenuity and intelligence to fix the origin of 'Zastrozzi' and 'St. Irvyne' upon the Germans.

It is the act of a patriot to try to fasten such stuff upon any literature rather than that of his own country, and we fully appreciate Mr Forman's motives, whatever objections may be raised against him on the ground of fair play.

The typical editor of our time is, indeed, a remarkable character. His notion of showing honour to a poet's good work is to collect and trail before the eyes of the public whatever the poet may have produced that is bad. To gather a heterogeneous heap of youthful scribbles, some of it good, but most of it worthless, and call it Shelley's prose works, is to prove, no doubt, that an editor is an enthusiastic and industrious student of Shelley. But though it is interesting to have it shown that Mr. Forman is an editor of this kind, the method of showing it in these 1,600 large pages is cumbersome, and is, moreover, scarcely fair to Shelley himself.

Shelley left no prose "works"; he left nothing in prose but the immature exercises of a genius whose natural mode of expression was not prose at all. As to his mere style, it is neither good like Byron's, nor bad like Coleridge's in the mass of his prose. By dint of much apparent study of the prose of Southey, Shelley did, as he advanced in life, acquire a style that was simple, natural, and even sweet, but with little of that firmness of texture which is, after all, the main characteristic of his model. But inasmuch as his two longest effusions are execrable both in matter and in manner, and inasmuch as he had nothing to say in prose worth saying even when he had learned to write prose, he would not lose, but, on the contrary, he would greatly gain, if, in order to clear him of his bad prose, his good prose had to be destroyed. We enter this mild protest because we fear that the Shelleyolaters are in a fair way to cause in the public mind a reaction against Shelley. To find Shelley placed at the head of all English poets is disturbing to those who, admiring Shelley, have yet been used to think much of Coleridge, Keats, and Byron, and to consider Shakespeare and Milton as poets "not without merit." Even this, however, can be borne, for the Shelleyolater is almost always among the best of men. What makes him a Shelleyolater, indeed, is not any special critical insight into Shelley's poetical methods, but genuine admiration of Shelley's great distinctive quality—benevolence. But now that he wishes to hold up as a practical teacher and sagacious guide the author of 'Laon and Cythna' and of the Irish pamphlets, it seems necessary to ask how much further he is going, and to speculate with some trepidation where he intends to stop.

Shelley was a doctrinaire; but this assertion is not necessarily an impeachment of him. There are doctrinaires and doctrinaires. In trying to estimate the value of any given doctrinaire, the question to ask is this, Does he, in discussing social questions, treat society as an artificial mechanism, or does he treat it as a growth? Howsoever radical may be the views of any thinker, if he recognizes the fact that society is not that cruel mechanism built up by "les rois" for the oppression of the race which it amuses some poets to anathematize, but an organic growth governed by inexorable laws, and advancing to a completer organism slowly step by step, he is sure to see the worthlessness of those regenerative social schemes which are the delight of doctrinaires of the other class, to which Shelley belonged. Shelley, for instance, discovered, or he was told by Godwin, that the law prohibiting a man from marrying his sister was of entirely conventional origin; that very respectable people—such, for instance, as the Incas of Peru—have married their sisters and thrived. Straightway he went and wrote a poem of an appalling number of lines to show that incest is one of the primary virtues; and on the strength of this notable discovery he claimed for himself and his craft the honours due to "the unacknowledged legislators of the world." But, in truth, there is no more interesting production of nature than the poetical polemic. His style of argument is peculiar, but it is beautifully illustrated by the game called "Aunt Sally." The poetical atheist, for instance, sets up an ugly figure, invests it with every kind of disgusting and ridiculous attribute, calls it "God," and proceeds triumphantly to throw sticks at it. The republican does the same with "les rois"; the hater of plutocracy does the same with "Mammon." Shelley had various "Aunt Sallies." At one time it was an extraordinary concept of his own that he called Man; for of the genuine man Shelley at that time knew less than any schoolgirl of his day. When Milton said that man's first disobedience brought death into the world, he was at least consistent with his theme, which was based on the cosmogony of Genesis. But Shelley, having rejected with scorn the cosmogony of Genesis and hurled his little pellets at what he called Christianity, still charged man with having originated for the lower animals all the ills which flow from a knowledge of good and evil:—

"Man and the animals whom he has infected with his society, or depraved by his dominion, are alone diseased. The wild hog, the mouflon, the bison, and the wolf are perfectly exempt from malady, and invariably die either from external violence or natural old age. But the domestic hog, the sheep, the cow, and the dog are subject to an incredible variety of distempers, and, like the corrupters of their natures, have physicians who thrive upon their miseries. The supereminence of man is like Satan's, the supereminence of pain; and the majority of his species, doomed to penury, disease, and crime, have reason to curse the untoward event that, by enabling him to communicate his sensations, raised him above the level of his fellow animals."

The mixture here of the doctrine of evolution (which, it is interesting to note, had from the time of De Maillet begun to stir not only in France, but in England) and the doctrine of original sin is suggestive.

Many are born to see that "the time is out of joint"; not one in many millions is "born to set it right." This is the lesson forced upon us by Shelley's "prose works," and it would be well if his admirers would lay it to heart. There is no surer sign of empirical criticism than the habit of considering a poet apart from the intellectual influences surrounding him. Because Shelley expressed in his verse the great ideas then in the air more beautifully, more earnestly, than any other man of his time, therefore there are those who claim for him the position of an original thinker, an intelligence at once great and new. In reality he is nothing more than the natural result of the French Revolution acting upon a kind of temperament which, though rare, is by no means an accidental outgrowth of the human race. There are men who have a natural affinity to beautiful ideas. Just as the artist frets with an insatiable yearning for perfect artistic work, so certain natures have an unquenchable yearning for perfect moral good. It is not confined to poets—Sidney had it, Mazzini had it; so apparently had one of the house of Hapsburg, Joseph II.; and also "the good Prince of Conti." "Goodness," in fact, is the only word that can express the quality common to them all, and it is a pity that the word has become so hackneyed as to be considered almost synonymous with "goodness." Not that the goody man, though of a more common growth, is without his value. He is well dressed, well housed, cleanly, and, in the winter time, benevolent in the matter of soup. To be faultlessly "goody" he should no doubt be English, or, better still perhaps, Scotch, for Latin blood is in the matter of "goodness" a poor vintage. And here, indeed, is the fundamental difference between him and the good man, whose object is, to borrow Bacon's phrase, "the relief of man's estate," and whose goodness is independent of creed, independent of nationality. He may be a Christian; he may be a heathen; he may call himself an atheist, as Shelley did; but his object is always the same—"the relief of man's estate." Of this kind of man Shelley was perhaps the very first, for in him we find no suspicion of the dry rot of self-culture which disturbs us now and then in our conceptions of men like Marcus Aurelius.

In ethics, as in everything else, there are certain minds whose function it is to create new ideas, and there are others whose function it is to seize them, to steep them in their own personality, and give them forth with a splendour that makes them seem new again. Shelley belonged decidedly to the second order. And in honesty this, too, must be said: that defective as is his sagacity when he deals with theological questions, as in his 'Necessity of Atheism,' his tract upon Deism, &c., and when he deals with the interests of masses of men, as in the Irish pamphlets, and when he deals with sexual relations, as in 'Laon and Cythna,' this defect is no less apparent when his intelligence is exercised in the fields of pure literature.

The gift of presenting beautifully those generalizations upon poetry and the poet's function which have been expressed less beautifully by critics from Aristotle downwards is evinced, no doubt, in Shelley's Essays upon Poetry, and in many scattered remarks in his prose writings and letters; but this is not criticism in the sense that Wordsworth's and Coleridge's generalizations are criticism, or in the sense that some of the searching and astonishing sayings of Keats are criticism,—such, for instance, as his defining poetry to be Might "half alumbering on its own right arm." The moment Shelley leaves generalities and comes to speak of individual examples of literary art, we see at once that same lack of sagacity which causes people to view his theological and social disquisitions with perplexity and astonishment.

Compare, for instance, the very weakest of Keats's remarks upon Shakespeare with this:—

"I have been reading 'The Two Noble Kinsmen,' in which, with the exception of that lovely scene to which you added so much grace in reading to me, I have been disappointed. The Jailer's Daughter is a poor imitation and deformed. The whole story wants moral discrimination and modesty. I do not believe Shakespeare wrote a word of it."—Vol. iv. p. 31.

Assuredly we are far from wishing to challenge any of the legitimate claims of Shelley; it is difficult to imagine any society lofty enough to take to its heart the divine beauty of 'Prometheus Unbound'; but the glories of other great men must not be dimmed that he may shine more brightly. The way, however, in which the cultus of Shelley is widening every year is notable. The Shelleyites are now a kind of organized religious sect; and Mr. Forman does not hesitate to characterize Shelley as the potential "saviour of the world" (vol. ii. p. xxi). Considering the materialistic tendencies of the age, the existence of such a cultus is singular. And when it is remembered that the Shelleyites profess (or are said to profess) a kind of materialistic philosophy, the anomaly becomes bewildering. With the sole exception of Blake there has not appeared in our literature so entirely spiritualistic a poet as Shelley. His sense of the supernatural was deep and ever present. His conclusions upon supernatural visitations may be gathered from the opening of the Journal (vol. ii. p. 207 of this edition). From 'Queen Mab' down to his latest writings his belief in the unseen is most apparent. As to what is called his atheism, the distinction between atheists and theists is deceptive. The real distinction between men is between materialists and spiritualists—between those who instinctively feel the contact with the physical world too intensely to believe in any other, and those who, sceptical by nature as to the senses being absolute and final tests of phenomena, accept as the only realities what the materialists reject as dreams. To the latter class Shelley belonged entirely. And is he really to undergo apotheosis in such days as these?

Up to now, that which has dominated our more recent poetry is not the spiritualistic enthusiasm of Shelley, but the mystic pessimism of Edgar Poe. Even where Shelley's enthusiasm has in recent times found sympathy, the pessimism of the hour has always mingled with it in the oddest way. In truth, there has been a deal too much said about the subject of Shelley's influence upon our contemporary poetry. In respect to form, no doubt, he has had considerable influence; indeed, it may almost be claimed for him that he was the creator of lofty anapestic English verse; for, until he wrote, everything of a lofty kind had to be written in the iambic or the trochaic movement. But before his influence, even in the matter of form, could be deeply felt came Mr. Tennyson, whose kinship, both in matter and in form, is not with Shelley at all, but with Keats—Keats, whose impulse and whose ear were the exact opposites of Shelley's. What would have been the amount of Shelley's influence upon subsequent poetry had it not been for the enormous counter-influence of Mr. Tennyson, it is, of course, impossible to say. But even when Mr. Tennyson's influence was at its height other forces came from France and from America, and nothing can be more unlike the ethical impulse of Shelley's work than the purely artistic impulse which (except in Mr. Swinburne's maturer verse) moves the latest development of English poetry.

Col. Grodekoff's Ride from Samarcand to Herat, through Balkh and the Uzbek States of Afghan Turkistan, with his own Map of the March-Route from the Oxus to Herat. By Charles Marvin. (Allen & Co.)

THIS clear and able narrative of a journey through the northern portion of Afghan Turkistan will be read with special interest at the present moment, when the eyes of all Europe are fixed on Central Asia. To the statesman and the soldier the description given by Col. Grodekoff of a district about which so little is known in Europe cannot but be of great value. Incidentally, also, profitable information is afforded about the Afghan army. In September, 1878, Col. Grodekoff obtained permission to proceed on leave of absence from Tashkent to Odessa or St. Petersburg, via Afghanistan and Persia. General Kaufmann treated Col. Grodekoff in a manner very different from that in which Col. McGregor was treated by the Viceroy of India when he (the colonel) proposed to make a somewhat similar excursion. The Governor-General of Turkistan sent a letter of recommendation to the Amir of Cabul in favour of the adventurous traveller, furnished him with a special passport, and even offered him pecuniary assistance. Accompanied by two Persians and a Kirghiz as servants, Col. Grodekoff crossed the Oxus in a ferry boat at Patta Kassar on the 18th of October. He was received by an Afghan escort, and in two marches reached Nasar-i-Sharif, fifty-three miles from the Oxus, and the residence of the Governor-General or Luenaib of Afghan Turkistan. Till the orders of the Amir could be received, the colonel, though treated in every other respect with great attention, was virtually a prisoner in the house assigned to him. Of all the Uzbek states comprised in Afghan Turkistan only Andkhai is semi-independent; "the rest are all in a subjugated condition." Some of the khanates were subdued thirty years ago, others only within the last five or six years.

"The attitude of the Afghans towards the Uzbeks is exceedingly haughty. The ordinary Afghan soldier considers himself as belonging to a race superior to the Uzbek, and treats him as an inferior being. It is quite a common thing for the Afghans to resort to their whips or to the butt-end of their rifles in their dealings with the subjugated people.....In order to prevent a rising on the part of the Uzbeks, the Afghans long ago made them deliver up all their arms. Only those Uzbeks are allowed to retain weapons whose villages lie open to Tatar attacks."

To all Uzbeks every avenue to official or social rank is closed, and the Afghans, looking on them as effeminate, never enrol them in the army, save a few who are employed as officers' servants, camel-drivers, &c. No wonder the unhappy people hate their masters, and long for deliverance by any hand. They are, however, strongly attached to Abdurrahman Khan. Naturally averse to the state of feeling in the province becoming known, the Afghan authorities during the whole of Col. Grodekoff's journey cut him off as much as possible from communication with the Uzbeks, and tried when escorting him to avoid inhabited places. A large force of regular troops occupy Afghan Turkistan, and they are supplemented by a militia called Khazadars. An Afghan cavalry regiment consists generally of four, though sometimes of six, squadrons, each of one hundred mounted men. The troopers are armed with smooth-bore carbines and sabres; the duffadars or corporals, of whom there is one to every ten men, carry in addition a lance with a pennon. The cavalry are well mounted: to every two men is assigned a pack-horse, which is driven by a man taken from the ranks. Thus, in case of necessity, these two hundred men could be employed to take the place of the mounted troopers, or be themselves mounted on such horses as might be procurable. For Col. Grodekoff's benefit the Luenaib made his guard go through the manual and bayonet exercises, which were well performed. When, however, his visitor asked the Luenaib what more they knew, he replied, "They know how to break front, but there is no room for it here. That is all they know." The word of command is given in the Afghan language. Previous to the reorganization of the army by Shere Ali it was given in English. He, however, introduced the English military formation. The Afghan infantry have three paces—slow, ordinary, and quick.

"The relations between the officers and men remind one of those existing in the Turkish army. If an Afghan officer drinks tea, a number of soldiers are sure to sit around him. If he smokes a khatana, all the soldiers gather near him and await their turn; the khatana, having gone the round of the privates, returns again to the officer. If a soldier smokes a pipe, the officer asks him to let him have a draw at it. Should a soldier take from the folds of his dress a tobacco pouch, in order to put a plug of tobacco under his tongue, the officer inserts his finger and thumb into the pouch also, and takes a pinch of tobacco. On the other hand, should the officer take out his own pouch, the soldier helps himself in a similar manner to his tobacco.I did not observe that this mutual freedom of manner had any detrimental effect on the discipline of the troops. The men obeyed the commands of their officers with docility, and never displayed insubordination when sentenced to be thrashed. Indeed, it is exceedingly rare that the officers employ the lash. During the whole of my sojourn in Afghanistan I only saw the punishment inflicted twice; on both occasions on men who had stolen hay from my horses."

After a wearisome delay of apparently about a fortnight—we cannot be precise, for there are evident errors regarding the dates—Col. Grodekoff was allowed to resume his journey, and after an interesting but uneventful ride reached Herat in about a month's time. The description of his route is a valuable contribution to our topographical knowledge, and deserves to be read with attention by strategists. Part of his march lay along the road from Merv to Herat, and he thus gives his opinion on the practicability of an advance by an army from the former to the latter place:—

"To conduct an expeditionary force of any strength along that route, would be an impos-ability. On this account I venture to contest the opinion of Rawlinson and other authorities on Central Asia, and make the assertion that Merv is not the key of Herat. If the English occupied Herat we should not on that account be bound to take Merv, because the annexation of that place would not in the slightest re-establish our equipoise with the English."

There is another route from Merv to Herat via Surrukha, but Col. Grodekoff says that between Merv and Surrukha there are three waterless marches, each forty-five miles in length:—

"Thus, therefore, on the Serakhs side also Merv is not the key of Herat. A key serves to open and give admittance. In opening Merv or in occupying it we should not obtain admittance to Herat."

In a chapter of remarks on Col. Grodekoff's book Mr. Marvin contests this view, and expresses a belief that it would be possible at the proper season to open up wells and construct reservoirs at reasonable intervals.

"If," he says, "Merv is not the key of Herat it is at least the stepping-stone, and history shows what skilful use Russia has made in the past of stepping-stones carelessly ceded to her by unwary neighbours."

When Col. Grodekoff visited Herat there were quartered there nineteen battalions and forty brass guns. When horsemen are required the Khazadars, or mounted militia, are called out. The town contains 50,000 inhabitants, and is surrounded by walls thirty-six feet high with a shallow ditch. The walls were not armed with artillery, and there are absolutely no outworks. In the centre of the city is the citadel, standing on an artificial eminence. Its walls, which in many places have fallen into ruins, are twenty-four feet high, and are surrounded by a deep wet ditch covered with reeds. As to the place generally, Col. Grodekoff says:—

"Herat is not in a position to defend itself against a European army, since at a mile to the north it is commanded by heights from which it could be bombarded by artillery."

Here we must close our review of this instructive work. Chiefly valuable to the geographer, the statesman, and the soldier, it is nevertheless, from the insight which it gives into Afghan life and manners, well worthy of perusal by the general reader.

Hibernia Ignatiana seu Iherosorum Societatis Jesu Patrum Monumenta. Collecta, secundum annorum ordinem distributa, notis illustrata, et sociorum elogis aucta A. P. Edmundo Hogan, ejusdem Societatis Presbytero. (Societas Typographica Dubliniensis.)

This work treats of the establishment of the Irish mission of the Society of Jesus in 1540, and its struggles in the succeeding sixty-seven years. During that period the Jesuits on the mission in Ireland were mainly members of the noble or wealthy commercial families there of English descent. Labouring incessantly, and without payment, to instruct and retain the people in the Roman Catholic faith, the members of the Society encountered much hardship and peril as proscribed enemies to the Church and State of England. The importance attached to them is evidenced by the circumstance that while the Government in Ireland proffered forty pounds for the body of any Jesuit, the rewards offered for the capture of ordinary priests there were but from 6*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* to 5*l.* per head. By many devices and in various disguises the Jesuits carried out their ministrations in the castles or houses of those of their own religion, but they had constantly to take refuge in the recesses of mountains, woods, and morasses. The doctrines of the Reformation, taught in Trinity College, Dublin, founded by Queen Elizabeth, repelled Roman Catholics from its halls, and caused them to seek education abroad. At the solicitation of some of the Roman Catholic nobility of Ireland, Philip IV. established a college at Salamanca, under the care of the Society of Jesus, styled El Real Colegio de Nobles Yrlandeses. At Seville, Lisbon, and Douay colleges were also founded for the Irish. Towards the support of these institutions the Irish merchants in Spain contributed a per-centage on their exports of wine. The Pope also granted the fishermen on the Spanish and Portuguese coasts permission to fish by day and night, on Sundays and festivals, on condition that the proceeds of these labours should go to support the colleges for the Irish. The ecclesiastical students admitted to these houses were required to be of Irish birth, between the ages of eighteen and twenty-four. On entering they subscribed an engagement that, on the completion of their studies, they would devote themselves to missionary work in Ireland, when ordered to proceed thither by the heads of the colleges. The Irish mission was thus supplied with a small but ardent band of Jesuits, whose history, so far as now known, consists chiefly of details of exertions, privations, and sufferings. These gloomy records are somewhat relieved by a few notices which have been preserved in connexion with James Archer, who would appear not to have been excelled by any Jesuit of his day in courage and versatility. Archer was a member of an old Anglo-Irish family of Kilkenny, but the date of his entering the Society of Jesus does not appear to have been precisely ascertained. He was for a time confessor to the Duke of Austria as well as to the Earl of Tyrone, and was said to have been entrusted by the Holy See with special spiritual powers to be exercised in Ireland. He displayed marvellous activity among the Irish in their wars against Elizabeth. A report addressed to the Papal Nuncio described Archer as more valuable than troops to his fellow countrymen, as by his influence over them he had brought about a union of the greater part of the Irish. In one of his letters Archer mentions that, although obliged to live generally in woods and hiding-places, he had never ceased to exercise the functions of his ministry. He was a leader of the party which carried off and temporarily imprisoned the Earl of Ormonde, and the earl, in a subsequent letter to Queen Elizabeth, referred to him as "the most odious traitor, Archer the Jesuit."

In a contemporary coloured sketch of the capture of Ormonde, Archer is delineated at full length, dressed in a long black cloak, yellow jacket, pink trousers, and broad-brimmed hat. The drawing of this curious scene will, we trust, be reproduced in the Government series of "The National Manuscripts of Ireland." After having taken an active part with the Irish to the close of the war in 1601, Archer passed some time at the Court of Spain, where he was said to be "well regarded." He is described as tall in stature, of dark complexion, his hair "spotted grey," his visage long and thin, and his apparel commonly a white doublet, and the rest of some colour to disguise himself. One of Cecil's agents, who had seen Archer acting as chief commander among the Irish, reported that he had recognized him in disguise at Hampton Court while the king was there; that the Jesuit was well mounted on horseback, in company with the Earl of Tyrone and other noblemen; and that he had also observed him on other occasions in divers kinds of apparel, sometimes like a courtier and occasionally as a farmer or chapman from the country.

Henry FitzSimon, another Irish Jesuit of this time, busied himself as a polemical writer. He graduated at Oxford, and subsequently resided on the Continent, where he published several works, but, returning to Ireland, he was for a considerable time imprisoned as a dangerous person. While in durance FitzSimon challenged the heads of the newly founded college at Dublin to public controversial discussion. The writer of an official despatch at this period mentioned that the Jesuits scoffed daily and insolently at the ignorance of the Anglican bishops in Ireland. In reference to the oaths in fashion in his time, FitzSimon produced the following little known epigram—not included in the volume before us—which somewhat resembles those of his contemporary Sir John Davies:—

In elder times an ancient custome 'twas
To swear in weightie matters by the Masse.
But when Masse was put down, as our men note,
They swore then by the crosse of this graye grole,
And when the crosse was held likewise in scorn,
Then faith and trowth, for common oathes were sworne.
But now men banisht have both faith and trowth,
So that God damne me, is the common oath.
So custome keeps decorum, by gradation,
Losing Masse, crosse, faith, trowth,—followeth damnation.

The labours of the Irish Jesuits extended far beyond Europe, and before the close of the sixteenth century some of them were settled in Brazil and Paraguay.

It is to be regretted that the volume under notice should have been published in Latin. The only English matters which it contains are some extracts from English writings and translations of documents, the originals of which were not available. Prefixed is a formal permission, in the style of past centuries, for printing the book, signed by the provincial head of the Society of Jesus, under authority from the General. We may thus regard the volume as an authentic exposition of the views of the Society on this section of its history. The materials derived from unpublished sources are but small, and the greater part of the book is composed of extracts from calendars of State Papers, histories of religious orders, and other printed works. Before the appearance of Hibernia Ignatiana, the only detailed account published of the Jesuits of Ireland was that included by the Rev. George Oliver, author of the Monasticon Exonense, in his collections, printed in 1838, towards illustrating the biography of the English, Scotch, and Irish members of the Society of Jesus. Dr.

Oliver expressed his regret that he was unable to offer much information relative to the history of the Irish mission. The heads of the Society in Ireland, in reply to his inquiries on the subject, assured him that they were wholly destitute of documents, in any regular shape, concerning their predecessors there, and this they ascribed to the difficulties with which they had to contend in the penal times.

Encyclopædia Britannica. Vols. X. and XI. (Edinburgh, Black.)

THESE two instalments of the great undertaking which Prof. Baynes edits with such care and sagacity are of more than usual interest. Volume x. is especially rich in geographical articles. Mr. C. R. Markham supplies an adequate sketch of the progress of geographical discovery, but hardly refers to the progress of geography as a science. Col. A. R. Clarke contributes valuable articles on Geodesy and Mathematical Geography. Physical Geography is somewhat summarily dismissed in three columns by Prof. Geikie, who makes amends, however, by supplying an elaborate treatise on Geology, which fills no less than 164 pages. Yet, notwithstanding the disproportionate space taken up by this subject, we look in vain for a sketch of the history of geology, such as we might fairly expect to meet with in an encyclopædic work. Prof. H. Wagner, in his article on Germany, devotes more attention to statistics than to physical geography. The history and literature of Germany are dealt with in a masterly manner by Mr. James Sime, whilst the German Language has found an exponent no less skilled in Prof. E. Sievers. Amongst minor articles those by Col. H. Yule on Gaur, Ghazni, and Gilgit are deserving of special commendation, as is also the contribution of the same scholar to volume xi., the article on the Hindu Kush range.

The article entitled "Hebrew Language and Literature" bears evidence of wide knowledge and adequate acquaintance with the subject. Prof. Robertson Smith is familiar with the most recent literature bearing upon it, and he moves along with bold and confident step, pronouncing his judgments with a curtness that savours at times of dogmatism. More caution would have been desirable. Thus, in speaking of the Chronicle writer, the language, "He no longer thoroughly understood the old Hebrew sources from which he worked," is of questionable propriety. After perusing the whole a feeling of uncertainty is left upon the reader's mind, owing to the absence of lucid separation of the materials, as also to the statement of too many opinions and the constant interjection of modifying or depreciatory remarks. It is true that there are paragraphs; but they are not of a sort to dominate a discussion such as we should wish for. The various derivations of 'ibri, Hebrew, may serve to illustrate the uncertainty hanging around the writer's course. He is right in saying that Eber in Genesis is not a real person; but the Jehovah looks upon him as such, and appears to derive the patronymic from him. The article seems to have been written speedily, the author relying on the copious knowledge of his well-stored mind. An antecedent deliberate sifting of the materials or a good and systematic distribution of them does not suggest itself to the reader. Hence the impression left by a perusal of the whole is somewhat impalpable. The statement that Judah Chayyug was the discoverer of the system of triliteral roots is not correct. He asserted and vindicated it, but it was already known to Menahem. There are some omissions which the article should not exhibit. Among the Hebrew grammars mentioned, some of them hardly deserving notice, we miss Nordheimer's, the syntax of which is excellent, and Stade's recent work, whose merits deserve honourable recognition. In noticing the 'Lexicon Breve Rabbini-philosoph.' appended to the elder Buxtorf's 'Hebrew and Chaldee Lexicon,' the more copious one of Otho (1675) should not have been passed by. The 'Hebrew Concordance' published by Bagster (1876), compiled by B. Davidson, is unnoticed, though it is, on the whole, the best extant. It has the words which Fürst's lacks, and is unencumbered with such extraneous matter as belongs to a lexicon. The essay is a favourable specimen of the writer's learning, but it might have been better had more time and pains been given to it. Some things it lacks; others which it has might well be omitted, because they are not essential even to a compendium of the subject.

Mr. Jebb's article on Greek History extends from the earliest times down to the death of Alexander the Great, the account of the prehistoric period—a period about which we seem nowadays to have fully as much information as metaphysicians claim to have about the "unknowable"—being exceedingly careful and praiseworthy, especially as regards the early constitution of Attica; the age of faith, however, in the solar myth seems to have passed, Mr. Jebb following Mr. Freeman's principles, and looking for some groundwork of real fact in such legends as those of the Pelopid dynasty or the return of the Heracleids. In his treatment of real ascertained history Mr. Jebb is hardly so satisfactory. The facts of the Persian war are rightly stated enough, though to say that Themistocles was ostracized for intriguing with the Persians is not merely inaccurate, but a complete misrepresentation of the peculiar character of ostracism—a punishment never inflicted on any definite accusation, and least of all for high treason; but of the enormous interests at stake at Marathon and Salamis, as regards the present civilization of the whole of Europe and the intellectual progress of the world, there is no notice at all; and the historical significance of the coincidence of the attack by Carthage on the Greeks of Sicily with the Asiatic invasion of Greece proper is passed over. There is thus, on the one side, a want of broad general views on the relation of Greek history to modern, and, on the other, important facts are often neglected. To take a few instances, the domestic politics of Athens during the wars against Sparta and Macedon are most cursorily treated; Cleon himself and the whole school of demagogues that rose out of the Periclean régime are completely ignored, nor is there any mention of such foremost figures as Æschines and Phocion; the mutilation of the Hermawhich not merely deprived Alcibiades of the command of the Athenian forces, but which, in the excitement it produced, is so valuable as evidence that the Periclean age, in spite of the rise of the spirit of scepticism in literature, was extremely orthodox—is entirely passed over; while as regards social life Aspasia and Elpinice, names so remarkable not merely for their direct influence on politics, but for the light they throw on the position of women at Athens, are nowhere alluded to. It is impossible not to feel that such omissions as these detract much from the value of Mr. Jebb's brilliant article.

Dr. Donaldson's work comprises the whole of post-classical Greek history from the death of Alexander down to the Treaty of Berlin, and is one of the most intellectual and complete articles that have ever appeared on the subject, though it is difficult to see why there should be no mention of the Pyrrhic invasion of Italy, so important in the history of the Hellenizing of the West. On the whole, however, it is impossible to give Dr. Donaldson anything but the fullest praise; and we may note briefly two points in which he deserves great credit for clearing up two common misconceptions about the history of this time, one founded on the sneer of a Roman satirist, the other on a pompous sentence of our own historian Gibbon.

The "Græculus esuriens" of Juvenal has always been too readily taken as representative of the real character of the Greeks of the Roman period, and it is impossible to conceive that an empire which achieved so much for civilization as the Byzantine could really have been the feeble and decrepit system Gibbon would lead us to believe; on both these questions Dr. Donaldson's remarks are exceedingly good. And, finally, the rise of "the Hellenic idea" is vividly traced from the literary Philhellenism of Voltaire and the political intrigues of the Russians, while the modern Greeks receive every credit for the advances they have made since their independence, though the peculiarly bloodless and orderly character of their revolution against Otho, as opposed to the wild recklessness of contemporary political movements in other countries, deserved some notice.

Mr. Jebb's article on Ancient Greek Literature opens with a good account of the early poets, and some excellent remarks on the Greek consciousness of the artistic value of the different dialects and metres as instruments of literary expression, but, on the whole, it is slight and sketchy. In the account of Athenian comedy there is no mention of the remarkable Sicilian influence, and the name of Menander does not occur; there is no allusion to Agathon, whose play of 'The Flower' formed a remarkable era in the development of the Greek drama, and whose picture as the æsthetic poet of the Periclean age is handed down to us in such brilliant colours by both Plato and Aristophanes; nor to the exquisite poem of 'Hero and Leander,' which has been eternally enshrined in our own literature by Marlowe. Polybius is treated as a mere chronicler, instead of as one of the most rationalistic historians of the world, whose scientific method of criticism entitles him to a high place; and the three scanty lines assigned to Theocritus as a purely pastoral poet would give the ordinary reader no idea that he was the author of a poem, the 'Pharmaceutria,' which for fiery colour and splendid concentration of passion is only equalled by the 'Attis' of Catullus in the whole range of ancient literature; while as regards any general views there is no allusion to the nature or value of the influence exercised by Greek literature on the literature of Rome and of modern times.

Dr. Donaldson's article on Byzantine Literature is as interesting as any account of a literature written entirely by mediocrities could be; and his article on Modern Greek Literature is exceedingly well done and crowded with information, his history of the romantic and ballad poetry, from the strange 'Exploits of Akritas,' recently published by Legrand, down to Rangabé and Rhigas in modern times, being most valuable and clear; some notice, however, might have been given of the introduction of rhyme into Greek poetry, which Christopoulos has carried to such perfection. The article, on the whole, is extremely interesting, and we are glad to see that full justice is done to the great literary activity at modern Athens.

Volume xi. is strong in biographical articles. Mrs. Mark Pattison writes pleasantly and justly about Greuse. Mr. Garnett's account of Haslitt deserves particular mention; so does the memoir of Grotius by Mr. Mark Pattison, the comparison between Grotius and Erasmus being particularly well drawn. Dr. William Smith's article on Grote is interesting; so is Prof. Tait's notice of Sir W. Rowan Hamilton. In the account of Greville it is boldly asserted that he "did not stoop to collect or record private scandal." Mrs. Hemans has no right to such a long notice as that assigned to her. Henry IV. of France is dismissed too summarily. Ebenezer Henderson does not deserve the three quarters of a column he monopolizes. Miss Toulmin Smith deserves a word of praise for her article on Guilds.

Specimens of English Dialects.—I. Devonshire; II. Westmoreland. English Dialect Society, Series D. (Trübner & Co.)

THIS volume is the first instalment of what must form a most interesting portion of the publications of the English Dialect Society, viz., reproductions of complete works written for the purpose of setting forth the various dialects of our country in their living state. Glossaries and bibliographic notices are of course highly important, and books like those here reprinted can be put off if anything more pressing seems to demand the Society's attention; but it is to be hoped that Series D. will be continued until it embraces specimens of all the dialects, and, if possible, more than one in some of the larger counties, such as Yorkshire and Northumberland. The production of books in which dialectic peculiarities are preserved is going out of fashion, because the schoolmaster and the railway are effacing such peculiarities very rapidly; it is therefore well that all that can be put forth under the auspices of the Dialect Society should be reprinted, for they are not easy to collect, and are not likely to be reproduced in our time by any private publisher. One of the latest attempts to preserve local diction by means of publications has been The Barnard Castle Annual, or Pegasus Almanack, a yearly issue of which took place in the West Riding of Yorkshire twenty years ago, and may be continued still. Some of the early numbers of it are worth the attention of the Dialect Society, which might either print them in extenso or incorporate them in some glossary of West Riding words.

In the present number of Series D. we have first 'The Exmoor Scolding,' and added to it 'An Exmoor Courtship,' or, a Suitoring Discourse in the Devonshire Dialect and Mode near the Forest of Exmoor.' In the preface which the editor (Mr. F. T. Elworthy) has prefixed to these dialogues is reprinted a short poem of an earlier date, called 'The Somersetshire Man's Complaint,' which represents the dialect of that county at a period at least a century earlier than the date of the Exmoor specimens, and which, though short, is interesting as furnishing many illustrations of the language which Shakespeare puts into the mouth of Edgar in 'King Lear,' and which Ben Jonson also introduces in his 'Tale of a Tub.' In respect of their matter neither the 'Scolding,' nor the 'Courtship' merits much notice. The two "bouts" of abuse in which the two scolds, Thomasin and Wilmot, indulge are pervaded by more coarseness than even seems needful in a representation of the passionate speech of their class; but for the language of the district of Exmoor they are full of valuable illustration, and the glossaries appended to them preserve for us many words which will soon have perished from our tongue. One of the most curious features of this Exmoor dialect is the way in which it has retained a trace of the older English pronunciation in the terminations of the verbs. The oldest English infinitives end in an or en, and this termination in Chaucer is often preserved, but he very frequently shortens it into a final e, which is to be pronounced. In the Devonshire speech this remains in a marked form, and it is represented in these dialogues by as or y. Thus, "Dost not care to sey thy praers?" (p. 52), i.e., "Dost thou not care to say thy prayers?" Or, again, "Thee wut steehoppees and colty and hobby and riggy wi' enny Kesson soul" (p. 56), which signifies, "Thou wilt gad about and sport and romp and riot with any Christian soul."

An example like the last quoted shows that a glossary is needful for the comprehension of this Exmoor speech, and this is all the more so because the language of these dialogues is that of the very lowest kind of abuse, and into it many expressions enter which, for the credit of the ordinary utterances of the people, it is to be hoped are seldom heard. The glossary which is appended is the one which has appeared with those editions of the book which were not composed with any philological object. There is no doubt that both the 'Courtship' and the 'Scolding' were at first written, whoever may have been the composer, merely as an amusement, though no pains have been spared to string together all the quaint words which the author remembered. Yet many both of the words and expressions were not of common use even when the dialogues were written. They first appeared in 1746, and in 1771 the glossary which is reprinted in this volume was found to be necessary in order that even Devonshire people (for the books have never enjoyed more than a local circulation) might comprehend the whole sense of the colloquies. The editor has made no attempt to modify this early glossary, except by a few additions at the end of various explanations, but his notes at the foot of each page embrace much information, which improves upon the older glossary, and places the book on a level with the other publications of the Society.

The traditional account of the origin of these productions is that they arose in consequence of the collection of many of the words and phrases which they contain by a blind fiddler named Peter Lock, of North Moulton. This man, being much thrown amongst the common people, and having, as is often the case with the blind, an exceedingly good memory, made himself master of the numerous words which were current only in the spoken language of the peasantry. His knowledge is said to have been made use of by a neighbouring clergyman, who put the 'Exmoor Scolding' into the form in which we now have it, and the 'Courtship' was produced at a later time, but deemed worthy of being added to the earlier work. On its title-page the first work is said to be "in the propriety and decency of the Exmoor language," but the editor, who is well acquainted with the Exmoor speech, enters his protest against this phrase, and says:—"To imply that the subject matter so much dwelt upon in this dialogue is a fair sample of the propriety and decency of the young women in the district in the last century is simply scandalous." However, for the purposes of the Dialect Society all that is here has its value, and it is not likely nowadays to attract notice for anything except its worth to the student of language. That the reader may gather a correct notion of the pronunciation of the Devonian peasantry each page is printed also in Mr. Ellis's glossic, which, although admirably contrived for its purpose, is hideous to look at.

The second part of the volume, which is edited by Prof. Skeat, is entitled 'A Bran New Wark,' and is a reprint of a work issued first in 1785 in the dialect of Westmoreland. This was written by the Rev. William Hutton, rector of Beetham in Westmoreland, and a member of an old family at Overthwaite. The local pronunciation of this last name is "Worfat," and so the little book appears as the production of "William de Worfat." It is of a much more literary character than the Exmoor dialogues, and consists of a prologue dated Yuletide, 1784, and 'The Plain Address,' which may be described as a sort of sermon in two parts on the text, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." This is followed by a brief epilogue, and on the character of the whole work the editor says:—

"Unlike many specimens of (so-called) provincial talk, this piece does not appear to have been written to sell, so that the author was not endeavouring, as is often the case, to put together a quantity of trash (often very incorrect as specimens of dialect) in order to raise a laugh and catch a penny. The difference in tone from the ordinary run of such productions is most striking. It breathes the language of genuine Christian love, and shows that the author was a man of kindly feeling and excellent sense. It is rightly styled 'A Plain Address,' and is well calculated to promote that kindly feeling amongst neighbours which the author had so much at heart."

Clearly it was couched in the speech of the common people in order that they might read the address and profit by its lessons, and not with a thought of the philological value which such a composition would possess. Some of the language is quaint and telling, as, for example:—

"I love ye, my parishioners, and nought can mask a miff (quarrel) among us, but ya (one) thing. When the devil wants mischief, he rolls a tithe egg before us, we stoup to tak it up, and tea (too) often it bursts in our hands. Tithe maintenance is a tryal to bath ye and me; it trye my patience and your honesty. Ye consider net that the dues ye grudge me or (are) part of your estates; that for seven hundred years together, your estates hev been bought and heired with them. Let us then shake fist and neaf in love and friendship; if I hev the white, ye hev the yolk."

The plain speech of the address on all points is characteristic. Thus:—

"Who is a knave? He that gass creeping in the dark, nimming and nifting (stealing and pilfering) whattiver he can lig (lay) his fete on. Bold villany I meddle net with, it tells its own story, but shifting of mere-stanes (boundary stones) and bending young trees wrang side oth hedge, to make Jammy's twig become Roger's tree, this is a mad and an evil coveting of our nebbour's property, and deserves hanging. If seven out of ten in a lile (little) township were to be dishonest, what mad (might) become of tother three? They wad be cheated out of hauses and harbour."

It will be seen from these extracts that the language of the address is largely of the literary English, but there is in it a considerable number of dialectal words which only north-country folks would understand without explanation; thus "snod"—smooth, glossy; "brocks and founmarts"—badgers and polecats. Only in the northern speech do laases "fidge" their part in a dance, or a careless walker go "trapeasing" along, or a sleeper nod his head in an easy "slome." The last word, it is true, is preserved to us in the first syllable of "slumber," but the word itself is rarely heard by, perhaps hardly known to, most people south of the Trent. All these words are made clear in the editor's glossary, and he has besides supplied a few interesting notes, which illustrate such matters in the text as seem to need comment. There is, however, one word which has a shade of meaning in the north country which seems unknown to Prof. Skeat. This is the word "conny" (So. canny). In the glossary this is explained as signifying pretty, good, excellent. No doubt in many cases the word has these senses, but those who have seen the northern cream-jugs with their old-fashioned poy, "Be canny with the cream," know that there is in this word a sense of "careful," "sparing," and that often it is applied where the Southerner would use "tiny" or "little." Now in the two places in which the word is found in the address it seems to have this latter sense alone. Thus, in line 119, speaking of the verse, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself," the writer says, "It is a teata (too-too) conny verse indeed, yet things mun widely alter before it be duly observed," where he means that though it be a very tiny sentence, yet it is not, for all that, carried out in men's lives. Then, in line 296, he calls the same phrase "a conny pithy sentence," by which expression he means that, though little, there is in it some pith.

Altogether this first instalment of Series D. is so interesting that we cannot doubt that the members of the Dialect Society will be glad to have some successors of the same character when such can be found. They are generally, as we have said, tracts not likely to be privately reprinted nowadays, and it will be a great work accomplished if as complete a collection as can be obtained be made under the auspices of the Society's editors. For then we shall not only be sure to be supplied with careful texts, but also be put in the way to a right use of what is issued in the service of the comparative philology of our tongue.

NOVELS OF THE WEEK.

The Mudfog Papers. By Charles Dickens. "Empire Library" Series. (Bentley & Son.)

A Very Opal. By C. L. Pirkin. 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Oliver Constable: Miller and Baker. By Sarah Tytler. 3 vols. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

Carmela. By the Princess Olga Cantacuzène. Translated from the French by Madame Klaus. 3 vols. (S. Tinsley & Co.)

Limbs of the Mill. From the German of W. Heimburg by Christina Tyrrell. 2 vols. (Bentley & Son.)

THE sketches now first collected under the title of 'The Mudfog Papers' were written for the early numbers of Bentley's Miscellany. It is hard to say why they have been thought worth republishing, for noteworthy as, by reason of their authorship, they may be held to be, they are, considered as literature, of scant account. They have not even the interest that attaches to the 'prentice work of distinguished men, for they belong to a period when Dickens, in 'Pickwick' and in 'Oliver Twist,' was producing some of his best and strongest writing. Of their being contemporary with these famous books there is nothing in them to remind us; they are too evidently "potboilers"; and so far from showing forth for the work of the master himself, they might easily be mistaken for that of one of the most mannered and least original of his pupils. Their intention is humorous, and the noble English of the penny-a-liner of the epoch is imitated in them with depressing fidelity. Occasionally, too, there is audible in them a note that has a thin, far-away ring of the true Dickens; occasionally we light upon a grotesqueness of phrase, a touch of fantastic observation, a humorous adjective, a pleasant whim in nomenclature, that read like faint and feeble foreshadowings of 'David Copperfield' and 'The Uncommercial Traveller.' But, in the main, they are surprisingly empty of merit and of interest alike. The fun in them is cheap, forced, conventional, and tolerably vulgar. They will serve at best but as a kind of "Requiescat" over a dead and buried style of sentiment and composition. Whether they treat of the misadventures of Mr. Tumble or of the scientific absurdities of Prof. Woodensconce and Mr. Knight Bell, they are unprofitably and depressingly dull; and in the end they excite a feeling of wonder and regret that they were not allowed to rest, as their illustrious author would have had them, in the oblivion that is their proper sphere.

'A Very Opal' is a good specimen of the sort of novel which only a woman could write. It is not of the highest order of woman's work, but it is not without considerable merit. The character of Elsie, who is the opal, it seems, is a peculiarly feminine construction. It is hard to believe that there exists so silly a person. A man's experience could not have supplied him with the material to substitute for what might have been the young person's thoughts. Even Balzac would have failed to extricate the secret mysteries of such motiveless caprices as those which serve for the springs of her actions. And yet with careful reading one begins to fancy that the character is not an invention; one imagines that it must be drawn more or less from life; and whether that is so or not, the fact that the author has succeeded in giving some appearance of possibility to the character is a point in her favour. As is frequently, if not invariably, the case in women's books, the men are very imperfectly drawn and understood. The author does not seem to have been able to make any but the most superficial study of men's characters. The story is, therefore, naturally rather wanting in interest. The book, in fact, must be read diligently. It will not serve as an amusement for idle time, but it is pleasant as a diversion from severer studies. There is a minuteness of observation noticeable in it, and at times a kind of quiet, sly humour, which reminds one of Jane Austen. Like her, too, Mrs. Pirkin is at her best when describing the life of women who live a good deal of their time alone and without other distractions than the ordinary round of domestic duties.

Mrs. Tytler has made an interesting figure of her social reformer. Oliver Constable, an Oxford first-class man, who follows his father's trade as a matter of conscience, has none of the pettiness of the aesthetic Radical about him, and exhibits little of that social envy which is the bad side of democratic enthusiasm. The story of his difficulties and ultimate success in raising the tone of his neighbours is both interesting and instructive. His worst trouble begins at home in the disappointment of his devoted but rather ambitious sister, upon whom Oliver's intimate relations with vulgar people and their womankind not unnaturally grate severely. Scarcely less hard to bear is the want of sympathy with him displayed by his more distant relation, Mrs. Hilliard, an admirably drawn portrait of a clever, genial, satirical woman of the world; and still more distressing the attitude of her niece, a rather noble character, unconventional and honest, with high faculties and ideals, but only gradually to be won to sympathy with unattractive humanity. It is hard to say whether the author has been more fortunate in the lifelike presentment of these highly educated women, or in the pathetic picture of the meanness and vulgarity which encrust the better qualities of the shop-keeping class, the Polleys and the Dadds, the youths that haunt the music-hall, and the girls who, according to their bent, are hoidenish, lackadaisical, slatternly, and flaunting by turns. Harry Stanhope, too, the amateur "yeoman," one who has so neglected everything but his physical side that he is a mere combination of light-headed boyhood with the passions of a man, is a subject for reflection. How Oliver contends with the tricks of his trade, and loses his business because he will not sell artificially whitened bread and will honestly weigh his fancy loaves; how he comes to open war with his men, who regard him as their natural enemy; how he lectures on Wordsworth's 'Idiot Boy' to the utter disgust and bewilderment of his audience; how he loses his Dissenting friends because he will not vote for a Liberal of the common complexion; and, finally, how his heart redresses the errors of his head, and his foes are at last converted to admiration, if not to imitation of his example, is a study which will repay the reader's pains.

'Carmela' is a romance rather than a novel of modern life, though its events are those of the present day. The heroine is without fault, and the sentiment is of the highest kind. The story is well contrived, and unblemished by anything which is not fit for the most ingenuous minds. It was suited for translation into English, many of the characters and scenes in it being English. The translator's work has been well done on the whole, though there are some phrases about fox-hunting which show unfamiliarity with sport. "Without a fox-hunt, what was the country good for?" hardly sounds like English; and to say that the foxes' holes had been walled up, instead of that the earths had been stopped, is as unsportsmanlike as to call the hounds dogs, as Madame Klaus does.

Miss Tyrrell has been neither so fortunate in her selection of a German novel to translate nor so successful in her translation of it as is usually the case with her. 'Lizzie of the Mill' is a pleasant enough little story, but the interest is of the thinnest, and the characters are by no means of the most fresh. It tells how the heir of a half-ruined house fell in love (or thought himself to have fallen in love) with an ill-tempered and treacherous cousin, who leaves him in the lurch and in great pecuniary difficulties; and how he is rescued therefrom by the usual faithful and munificent girl of the people. A wicked Italian grandmother with ruthless aristocratic views is the only other person deserving much mention. Perhaps it is the lack of interest and novelty in the story which makes Miss Tyrrell's translation seem inferior to those to which she has accustomed her readers. Perhaps, however, it is still more directly the fault of the original. There are some German styles which the most adroit translator cannot purge of the limp formlessness which is of their essence, and possibly Herr Heimburg's may be of those. We must own that the translation does not encourage us to turn to the original for the purpose of deciding this question. But it certainly may be suggested that translators would do well to satisfy themselves of the intrinsic worth of the works they translate. We cannot be said to be desperately in want of novels in England, and the native crop of bad and doubtful ones is quite sufficient without foreign importations.

SCHOOL-BOOKS.

Selected Poems of Martial. With Introduction, Notes, and Appendices. By Rev. H. M. Stephenson, M.A. (Macmillan & Co.)

It is curious that a writer so famous and so generally read as Martial should have been so seldom edited. Until quite lately there was no accessible English edition at all, and students who could not obtain Lemaire had no choice but to fall back upon Schrevelius. In 1868, however, Mr. Paley published, in the "Grammar School Classics," a large selection of epigrams originally commenced by his friend Mr. Stone, and this edition has since been in general use, as, indeed, it deserves to be, for the notes are carefully compiled and conveniently printed, and are disfigured by no worse faults than occasional misapprehensions of the poet's humour, such as any reader can correct for himself. Mr. Stephenson's selection seems to be much smaller than Mr. Paley's, and is certainly less entertaining, for, as the editor himself avows, "several of the better known and most popular of the epigrams have been omitted," and it is plain throughout that he has cared more for his commentary than for his author. In the introduction it is noticeable that Mr. Stephenson is strongly of opinion that Martial was a bachelor; that he adopts Friedländer's view, that the first and second books were published together; and that he quotes largely from Lessing. The text seems to be Schneidewin's, though this is nowhere stated, and the notes contain, so far as we have observed, very few references to varie lectioes. In a brief notice of this kind it is, of course, impossible to criticise in detail a commentary nearly three hundred pages long, and full of the minutiae of Roman archaeology. Suffice it to say that the editor seems never to misunderstand the point of any epigram, and supplies ample materials for the elucidation of obscurities. If he has a fault it is occasional indecision, as, for instance, on III. vii. and VIII. li.

Bemrose's Standard Grammar, containing 66 Lessons and 160 Exercises. By T. Newton. (Bemrose & Sons.)

It is hard to understand what advantage can accrue to any one from the publication of Mr. Newton's class lessons, which are not above the average of such as are given every day in any Board or other public elementary school. Without the slightest originality either in matter or manner, they are sadly deficient in accuracy both of thought and expression. Mr. Newton shows ignorance of the grammar he presumes to teach in giving as a model for parsing the sentence, "Waterloo was one of the most important battles that ever was fought." He will do well to study the subject more thoroughly before publishing again.

The Modern School Readers.—The First, Second, Third, and Fourth Infant Readers. The First, Second, Third, Fourth, and Fifth Readers.—Modern Reading Sheets, Series I., II., and III. (Cassell & Co.)

It is sufficient to say of these readers that they are well adapted for elementary instruction, strongly bound, printed in clear bold type on good paper, and abundantly illustrated with appropriate and well-executed cuts; but the reading lessons—especially the poetry—are not always so good as might be wished.

Ward & Lock's Tracts for the People.—The Penny Self-Educator.—The Penny Art of Penmanship.—The Penny Arithmetic.—The Penny English Grammar.—The Penny Modern Geography.—The Penny History of England.

THE things of which these penny tracts treat should be learned in childhood or early youth, as is happily now possible for all at the public elementary or other schools. Hence there is no necessity for any such series as this, which can be of little use to those who have unfortunately missed the proper opportunity for elementary education. Nothing can be more fallacious than to pretend to teach writing by printed directions only. The other tracts are, as might be expected, insufficient and incorrect.

Tropical Reading-Books, intended for Use in the West Indies and Elsewhere. Compiled by E. C. Phillips. Books I.-III. (Griffith & Farran.)

THESE books may answer the special purpose for which they were prepared, of furnishing English children in the West Indies and other tropical climates with reading lessons relating to the objects and course of life around them, but are not so well suited for use in this country as many we already have. The questions at the end of each lesson might as well have been omitted.

A Short History of England. "Chambers's Educational Course." (Chambers.)

THIS little volume does not pretend to be more than a text-book for the lower forms of schools or for mere beginners in the study of history. Its object is not very ambitious, but it is attained. It gives a clear and succinct account of English political history from before the invasion of Caesar to the end of the reign of George III. It is written in a plain, matter-of-fact style, which has now become quite old-fashioned. The narrative follows a regular chronological order, and, generally speaking, each reign has a chapter to itself, the larger divisions being determined by a change of dynasty. At the end of each chapter is a summary of events, with dates, and questions for the purpose of examination. The summary of events is useful, but should have been given in a connected form at the end of the book. The questions for examination are a mere abstract, in an interrogatory shape, of the preceding chapter, and it is hard to see of what use they can be either to teacher or pupil. The facts appear to be very correctly stated throughout, and a large amount of information is compressed into 160 small pages. There is nothing inviting about the book, nor is there any attempt to be striking or picturesque. The student will gather many facts, but few ideas, from its pages. If left to himself he will probably be disgusted, but a skilful teacher will find the book a useful basis on which to enlarge. Here and there he will require to supply deficiencies, but he will have to correct few errors. He will have to explain the ecclesiastical policy of William I. and Henry I. in order that his pupils may understand the quarrel between Henry II. and Becket. He will have to supply some information about constitutional matters, for there is not much in the book. It could, perhaps, hardly be expected in a book of this kind; but the account given of the Great Charter and of Henry III.'s troubles leads one to think that more notice might have been taken of constitutional points in the later periods. Social affairs are treated in separate chapters at intervals, but literature is almost entirely neglected. There is one allusion to Shakespeare, but Chaucer, Spenser, and Milton are passed over in complete silence. It is hardly correct to say (p. 42) that "Henry I. established law-courts like the courts of England before the Conquest"; nor (p. 131) that "the war of the Spanish Succession was the first great continental war engaged in by England for centuries." But we have detected no mistakes of importance, while for arrangement, proportion, and lucidity the book is worthy of much praise.

History of Russia. By R. Gossip. (Collins & Sons.)

TOO much must not be expected from a literary man who is called upon to write a history of Russia for a "School Series." But it would have been well if Mr. Gossip had corrected his proofs more carefully; for it would seem that a large proportion of the mispellings with which his pages swarm must be due to typographical difficulties. Of such a nature are "Bomelrus," doubtless written by the author Bomelius,

"Duchoborzi" for Duchoborzi (properly Duchobortai), "Kosalk" for Koselak, and very many other strange forms. But the word "Naitmet," given at p. 243 as the Russian name for a German (Nyemets), seems to exceed the limits of a misprint. The author must be held responsible also for such statements as that when Napoleon invaded Russia, "At last Moscow was reached. Then the battle of Borodino was fought." Perhaps the author meant by Moscow the government or province of that name, for he can scarcely have been ignorant of the fact that the battle was fought a week before the city was occupied. He need scarcely have described Napoleon's return from Russia to France in the following terms: "The guilty cause of all hid swiftly on to Paris, anguish gnawing at his heart, his intellect reeling on its throne." And it would have been much better if he had abstained from stating that "the word 'Tsar' is not, as it is commonly supposed to be, a corruption of Cæsar. It is a Persian term indicative of supreme authority." Mr. Gosip, it may be remarked, uses the title of Tsar rather too often, and also that of Tsarina. Most of the blemishes alluded to can easily be removed. And with them may be expunged a few English expressions now rare, if not quite obsolete, such as "timously" and "he recoiled." The following sentence might be proposed as a conundrum: "The story is dubious, being probably invented to adumbrate what was to come after, under the strong influence which it has exerted." Mr. Gosip has evidently taken much trouble to collect information. But his success would have been greater if he had followed, at all events in the early part of his work, certain well-known authorities. In speaking of the Varangians, for instance, and the name Rus, he need not have done more than quote the opinions of Prof. Thomsen, as set forth in that learned Norwegian's Ilechester Lectures. In dealing with the "Slavonian Pantheon," he might have learned from the works of several recent writers that there is little ground for his statement that its "principal figures" were "the Biel Bog or white god, and the Cherni Bog or black god." As there is so much ignorance, however, among English readers concerning Russian history, Mr. Gosip's book may do useful service, its general views being sufficiently correct, and its conclusions usually fair and reasonable.

A Short History of the Norman Conquest of England. By E. A. Freeman, D.C.L. (Oxford, Clarendon Press.)

Few will see without regret Mr. Freeman's great work boiled down into a primer of some 160 pages. Still, as Mr. Freeman has perpetrated the sacrilege himself, no one has a right to complain. Mr. Freeman's horror of "Romance words" occasionally makes him obscure. Schoolboys will find some difficulty in comprehending what is meant when they are told that "the Lady Matilda was hallowed queen at Westminster."

Blackie's Comprehensive School Series.—Fifth Reader.—London, Past and Present: a Reading-Book for Elementary Schools. (Blackie & Son.)

THE first of these two reading-books is certainly not superior, if equal, to many already in use. The second is a compilation from which a variety of interesting information may be gathered with regard to the past history and present condition of the metropolis.

My First French Phrase-Book. By A. Grover, LL.D. (Ralph Brothers.)

THIS little book consists of about thirty familiar conversations in English and French on opposite pages.

French Grammar, founded upon the Principles of the French Academy. By Jules Kunz. (Edinburgh, Black.)

THIS grammar is carefully written and well arranged. The author would have done well to have introduced more of the history of the language; but, taken as an ordinary school grammar, it is above the average.

Introductory Grammar of the Latin Language. By L. Schmitz, LL.D. (Collins & Sons.)

THIS abridgment of a larger work by the same author is drawn up with a clearness and precision that show a practiced hand. It is an excellent statement of the main facts of the language.

Easy Reading and Writing Lessons in German. By J. Essner. (Williams & Norgate.)

THESE lessons should rather form part of a grammar than appear as a separate publication. They are suitable for the purpose in view.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

IN Capt. H. H. Parr's Sketch of the Zulu and Kafir Wars (C. Kegan Paul & Co.) the reader will find a clear and interesting account of the recent native outbreaks on the Cape frontier; and if the author had contented himself with narrating the chief events of these wars, his work would have provoked little adverse criticism. But Capt. Parr, as military secretary of Sir Bartle Frere, apparently feels called upon to make out the best case he can for the policy of the Zulu war. His theory is that Cetwayo was at the bottom of all the native troubles in South Africa, and he declares that in the Government offices in Cape Town, Pietermaritzburg, and Pretoria there are many reports which prove that the king's emissaries had long been brewing mischief in every Kafir court in the country. If these reports really exist, why are they not published? It seems inexplicable that Sir Bartle Frere, who has written so copiously in his own defence, should have kept back evidence of this important nature. Capt. Parr states, on Mr. Brownlee's authority, that before the war Umquikela, chief of the Pondos, had received from the Zulu king messengers whose object it was to stir up strife between him and the English. The Pondo chief emphatically denied that Cetwayo had made any overtures to him of the kind alleged; but, nevertheless, the reader is asked to accept Mr. Brownlee's opinion to the contrary as conclusive. In order to show how little value should be attached to the surmises and speculations even of men in high official position, we may state that Mr. John Dunn gives a very different version of Cetwayo's dealings with the Pondos. If uncontradicted reports may be credited which have been published in South Africa, the man whom we have made chief of the most important provinces in Zululand has declared that it was Umquikela who desired an alliance with the king, and that the latter declined it on the ground that "he had no quarrel with the English." Both Sir Garnet Wolseley and Sir Henry Bulwer, however, ridicule the idea that there was anything in the relations of the Pondos with the Zulus which justified alarm or apprehension on our part. It is not denied that Cetwayo sent messengers to Umquikela, but this incident in itself offers no ground for suspicion, seeing that the despatch of an embassy from one African court to another is of constant occurrence. Another point which Capt. Parr endeavours to make is that although Panda cared little for the military organization of the Zulus, yet when Cetwayo came to the throne he largely increased the numerical strength of the army, and endeavoured to re-establish the military despotism of Chaka. Fortunately we have some means of testing this statement. M. Delagorgue, who visited Panda (Cetwayo's father) in the years 1841-42, says that he was present when that king reviewed 25,000 adult warriors; and Bishop Schreuder, who is an acknowledged authority on all matters relating to Zululand, states that Panda had an army of 40,000 men. It is doubtful whether the army under Cetwayo was more numerous or much better organized than it was during the reign of his predecessor. Capt. Parr appears to have relied too much upon mere rumour, and too little upon an independent investigation of the facts.

Messrs. CHATTO & WINDUS send us Plain English, by Mr. John Hollingshead. Mr. Hollingshead's title is appropriate. His English is plain to the verge of cynicism, and no respect for the feelings of friends or adversaries prevents him from telling "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth" as it presents itself to him. His experiences of management are very readable, and his reflections generally are conveyed in language full of point and bristling with epigram.

IN a volume entitled The Trial and Death of Socrates (Macmillan & Co.) the Dean of St. Paul's publishes a new translation of the 'Euthyphro,' 'Apologia,' 'Crito,' and 'Phædo' of Plato. A short introduction states in a pleasant manner the ascertainable facts of Socrates' life and supplies the arguments of the dialogues which follow. The author refrains, however, from original criticism, even on so fascinating a subject as the δαιμόνιον ὀψιον. The translation itself, though not noticeably elegant, is very lucid and readable, and much less paraphrastic than Mr. Jowett's. English readers who wish to form a vivid conception of the personality of "the wisest of the Greeks" cannot do better than procure Dean Church's book.

ANOTHER excellent and scholarly translation is that by Mr. J. S. Reid of the Academice of Cicero, which the same publishers send us. The notes, however, are rather disappointing. They are not full enough to be of much use, and a marginal analysis would have given the reader more help.

FROM the office of the Garden we have God's Acre Beautiful; or, the Cemeteries of the Future, by Mr. W. Robinson. This is a very attractive-looking book, with white and gold binding and pretty illustrations, but it is likely to fulfil an ornamental rather than a useful purpose. At least its use will be limited to a select few. It does not show us how to make an existing God's acre beautiful, but it argues that unless we adopt cremation and urn-burial it is impossible to hope for real beauty in any of our cemeteries. In short, it is a long controversial tract in favour of cremation. Mr. Robinson's arguments have no doubt a certain weight, but there is nothing new about them, and it is at any rate matter of regret that he did not extend his scope so as to bring his special knowledge as a horticulturist to bear upon our graveyards of to-day. The very few words he says on this subject are to the point, but he gives us no details as regards the most appropriate plants and shrubs: "Much short-lived and formal flower-gardening should be avoided, in consequence of the ceaseless care and cost it requires; the attention should mainly be devoted to the suitable hardy trees." But the care and cost are not all; there is the incongruity as well. It is better to see a graveyard solemnized by the sad shade of cypresses than gaudy with beds of pelargoniums and calceolarias. There is, however, no occasion for either extreme. Many flowers—partly, no doubt, from association—seem specially to harmonize with the present sorrow of the grave and the hope that lies beyond it. Roses of every kind, and such roses as Mrs. Bosanquet in particular, find their natural place by the headstone, and (as Mr. Allingham has said) "grave-side roses smell of spring." The passion flower may fitly wreath green tendrils and emblematic blossoms round the cross. Tall white lilies may keep guard, and white pinks scent the turf. A certain amount of attention will, of course, be always necessary, but Nature herself will often add a certain grace beyond the gardener's art. We wish Mr. Robinson had not neglected the cemetery of the present for the sake of the cemetery of the future.

THE third volume of Mr. Arber's English Garner has been issued. Among its contents are 'Della,' by Samuel Daniel; Campion's Lyrics, Elegies, &c.; 'Ellwood the Quaker's Relations with Milton'; 'The Controversy on Dramatic Poetry between John Dryden and his Brother-in-Law, Sir Robert Howard'; the first printed English book on dogs, &c. To the English Scholar's Library the same indefatigable worker has added Udall's 'Demonstration of Discipline'; Stanyhurst's translation of the 'Æneid,' books i.-iv.; Robert Green's 'Menaphon'; 'Camilla's Alarm to Slumbering Euphues,' &c., and some further Martin Marprelate tracts.

THE Italia Actuelle of M. E. de Laveleye (Hachette & Co.) is pleasant reading, and gives an excellent picture of the Italy of to-day. M. de Laveleye is very favourable to the Italians, yet not blind to their faults; but when he speaks almost in terms of condemnation of the rentiers of Paris and London living on the taxes of Italy, he quite leaves out of sight the way in which the Italian Government has treated foreign capitalists.

M. MUQUARDT, of Brussels, sends us the Mémoires of Count Van der Meers. According to his own account the general is an ill-used man. His services during the Belgian struggle for independence were not sufficiently appreciated, and when afterwards he took part in an Orangist conspiracy, Leopold I. had the bad taste to banish him.

THERE is no need to do more than mention the fact that Mr. H. Schmidt has brought out a thoroughly revised edition of that standard work, Tate's Modern Combat (Edinburgh Wilson).

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED

ENGLISH.

Theology.

Beecher (Rev. H. W.), Golden Glens from the Words and Works of, cr. 8vo. 2/6 cl.

Stoughton (J.), An Introduction to Historical Theology, 6/6 History.

Beloved Prince (The), a Memoir of H.R.H. the Prince Consort, by W. Nichols, cr. 8vo. 3/6 cl.

Crosey's (A. J.) Calendar of State Papers, Foreign, 1576-1577, roy. 8vo. 15/ cl.

Foot's (T.) Forty Years' Recollections, Literary and Political, cr. 8vo. 10/6 cl.

Jones (W.) Credulities, Past and Present, cr. 8vo. 7/6 cl.

Lee's (V.) Studies in the Eighteenth Century in Italy, 14/ cl.

Mansel's (Lord) Works and Life, Cabinet Edn., 15 vols (16/)

Paterson (Hon. Mrs. Hay), Memoir of, by her Sister, Charlotte Oliphant, 12mo. 2/6 cl.

Stewart's (C.) The Gaelic Kingdom in Scotland, its Origin and Growth, cr. 8vo. 3/ cl.

Science.

Bale's (M. P.) How to Manage a Steam Engine, cr. 8vo. 3/ cl.

Bald's (Dr. C. A.) Lectures on Digestion, translated by R. Samsby, cr. 8vo. 4/ cl.

Bosworth's (A.) Anatomical Outlines, Part 4, etc. 3/6 cl.

Stevenson's (T.) Spirit Gravities, with Tables, 12mo. 5/

Wood's (Rev. J. O.) Boy's Own Book of Natural History, 12mo. 3/ cl. (Blackbird Series.)

General Literature.

Aggie's Wife-Book and Naturalist's Record, sm. etc. 7/6 cl.

Debrun's (C.) A Sheep in Wolf's Clothing, from the French by E. Ferriol, cr. 8vo. 3/6 cl.

Glendon's (Right Hon. W. E.) Political Speeches in Scotland, Second Series, 8vo. 6/ cl.

Levi's (L.) A Pearl of Merry Beils, 3 vols. cr. 8vo. 31/6 cl.

Mansel's (Lord) Miscellaneous Writings, Speeches, and Poems, Cabinet Edition, 4 vols. cr. 8vo. 24/ cl.

May's (E.) The Broken Balm, or the Story of a Week, 3/6

Thomas's (A.) Society's Verdict, 3 vols. cr. 8vo. 31/6 cl.

Tuley's (M. J.) Up and Down, All Smiles, No Frowns, illustrated, etc. 5/ bds.

Walsh's (E. H.) and Bargant's (G. E.) Within Sea Walls, or how the Dutch kept the Faith, imp. 16mo. 4/4 cl.

Women Composers, a Guide to the Composing-Room, by H. G. B., cr. 8vo. 3/ cl.

Young Mrs. Jardine, by Author of 'John Halifax,' cr. 8vo. 5/

THEOLOGY.

Bibliotheca Rabbinica, ed. A. Wünsche, Parts 4 and 5, 6m.

Spence (Dr.), Abt. Servatus Lopes v. Porriana, 2m. 6d.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Ditzschke (H.), Antike Bildwerke in Oberitalien, Part 4, 2m. 6d.

Schreiber (E.), Die Antiken Bildwerke der Villa Lapidaria, 2m.

Philology.

Oehmichen (G.), Flasische Studien, 4m.

Science.

Armstrong's Atlas, Album de Machines-Outils, Travail des Métaux, 12m.

Jahresbericht üb. die Fortschritte der reinen Chemie, ed. L. Medicus and W. Staudel, Bericht 7, 1879, Part 1, 2m.

Stillig (J.), Die Sehen der Farbenblinden, 12m.

General Literature.

Guesrier de Haut (Marie), Le Bonheur et l'Argent, suivi de Le Berman de Jean Maciou, 3fr.

Karr (Alphonse), Bourdonnements, 3fr. 50.

Renan (E.), L'Eau de Jouvence, 3fr.

Tiphaine, avec une Préface par Alexandre Dumas fils, Editions de Luxe, 3fr. 50.

JEREMIAH RICH.

Falcon Court, Fleet Street, August, 1880.

JEREMIAH RICH has always been credited, in the historical accounts of shorthand extant, with the invention of the systems known as 'Art's Rarity,' 1854, and 'The Pen's Dexterity,' 1859; but in looking over some of the ancient shorthand books in the British Museum for purposes connected with my 'Legible Shorthand' (now in the press), I have discovered a system not mentioned in any of the histories, published in the name of William Cartwright, the uncle of Jeremiah Rich, in 1642, which is practically the same system as that published as 'Art's Rarity' twelve years afterwards by Rich in his own name. Jeremiah Rich was the publisher of Cartwright's book. It is so mentioned on the title-page, and in a preface Jeremiah Rich states:—"Now as for my commending of the works, I know not why any man should expect it seeing it is my own: for although I am not father to it; yet I am the right heir, for my uncle dying left it to me only," &c. Strange to say, however, in 'Art's Rarity' Rich makes no mention of Cartwright's volume, but publishes a preface signed by six writers of his system, who state:—"We shall conclude with this, That this Art is his own, not other men's Inventions put forth in his name which is usual with some now a-days," &c. I have compared the two books page for page, and find that not only are the alphabets identical, but whole sentences are copied in 'Art's Rarity' from Cartwright's 'Semography,' which was the title of the earlier work.

I should be glad to know if any of your correspondents can give any explanation of this. It seems clear that either Rich has no claim to the invention of the system now called his, or that he published it originally under the assumed name of his dead uncle. Possibly some of your readers may throw light on the subject.

EDWARD POOREWELL.

"THE MELANCHOLY JACQUES."

NOTHING was further from my intention than to accuse so ripe a scholar as your Correspondent, Mr. Grant Allen, of elementary ignorance. Such a charge would be apt to recoil unpleasantly on its maker. I meant to do no more than express—with a diffidence which I like to believe is habitual with me—a difference of opinion with him on the scanning of a mute in French poetry. No doubt it is pronounced, but I do not think it is scanned, as Mr. Grant Allen contends, when it comes at the end of a line. I have read, listened to, and even learned by heart, a great deal of poetry—more, perhaps, than most Englishmen. I may, of course, have read, listened, and learned amiss; but as long as I trust the evidence of my senses (and a considerable experience of them has not yet proved their fallibility) I must believe that a mute at the end of a line is breathed, indeed, and sounded, but not scanned as a separate syllable. I am old enough to have heard Rachel. The echo of many of the lines recited by that great genius is still in my memory as I write. I am sure she never made an extra foot of the mute e at the end of a syllable. Voltaire mentions somewhere—I forget where, or the exact words—that among the beauties of the French language he counts the dwelling of the voice upon the e mute—a breathing of the vowel rather than a pronunciation of it. Actors of the classic French drama dwell, some more, some less, upon the final e, but to my ear it would be a fault in prosody in them to scan it.

That the final e in French is not scanned is all but proved by the very verses which your Correspondent adduces. Among them are twelve with the final e, and each one of these lines would have a foot too many if the e in question were scanned.

All this, however, has but a remote bearing on "Jacques." I am glad to have elicited valuable opinions in favour of the full French e in place of the usual ai of the French "Jacques," and not the English "Jaikwée" or "Jaikex." So far as the occasional monosyllabic pronunciation of the name goes, I venture to beg the question, and to let learned commentators say what they will. To parody a homely proverb, the proof of the pronunciation is in the speaking, and the excellent actor who a month ago at Drury Lane asked,

What said the melancholy Jacques?

certainly made but one syllable of the name. I believe in stage tradition enough to hold that he spoke the name as Shakespeare meant it should be spoken.

With me this pleasant controversy must end here, for in a week I shall be beyond convenient reach of the editorial office.

OSWALD CRAWFORD.

Does not the concurrence of two independent writers in taking up the two points that "Jacques" was disyllabic, and the s sounded, lead Mr. Crawford to suspect that he may not have been so clear as he now is? For my part, I read his letter three times, and then replied, doubtful whether I was answering him. His faultless French pronunciation will only, I fear, be attained when our actors are able to appear on the stage of the Théâtre Français—if then. Though I could once speak French with an unusually small modicum of the "accent Britannique," I yet naturally pronounced Shakespeare's word "Jaques," nor, my ear being possibly at fault, can I sympathise with my friend F. A. Marshall's angry shudder at the barbaric sound.

As to the pronunciation of the two lines quoted, that has already been answered. When, too, he objects to a "terminal being pronounced anyhow"—whatever that in this instance may mean, for it was argued that "Jacques" was then pronounced as elsewhere—and when he objects to "a player sometimes being hypermetrical," on the ground "that Shakespeare's versification is too musical for such liberties," I would reply thus. Shakespeare is not unfrequently hypermetrical (according to a grammar prosodian) of set purpose, and any who ignore the fact can never have examined his versification even casually.

B. NIMMOLEOR.

Temple, August, 1880.

THERE was a celebrated Shakespearean critic, much looked up to at Mrs. Leo Hunter's assembly some thirty years since, whose great treatise, an inquiry as to whether Juliet's Nurse's deceased husband had really been a "merry man" in his lifetime, or whether it was not the Nurse's too partial recollection of his qualities which induced her to so describe him, had then recently excited a profound sensation amongst students of the great poet.

We are now somewhat plagued with equally profound researches about the "melancholy Jacques," and the proper pronunciation of his name. I must say that I was horrified, on a recent visit to Drury Lane, to hear my old friend called "Ja-qué!" One circumstance, however, appears to have escaped the notice of all the critics, namely, that Jacques is a common surname at Stratford-on-Avon and in the surrounding district. We may also find the forest of Arden in the neighbourhood; and although Shakespeare certainly introduces a foreign duke and an African lion into its sylvan glades, I believe that he took the name of the forest from his own country, and that the "melancholy Jacques" had been, in all probability, foreshadowed by some melancholy Stratford companion in arms when they "killed the deer" in Squire Lucy's park.

J. STANDING HALL.

August 26, 1880.

I HAVE remarked in the last number of the Athenæum the citations referring to the syllabic force of the e mute in the works of French poets. Allow me to add one, which many years ago, when I was a young French scholar residing in France, I learned from a French lady, in correction of my error on the power of the e mute. It is the first line of the following couplet in the 'Athalie' of Racine, recounting the speech of Jeshabel in Athalie's dream:—

Tremble, m'ot-elle dit, fille digne de moi,
Le cruel Dieu des Juifs l'emporte aussi sur toi.

In the first line are four instances of the e mute, each of which must have the force of a syllable to complete the rhythm. The line in question, as read by an educated Frenchman, is one of remarkable strength and harmony.

The same power of the e mute prevails in the ordinary careful speech of well educated persons. I was travelling in a diligence with a French lady and her young daughter, and on stopping at a post-house the little girl asked her mother to read the inscription. Her answer, rudely expressed in English sounds, was "Postüh royaltü, ma chärü." A. B. G.

* * * We cannot insert any more letters on this subject.

MR. W. H. WILLS.

It is not always the least notorious men who do the least valuable work; and the man whose death we record to-day, William Henry Wills, was a striking instance of large literary usefulness carried on without much publicity and of extensive influence exerted silently. Cast at an early age on his own resources, he began life by the usual methods of literary apprenticeship; but he soon made himself known as suited for any task that required keen perceptions and untiring industry, for never shirking a difficulty nor sparing his own trouble. The lines of his solid success, both literary and social, may be said to have been laid when he became the editor of Chambers's Journal. He did his work there so well as to attract the attention of influential men in London; and with his wife, the sister of William and Robert Chambers, gathered round him a social circle which people yet remember as most charming and characteristic of the time. He retained through life that rare combination of qualities which enabled him to be a strict editor, thoroughly loyal to the interests of his paper, yet at the same time a kind and helpful friend to his literary confidants—a keen man of business, but also a generous almoner and a genial host. He was in the heart of many of the most important literary undertakings, being one of the creators of Punch, on the original staff of the Daily News, as well as for many years the acting editor of Household Words and All the Year Round. In all the relations, indeed, bound up with this last office he was invaluable; and no man had ever a more devoted, discreet, or trustworthy friend than had Charles Dickens in him. He worked for Dickens far beyond the limits of his business obligation; and where others paraded their usefulness to, and brought themselves into notoriety by their association with, so great a celebrity, Henry Wills was content to be the faithful friend and to give substantial aid. In the same way for years he was the Baroness Burdett-Coutts's wise counsellor and the efficient director of most of her important schemes and undertakings. Many public questions, too, were first started by him. To take only one instance, it was his letters to the Daily News which first attracted attention to the extortionate doings of the gas companies, and ultimately reduced the price of gas; and his pen was ever ready for good work done anonymously and without reward, for the sake of justice. He threw himself heart and soul into whatever he had to do, and gave himself to the last for the good of others. The only regret which disturbed a death-bed of singular gentleness and sweetness, marked by the dignity of patience and resignation, was that of not having done all that he had planned to do, and of leaving still unfinished—and too unfinished to make it possible for any one else to take up—a certain work on which he had set his heart, and by which he had hoped to do good. His unfinished book was almost his last conscious thought. His nature, ardent, vivacious, eager, was full of that happy kind of cheerfulness which comes from strong affections, the desire to be of use to others, and the absolute need of seeing people happy about him, and of being loved as he himself loved. No man has left behind him fewer enemies and more friends, and no man was ever more faithful to his old friends, more grateful for kindness, more constant in remembrance. He carried out in action the ruling principles of his life, work and Christian kindness—faith in God's overruling providence, hope in the future, charity with all men. Nothing roused him to wrath so much as the gloomy pessimism at present so foully fashionable, as mental sloth, as petulant carping at his neighbours, as harsh judgment and condemnation. On his own side he cherished no resentments, and forgave as freely as he hoped to be forgiven. The influence which he exerted as magistrate, chairman of the board of guardians, &c., at Welwyn, where he had lived for the last dozen years, and where he died, was always on the side of a just mercy; but he was eminently manly and practical in mind, and neither weak nor sentimental. In him the poor have lost one who was ever ready to help them to help themselves, and his own friends a sympathizing comrade and a sincere and affectionate companion. He was born January 13th, 1810, and he died on September 1st. His father was at one time a wealthy shipowner and prize-agent at Plymouth; but, from causes which need not be entered into, the main care of the family was thrown on young Harry Wills when still little more than a mere lad. How he acquitted himself of this and other like obligations, the love and respect of the parents, the brother and sister who have gone before, of the wife, the numerous friends, and the many pensioners who remain behind, are the best testimony, and his most enduring as well as his most honourable epitaph.

Literary Gossip.

MR. C. A. FITZ, Fellow of University College, Oxford, is writing a history of modern Europe, which is to fill three volumes. The author begins with the coalition against France in 1792, and in his first volume, which will be published immediately by Messrs. Cassell, Petter & Galpin, he gets down to the return of the Bourbons in 1814.

THE same publishers promise shortly Sir C. Gavan Duffy's book on 'Young Ireland,' which we have previously mentioned. They will also issue during the present season the third and concluding volume of Sirubbald Scott's work on 'The British Army' (the first two volumes appeared some years ago), and the second volume of 'The Encyclopædic Dictionary,' compiled by Mr. R. Hunter.

MR. LONGFELLOW's new volume of poems, 'Ultima Thule,' will be published by Messrs. Routledge & Sons on the 11th inst.

THE édition de luxe of George Eliot's 'Romola,' to which we directed attention a fortnight ago, is now formally announced. It will be comprised in two volumes, imperial octavo, to be printed on the finest paper, made expressly by Messrs. Dickenson & Co. The illustrations will be from drawings by Sir F. Leighton. The number printed will be limited to one thousand copies. October 15th is named as the day of publication.

THE new Report of the Historical Manuscripts Commission, which will contain a great deal of valuable matter, will not be ready till the beginning of next year. The Hatfield papers will be included in it, and both from Scotland and Ireland there are contributions of much interest.

THE noted discourses by Père Didon on 'Science without God' have been translated into English by Miss Rosa Corder, and will shortly be published. The introduction, which is upon 'Faith and Experimental Science,' fills eighty-five pages, and the remaining divisions of the subject are as follows: "Positivism," "Materialism," "Atheistic Pantheism," "Scepticism," "Practical Atheism," "The Existence of God," and "Rational Knowledge of God." The translator observes in her preface that "the peculiar grace of the great orator's style must necessarily be somewhat lost in the translation from a Latin into a Teutonic tongue; but his scientific knowledge and fearless logic retain their force in any language."

AMONG the latest additions to the Manuscript Room of the British Museum are a series of the Swinney Lectures by Dr. W. B. Carpenter (1846, 1873, 1874), Grant (1853), Melville (1858-1862), Percy (1863-1867), Cobbold (1868-1872), and Nicholson (1878-1880); a narrative entitled 'La Vérité sans Peur,' giving some account of the escape of the Dauphin, Louis XVII., from the Temple in 1793, by Auguste de Bourbon (Meves), bequeathed to the Museum by Mr. Augustus Meves; and thirty-six volumes of correspondence, registers, journals, and other papers of Admiral Sir John Jervis, subsequently Earl of St. Vincent, from 1757 to 1823.

MESSRS. ROUTLEDGE & SONS' Christmas annual, 'The Green Room,' containing stories by those who frequent it, will be published early in October. Amongst the contributors are Madame Modjeska, Miss Genevieve Ward, Miss Marie Litton, Messrs. F. C. Burnand, Dion Boucicault, H. J. Byron, the Hon. Lewis Wingfield, J. L. Toole, and John Hollingshead. Mr. Clement Scott is the editor.

THE common pronunciation of the name of that immortal gossip, Samuel Pepys, has hitherto been "Peps," or, according to Punch, "Pips." Mr. H. B. Wheatley, however, in his forthcoming volume, 'Samuel Pepys and the World he Lived in,' intends to give abundant evidence that those are right who have maintained that the diarist was called by contemporaries "Mr. Peeps."

MR. STUART-GLIMMIE left London at the end of last week to act as special correspondent to one of our newspapers for Epirus and Thessaly.

MESSRS. CASSELL promise a number of books for young people during the coming season, such as 'The Wonderland of Work,' by C. L. Matéaux and 'What Girls can Do,' by Phillis Browne, a manual pointing out the various ways in which girls can make themselves useful. They have also various new volumes in their many libraries—"The Girl's Library," "The Quiver Series," "The Coney Corner Series," "The Fan Series," and "The Swallow Series." Lastly, they announce 'The ABO Poultry Book.'

THE first number of a new satirical weekly journal, to be called Pas, will be published on September 25th. Mr. G. A. Sala will be one of the chief contributors. The price will be sixpence.

PROF. BREYMAN, of Munich, late of Owens College, Manchester, is preparing a critical edition of Marlowe's 'Edward II,' based upon the earliest editions.

MR. ALFRED BUTTERWORTH, a Lancashire manufacturer, has proposed at his personal cost to establish a free library at Oldham, conditionally on its being closed on Sundays. The Town Council, on having the offer submitted to them, declined it, on account of the condition imposed, resolving, however, to form a free library which is to be opened on Sundays.

MESSRS. ROUTLEDGE & SONS will publish immediately a 'Birthday Book for Children,' with 382 illustrations, drawn by Miss Kate Greenaway, with appropriate verses by Mrs. Sale Barker.

A VOLUME will shortly be issued in Hull entitled 'Miscellanea,' edited by Mr. W. Andrews. It will mainly consist of poetry and prose from the Hull Miscellany. An account of the Saturday Evening Entertainments for the People, which originated in Hull, will be included.

MR. J. P. BRISCOE, of the Nottingham Free Library, will soon have ready for the press a work of some local interest, entitled 'Old Nottinghamshire.' It will consist chiefly of papers contributed to the Nottingham Guardian, under the title of "Local Notes and Queries," edited by Mr. Briscoe. Several well-known local authors have promised contributions.

MESSRS. HURST & BLACKETT have in the press a new novel, entitled 'Roy and Viola,' by Mrs. Forrester, author of 'Viva,' 'Mignon,' &c., in three volumes.

A NEW effort is to be made to produce a revised edition of Hunter's 'History and Topography of the Deanery of Doncaster.' The late Mr. Hunter left an annotated copy of his work, which is in the possession of Canon Jackson, and this will be made use of by the editor, Dr. Gatty, who will incorporate the emendations and additions with the original text. New matter, contributed by those who have had access to authorities which were not open to Mr. Hunter, will be kept distinct from his writing. The pedigree will be amended, whilst some others will be added. Canon Raine, Canon Ormsby, Mr. C. G. S. Foljambe, Col. J. L. Chester, Mr. J. J. Cartwright, of the Record Office, and others have promised help.

PROF. DE GUBERNATIS has all but finished his excellent 'Dizionario Biografico degli Scrittori Contemporanei.' The last instalment will appear early in October.

IT is worth while to note that the Times correspondent in St. Petersburg, writing about a recent interview between the Chinese ambassador and the Russian emperor, states that English served as the medium of communication between his Majesty and the Marquis Tseng.

THE Institut de France has awarded the Prix Volney for 1880 to Dr. A. de Cihac for his 'Dictionnaire d'Étymologie Daco-Romane.'

DR. HILLEBRAND, of Breslau, is engaged upon an edition of the 'Sankhayana Sutra,' from MSS. in the East India and the Bodleian Libraries. He is also collecting notes on the ritual of the Soma sacrifice for a monograph on that subject.

THE fourth centenary of the Russian victory over the Tartars is to be celebrated at St. Petersburg. The Secretary of the Archaeological Commission in that city is preparing for the occasion a history of the so-called Golden Horde from Arabic and Persian documents, collected from all accessible libraries in Europe.

DR. PHILIP JACOB BRUNN, for forty years Professor of History at the Imperial University, Odessa, died lately at Slavouta, in Volhynia, whither he had gone for the benefit of his health. He was born in Finland in 1804, received his early education at St. Petersburg, studied at Dorpat, Berlin, Geneva, and Paris, where he attended the lectures by Say and Dupin, and at eight-and-twenty was nominated adjunct to the Richelieu Lyceum, afterwards the Imperial University, Odessa. Prof. Brunn's works, in Russian, German, and French, include 'Historical and Geographical Researches on South Russia, 1852-1880' (in Russian); a treatise on the identity of Prester John, lately controverted by Prof. Zarncke of Stuttgart; notes on the ancient topography of New Russia, Bessarabia, the Crimea, &c.; commentaries on the writings of various travellers in the fifteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth centuries; notes to Capt. Telfer's edition of 'The Bondage and Travels of Johann Schiltberger, 1396-1427,' printed (1879) for the Hakluyt Society; and many others. Prof. Brunn was popular at all times with the university students, at whose instance he was re-elected to fill the chair of History from 1832 to 1871.

THE last number of the Zeitschrift des Deutschen Palästina-Vereins, just issued, mentions the discovery of a new inscription in Phœnician characters at Jerusalem. Prof. Socin says that the fac-simile sent to him is not very readable, but that he distinctly recognizes on it the letters yod, mem, samech, and ain in the form of highest antiquity. The discoverer of the inscription writes that the characters on the stone are small, and bear much resemblance to those of the Moasha stone.

THE Educational Congress held at Brussels last week, under the auspices of the Ligue d'Enseignement, seems to have been successful. It was arranged that no resolutions should be passed, and that the proceedings should be confined to discussions. The system of Froebel was severely criticized by Mlle. Gatti de Gamond, a lady who directs a normal school at Brussels, and found warm defenders. There was much debate on the subject of Realschulen and gymnasia, and a strong feeling was shown against the compulsory teaching of Greek and Latin.

WE learn from L'Imprimeur that M. Noblet, the President of the Chamber of Printers, has been made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour, and so has M. Prudon, a manufacturer of printing inks. Two well-known Paris publishers, M. Lemerre and M. Quantin, have been appointed Officiers de l'Instruction Publique, while the palmes académiques have been given to M. A. Trombert, an employé in Chaix's great establishment, for his care of the health and training of the children employed there.

A VOLUME by Mr. C. B. Berry, descriptive of a winter visit made by two business men to the United States and Canada, and entitled 'The Other Side: how it Struck Us,' will be published during the autumn by Messrs. Griffith & Farran. They also promise 'Heroes of History and Legend,' a translation by Mr. J. L. Shadwell from the German of A. W. Grube. The translation has been undertaken at the request of Dr. T. B. Armitage, Chairman of the British and Foreign Blind Association, in order to provide, in a popular form, a brief outline of European history to be embossed for the use of the blind. They further announce several books for children, among them one by Miss E. C. Phillips, the daughter of the late Samuel Phillips of the Times.

SCIENCE

The Condition of Nations, Social and Political.

By G. Fr. Kolb. Translated, Edited, and Collated to 1880 by Mrs. Brewer, with Original Notes by Edwin W. Streeter. (Bell & Sons.)

DR. KOLB'S 'Handbuch der vergleichenden Statistik' deservedly holds a high place amongst works of its class. Although not free from errors and coloured in some measure by the political views of its author, it is a veritable treasury of statistical knowledge, and its historical retrospects and explanatory notes endow it with a permanent value which is altogether wanting in ephemeral tables embodying the results of a single year's observations. Mr. Streeter, under these circumstances, is entitled to some credit for having placed this vast mass of information within the reach of English readers. Unfortunately, the translation and editing leave much to be desired. Mrs. Brewer claims to have brought down the work "to the actual present from authentic sources," but a glance at the tables referring to the United Kingdom shows that this statement cannot be implicitly trusted. The agricultural and educational statistics, for instance, are four years in arrears. The translation is done very indifferently. We might forgive Mrs. Brewer's rendering of Unterofficier as "inferior officer," or Kaminsteuer (hearth-tax) as fire insurance, but in many instances she altogether misrepresents her author. On p. 47 Dr. Kolb is made to state that the United Kingdom retained the same boundaries "for centuries," and that for this reason it "was necessary that England should largely extend her colonial possessions." What Dr. Kolb really does say is that, although the United Kingdom has the same boundaries now as at the beginning of the first French revolution, the colonial possessions have largely increased since then. Lower down Dr. Kolb is made responsible for stating that, "in consequence of the irregularity of the succession to the throne in England and Hanover, in 1837 the personal union with the last ceased." Dr. Kolb makes use of the expression "abweichende Thronfolgeordnung." On p. 49 we read, with reference to the small revenue derived from Crown Lands, that this "is a sign that now, as in the early time of absolutism, the property of the State is mismanaged or wasted." Dr. Kolb, however, far from accusing the present Commissioners of Woods, Forests, and Crown Lands, literally says that "this is a sign that in a former age of absolutism the property of the State was squandered." After these few specimens, culled from the beginning of the book, we are unable to subscribe to Dr. Kolb's opinion that his work has been "rendered with much intelligence and remarkable fidelity."

BRITISH ASSOCIATION, SWANSEA.

Mr. F. W. RUDLER, now the Registrar of the Royal School of Mines, and formerly one of the professors of the University College of Wales at Aberystwith, most appropriately took as the subject of his opening address to the sub-section of Anthropology 'The Ethnical Relations of the Typical Man of South Wales.' In this his conclusions were: (1) that as far as we can gather Boedion was tall and fair, belonging to the xanthous type; (2) it is doubtful how far the Belgic settlers in Britain resembled the neighbouring British tribes; (3) according to Dr. Beddoe's accurate observations, the Welsh as a whole are of short stature and good weight, with a tendency to darkness of eyes, hair, and skin, most marked in the interior of Wales, where the proportion of dark-eyed folk is higher than in any other district of Britain; (4) the origin of this dark-eyed element is connected with the passage in Tacitus describing the Silures, and referring to the Iberi as having probably crossed over from Spain. No doubt at the dawn of historic times South Britain contained representatives of Prof. Huxley's Melanochroi and Xanthochroi. The question as to language was more difficult. The xanthous people spoke some Celtic tongue. Even if the Silures were more or less closely related to the ancestors of the Basque race, the latter were so mixed a race in the present day that neither features nor language could assist us. A few pre-Celtic, non-Aryan words have been detected in place-names, as Menapia, Mona, and Mynwy; but, after all, the most useful evidence still remaining was that of skulls. From the conclusions of many ethnologists it appeared that the early types of sepulchral barrows, the chambered and long types, always contained dolichocephalic skulls, belonging to a people of short stature, and apparently unacquainted with the use of metals. These were older than the round, conoidal, or bell-shaped barrows, containing bronze or iron implements, and mostly brachycephalic skulls. The occasional presence of long skulls in round barrows was not difficult to explain, when it was considered that the older and the newer races most likely lived side by side. The round-headed people appeared from the proportions of femora to have an average height of 5 ft. 8 in., while that of the long-headed race was but 5 ft. 5 in. In the skulls from the round barrows the superciliary ridges are more prominent, the nasal bones diverge at a more abrupt angle, the cheekbones are high, and the lower jaw projects, giving the face an aspect of ferocity, which contrasted unfavourably with the mild features of the earlier stone-using people. Subsequent mixture of these types might produce not only persons intermediate in type, but some very complex, as short stature with the long head of one race and the light hair of the other; or tall, with long head and dark hair. Yet earlier races might have contributed to the complexity of the modern Welshman, reaching as far as some primitive stock older than the Neolithic ancestors of the Silures. The best account, however, that could be given yet was summed up in calling them Siluro-Cymric.

Mr. Baden Powell's paper, before the Economic Science Section, 'On the Results of Protection in the United States,' was most warmly received. He showed the harnessing and not fostering effect which actually resulted from it, and indicated four principal obstacles to the adoption of a more liberal policy: (1) the present cheapness of land; (2) the influx of foreign capital into the States;

(3) government by manhood suffrage; and (4) vested interests, the last appearing to him very difficult to overcome, except with the increase of population. The lively discussion which followed included the expression of Sir Antonio Brady's surprise that the astute Yankees should consent to pay a tax of 30 to 50 per cent. upon many articles simply to benefit 5,000 manufacturers; Capt. Bedford Pim's explanation that to him protection meant empire, and free trade Utopia; and Mr. Stephen Bourne's answer that it was the agitators in this country for a return to protection who retarded the adoption of free trade by other countries. Mr. Hastings, in summing up, said those who want a protective duty on our imports to increase our prosperity were like a man who with a falling income went to his butcher and baker and asked them to charge him more for meat and bread. In his address as President of this Section, Mr. Hastings, M.P., contended bravely for statistics, notwithstanding evil use, as being the true foundation of legislation; while no legislation by which the productiveness of the land, the foundation of national wealth, was promoted could be opposed to political economy. Even the Compensation for Disturbance Bill was founded on a principle that had been law ever since the days of the Roman emperors in every other country in Europe.

In the Chemical Section, the President (Dr. Gilbert) spoke on the application of chemistry to agriculture. Referring first to the assimilation of carbon, he said the whole tendency of observations was to conform to the opinion put forward by De Saussure about the commencement of the century, and so forcibly insisted upon by Liebig forty years later, that the greater part, if not the whole, of the carbon was derived from the carbonic acid of the atmosphere. Judging from the more recent researches, it would seem probable that the estimate of one part of carbon, or carbonic acid, in 10,000 of air was more probably too high than too low as an estimate of the average quantity in the atmosphere of our globe. Large as was the annual accumulation of carbon from the atmosphere over a given area, it was obvious that the quantity must vary exceedingly with the variation of climatic conditions. It was, in fact, several times as great in the case of the tropical vegetation. And not only was the greater part of the assimilation accomplished within a comparatively small portion of the year, but the action was limited to the hours of daylight, whilst during darkness there was rather loss than gain. In a general sense it might be said that the success of the cultivator might be measured by the amount of carbon he succeeded in accumulating in his crops. And as the amount of carbon accumulated depended on the supply of nitrogen in an available form within the reach of the plants, it was obvious that the question of the sources of the nitrogen of vegetation was one of first importance. The result of experiments that had been conducted was to prove—first, that without nitrogenous manure the gramineous crops annually yielded for many years in succession much more nitrogen over a given area than was accounted for by the amount of combined nitrogen annually coming down in the measured aqueous deposits from the atmosphere; second, the roots yielded more nitrogen than the cereal crops, and the leguminous crops much more still; and third, that in all cases—whether of cereal crops, root crops, leguminous crops, or a rotation of crops—the decline in the annual yield of nitrogen, when none was supplied, was very great. The next point referred to was the condition of the nitrogen in our various crops. They could not say that the whole of the nitrogen in the seeds with which they had to deal existed as albuminoids; but they might safely assume that the nearer they approached to perfect ripeness the less of non-albuminoid nitrogenous matters would they contain; and in the case of the cereal grains, at any rate, it was possible that if really perfectly ripe they would contain very nearly the whole of their nitrogen as albuminoids. With regard to some leguminous and other seeds, which contained peculiar nitrogenous bodies, the range might, however, be wider. But whatever the condition of the nitrogenous bodies in the seeds they grew or sowed, with germination began a material change. Albuminoids were transformed into peptones, or peptone-like bodies, or degraded into various compounds. The question arose, therefore, whether these bodies contributed in any way to the nutrition of the animals which fed upon them. They had but little experimental evidence on that point. As green herbage was the natural food of many descriptions of animals, they might suppose that characteristic constituents of it would not be without some value as food; but the cultivated root crops were much more artificial productions, and it was in them that they found such a very large proportion of non-albuminoid nitrogen.

Prof. Boyd Dawkins delivered a most interesting discourse 'On Primeval Man.' Beginning with the Eocene age, there was, he said, no evidence that there were any living genera in Europe of the higher mammalia. In the Miocene age we had living genera, but not living species. In the Pliocene age there were a few living species. It was, therefore, highly improbable that man should have been living in the Pliocene age. As for the Pleistocene age, there had been then large numbers of living mammalia, and the condition of things was altogether changed, the geography and the climate also being of a very different character. The summer heat was considerable, whilst the winter cold was equivalently severe. There were a large number of specimens of mammalia, but no traces of man had been found in the forests of Norfolk and Suffolk. Still it did not follow that no man was living then, and, indeed, there was every reason to suppose that evidences of the existence of man might be found in those deposits. But it had been conclusively shown that in the subsequent age man existed, as proved from the evidence of flint instruments found in the valley of the Lower Thames—implements described as of the "river-drift" type. Man at that period was a rough hunter, using rude and rough triangular implements. Nevertheless, men extended all over Europe, Asia, and Africa; and the primeval hunter who hunted the stag in Africa had brethren who hunted the fallow deer in Spain and in Italy, and others who hunted the various wild animals in the jungles of India. There was unquestionable evidence that the very earliest man was really a man, and not the "missing link." From the testimony of the caves in France, for example, we could arrive at some conclusion as to the habits of life of the men of the Pleistocene age, for here and elsewhere we had evidently their attempts at artistic effect, and distinct proofs of their hunting habits, hunting as they did the reindeer, the horse, the bison, the great elephant, and the whale. They were in the habit of practising the art of sculpture, and he was compelled to come to the conclusion that not only were the cave men much more highly developed than the river-drift men, but that they were more highly advanced in the art of reproducing animal form than any people down to comparatively modern times; and if any of the students at the schools of design of the present day were sent to work with the same implements, he doubted very much indeed whether they would have turned out such fine groups of animals as those which illustrated the ancient life of the cave men, whose art he compared with that of the Esquimaux before that had been spoiled by visitors. He was compelled to believe that the Esquimaux represented the survivors of the primeval people he was speaking of.

Dr. Günther, in his opening address to his section, spoke on the subject of Museums, and made many important suggestions of reform in their management. Referring to the strictly educational museums which are found established in connexion with universities, colleges, medical and science schools, he said that, besides the exhibited permanent series, a stock of well-preserved specimens should be kept for the express purpose of allowing the student to practice dissection and the method of independent examination, and in the latter he was inclined to include the method of determining to what order, family, genus, or species any given object should be referred. There should also be formed a series of all the animals and plants which are of economic value or otherwise of importance to man. The principal aim of the provincial museum ought, in his opinion, to be popular instruction, and it should, therefore, contain an arranged series of well-preserved specimens, representing as many of the remarkable types of living forms as are obtainable; a series of useful as well as noxious plants and animals; of economic products obtained from the animal and vegetable kingdoms; and last, but not least, a complete and accurately-named series of the Flora and Fauna of the neighbourhood. With regard to the British or National Museum, he said he believed that some of the members of the British Association would feel rather disappointed that the zoological and botanical collections on the one hand, and the palaeontological on the other, continue to be kept distinct. Who would—who could doubt that the two branches of biological science would be immensely benefited by being studied in their natural mutual relations, and that palaeontology more especially would have made surer progress if its study had been conducted with more direct application to the series of living forms? But to study the series of extinct and living forms in their natural connexion was one thing, and to incorporate in a museum the collection of fossil with that of recent forms was another. The latter proposal, so excellent in theory, would offer in its practical execution so many and insuperable difficulties, that they might well hesitate before they recommended the experiment to be tried in so large a collection as the British Museum. A plan which had been already initiated in the old building would probably be further developed in the new, viz., to distribute in the palaeontological series such examples of important living types as would aid the visitor in comprehending the nature and affinities of the creatures of which he saw only the fragmentary remains.

In the Mathematical and Physical Science Section, the President (Prof. W. G. Adams, of King's College, London) gave an interesting address on facts in the borderland between chemistry and physics.

In the Chemistry Section, Mr. J. M. Cameron followed up Dr. Gilbert's lead in a useful paper 'On the Position of Agricultural Education in this Country as compared with that of the Continent of Europe.' He complained that the farmers' societies did very little in England to diffuse a knowledge of chemistry, so that our farmers did not know the difference between soluble and insoluble phosphate, or between nitrate of soda and ammonia. The landed proprietors came in for a share of censure for the way in which they neglected scientific agriculture, while in Germany there were 1,300 institutions where a knowledge of these subjects was being diffused, and the State was paying large sums for their maintenance. Mr. Cameron wished that in every elementary school there should be taught to children in the last year of compulsory attendance the first principles of agriculture; that teachers should be required to hold a certificate of competence in agriculture; and that lectures on agricultural science and experimental stations should be greatly multiplied.

Mr. H. C. Sorby's address to the Geological Section dealt with the comparative structure of artificial slugs and erupted or volcanic rocks.

This was a highly scientific means of following up the President's address to the Association, showing that the old was in every way to be interpreted by the new. Mr. Sorby showed that the greater part of the differences between the artificial modern and the true igneous rocks was attributable to the presence in the latter of water at the time of their fusion. Mr. De Rance, in the report on the circulation of underground waters in the Permian, New Red Sandstone, and Jurassic formations of England, and on the quality and character of the water they supplied, estimated that each square mile of such country, on the average, could yield 400,000 gallons per day, of high purity. He criticised unfavourably the new boring at Boots for the Liverpool water supply.

Mr. Francis Galton's lecture on 'Mental Imagery' dealt in an entertaining manner with the subject to which he has recently devoted so much attention. At the close of his lecture he remarked that the memories we should chiefly aim at acquiring were those based upon a thorough comprehension of the objects observed by what was seen. He had noticed that the faculty of "visualizing" was very well developed amongst mechanicians and architects. The French nation, as a rule, had shown, by their powers of pre-arranging fêtes and ceremonies, that they could foresee the spectacular results unusually clearly. Again, the Australian bushmen and Esquimaux, with their powers of drawing, appeared to have most high visualizing faculties.

In the Geographical Section, General Sir J. H. Lefroy gave a long address 'On the Geography of North and Central America,' where he had personally travelled, and further spoke of the great and sound increase in our geographical knowledge by reason of the recent operations of war. He said that he believed M. de Lesseps would add to the world the benefits of a Panama canal. Lieut. Temple, in summarizing the results of the Nordenfjöld expeditions, mentioned that the sailing directions for the coast of Norway, to which he alluded at last year's meeting of the British Association, had now been published by the Admiralty, while some of the Norwegian charts were in course of preparation. It was a matter of regret that the work in question was not submitted to its compiler for final revision, as, in spite of the evident care and skill with which it had been prepared for the press, it was somewhat marred by errors which no stranger to the coast and language could possibly have avoided. Nevertheless, the publication would enable British seamen to take their share in a work by which the Northmen had already covered themselves with glory.

A very interesting paper, prepared by Lieut.-Col. Tanner, was read, entitled 'Notes on the Dara Nur, Northern Afghanistan, and its Inhabitants.' The writer described the inhabitants of the Dara Nur Valley as differing little in appearance from the Afghans. Their features were softer, and they were more trustworthy and less given to fanatical outbreaks than the Pathans. The people still retained the custom of sitting on stools, and, as a rule, were not at home when squatting on the ground. Among the Kohistanis and the Kafirs stools were in general use. The Churganis were a highly interesting people, living in the highest habitable part of the Kund range. East and west they were hedged in by the powerful race of Safis, their hereditary enemies, and peace was seldom known between them. At the time of harvest they preserved an armed peace, but at all other times there was war. The Safis were the more numerous, and had richer and broader arable tracts than the Churganis, who had cultivated every available square yard of hillside that could bear a terrace. The result was that the Safis were gradually overpowering their neighbours. The appearance of a Churgani was quite different from that of an Afghan or a Dari Nuri. He was shorter in stature, and had more pleasing features. The beards of the poorer people was a skull cap, or kind of brown wideawake, with a very narrow brim, round which the more prosperous ones bound a dark indigo-dyed pag-garee. The coat was short, of quilted indigo, coloured cotton, or of brown blanket-like material. Altogether the costume was most picturesque. The Churganis were the only Mohammedans he knew who allowed to women perfect freedom. Young and old, married and single, went about as they did in Europe, and without any of the false modesty of the ordinary Indian and Afghan females. The women and children seemed always to be busy in the field, whilst they left the household duties to the master of the house. The little known people whom the Afghans called Kafirs were now confined to a small tract of country. Although the tribes were numerous and many different languages were spoken, they were being continually encroached upon by the surrounding Afghans, partly to secure the women as slaves, and partly by fanatical Mohammedans on religious grounds.

Mr. H. Seebohm's lecture on the North-East Passage, intended specially for working men, failed to attract many, notwithstanding the adventurous character of the lecturer's own experiences. He described his own journeys with Capt. Wiggins since 1875; his overland and river travels over 15,000 miles to and from lat. 71° 30' in the Yenesei. He thought that new railways would prove more valuable than the sea route in opening up the products of the rich wheat-growing country of Central Asia and South Siberia, where wheat was about one-twentieth its price in Britain, meat 14d. per pound, grouse 7d. per brace, and geese 6d. each. Coal was abundant, and there were at least ten gold-mines on the Yenesei, yielding every year from five to seven tons of gold. He agreed with Lieut. Temple in describing the Nordenfjöld voyage as the most brilliant and completely successful Arctic voyage ever made.

ASTRONOMICAL NOTES.

THE following are the places of Schaberle's comet from the ephemeris of M. Bigourdan for Paris midnight, continued from the date for which they were given in last week's Athenæum:

Date.	R.A.	N.P.D.
	h. m. s.
Sept. 6	6 44 40	67° 49'
" 7	6 56 18	68° 16'
" 8	6 56 48	68° 31'
" 9	6 55 16	68° 46'
" 10	6 54 40	68° 52'
" 11	6 54 16	69° 26'
" 12	6 53 42	69° 16'
" 13	6 53 8	70° 39'
" 14	6 50 28	70° 49'

After the 14th the moonlight in the hours after midnight will interfere with any chance of seeing the comet until the end of the month.

A new comet was discovered in America by Mr. Swift on August 11th, the telegraphic announcement of which from Washington seems to have been unaccountably delayed. The R.A. of the comet was then 11h 28m; the declination, as given in the telegram, is somewhat ambiguous, whether 69° north or 60° 8'. The comet is stated to have been faint; its motion during the time it was seen could not be assigned.

An exceedingly careful and interesting résumé of the progress of astronomy in 1879 has been published in the Scientific Proceedings of the Royal Dublin Society, by Mr. Dwyer, of the Observatory of Trinity College, Dublin. The author remarks that it is similar to that for 1878 written by Prof. Holden, of the United States Naval Observatory, for the Annual Record of Science and Industry, the publication of which has been discontinued.

A new edition of that invaluable book for the astronomical amateur, the Rev. T. W. Webb's 'Celestial Objects for Common Telescopes,' is in the press, and will probably be out early next month.

The results of the spectroscopic and photographic observations made at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, in the years 1878 and 1879 have just been published, in advance of the respective annual volumes for those years, of which they will ultimately form parts. The former of these will probably soon be out. From the photographs it appears that the minimum of solar spots and faculae took place about January, 1879; there was a complete absence of spots from November 11th, 1878, to April 8th, 1879, and of faculae from December 15th, 1878, to February 8th, 1879, and again from February 19th to April 4th, 1879. A rapid increase in their number is shown during the last quarter of 1879, accompanied (in accordance with what has previously been remarked) by an increase in the mean distance from the sun's equator.

SCIENTIFIC.

QUESTIONS MICROSCOPICAL.—August 27.—Mr. T. C. White, President, in the chair.—One new Member was elected, and numerous additions to the library were announced.—A paper by Mr. G. C. Carrap, 'On some Immature Forms of Diatoms,' was read by the Secretary.—Two papers 'On Wax Mounting' were read, one by Mr. Roper and the other by Mr. Moreland, each of which detailed the particular method adopted by the writer and the advantages claimed for the same.—A discussion followed, in the course of which it was stated that a method of mounting in wax cells had some time ago been recommended by Prof. H. Smith, but was subsequently abandoned by him on account of the inconvenience arising from "sweating." This defect was, however, said to be entirely obviated by the procedure recommended by several speakers upon the subject.—A paper 'On the Use of Pure Gum Arabic' was read by Mr. Waddington, who explained the preparation and advantages of the material for microscopical purposes.

Scientific Society.

Messrs. Cassell, Petter & Galpin promise a volume on 'European Ferns, their Form, Habit, and Culture,' by Mr. J. Britton, F.L.S., with thirty fac-simile coloured plates, painted from nature by Mr. D. Blair, F.L.S.

THE same firm announce for the coming season new instalments of their popular series. The fourth volume of the 'New Natural History,' edited by Prof. Martin Duncan, which contains "Birds," by Mr. R. Bowdler Sharpe, F.L.S., "Reptiles" and "Amphibians," by Prof. Martin Duncan; the yearly volume of 'Science for All' for 1880, edited by Dr. Robert Brown; Vols. IV. and V. of 'The Countries of the World,' by Dr. R. Brown; 'Great Industries of Great Britain,' complete in three volumes; Vol. II. of 'Our Own Country'; and 'Insect Variety: its Propagation and Distribution,' by Mr. A. H. Swinton, member of the Entomological Society.

DENNIS PAPIN, who was born in 1647, who invented the first steam vessel, and whose name is associated with Papina's Digester, has been honoured by a statue in his native town, Blom, which was unveiled on Sunday, the 29th of August.

THE American Journal of Science for August contains many papers of interest. There are three on light and optical phenomena; Dr. J. Croll advances a curious hypothesis 'On the Relation of Aqueous Vapour to Perpetual Snow'; Messrs. G. J. Brush and Edward S. Dana have a memoir 'On Crystallized Danburite from Russell, St. Lawrence County, New York,' in which they show the close relation of this mineral to topaz, its composition being silica 48.25, boron tritoxide 26.93, and lime 23.24; and Mr. John Trowbridge has an interesting communication 'On the Earth as a Conductor of Electricity,' in which he states some curious telephonic phenomena.

PROF. O. C. MARSH has just published a monograph on 'Odontornithes, the Extinct Toothed Birds of America.'

AN electric railway has been established in the Brussels Exhibition, and it is said to be working with great regularity, carrying six passengers at about six to seven miles an hour to a distance of nearly four thousand yards.

PROF. WILLIAM DENTON MARKS gives in the Journal of the Franklin Institute for August a paper on 'The Limitations of the Steam-Engine,' in which he endeavours to show that every effort should be made to obtain concentration of power, economy of steam, regularity of speed, simplicity of design, and durability of construction. This is followed by remarks by Mr. S. W. Robinson, of the Department of Mechanical Engineering, Ohio State University, 'On the Economical Out-off in Steam-Engines,' especially directed to some points in Prof. Marks's article.

M. H. COCHER brought before the Académie des Sciences, on the 9th of August, a paper on the 'Influence de la Lumière sur la Transpiration des Plantes.' He arrives at the following general conclusions:—A plant transpires more under the action of light than in obscurity. The transpiration of plants reaches its maximum about noon. As the colour of a plant becomes more intense the more active is the transpiration.

At the conclusion of the meeting of the French Association for the Advancement of Science, at Rheims, it was resolved that the session for 1881 should be held at Algiers in the first week after Easter, with Prof. Chauveau for President. M. Janssen was elected President for 1882, when the meeting will be held at Rochelle.

THE Bulletin of the Philosophical Society of Washington has been sent to us. The three volumes which are now on our table give us the proceedings of this Society from its first meeting, in November, 1871, to its 185th meeting, on June 19th, 1880. For the first time since this Society has been established a public distribution of its Bulletin is now made, "principally to a few prominent scientific periodicals, hoping that anything of interest may be promptly noticed by them." This, of course, must apply to the future. All that is of real value in these three volumes, with the exception of the Bulletin for May and June of this year, will have already received the desired notices, or they are too old to be referred to now. The papers read before the Society in the two months named are very varied in character. For example, Mr. G. K. Gilbert has a commemorative 'On the Drainage System of the Black Hills of Dakota'; the Rev. J. Owen one 'On the Gentile System of the Omahas'; and Mr. Edgar Frisby one 'On Magic Squares.' It must be obvious to every one that no satisfactory notice of the prominent points in these papers can be given—indeed, we observe that a majority of the papers are given only in abstract, the Society adopting the rule of "publishing papers in full through other channels, such, for instance, as the Smithsonian Institution, the reports of Government bureaus, and scientific journals." Therefore, this Bulletin occupies a peculiar position of usefulness, containing references, as it does, to where the articles in full are to appear. It performs good service in assisting to make known the valuable contributions to science which are diffused through voluminous executive and congressional documents not readily accessible to the scientific world. The members of the Society are enabled, without delay, to publish a synopsis of their investigations, and minor facts and inferences which are not themselves of sufficient importance for philosophical transactions or high class scientific journals.

FINE ARTS.

DONALD GRAY WOODS, 'CHRIST LEAVING THE TABERNACLE,' 'CHRIST ENTERING JERUSALEM,' and 'THE BRAZEN SERPENT' (the latter two completed, each 35 by 25 feet, with 'Dream of Pilate's Wife' and 'The Night of the Crucifixion,' Messrs. of Chicago, Ar., on the DONALD GALLERY, 25, New Bond Street, Italy, Ten by Six.—L.)

Die Ausgrabungen zu Olympia IV Uebersicht der Arbeiten und Funde vom Winter und Frühjahr, 1878-1879. XXXIX Tafeln, herausgegeben von E. Curtius, F. Adler, und G. Treu. (Berlin, Ernst Wasmuth.)

THIS sumptuous volume recounts the discoveries of the fourth year of the German explorations. In the one-and-fifty pages of letter-press Prof. Curtius gives a general summary; Dr. Treu explains the plates, and in two dissertations discusses the composition of the western pediment and the metopes of the temple of Zeus; while Prof. Adler deals with the topographical plan and the architectural details. Plates i. to v. contain photographs of the ground excavated, vi. to xiii. of the sculptures of the temple of Zeus, xiv. to xix. other finds of plastic art, xx. to xxix. the bronzes and terra-cottas, xxx. and xxxi. the topographical plan; xxxii. to xxxix. ground-plans, sections, and details of the Metroon, of two Treasuries (Megara and Syracuse) of the Buleuterium and the Hall, those of the Echo, the so-called Leonideum, of the Southern Hall and of the South-Western Hall.

The excavators devoted special attention to the eastern and southern sides. On the eastern side the stadium was found, not, as was supposed, stretching from south to north into a cleft in the hill of Cronus, but running from west to east out beyond the Altis into the plain of the Alpheus. The rows of seats on either side were banks of earth. Through the secret entrance, a long tunnel ornamented with a propylæum of four columns, the competitors and the judges stepped out of the Altis into this, the most celebrated of all arenas. South of this secret entrance the Hall of the Echo and the Leonideum ran from north to south, together forming the eastern termination of the Altis. The Hall of the Echo, so called from the sevenfold repetition, also from its frescos styled Ποικίλη, is nearly a hundred metres long, and dates from the beginning of the fourth century. It had originally one nave with forty-four Ionic pillars and two aisles, three ornamented marble steps, and was covered with wooden trusswork. Subsequently a second row of pillars was inserted, in order to support a light roof. It was open on the inner side, i.e., that towards the Altis, and served to receive the public in order to behold the solemn sacrifice. Before the steps runs a row of pedestals. South of the building is the Leonideum, which originally consisted of a row of four square rooms, connected together and surrounded on three sides by thirty-five Doric columns and two rows of steps, the foundation of a native of Elis, named Leonidas. But in Roman times it was converted into a great inn, with atrium, impluvium, bath-rooms, and niches. Its right corner abuts on the southern wall of the Altis. Not far from the south-east corner lay the great chief gate for the entrance of the processions, the εισοδος τεμπυκή; it no longer exists; only the foundations of the triple Roman triumphal arch, which was erected on this spot. Further west, outside the Altis, lies the highly remarkable Buleuterium, the earliest known house of assembly of deliberating officials in Greece. In the same building stood also once, "for the terror of evil-doors," the statue of Zeus Horkios, with the thunderbolt in his hand, before which the competitors, their fathers and brothers, as well as the judges of the games, swore in the contest and in deciding to be guilty of no trickery, and the competitors besides swore that they had spent ten months in preparing themselves for the struggle. The Buleuterium consists of five parts. The oldest is the southern building, an oblong hall, surrounded by two steps, and divided by a row of seven columns into two long naves, terminated by an apse, which in its turn is cut off from the principal chamber by a wall with doors in it, and is divided into two parts by another wall, also pierced by doors. The entrance on the eastern side is formed by three Doric pillars and two antæ. It belongs to the sixth century. 2. The northern building of the fifth century, very similar to the southern. Both these buildings appear to have had windows and wooden roofs. The long naves may have served for the sittings of the Olympic Council, and the apses for the preservation of treasures. 3. Between the two the centre building, a square with a pillared entrance; in the middle probably was a column to support the roof. This is perhaps the temple of Zeus Horkios. 4. Before the three buildings ran a hall of twenty-seven Ionic pillars on the long side, and three on each short side. 5. East of this a large trapezoidal court, surrounded by nineteen pillars. This is of Roman date. In the eastern wing stands one of the best constructed wells and an altar. South of the Buleuterium rises the stately Southern Hall, which is 80 metres long. On its northern side it is closed by a wall; on the three other sides it is supported by Ionic columns, numbering twenty-three, six, and six respectively. In the middle runs yet another row of pillars, this time Corinthian. Here stood the people to see pass the procession which, proceeding from the Cladeus, wended its way along the south side of the Altis in order to enter the festal gate.

Of two monuments within the Altis this fourth volume contains photographs and descriptions—the Metroum and the Pelopium. The Metroum, the temple of the mother of the gods, a small Doric temple of the fourth or third century, which was roughly restored in the Roman period, and filled with statues of emperors—for instance, of Titus and Claudius—was wholly pulled down by the Byzantines, and its stones used to build fortifications. Still the ground plan (6×11 columns) and the dimensions (20½ metres long by 10½ metres broad) can be calculated, and fragments of pillars and architraves, but especially of the frieze and roof, painted red and blue, have been preserved in great quantities. The Pelopium was a court surrounded by a five-cornered boundary wall; there was a tumulus in the middle, and a portico and entrance on the west side. In the court stood trees and statues, and a black ram was offered up here yearly to the most noted of all Olympic heroes. It lies between the temples of Zeus and Hera.

But our knowledge of the Altis as a whole, of its divisions and gradations, has been much increased in some other respects. The great terrace of the temple of Zeus, adorned with offerings, has been identified; its high borders are visible on the north, west, and south. The sites of the altars which were kept open for assemblies and the streets which were lined on either side with offerings are known; the economical employment for the ever-multiplying new buildings of the narrow space is made evident. Of gates six have already been discovered, and in the case of many structures the growth and different dates of the building are provable; the complicated nexus of water conduits has been laid bare, the Prytaneum is cleared of the later superstructures, and its ground plan has been brought out, and from the fragments which had gone astray and been built into other edifices the treasures of Megara and Syracuse have been restored perfectly on paper. The treasury of Gelon of Syracuse, or that of the Carthaginians, stands next the Exedra, and was built by the architects Pothæus, Antiphilus, and Megacles of Syracuse, about 480, to receive the booty taken from the Carthaginians at the battle of Himera. It is a temple in antis, built of Poros stone of fine grain, consisting of a portico at the south, with two pillars and two antæ, and a cella surrounded by two flights of steps. All the outside parts were covered with fine plaster—length 12½ metres, breadth 7½. A feature unique in Olympia is that an astragal ran round at the top of the triglyphs. All the smaller stones had been already carried off by the Byzantines when a landslide from the hill of Cronus buried the remains of the edifice, and thus preserved them. Almost all the parts of the treasury of Megara, which is identified beyond dispute through the inscription on the architrave, Megara (pæus), and the reliefs of the pediment representing the Gigantomachy, were built into the Byzantine western wall, at a distance of 250 metres from their original position. The Megareans erected it in the sixth century out of Corinthian booty. It too is a temple in antis, consisting of a pronaos and a cella; on the longer sides, under the roof, ran a frieze with figures in relief. The architectural forms of this interesting building, such as the capitals and the echinus, are very beautiful; the simæ is of terra-cotta, and was adorned with a beautiful parti-coloured ornament of Mæander and gutter-tiles with palm-leaves. The roof of the frontispiece was adorned with terra-cottas of a coloured pattern of palm-leaves and calycanthus.

This summary account of the buildings and topography brought to light in the fourth year may suffice. Additions were made to the statues of the pediment of the temple of Zeus in the same year, on the east side, through the finding of additional fragments of Zeus and the sitting seer, but, above all, through the discovery of the three heads of the River God Cladeus, of the helmeted King (Enomaus, and of the kneeling maiden. In consequence these figures are nearly perfect. On the west side there is the group of the kneeling Lapith woman, which has received its right head, and which has been completed by the discovery of the Centaur clasping her from behind with his hoofs. Five notable heads have been added to the metopæ, the heads of Athens and Hercules from the Cerberus metopæ, of Hercules from the Diomedes metopæ, head and breast of Hercules carrying the boar of Erymanthus on his left shoulder, the head of the Amazon Hippolyte. The older Greek plastic art is represented by the exceedingly valuable colossal head of Hera, the image worshipped at the Heraeum, of soft chalk, with coloured headdress and archaic curls, through pieces of the Gigantomachy from the Megarean treasury of the same stone, and by the upper half of one of the Eumenides of blue Laconian marble. The Megarean works, such as the metopæ, the terra-cottas, &c., have furnished the richest material for the study of ancient polychromy. To Roman times belong two fine draped statues of ladies of Elis, priestesses, or managers of the race for maidens, works of the sculptors Eratosthenes and Eros, which stood, shoulder to shoulder, in a wall of later date near the Heraeum. Similar to them is the figure of the elder Faustina, the wife of Antoninus Pius.

The bronzes have grown yearly more important. They are thin plates, on which figures have been chased, punched, moulded, or incised, and served to cover and adorn holy vessels, panels, chests, or walls. They contain representations of mythological subjects, for instance, a kneeling man armed with a bow, Theseus and the Minotaur, and Hercules fighting with a sea demon, and they are surrounded with wreaths and similar ornaments, or they are finely worked handles of kettles, pans, &c., griffin-heads, youths, lions, men with arms, wings, and plumage. A number of moulded figures of men and beasts have little artistic value, and were the offerings of the poor—warriors, riders, charioteers standing on their chariots, sphinxes, centaurs, lions, &c. Besides there are statuette of freer and finer technique: several Apollos, Zeus with the eagle and thunderbolt, Gorgons with feathers on their backs and feet, female masks. The majority of the bronzes come from the Buleuterium and the Prytaneum.

Of painted terra-cotta the volume contains a large head of Zeus, a dolphin riding on a wave, a lion's head, the upper part of a winged female figure, &c. The eye is delighted with two plates depicting various parti-coloured simæ and other portions of the roof of the Buleuterium and the Corinthian capitals of the Gymnasium.

In conclusion I may be permitted to cast a glance at the inscriptions, which have risen from 350 last year to 400. They afford a more accurate knowledge of the Greek dialects than has been possible heretofore; and they complete the history of Greek written characters. They have supplied the names of a number of artists of the older and younger Argive and of the Romano-Attic schools, such, for instance, as Pythagoras of Samos, now for the first time known, and they have enriched Greek poetry with a number of epigrams. The history of the contests of Olympia can be followed from the days of Bybon, who with his left hand hurled a rock behind him over his head, to the Roman period when music and poetry were introduced. The fasti of the personnel of Olympia extend down to Byzantine days. The old laws, families, and offices continue into the fourth century of the Christian era. Olympia at first figures as a Peloponnesian sanctuary with narrow limits, then in connexion with the Greek sites of Lower Italy, Sicily, and Africa; the kings of the North reverence the Zeus of Olympia. Mummius makes rich offerings to atone for the burning of Corinth, and the Roman emperors constitute it the centre of the Græco-Roman world. Olympia contains the archives of the history of a thousand years; there men, cities, peoples, centuries, and lands the most various deposited a quantity of monuments in stone, bronze, and clay, all dedicated to the international god of antiquity and the Mediterranean, the Olympic Zeus.

JULIUS SCHUBRING.

THE PRIVATE COLLECTIONS OF ENGLAND No. LVI.—DUNCOMBE PARK, HELMSLEY

THE Earl of Feversham has liberally allowed us to see and describe the varied collection of works of art in his beautiful house, which fills the place of a sumptuous seat of that Duke of Buckingham who died, not in

The worst inn's worst room,

but in one of the farmhouses on the Helmsley estate, which had been added to those vast lands he, as it was said at the time, had secured "by hook and by crook, but especially by crook." The house in Helmsley Park is of the stately but comfortable kind which was in vogue during the middle and later part of the last century. The exterior is distinguished by a lordly terrace, on which are placed little classic "temples" of elegant proportions, affording delicious views over the park and hilly country. In a corner of the park are the remains of Helmsley Castle, comprising highly picturesque and interesting rooms, doubtless of Elizabethan origin, and even now not quite ruinous. Another large portion of these remains consists of towers and solid walls, fragments of a structure of historic fame and much more ancient date than those which are less decayed. A short three miles from Helmsley is one of the most beautiful monastic ruins in the world, remnants of the abbey church at Rievaulx, examples of the purest Gothic art, which are at least as worthy of study as Fountains, Furness, Tintern, or Glastonbury, and, for their pure and lovely style, superior to any of them.

Before describing Lord Feversham's pictures, it will be well to remind the reader that the greater number, if not the whole, of them were recently exhibited at York, having been removed from Duncombe Park while the house there was rebuilt after a disastrous fire, which might have proved almost as great a calamity to art as the conflagrations at Holker Hall, at Belvoir Castle, at Clumber Park, and elsewhere, in which many fine works were destroyed. It will be convenient to group Lord Feversham's pictures according to the schools of Italy, France, the Low Countries, and England, which they represent. In doing this it is almost needless to say that space will not allow us to notice many paintings which possess excellent qualities, but, on one account or another, do not call for remark. This house contains an exceptionally interesting collection of sculptures, ancient and modern, which deserve attention. At the time of our visit many of the pictures were better hung than when Dr. Waagen saw them a quarter of a century ago. Under the gracious guidance of Lady Feversham we experienced no difficulty in seeing every work of importance, and found that most of the finer paintings were unexceptionably placed. It is clear that the German critic's account of the treasures in this house was more than usually imperfect, and, owing to the perfunctory manner in which he performed his task, exceptionally incorrect. See 'Galleries and Cabinets of Art in Great Britain,' 1857, pp. 491-4. Mr. Duncombe, who gathered this collection of examples, was a dilettante of the last century, often mentioned in memoirs and letters of that period.

By an artist who worked ably in the manner of Titoret we noticed a half-length figure of an old gentleman in an ancient Italian costume, with a lean and serious countenance, looking to our left, and holding fruit, a melon or pomegranate, in his gloved hand. This is a most masculine and masterly example, full of character, rich in tone, pathetic in its motive, and altogether highly suggestive. Not far from the last is one of the most famous of Guido's academic productions, the 'Abigail supplicating David,' which Sir Robert Strange engraved as a speculation. "The pure line manner" was, in the laborious Scotchman's accomplished hands, really a mode of sculpture rather than a process designed for the translation of elements of pictorial art per se, such as colour, chiaroscuro, and tone, into black and white. In Strange's works we have drawing, composition, expression, admirable proportion, and perfect rendering of the action in his subject-pictures, but of the other elements of painting proper very little indeed. Strange knew so well what he wanted that nearly all his best efforts were given to Guido, whose pictures excel in sculptural qualities, and his best plates are derived from Reni's 'Liberty and Modesty,' 'Fortune,' the painting before us, and Raphael's 'Charity' and 'Vigilance.' 'David and Abigail,' one of the painter's cool pictures, represents life-size figures, and is a thoroughly sound example of its class, painted in the most completely scientific mood of the artist, and with perfect success in all respects, except the power to move us by the energy of his conception or charm us with the beauty of his women. Abigail is not lovely, but, seated on an ass and crowned with flowers, she bows with graceful but passionless humility before the warrior king, who, clad in splendid Italian armour of the seventeenth century, regards the handmaiden with royal approval, which is rising through admiration to a warmer emotion. Such excellent colour as the figure of David displays is rarely to be met with in a Guido, and yet, even there, where a spark of genius gleams, the science of the painter is obvious in the bluish steel of the armour; the yellow sleeves and red cloak confirm our notions that the three "primary" tints troubled Guido chromatically, but did not inspire him artistically. On this picture see Walpole's 'Letters,' 1857, vi. p. 81. Another Guido is 'The Daughter of Herodias,' a graceful and pleasing picture, unusually soft in treatment and expressive in character. It came from the Colonna Gallery. A more important work by the same artist was, like the above, engraved by Sir Robert Strange in a plate which has retained a higher place in the folios of collectors than in the memory of the public, who formerly held it in extremely high esteem. It is the composition, an example well adapted for a bas-relief, which is known as 'Charity,' a benevolent woman accompanied by three babes, all admirably disposed as to the grouping of their limbs, torsos, and draperies. As in the former case, this is a highly scientific painting, drawn with exact care, honourably modelled, gracefully disposed, but frigid. The carnations are a little chilly, a defect which may be due to the glazing.

Still another Guido appears to prove how much Mr. Duncombe must have been attracted by the art of this distinguished eclectic. The work now in question is remarkable because it is painted on silk, and, like most of Reni's paintings, is in capital condition. It is much better than the better known 'Charity,' which owes a good deal to Strange. It represents 'St. Catherine of Alexandria,' crowned, and holding her palm with a graceful air and a dainty expression, which is far from being unacceptable even to a fastidious taste. The virgin looks upwards with the effusive expression characteristic of Guido; the colour is exceptionally warm, but the draughtsmanship of the countenance is defective, and the drawing of the nose and eyes incorrect, such as we find in nearly all similar productions of his. The fact is, the perspective of the face en bloc is absurdly wrong, but not more so than in that picture in the National Gallery which resembles this in many respects. A fifth Guido is a sketch from or study for the companion picture to the painter's 'Liberty and Modesty,' representing small whole-length figures of Christ and St. John embracing. The last but one in the list of Guidos here is called 'The Adoration of the Shepherds.' The last is a most interesting portrait of the painter's well-known pupil or imitator, Elisabetta Sirani, in the character of Ceres. Reni's name is on the girdle of this half-length figure, which is an unusually favourable example of the learned artist's skill in portraiture. Elisabetta Sirani, like her father, was one of the most faithful and able admirers of Guido. She was buried, September, 1665, in his tomb. To her skill not a few pictures are due which nevertheless bear the name of her master; others of her works bear the name of Domenichino, her master's rival, but it is not so difficult for experts to distinguish her pictures from Domenichino's as it is to say without a doubt which is a good Sirani and which an indifferent Guido. No one ought to think of Guido's powers without remembering the 'Recumbent Venus' at Dresden and the 'Aurora' of the Roepingiosi Palace, the latter being an astonishing performance, worthy to be named in the very first rank of decorative pictures, and not unworthy of the burin of Raphael Morghen himself.

Over a door in the Saloon hangs a capital decorative picture by Simone da Pesaro, representing 'Clarinda wounded by Tancred.' This clever painter was one of the ablest of the academical craftsmen of the seventeenth century. The heroic damsel lies nearly naked on the ground; the victorious knight stoops over her; the group expresses with considerable felicity an animated conception of the subject, and the colouring is unusually rich. By Prospero Fontana, the master of Ludovico Carracci, a great man among the academici, is a 'Holy Family' of considerable merit, distinguished by colour which, like that of Pellegrino Tibaldi, a Bolognese of note, is exceptionally vigorous, if not highly refined. Fontana's Virgin bears Christ in her lap, and the child is caressed by St. John, Joseph, and (f) Mark; the design is a capital example of the earliest phase of eclecticism, very graceful and agreeable, but almost without spontaneity of conception. Some of the accessories are triumphs of craftsmanship in their way. This way is, nevertheless, uninteresting and mechanical.

One of the very latest of the old masters, the man whom Hogarth satirized most energetically, is represented here by a picture of 'Christ Bearing the Cross' and cured by the mob, as in innumerable versions of the subject, and crushed by the weight of a prodigious piece of timber; the executioner halts the sufferer from the ground; a graceful Veronica kneels at the Saviour's side with her sudarium, and is rudely repulsed by a second executioner. This is the work of Giuseppe Chiani, who reproduced the very last gleam of art, according to the conventions he had inherited from the school of the Carracci, through whose very success painting had become effete, and its exercises mere traditions. Another 'Holy Family' is ascribed to Titian, but, although it is not well enough lighted to justify a positive opinion, it seemed to us a fairly good Venetian picture, not, as Dr. Waagen surmised, resembling a Paris Bordone. St. John approaches Christ with a lamb, St. Francis is on the other side of the principal group in the character of the patron. The landscape background is the best seen, and therefore the most acceptable, part of this picture. Near this is an excellent but rather dry copy of a 'Madonna' by Titian, now in the Louvre. By Pietro da Cortona is a large landscape, showing mountains on our left in the middle distance, a rocky foreground, a cascade near, a group of men in a boat, a town on a plateau behind, with snow-capped hills above, the sea beyond all; the whole is enriched by means of a good sky, and warm, clear colouring pervades the view.

A more interesting picture than the last is 'The Annunciation to the Shepherds,' by G. Bassano, or "Bassan," as critics and dealers of the last century delighted to call an unequal artist. This is a "sacred pastoral" of unexceptional sweetness and graceful taste, but by no means devoid of spirit or the signs of great ability on the part of the artist, whose homely inspiration is not to be condemned. It is a "landscape, with figures"; a young woman kneels milking a brown cow, a rough Bassanese herdsman lounges in front on our left, and both are apparently as heedless of the angelic phenomenon in the clouds above them as if they did not see it, which is possible, considering the respective positions of the figures. Two companion shepherds are, nevertheless, moved to unutterable astonishment, which their attitude and faces reflect with commendable force; the one shepherd is amazed beyond thought of himself, the other reverently salutes the heavenly messenger; these figures are not without reminiscences of Raphael in a similar design for this subject. Near them is a group of goats and sheep. Morning glows on the distant hills. The background has "come forward" through darkening of its tones, while the formerly splendid tints of the figures and animals have sunk materially, so as to be out of keeping. Some of the local tints having retained their brightness, this defect is very patent. Notwithstanding, the foreground proper has wonderful richness of tint and tone. The surface of the picture has a peculiar velvety texture, which is doubtless due to the extraordinary care the painter, for once, lavished on his work. By Carlo Maratti is a small 'Assumption of the Virgin,' probably made for the use of pupils to reproduce a large picture. By Barocci is a cold, dark picture of the 'Annunciation.' By the same is a 'Nativity,' a work of unusual importance and merit. The Virgin, in a red dress, kneels before the babe, and adores him. Joseph opens the door of the stable to the shepherds, who are approaching from behind. The motive of the design is almost as homely as if it had been the invention of a Dutchman. This is a characteristic of some of the later painters of Italy, especially of the Venetian and Lombard schools. On the whole this is a pleasing and graceful picture of its kind, without the slightest elevation of aim, pathos, or sentiment of any kind whatever. Another Barocci shows the angel supporting the dead Christ; here the design is exaggerated, and the motive not good. Of the same class is a 'Virgin and Child,' by Carlo Cignani, a fairly good example, somewhat too brown in the shadows of all kinds, conventional in motive, distinguished by academic skill of composition and draughtsmanship, and evidently produced without an effort and without difficulty of any kind. By Sebastian Bourdon is a capital picture of the 'Holy Family' in a landscape, Christ on his mother's knee, SS. Elizabeth and John are grouped near the more important figures. The intense "classicality" of Bourdon, a quality which proved his scholarship rather than his genius, is apparent here in the close resemblance this picture bears to a Nicolas Poussin. The "dryness" of its textures and the sharp definitions of its lights, shadows, and colours are noteworthy. The picture is less heavy in handling than the painter's works commonly are. There is much grace in the attitudes, and decided elegance of taste marks the design.

In the next article of this series we hope to conclude the account of Lord Feversham's works of art.

MR. WALTON.

MR. ELIJAH WALTON, so well known for his pictures of Alpine and Eastern scenery, died at his residence, near Bromsgrove, on August 25th. His health for some time past had been in an unsatisfactory condition, but until the beginning of the summer his friends were hopeful that it might be restored by care and rest. Though only in his forty-eighth year at the time of his death, he had accomplished an amount of work which would not have been small for the product of an ordinary life. Mr. Walton's love for certain peculiar effects, especially in Alpine scenery, has aroused criticism as well as evoked admiration, but all must admire the thoroughness with which he devoted himself to his art. Those very mistakes, of which some thought him too fond, demanded from him as much labour as, and more thought than, the most literal transcript of a mountain view. His knowledge of the facts of rock structure was unequalled, and could, perhaps, only be appreciated at its value by those who had studied mountains in the light of geological science. As a painter of Eastern scenery he had also attained a high reputation. As regards this, it may suffice to mention his valuable monograph on the camel, a book which will always be a standard work of reference. Its history illustrates Mr. Walton's thoroughness better, perhaps, than a page of detailed discussion. On first visiting Egypt and sketching its familiar scenes, he was dissatisfied with the camels which he had introduced into his pictures; so he returned to the country, purchased a camel, and made a series of studies of the animal in perhaps every possible position, even making diagrams of the footmarks after the animal had walked, trotted, &c., over a prepared space of sand. When all these were completed he had the animal killed, and drew first its muscular system and then all parts of the skeleton. This done, he transferred the drawings to lithographic stones, and published the book mentioned above. In the same complete way whatever he undertook—mountains, clouds, figures, even flowers—was previously studied. The intensity of his application to his art, coupled with many severe domestic trials, probably did much to shorten his life. He was a man of a reserved and retiring disposition, and so did not make many friends, but within a small circle was greatly beloved for his gentleness of spirit, tenderness of heart, and simplicity of disposition.

T. G. BOWNEY.

NOTES FROM ATHENS.

A LITTLE time ago sundry workmen employed in making the road to Zéa discovered, quite close to the Bay of Zéa, some ancient walls. The Archaeological Society had a clearance made, and the excavations revealed that a theatre dominating the bay once stood at this spot. This theatre, the existence of which was asserted by some travellers and contested by others, is undoubtedly that of which Xenophon speaks ('Hell.' ii. 4), and is quite distinct from the theatre of Munychia, the ruins of which are seen in the extreme distance at the north-east of the Bay of Zéa.

These excavations, at first directed by M. Dragatzis, of the Gymnasium at the Piræus, to whom the greater part of the credit of the discovery is due, have laid bare the orchestra and, after a series of careful operations, the commencement of nine rows of seats, with a radius of about 80 centimetres. These rows are 270 metres long, and between them have been discovered the beginnings of ten openings of staircases, four of which alone yet preserve the first stone, 1.06 metres long, 0.23 metre high, 0.23 metre wide.

Besides, a considerable part of the stage has been found; but unfortunately great difficulties occurred which prevented the continuance of the excavations, although I hope they may soon be resumed. Still, the Archaeological Society wished to demonstrate the existence of the other theatre, that which I have spoken of as situated on the hill of Munychia. After some preparatory digging, which resulted in almost nothing, there were found, on the evening of the 17th of June, ruins which showed clearly the existence of this theatre, and proved that the town of Piræus had two distinct theatres. What is still uncertain is when the theatre unearthed at Zéa was constructed, what was its name, and how it was destroyed.

A discovery that will cause a great sensation has been made at Chéronée. You know that the Minister of Public Instruction is going shortly to re-erect the Lion of Chéronée. For this purpose the Superintendent of Antiquities, M. Stamatakis, was sent to Chéronée. When he began to clear the ground about the lion he found the bones of those who fell in the memorable battle. The dead were buried in three sections, according to the order in which they fought. Each section was composed of six lines. In the first section have been found seventy-seven dead; that is to say, at the first, second, third, and fourth lines fifteen each, at the fifth nine, and at the sixth eight. In the second section were found forty-one, buried in the same fashion. The excavations continue still. We know that beneath the lion were interred three hundred of the Theban Sacred Band, so that, having now found one hundred and eighteen dead, one hundred and eighty-two remain to be discovered. Near the bodies have been found remains of arms, buttons, and some stegades, the well-known bathing scrapers. The dead as soon as found are covered with earth; but it is feared it will be very difficult to preserve them.

M. Thomas Homolle, a well-known ex-pupil of the École d'Athènes, and at present professor at Nancy, has been continuing the excavations begun at Delos three years ago under his superintendence by the French Ministry of Public Instruction. According to a telegram which arrived here the day before yesterday, these excavations have just brought to light three marble statues, of which the largest is a muse. The other two are statues of Venus. One of these wears the himation, which covers the lower part of the body, and places her foot on a tortoise. The other is quite nude, and is on the point of stepping into the sea for a bath, having just thrown off her garment. She closely resembles the Venus of Praxiteles. Some days before a colossal statue of a Roman prætor was found at Delos.

M. P. LAMBERSON.

First-3rd County.

In the forthcoming re-edition of Gilchrist's 'Life of Blake' several considerable improvements in the illustrations will be introduced. An entirely new and very superior set of facsimiles of the Job designs will appear; there will be a new portrait of Mrs. Blake, after a design (hitherto unengraved) by her husband; the two woodcut heads of Blake and his wife which appeared in the first edition will be redrawn and recut; and a new binding, adopting a fairy design by Blake, will be supplied. Mr. Shields has given valuable co-operation in some of these matters. Mr. Herbert Gilchrist, a son of the biographer, will furnish designs of the living and sleeping room which the Blakes occupied in Fountain Court, Strand, and in which the painter-poet died, and of their cottage at Felpham, Sussex. The woodcuts in the text will be printed on India paper.

MESSRS. GRIFFITH & FARRAN will publish next week a series of sixty 'Designs for Church Embroidery and Crewel Work from Old Examples,' collected and arranged by Emily Sophia Hartshorne. The aim is to represent some of the best efforts of the taste and skill of the ladies of the fifteenth century. Messrs. Cassell announce 'Figure Painting in Water Colours,' with sixteen coloured plates from designs by Miss Blanche Macarthur and Miss Jennie Moore.

MR. BOWEN's statue of Lord Lawrence is to be erected vis-à-vis to the effigy of Sir John Burgoyne in Waterloo Place, Pall Mall.

We have to record the death of Mr. J. F. Hervé D'Egville, long popular as a painter of Venetian subjects, and a Member of the Institute of Painters in Water Colours, of which body he was, we believe, one of the founders.

The architectural journals record the death, on the 22nd ult., of Mr. Benjamin Farry, a well-known architect and antiquary. He was in his seventy-first year.

At last the armouries of the Tower of London are to be opened to the public in an intelligent manner, as other museums are. The "beef-eaters" are to serve as "attendants," and not as guides; their archaeological dissertations and histrionic demonstrations are to be replaced by concise handbooks. It is to be hoped that Mr. Childers will put a stop to the devastation which is damaging some of the most important historic portions of the Tower. Prodigious mischief has been done there under the plea of "restoration" and an affectation of military necessity. Sham Gothic features have replaced not a few of the genuine, if incongruous, elements to which the Tower owed so much of its picturesque, its antiquarian value, and its pathetic interest. We have a foolish "castle" in exchange for a fine historic relic of great dignity. It is said that some of the famous dungeons have not escaped the craze for meddling. We trust it is not so, and appeal to the Secretary of State for War to restrain the costly follies of his deputies.

"RESTORATION" of the courageous kind, which has long prevailed in Norwich Cathedral, is still in progress. While Dean Goulburn is about it, it would not be amiss if he tried to mitigate the garishness of the hideous west window of his church. This might be done by putting a lining of properly tinted sheet glass within the lights of the window, so as to reduce those vulgar splendours to something like harmony. The "Five Sisters" of York Minster have been much injured, chromatically speaking, by the insertion of sheets of east glass of a greenish tint against the outside of those lovely panels, which even as the restorer left them are delightful. Placed outside, these sheets nearly fill up the reveals of the mullions and other tracery. The student may guess at the result of such a proceeding. Placed inside, where the reveals are hardly distinguishable, no great harm would be done at Norwich, and such sheets would be of service. It was needful to protect the "Five Sisters" from the weather, on which account clear glass would, apart from filling the reveals, have been of great use. At Norwich, however, no one need trouble himself about the effect of weather on the west window, or, indeed, any other window of the cathedral.

A NOTE appeared in the course of last year in the Chronique des Arts, in which M. Müntz, the librarian of the École des Beaux-Arts, communicated to its readers his discovery of the architect of the Sistine Chapel (attributed by Vasari to Pontelli) in the person of Giovannino dei Dolci. Further facts having been brought to light by M. Müntz in the Vatican archives concerning Dei Dolci, he has published a pamphlet in Italian, in which all the documents, hitherto unpublished, are printed in extenso. From these it appears that the Florentine carpenter-architect Dei Dolci, besides executing much joiner's-work and wood-carving for Sixtus IV., not only built the Sistine Chapel, but also various other parts of the Vatican, and, lastly, the fortress of Civita Vecchia. He died about 1460, and was buried in the church of S. Maria Nuova, now S. Francesca Romana.

A CORRESPONDENT appeals to Mr. Street, under whose direction the restoration of St. Peter's, Mancroft, Norwich, is being effected with characteristic skill and thoroughness. He declares that during a recent visit to the tomb of Sir Thomas Browne in this well-known church, he found this mural tablet and its decorations and inscriptions neither boarded up nor otherwise protected, whereas a parcel of rubbishy oak pews, some twenty years old, were enshrined in deal. The interesting brass of Peter Rede, which is on one of the steps of the communion table—we beg Mr. Street's pardon, the altar—of St. Peter's Church, lies on the floor as if it were worthless. Mr. Street's zeal for antiquity and his well-known love for learning will, we feel sure, secure protection for the monument of the author of "Religio Medici."

The authorities of Canterbury Cathedral have succeeded in getting a fine inflicted on a stupid "excursionist," who had done all the harm in his power by carving his initials on the building. The authorities of Norwich Cathedral have been less vigorous, or less fortunate, in respect to three lions who lately carved their initials and the date of their achievement on the lavatory of the cloisters of the great East Anglian church. Every antiquary knowing how valuable a relic the lavatory will feel indignant at this performance. The Dean and Chapter of Norwich offer a small reward on conviction of the evil-doers.

MUSIC

NEGLIGENCE OF MUSICAL PUBLISHERS.

Sacred Songs for Little Singers. Words by Frances Ridley Havergal, Music composed and arranged by Alberto Randegger. (Novello, Ewer & Co.)—There is no valid reason why music intended for the young should be devoid of all artistic merit, though of course simplicity is an indispensable feature in its construction. Schumann in his 'Album für die Jugend,' and Mendelssohn in his 'Seven Christmas Pieces,' gave us admirable examples as regards piano-forte music. Miss Havergal's words to the twelve songs in the present volume are for the most part unexceptionable, but a tendency towards the "gooey-gooey" element is painfully obvious. Signor Randegger's music is exceedingly well adapted to its purpose, being easy and tuneful, but without flippancy. The book is tastefully got up, and will be found suitable for gift purposes.

The Lord of Berlagh: a Cantata. Words by Alfred Tennyson, Music by Frances Anne Gill. Vocal Score. (Same publishers.)—This cannot, on the whole, be considered a worthy setting of Mr. Tennyson's favourite poem. The composer has a feeling for melody, and several of the numbers are pleasing and fluently written; but grammatical errors are by no means infrequent, and the writer would have done well to submit her manuscript score to a competent musician for revision before publication.

Piano-forte Albums: No. 1, Compositions by J. N. Bach. Edited by Berthold Tours. (Same publishers.)—Piano music of the highest class is now so cheap and editions are so numerous, that if the public does not quickly evince a predilection for something better than mere drawing-room effusions, it will not be for lack of material placed within its reach. This album, the first of a series, contains a choice selection of twenty preludes, bourrées, gigue, &c., from the old master's "Partitas," "Suites Anglaises," and other works. Mr. Berthold Tours appends an explanation of the graces or "agrément" used in Bach's time, without a knowledge of which it would be impossible to execute the music according to the composer's intentions.

Mozart's Communion Service in B Flat, No. 7. Vocal Score. (Same publishers.)—The composer of "Don Juan" and the "Requiem" has suffered more than any other of the great masters from having to bear the responsibility of compositions fathered on him, but which he did not write. The well-known "Twelfth Mass" is an instance in point, and this newly edited work is another. The evidence is tolerably conclusive, according to Jahn and Köchel, that Süßmayr is the author of this mass, and an examination of the music adds weight to the testimony against its genuineness. The phraseology is for the most part in the Mozart manner, but the harmonic progressions frequently savour of another hand. Still, the work may have been written from sketches by Mozart. For example, the "Sanctus" may be genuine, while the "Pleni sunt caeli" is obviously spurious. The mass or "service" is brief, and therefore so far suitable for church purposes. The English adaptation is by the Rev. James Baden Powell.

The Glenside: Cantata for Female Voices. Words by Edward Ozenford, Music by Otto Peiniger. (Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co.)—This work may be heartily recommended to the notice of ladies' classes. It is, as may be expected, chiefly in the pastoral style—six eight and nine-eight measures—and is distinguished by musicianly feeling and refined melody. The voice parts are generally in three parts, occasionally in four.

Three Concert Studies. By M. Moszkowski. Op. 24. (Augener & Co.)—The composer of these pieces was born in 1854 at Berlin. He has published several compositions for the piano, including some Spanish dances, said to be very charming, and has symphonies and other important works in manuscript. These studies are showy and elegant without excessive difficulty. The composer writes like a musician, but there is nothing to prove that he is possessed of any individuality.

Rhapsodic Ecossais. By A. C. Mackenzie. Op. 21, Full Score. (Novello & Co.)—Though called a rhapsody, this work is neither vague in style nor destitute of form. It consists of three brief movements, in C minor, D, and G, founded respectively on the Scotch air 'Muirland Willie,' 'Braw, braw lads,' and 'There was a lad was born in Kyle.' These tunes are not hackneyed, and even if they were Mr. Mackenzie's treatment would remove any suspicion of vulgarity. The middle section, adagio, is not without a wild beauty of its own, and the finale, with its skilful imitative passages, is spirited and effective. The Scotch character is maintained throughout, but without undue prominence, and the scoring is picturesque though not too elaborate. The piece was produced at a concert of the Edinburgh Choral Union in January last. We have also received an arrangement for piano solo, presumably by the composer.

Songs by Heinrich Hofmann: Wanda, Op. 49; Five Songs, Op. 51; Russian Lullaby. (Same publishers.)—There is comparatively little of the typical German Lied character, as perfected by Schubert and Robert Franz, in these songs; but, although the poetic element is not present in any marked degree, they are fresh and pleasing effusions. 'Wanda' is an elaborate and declamatory ballad for soprano, but the others will be found more generally acceptable. They have German and English words, the latter by Rita. By the same composer we have Sumer, three quartets, Op. 47, pretty little pieces in the style of Mendelssohnian part-songs.

Six Songs for Soprano or Tenor. By Hermann Goetz. Op. 12. In Two Books. (Novello, Ewer & Co.)—Musical genius may be as distinctly displayed in the composition of a song as of a symphony or an opera. If the name of Goetz had been strange to us, these six Lieder would at once have attracted attention to his claims as a composer. They are delicate little gems, full of that spontaneity which is the greatest charm of Goetz's music. No. 1, 'The Secret,' is as joyous and free as one of Mendelssohn's Frühlingslieder, and in complete contrast to No. 2, 'The Gentle Touch,' a tender and expressive melody. No. 4, 'Gertrude's Song,' is flowing and beautiful, and, indeed, there is not one of the set that can be termed commonplace or uninteresting. The English version of the words, by the Rev. J. Trestbeck, is, generally speaking, of great merit.

Third Sonata for the Piano-forte. By G. A. Macfarren. (Same publishers.)—The title-page of this sonata states that it was composed for Miss Agnes Zimmermann. Any work from the pen of the distinguished Principal of the Royal Academy of Music must receive respectful consideration, and further, the production of a sonata by an English composer is not an event of everyday occurrence. Prof. Macfarren's new work is in a minor, and is of symphonic proportions, consisting of four movements, each in strictly orthodox form. A noteworthy feature of the first movement, allegro moderato, is that the second, and by far the more melodious, of the two principal subjects is introduced in D flat, and in the recapitulation in E flat. It is a solid yet vigorous and animated movement. The andante in E flat is very expressive, but the most attractive movement is the scherzo in C minor, a sparkling, buoyant piece, written in the true pianoforte style, a large proportion of the other movements being suggestive of the orchestra. The finale, allegro agitato, in six-eight time, is a lengthy and energetic movement, more difficult than the preceding sections, and not free from a suspicion of labour. But, on the whole, the sonata is a work in which English musicians may feel pride, and it may be hoped that the justly popular pianist for whom it was written, and to whom it is dedicated, will take an early opportunity of performing it in public.

The same publishers send us the Organists' Quarterly Journal, Parts 46 and 47; Dr. Stainer's Jubilant March for the Organ, an effective piece, combining brilliancy and dignity; a Fourth Set of Sixty Voluntaries for the Harmonium, by J. W. Elliott; and, lastly, Mendelssohn's Elijah, with the orchestral accompaniments arranged for pianoforte and harmonium by Ebenezer Prout. This transcription is obviously intended for use at public performances when the services of an orchestra are unattainable.

Musical Gossip.

On Tuesday week, the first day of the Eisteddfod at Carnarvon, a prize of 150*l.* with a gold medal was awarded to a choir from Birkenhead. Other choirs from Ruabon, Llangollen, and Holyhead took part in the contest. The test pieces were the chorus from Handel's 'Belshazzar,' 'See from his post Euphrates flies,' and a movement from Rossini's 'Stabat Mater.' Each choir numbered between 100 and 150 members. The remaining musical competitions of the week were of no interest. Dr. Stainer and Mr. John Thomas were the adjudicators.

SERENDALE BENNETT's 'May Queen' was performed at the Covent Garden Promenade Concerts yesterday week. Monday was a Beethoven night, and on Wednesday Mozart's Symphony in D, No. 8, was given. Mr. F. H. Cowen's programmes are nightly distinguished by a large proportion of high-class music. Mdlle. Timonoff has been the pianist during the past week, and on this (Saturday) evening Mr. Charles Halle will make his first appearance this season. The series will conclude on the 25th inst.; but on October 2nd a new season will commence, under the management of Mr. Samuel Hayes.

HERR HANS VON BÜLOW has just composed a new Bavarian national hymn, with words by Herr Oechner.

HERR HANS RICHTER has been invested by the Emperor of Austria with the Cross of the Order of Francis Joseph.

MR. W. GRIST, the author of the libretto of Mr. H. Gadeby's new cantata, 'Columbus,' has translated his poem into the German language.

THE opera season at Vienna opened on the 15th ult. with 'Fidelio.' The first novelty will be Schubert's 'Alphonse and Estrella.' This work has only been performed once in public, namely, under Liszt at Weimar in 1854. Despite the beauty of the music, the clumsy treatment of the libretto and the want of dramatic interest proved fatal to the opera.

DRAMA

THE WEEK.

GAITEY.—'The Mighty Dollar,' a Play, in Four Acts. By R. E. Woolf.

THAT no dramatic work of slightest value is under present conditions to be expected from America is abundantly evident. One after another the pieces which have made most stir in the United States are brought before us, with the result of showing an absolute dearth of dramatic power. So far the only play that has any pretension to dramatic quality is 'The Danites,' the Californian sketch of Mr. Joaquin Miller. Not only unworthy to sustain a comparison with the third or fourth rate productions of our own not too prosperous stage are the rest of those American compositions which the present season has witnessed; they have no claim whatever to rank as drama. Singularly deficient in invention are most English writers for the stage. We have, however, half-a-dozen men who, when furnished with incidents and characters, can supply a shapely whole. American pieces, meanwhile, display on the part of their authors no faculty beyond such amateur gifts as underlie a hundred volumes of plays or poems which are annually published and which escape oblivion by never winning a moment's recognition.

In negative qualities alone is 'The Mighty Dollar' superior to 'Colonel Sellers.' It does not rest upon a story so repellent as that of a woman assassinating her false lover, and in so doing winning the reputation of a heroine. A very questionable sort of superiority must be conceded it, however, since it gives us in place of a weak and ill-shapen backbone no backbone at all. 'The Mighty Dollar' conveys the idea of being a portion of a much longer work which has been cut out, just as the waiter at a restaurant might cut a piece out of a long French roll. Its merit is that it presents a picture we are bound to accept as faithful of society in Washington, and that it introduces some eminently diverting characters. There is nothing for these to do, and they develop their own peculiarities very much at their own will. By this happy-go-lucky fashion successful results are obtained. It is but fair to credit the author with foreseeing these, and with furnishing the actors concerned with the requisite opportunities for bringing them about. Thus much merit, then, we assign Mr. Woolf, and we admit in addition that he has supplied some fairly successful dialogue. His play is, however, a thing of shreds and patches, and of shreds and patches, moreover, which are not even sewn or gummed together, and have no apparent element of cohesion. A number of individuals with no other bond of union than a disposition upon the part of the more important to help one another, "for a consideration," in any scheme whatever, commence to meet, plot, talk, and at a given point cease to meet, talk, plot. In the course of successive gatherings in drawing-rooms or at picnics, a wife who does her best to compromise herself escapes the consequences of her folly, and a young lady, apparently of about thirteen years of age, who comes on the stage in a short frock, brings a timid and recalcitrant lover "to the scratch." A plan to "engineer" through Congress a railway bill comes to a head and bursts. Here is the play.

Mr. Florence's presentation of the Hon. Bardwell Slope is a singularly fine piece of character acting. It develops into a kind of extravagance at points, where, for instance, a pretence is made to sing, and it is marred by the too frequent repetition of a species of conversational trick, which in itself is not unamusing, but which grows tedious when too frequently employed. Making allowance for these defects, it is a very ripe and effective piece of acting, and the character presented, with its ineffable self-content and its cheery exposition of selfishness it is too ingenuous to strive to hide, is quite masterly. Though American as regards its surroundings and certain manifestations, the character is true and recognizable. No difficulty whatever is experienced in estimating its truthfulness or in appreciating its niceties. Mr. Florence is entitled to the honour of supplying the stage with a creation. Mrs. Florence presents a vulgar and good-natured woman of a type easily realizable, who, after a scurry round "the grand tour," returns to America with very confused ideas of European institutions, and with a practice of interlarding her conversation with scraps of French amusingly mispronounced. No other characters had any special claim to notice, either on account of merit of conception or exposition. Miss Myra Holme was agreeable as a lackadaisical and not very conceivable heroine.

A warm reception was awarded Mr. and Mrs. Florence, and the entire representation was a distinct success. The performance may be seen with interest and pleasure, and the impersonation of Mr. Florence is entitled to rank as art.

Dramatic Gossip.

THE Gaiety company, driven from its home by the arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Florence, has taken possession of the Imperial Theatre, at which house it is giving as Matinées M. Offenbach's 'Luschen und Frischen' and Mr. Robert Reece's burlesque of 'Rip van Winkle.' In the piece last named Miss Farrer is Rip and Mr. Royce Derrick.

'Jo,' the well-known version of 'Bleak House,' has been revived at Sadler's Wells, with Miss Lee in her original character of the juvenile outcast.

THE Hanlon-Less company, including M. Agoust, will appear at Christmas at the Imperial.

AMONG the performances at the minor or outlying theatres may be included 'Amy Robsart' at the Park, 'It is Never Too Late to Mend' at the Surrey, 'Nobody's Child' at the Britannia, and 'The Danites' at the Standard.

THE French theatres which are announced to open their doors forthwith are the Odéon, with 'Les Parents d'Alice,' a four-act comedy of M. Charles Harand, in which no less than five débuts will be made; the Gymnase, at which a rewritten play of M. Sardou, entitled 'La Papillone,' will be given, with 'Nina la Turquoise,' a one-act l'oeur de rideau, by MM. Henri Meilhac and Jacques Rodelsparg; the Palais Royal, with 'Les Diables Roses'; the Bouffes Parisiens, with 'Les Mousquetaires au Couvent'; and La Renaissance, with 'Giroflé-Girofla.' The Folies Dramatiques has already reopened its doors, and is playing 'La Fille du Tambour-Major.'

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—R. G.—J. E.—W. W.—G. M. D.—H. L.—J. W. P.—J. H. W.—R. W.—received.

No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

Erratum.—Athen. No. 2751, p. 374, col. 3, line 24 from bottom, for "Mr. Pireby" read Mrs. Pireby.

WARD, LOCK & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

NEW WORK JUST READY.

Just ready, in One Volume, cloth gilt, price 5s.

THE LIFE AND WORK OF JESUS CHRIST.

By the Rev. F. A. MALLESON, Vicar of Broughton-in-Furness.
 Editor of 'Paley's Evidences,' 'How Pauline,' 'Butler's Analogy,' &c., in the 'Christian Knowledge Series,' and of Mr. Ruskin's Letters to the Clergy on the Lord's Prayer and the Church.
 WITH NUMEROUS ENGRAVINGS.

Just ready, in One handsome Volume, cloth gilt, price 10s. 6d.

WARD & LOCK'S ILLUSTRATED AND COMPLETE EDITION OF CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE, AND BIBLE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK.

ILLUSTRATED WITH SIXTY PAGES OF ENGRAVINGS.

WARD & LOCK'S EDITION is a GENUINE UNABRIDGED 'CRUDEN,' and the MOST COMPLETE that has ever been issued from the Press. In addition to the CONCORDANCE, this Edition comprises SIXTY PAGES OF ENGRAVINGS representing Persons, Places, and things mentioned in the Bible, and Illustrations of Eastern Manners and Customs, and an APPENDIX, specially prepared for it, entitled 'THE BIBLE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK,' containing much information calculated to be of service for the right reading and understanding of the Divine Word.

Ready immediately, picture boards, 4s.; cloth gilt, gilt edges, 5s.

THE NEW VOLUME OF

GOLDEN CHILDHOOD.

AND

LITTLE PEOPLE'S PICTURE GALLERY.

12 COLOURED PICTURES, 400 ENGRAVINGS,

And Tales, Poetry, Music, Puzzles, and everything interesting to Children.

Ready immediately, picture boards, 1s.; cloth gilt (picture on cover), 2s.

THE CHILDREN'S PICTURE ANNUAL.

FIFTH YEAR.

The SPARROW'S CHRISTMAS STORY, and other Tales.

By MERRIE SUNSHINE.

Author of 'The Sunny Holidays,' 'Chats About Animals and Birds,' &c.

BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED.

Just ready.

Uniform with WARD, LOCK & CO.'S 5s. 6d. edition of 'The Six Wise Family Robinson' and ' Andersen's Fairy Tales.'

WILD SPORTS OF THE WORLD.

By JAMES GREENWOOD.

Author of 'A Night in a Workhouse,' &c.

With Coloured Plates and numerous other Illustrations by Harrison Weir, M. Melville, W. Harvey, and others.

THE OLD FAVOURITE FAIRY TALES.

With Coloured Plates and 200 other Illustrations by Harrison Weir, M. K. Browne, T. B. Dalziel, W. Harvey and others.

Handsomely bound, cloth, full gilt, gilt edges, price 7s. 6d. each.

MOXON' POPULAR POETS.

NEW VOLUMES.

Large crown 8vo. with red border lines.

Illustrations, and Critical Memoirs by W. M. ROSSSETTI.
Handsomely bound, cloth gilt, price 3s. 6d. each.

22. WHITTIER'S POETICAL WORKS.

23. LOWELL'S POETICAL WORKS.

24. SHAKESPEARE'S COMPLETE WORKS

Already included in the Series:—

BYRON—LONGFELLOW—WORDSWORTH—SCOTT—SHELLEY—
 MOORE—ROOD (First Series)—KEATS—COLERIDGE—BURNS—
 TUPPER—MILTON—CAMPELL—POPE—COWPER—HUMPHREYS POPE—AMERICAN POETS—HERMAN—THOMSON—HOOD (Second Series).

POPULAR HEALTH MANUALS.

Strongly bound in cloth, price 1s. each.

WARD & LOCK'S
LONG LIFE SERIES.Accurately Written and Carefully Edited by DISTINGUISHED MEMBERS OF THE MEDICAL PROFESSION.

The following Volumes are now ready:—

1. LONG LIFE, and HOW TO REACH IT
2. THE THROAT and the VOICE
3. EYE-SIGHT and HOW TO CARE FOR IT
4. THE MOUTH and the TEETH
5. THE SKIN in HEALTH and DISEASE
6. BRAIN-WORK and OVER-WORK
7. RICK-NURSE
8. THE YOUNG WIFE'S ADVICE BOOK
9. SLEEP HOW TO OBTAIN IT

The SATURDAY REVIEW of August 7 1880, in a lengthy review of this Series, says:—"Messrs. Ward & Lock have done good service to the public in procuring at the hands of highly qualified members of the Medical profession, a series of manuals compressing into the smallest possible space the elementary principles and practical rules of healthful living in those tiny handbooks the non-professional reader—the teacher of youth more particularly—will find expressed in plain and untechnical language adapted to every mind of ordinary intelligence and training as amount of information which cannot fail to prove useful to persons of any age or condition of life warning them against many an injudicious and dangerous habit, and, if not in all cases supplying the need of medical advice giving many valuable hints as to the symptoms which betoken that need, and the direction in which professional counsel had best be sought. Prevention rather than cure may be laid down as the design which has been kept in view in the compilation of these little books, and it is not too easy to say of them as a series, that the Shilling intended belongs to each of them may be the means of saving many a Union."

WARD & LOCK'S
COUNTRY LIFE BOOKS.

Crown 8vo. boards, price 1s. each.

These valuable contributions to the literature of Country Life have been written with the utmost care by a Literary Gentleman perfectly acquainted with the subjects of which he treats, and are produced at a very considerable expense. Each work is thoroughly illustrated, and the Publishers anticipate for them all a very extensive circulation.

1. THE COW, a GUIDE TO DAIRY MANAGEMENT and CATTLE REARING. With many illustrations.
2. HOW TO MANAGE POULTRY, FOWLS, TURKEYS, DUCKS, and GEES. With many illustrations.
3. HOW TO CHOOSE and MANAGE a FARM with PROFIT and SUCCESS. With many illustrations.

THE WARWICK-HOUSE TOY BOOKS.

New Volumes, price 1s. each. Indestructible Edition. 2s.

BEAUTIFULLY PRINTED IN GOLD AND COLOURS BY EDMUND EVANS.

54. The PUSSIE-CAT'S A B C BOOK.
55. The PUNCH-and-JUDY ALPHABET.

THE BOY'S STORY BOOKS OF DARING AND ADVENTURE.

By GUSTAVE AIMARD.

Crown 8vo. boards, 2s. each; cloth gilt, 2s. 6d. With ILLUSTRATIONS

1. The FORTIER BROTHERS. Containing 'The Indian Chief' and 'The Red Truck'
2. The KING OF THE DESERT. Containing 'The Insurgent Chief' and 'The Flying Horse'
3. The FOREST CHIEFTAIN. Containing 'The Guide of the Desert' and 'The Ice Hunter'
4. The WHITE BUFFALO. Containing 'Prairie Flower' and 'The Indian Scout'
5. CHIEF OF THE DARK HEARTS. Containing 'The Adventurers' and 'The Pearl of the Andes'
6. The PRINCE OF THE MOON. Containing 'The Last of the Incas' and 'The Rebel Chief'
7. The ROBINSON OF THE FOREST. Containing 'The Border Rifter' and 'The Freebooter'
8. RED CEDAR. Containing 'Pirates of the Prairies' and 'The Trapper's Daughter'
9. The TEXAN RANGERS. Containing 'Buccanner Chief' and 'Trail Hunter'
10. PALE FACE and RED SKIN. Containing 'Stoneheart' and 'The Trapper's Daughter'
11. LOYAL HEART. Containing 'The White Scalp' and 'Trappers of Arkansas'
12. The MEXICAN'S REVENGE. Containing 'Stronghand' and 'Queen'
13. EAGLE HEAD. Containing 'Tiger Slayer' and 'The Gold-Seeker'

Just ready, strongly bound in cloth, price 1s.

HOW TO PASS EXAMINATIONS

For Probationers and Civil Service; or,

THE CANDIDATE'S GUIDE

to the various Professions, the Army, Navy, Civil Service, &c. A Handbook for Students, Parents, and Guardians.

Strongly bound in cloth, price 1s.

A NEW AND CAREFULLY ANNOTATED EDITION OF COBBETT'S ENGLISH GRAMMAR.

Is a Series of Letters; to which are added six Lessons, intended to prevent Students from using false Grammar, and from writing it in an awkward manner.

THE WORLD LIBRARY

OF STANDARD WORKS.—NEW VOLUMES.

Crown 8vo. cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

6. ADAM SMITH'S ESSAYS. Moral Sentiments, Astronomy, Physics, &c. 488 pp.

13. HISTORY OF ENGLAND under HENRY VIII. By EDWARD, LORD HERBERT. 164 pages.

NEW AND REVISED EDITION.

Just ready, strongly bound in cloth, price 1s.

WARD & LOCK'S

GUIDE TO THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

Containing

The Rules for Admission and the Course of Speculation for Members, Jobbers, Brokers, Clerks, Investors, and Speculators. With a Copious Index.

THE FRIENDLY COUNSEL SERIES.

NEW VOLUMES.

In ornamental wrappers, 1s.; cloth gilt, 1s. 6d.

12. ORATORS and ORATORY. By WILLIAM MATTHEWS, LL.D. Edited by Dr. J. W. KISTON, Author of 'Buy Your Own Character,' &c.

13. MONEY: how to Get, How to Keep, and How to Use It. New Edition, Corrected and Revised.

A NEW SERIES OF CHEAP NOVELS.

In army 8vo. picture wrappers.

WARD & LOCK'S

FAVOURITE NOVELS.

Messrs. WARD, LOCK & CO. beg to call the attention of the Public to their NEW SERIES OF CHEAP NOVELS, composed in clear, readable type, well printed on good paper and attractively bound in picture wrappers.

By SIR WALTER SCOTT.

WAYBURY
KENILWORTH.IVANHOE
THE ANTIQUARY.

By LYTTON BULWER.

PAUL CLIFFORD
LAST DAYS OF POMPEII.PELHAM
EUGENE ARAM.

By CAPTAIN MARRYAT.

MIDSHIPMAN BARRY.
JAPHET IN SEARCH OF A
FATHER.JACOB FAITHFUL
PETER SIMPLE.WARD & LOCK'S NEW SHILLING
GUIDE BOOKS.

WARD & LOCK'S NEW GUIDE to LONDON.

WARD & LOCK'S GUIDE to ENVIRONS of LONDON.

WARD & LOCK'S NEW GUIDE to EDINBURGH.

WARD & LOCK'S NEW GUIDE to DUBLIN.

WARD & LOCK'S NEW GUIDE to GLASGOW.

WARD & LOCK'S NEW GUIDE to CHANNEL ISLANDS.

WARD & LOCK'S NEW HOLIDAY COMPANION.

Also, WARD & LOCK'S CHEAP SHILLING GUIDES to Scarborough, Isle of Wight, Buxton, Whitby, Matlock, Liverpool, Leeds, Brighton, Lich Lomond, Killarney, Abbotford, and other places of interest.

SYLVIA'S HOME HELP SERIES.

NEW VOLUMES, JUST READY

In Ornamental Wrappers, 1s. each; cloth gilt, 1s. 6d.

13. The ECONOMICAL HOUSEWIFE; or, How to Make the Most of Everything. With many Illustrations.

14. SYLVIA'S BOOK OF THE TOILET. A Lady's Guide to Dress and Beauty. Illustrated.

15. HOME NEEDLEWORK. Containing Complete Instructions for Cutting-Out and Making-Up Ladies and Children's Clothing. With numerous Diagrams.

16. CHILDREN, and WHAT TO DO with THEM.

London: WARD, LOCK & CO. Salisbury-square, E.C.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW LIST.

NEW NOVEL, NOW READY,

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'GISE'S BABY,'

LISA LENA.

By EDWARD JENKINS.

In 2 vols. crown 8vo. 21s.

WILL BE READY NEXT WEEK.

A NEW 3 VOL. NOVEL, BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE WRECK OF THE GROSVENOR,' 'JOHN HOLDSWORTH, CHIEF MATE,' &c.

A SAILOR'S SWEETHEART.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL.

Now ready, in wrapper, Part VI. price 1s. 6d.

MR. WILLIAM BLACK'S SUNRISE: a Story of These Times.

FORTY YEARS' RECOLLECTIONS:
Literary and Political. By THOMAS FRUW. Author of 'The Secret Societies of the European Revolution,' &c. Crown 8vo. cloth extra, price 10s. 6d.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT!

Messrs. SAMPSON LOW & CO. beg to inform admirers of the Writings of

WASHINGTON IRVING,

That they will publish, at short intervals, a

COMPLETE LIBRARY EDITION OF HIS WORKS (21 VOLUMES), Copyright, Unabridged, and with the Author's Latest Revisions.

This will be called the "GEOFFREY CRAYON" Edition, and will be handsomely printed in large square 8vo. on superfine laid paper, and each Volume, of about 300 pp., will be fully illustrated, price 12s. 6d. per Volume.

The following Volumes are ready:—

- I. A HISTORY OF NEW YORK. With Introduction by Charles Dudley Warner.
- II. THE SKETCH-BOOK.
- III. BRACEBRIDGE HALL.
- IV. TALES OF A TRAVELLER.

By THE LITERARY EDITOR.

Now ready, crown 8vo. cloth extra, price 10s. 6d.

EVERY-DAY ENGLISH. By Richard ORANT WHITE. It treats of Speech Writing, Grammar, Words, and Phrases, pointing out the errors which abound in our common use of English, and by its happy combination of learning and humour makes a book which all intelligent persons can read with equal profit and enjoyment.

Now ready, small post 8vo. cloth extra, price 1s. 6d.

MOUNTAIN AND PRAIRIE: a Journey from Victoria to Winnipeg, and Peace River Pass. By the Rev DANIEL M. GORDON, B.D., Ottawa. With Maps and Illustrations.

Now ready, demy 8vo. cloth extra, price 12s.

The AUSTRALIAN ABROAD. Routes from the Main Routes round the World. Second Series—Ceylon, India, and Egypt. By JAMES HINGSTON. With many fine Illustrations. Uniform with the First Series.

Now ready, No. 9, Vol. I., of

The AMERICAN ART REVIEW. Containing Fine Engravings (one of Duxbury by S. Oshman) and Illustrations, price 6s.

Now ready, etc. in Wrapper, price 1s. 6d., No. LVII. of MEN OF MARK: a Gallery of Contemporary Portraits. This Part contains Portraits, taken by Lock & Whistled (exclusively for 'Men of Mark'), of RIGHT HON. VISCOUNT GRANBROOK.

HON. SIR EDWARD FREY.
NORMUND RABAN.
With Brief Biographical Notices by THOMPSON COOPER, F.R.S.

Now ready, folio, in Wrapper, price 5s. 6d. Part IV., for SEPTEMBER, of

The ETCHER: a Magazine of the Etched Work of Artists.

Contents.

- ETCHING OF FORT DE DAMME, BRUGES. W. R. Crooke.
ETCHING OF SALISBURY. The late Edwin Edwards.
ETCHING OF KENSINGTON GARDENS. J. M. Youngman.

Now ready, Part V., folio, in Wrapper, price 3s. 6d., of

The GREAT HISTORIC GALLERY. Edited by Lord RONALD GOWER, F.R.S. This Part contains very fine Permanent Photographs of
1. THE MADONNA, of the Bridgewater Gallery. Raphael.
2. THE MURDERERS, of the Bridgewater Gallery. William van Meier.
3. PORTRAIT OF A CAVALIER (1624), Hertford House Gallery. Frans Hals.

Now ready, etc. in Wrapper, in No. 35, Vol. VII. of ST. NICHOLAS: an Illustrated Magazine for Girls and Boys. Full of Stories and with over 50 very fine illustrations.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE & RIVINGTON, Crown Buildings, 188, Fleet-street, E.C.

"That useful resuscitant of dead knowledge, ye old NOTES AND QUERIES, the antiquaries' newspaper."
Quarterly Review.

Every SATURDAY, 24 Pages, Price 4d. of all Booksellers.

NOTES AND QUERIES:

A Medium of Intercommunication for Literary
Men, Artists, Antiquaries, Genealogists, &c.

"When found, make a note of."—CAPTAIN CUTLER.

CONTAINING EVERY WEEK AMUSING ARTICLES
ON SOME OF THE FOLLOWING SUBJECTS:

ENGLISH, IRISH, and SCOTTISH
HISTORY,

Illustrated by Original Communications and Inedited Documents.

BIOGRAPHY,

Including unpublished Correspondence of eminent Men, and unrecorded Facts connected with them.

BIBLIOGRAPHY,

More especially of English Authors, with
Notices of rare and unknown Editions of their Works, and Notes on Authorship of Anonymous
Books.

POPULAR ANTIQUITIES and FOLK- LORE,

Preserving the fast-fading Relics of the old
Mythologies.

BALLADS and OLD POETRY,

With Historical and Philological Illustrations.

POPULAR and PROVERBIAL SAYINGS,

Their Origin, Meaning, and Application.

PHILOLOGY,

Including Local Dialects, Archaisms, and Notes
on our old Poets.

GENEALOGY and HERALDRY,

Including Histories of Old Families, completion
of Pedigrees, &c.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES, QUERIES, and REPLIES,

On points of ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY, TOPO-
GRAPHY, FINE ARTS, NATURAL HISTORY, MIS-
CELLANEOUS ANTIQUITIES, NUMISMATICS,
PHOTOGRAPHY, &c.

Published by JOHN FRANCIS, 20, Wellington-street,
Strand, W.C.

And may be had, by order of all Booksellers and News-vendors.

10th Edition, with Formulas, 1s. 6d.
BUTTER'S SPELLING.
BUTTER'S READING and SPELLING, in Easy
Gradations, 7th Edition, 1s. 6d.
Blakely & Co., and all Booksellers.

Just published, Second Edition, price One Shilling.
PARLIAMENTARY DEBATE (the LAW and PRACTICE of, for the Use of Societies established for Discussing Political and Social Topics, according to the Rules and Forms of the House of Commons. By CHARLES WILKINS, Speaker of the Liverpool
Parliamentary Debating Society.
London: George Philip & Son, 27, Fleet-street; and Carlton Buildings, Liverpool.

Just published.
ETERNITY: What Does the Bible Say of It? A Concordance of Texts on the Subject. The object of the Book is simply to bring into a small compass all the information needed for a careful personal study of this great question. Crown 8vo. cloth, 2s. 6d.
"No Bible student's library should lack this valuable manual."
"A new and valuable contribution to Biblical Literature."—St. Andrew's.
8, Naggar & Sons, 15, Paternoster-row, London.

KIRKES' PHYSIOLOGY.
Tenth Edition, Revised, with 450 Illustrations, post 8vo. 16s.
KIRKES' HANDBOOK OF PHYSIOLOGY. By
W. MORRANT BAKER, F.R.C.S., Lecturer on Physiology and Assistant-Surgeon to St. Bartholomew's Hospital, and Surgeon to the Royal Hospital for Sick Children.
The Chapter on the Chemical Composition of the Human Body has been in great part rewritten, and the text has been much altered in many others especially the Chapters on the Blood, Circulation, Respiration, Digestion, and the Nervous System.
About 50 new Illustrations have been added.
John Murray, Albemarle-street.

HAVET'S FRENCH and GERMAN BOOKS.
Used in Schools throughout the British Empire, United States of America, and Colleges in France and Germany.
"FRENCH CLASS BOOK. Part I. 1s. 6d."
"FRENCH CLASS BOOK. Part II. 1s. 6d."—KEY to both Parts, 6s. 6d.
"FRENCH STUDIES: Conversation, Extracts, &c. 6s. 6d."
"FRENCH COMPOSITION. 2s. 6d."—KEY to Do., 4s.
"Any one of the Four Books marked 'Forwarded' has to Teachers applying to M. Havet, Institut Anglo-Français, Rue de Longchamp, Paris.
London: Simpkin, Marshall & Co. 4, Stationers' Hall-court.

This day is published, SECOND EDITION,
REATA: WHAT'S IN A NAME?
By R. D. ORRARD. 3 vols. post 8vo. 12s. 6d.
"Reata" is one of those rare novels in which we find both freshness and originality. The greatest charm of this clever book is in its delicacy of its character and scenery, but the conception of the plot is a good one, and our interest is sustained to the end. The charming central figure of the story is an imagination conceived as she is fascinating. —Times.
"The plot is original and excellent. . . . Three bright, gay, and sparkling volumes." —Standard.
"It is pleasant to read a book that has evidently been designed to the author, full of play as it were, showing exuberance of enjoyment of the scenes and characters." —Guardian.
"The story is strikingly fresh and original." —Daily News.
"It is long since we have read a story in which excellence of plot and excellence of character-painting are so well combined. From the first page to the last the reader is thoroughly interested in the story."
—Spectator.
William Mackwood & Sons, Edinburgh and London.

THE ANGLO-EGYPTIAN BANKING COM-PANY (Limited), having Branches at Alexandria, Cairo, and Luzerne (Cyprus), is prepared to transact every description of General Banking Business with these Places. O. FUA, Secretary.
London, 27, Clement's-lane E.C.

SUN FIRE OFFICE.
Thameside-street, E.C. Charing Cross & W.
Oxford-street (corner of Vere-street), W.
Established 1760.
Home and Foreign Investments effected.
Sum Insured in 1879, £22,622,461.
FRANCIS R. BALTON, Secretary.

SUN LIFE OFFICE, LONDON.
Established 1810.
CHIEF OFFICE—32, Threadneedle-street.
BRANCH OFFICE—20, Charing Cross.
And at Oxford-street, corner of Vere-street.

Life Assured of all descriptions.
Specially Low Rates for Young Lives, and for Non-Participating Policies.
Prompt Settlement of Claims.
A new and greatly simplified form of Proposal, also the Society's newly-revised Prospectus, will be forwarded on application.
J. G. FALSTICK, Secretary.

EAGLE INSURANCE COMPANY,
75, FLEET STREET.
For LIVES ONLY. ESTABLISHED 1807.
Accumulated Funds .. £2,043,640
Also a Subscribed Capital of more than .. £1,000,000
Reports, Prospectuses, and Forms may be had at the Office, or from any of the Company's Agents, post free.
GEORGE HUMPHREYS, Actuary and Secretary.

LOSS OF TIME IS LOSS OF MONEY.

ACCIDENTS CAUSE LOSS OF TIME.
And may be provided against by a Policy of the
RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY.
The Oldest and Largest Accidental Assurance Company.
Right Hon. Lord KENNAIRD, Chairman.
Subscribed Capital, £500,000. Moderate Premiums.
Bonus allowed to Insurers of Five Years standing.
A fixed sum in case of Death by Accident, and a Weekly Allowance
in the event of injury.
ONE MILLION and a HALF has been paid as COMPENSATION.
Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or St.
Cecilia, London. WILLIAM J. FLAN, Secretary.

Scale, 24 miles to an inch; size, 30 inches by 20. Price, in sheet, 6s.; Mounted in Case, 12s.

STANFORD'S LARGE SCALE MAP OF AFGHANISTAN,

Coloured to Show the Present British Frontiers.

"As a map it is a really fine piece of work. The greatest pains have evidently been taken to obtain the fullest attainable information as to the configuration of the various mountain systems and the innumerable valleys, which form so perplexing and dangerous a feature for an invading army; and the filling in has been done with great taste and considerable artistic skill. Apart from its present utility as a map of Afghanistan, showing all the features in minute detail, and brought up to the latest date (it shows the new railway to S.W.), nothing better could be desired, nor probably obtained."

Times.

London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Scale, 24 miles to an inch; size, 25 inches by 30. Price, in sheet, 1s. 6d.; or, Coloured and Mounted in Case, 4s.

STANFORD'S MAP OF THE SEAT OF WAR IN AFGHANISTAN.

With an Inset Map of the Country around Kandahar, on a Scale of One Inch to the Mile.

London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

NEW NOVEL BY SARAH TYTLER.

OLIVER CONSTABLE: Miller and Baker.

By SARAH TYTLER,

Author of 'Cecilye Jacqueline,' 'Scotch Fire,' &c.

3 vols. post 8vo.

"An exceedingly interesting tale. We regard it as one of the best books of the gifted authoress."—Court Journal.

"A book that can scarcely fail to exert a healthy influence on all who read it."—Court Circular.

London: SMITH, ELDER & Co. 15, Waterloo-place.

NEW WORK BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE GAMEKEEPER AT HOME.'

ROUND ABOUT A GREAT ESTATE.

By RICHARD JEFFERIES,

Author of 'The Gamekeeper at Home,' 'Wild Life in a Southern County,' 'The Amateur Poacher,' &c.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The work of one who is an intelligent and observant lover of nature and of country life. We have read his book with pleasure and recommend it to others."—Times.

"As fresh, as picturesque, and as daintily written as 'The Gamekeeper at Home.'"—Globe.

London: SMITH, ELDER & Co. 15, Waterloo-place.

In 3 vols. price 10s. 6d. cloth gilt.

ABBEYS, CASTLES, and ANCIENT HALLS of ENGLAND and WALES. Their Legendary Lore and Popular History—South, Midland, North. By JOHN TIMBS, Author of 'Curiosities of London,' and ALEXANDER GUNN. With Steel Frontispieces. Each volume complete in itself; or sold separately, price 3s. 6d. each.

Contents of Vol. I. London and its Environs, Essex, Surrey, Kent, Sussex, Hampshire, Dorset, Devonshire, Cornwall, Channel Islands, Guernsey, Jersey.

Contents of Vol. II. Wiltshire, Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, Hertfordshire, Suffolk, Norfolk, Northamptonshire, Cambridgeshire, Bedfordshire, Northamptonshire, Rutlandshire, Leicestershire, Warwickshire, Oxfordshire, Gloucestershire, Monmouthshire, Herefordshire, Worcestershire, Staffordshire, Shropshire.

Contents of Vol. III. Lincolnshire, Nottinghamshire, Derbyshire, Lancashire, Cheshire, Yorkshire (Durham, Cumberland, Westmorland, Warwick, Northumberland, &c.

FREDERICK WARNE & Co. Bedford-street, Strand.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VIA LATINA:

A FIRST LATIN BOOK.

INCLUDING ACCIDENCE, RULES OF SYNTAX, EXERCISES, AND RULES FOR CONSTRUCTING

By the Rev. E. A. ABBOTT, D.D., Head Master of the City of London School.

Crown 8vo. price 3s. 6d. cloth.

Extracts from the Preface.

"A considerable experience of teaching has led the author to the conclusion that a First Latin Book requires a great diversity of Exercises, some to illustrate special rules, others of a more general nature, and again some difficult and accompanied with help, others easy to be done without; some to be written with preparation, others to be answered viva voce. This want he has attempted to supply: the present volume, and at the same time to combine the Exercises with an outline of the Accidence, and the principal Rules of Syntax. Even good teachers may occasionally be helped by a book, and to them this book is offered, not as a substitute, but as a help for good teaching."

SHELLEY, JACKSON & HALLIDAY, 54, Fleet-street, London.

EPPS'S CHOCOLATE ESSENCE.

Product of a special refining process. It is Chocolate devalued of its over-richness and substantiality. Sugarless, and, when made, of the consistence of Coffee. An Afternoon Chocolate. Each packet is labelled

JAMES EPPS & CO.

Homeopathic Chemists, London.

PHOENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD-STREET and CHANCERY CROSS, LONDON. Established 1781. Fire and Marine Insurance. Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements. Insurance effected on all parts of the World. JOHN F. KIRKPATRICK Secretary.

NOTICE.—MARKS, DURLACHER BROS.

25, OXFORD-STREET, W. ANTIQUE WORKS of ART and general Objects of Decoration. The authenticity of every Object guaranteed.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S

STEEL PENS.

Sold by all Stationers throughout the Kingdom.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THIRD GROUND ON

MODERN FIRE SYSTEM

The Original Best and most Liberal.

Cash Prices

No extra charge for time given.

Illustrated Price Catalogues with full particulars of terms, post free. F. MOEDER, 55, 56, 57, Tottenham Court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Moorwell-street, W.C. Established 1867.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above Premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the furniture trade, and now form one of the most commodious Warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed room suites from 10 to 20 Guineas. Drawing room suites from 10 to 15 do. Dining room suites from 10 to 15 do. And a great variety in great variety.

F. MOEDER, 55, 56, 57, Tottenham Court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Moorwell-street, W.C. Established 1867.

WILLIAM S. BURTON, General Furnishing

Ironmonger, by appointment to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales,

SPRING CATALOGUE GRATIS and POST PAID.

It contains upwards of 400 illustrations of his unrivalled stock, with Lists of Prices, and plans of the 30 large show-rooms. At 25, Oxford-street; 1, 2, 3, and 4, Newman-street, 4, 5, and 6, Fanny-street; and 1, Newman-yard, London, W.

FENDERS, FIRE-IRONS, STOVES, RANGES, &c.

	6s. 6d.	6s. 6d.	6s. 6d.
REGISTER STOVES	from 0 0 0 to 25 0 0
CHINA FIRE-IRONS	3 0 0 to 20 0 0
AND TOVENS	0 12 0 to 25 0 0
FENDERS, IRONS, and FIRE-IRONS	0 0 0 to 10 0 0
THE "FIRE" and "FIRE-IRON"	2 0 0 to 25 0 0
FIRE-IRON, IRON, and FIRE-IRON	1 0 0 to 10 0 0
MA. 1	1 0 0 to 10 0 0
FIRE-IRON, IRON, and FIRE-IRON	2 0 0 to 10 0 0
FIRE-IRON, IRON, and FIRE-IRON	0 0 0 to 10 0 0
DRINKER'S, &c. FIRE-IRON, IRON, and FIRE-IRON	0 17 0 to 15 0 0

GAS and HOT-WATER WORK. ESTIMATES FREE.

BEDSTEADS, BEDDING, and FURNITURE.

BEDSTEADS of Best Make only from 10s. 6d.

REPAIRING of every description made on the Premises, and guaranteed of pure materials and good workmanship.

AMERICAN WALNUT machine-made CABINET FURNITURE. A large stock of CHEAP, USEFUL, and SOUND FURNITURE of the above make on view at prices usually charged for ordinary furniture.

FURNITURE for BED, DINING, and DRAWING ROOMS, and every article necessary for HOUSE FURNISHING.

EASY TERMS of PURCHASE. Special Arrangements made by WILLIAM S. BURTON with reference to CREDIT without in any way altering the system of PLAIN FIGURES and FIXED PRICES thus rendering to the PURCHASERS all the advantages of prices arranged for NETT CASH.

CULLEN OIL, highest quality 2s. 10d. per gallon. date 1s. 1d. Five gallons and upwards 1s. 0d.

WILLIAM S. BURTON.

ALLEN'S SOLID LEATHER

PORTMANTEAUS.

ALLEN'S VICTORIA DRESSING HAO.

ALLEN'S STRONG DRESS HAO.

ALLEN'S REINFORCED ALBERT DESPATCH BOX.

ALLEN'S NEW CATALOGUE of 200 articles for Continental Travelling, post free.

27, West Strand, London.

APOLLINARIS WATER.

"Laurel" brand of Apollinaris. — Maraca, Hook 17 Oct 2.

GOLD MEDAL PARIS 1875.

ANNUAL SALE 1880-81.

APOLLINARIS COMPANY Limited 19, Regent-street, London, E.W.

LOTS 110 and 111. — LOT 110, very soft OLD

PALE SHERIDY alone, and LOT 111, very soft OLD OLIVERO SOLERA, pale gold at 35s. per dozen. SHERIDY of the old style, well known by age, very soft, and entirely free from any heurys which has been so detrimental to the consumption of sherry. These exceptionally large Lots are placed in the hands of the Association for forced re-auction and are offered to the public under the special Lot List at greatly reduced prices, instead of being sold by Auction. — THE LONDON CO-OPERATIVE WINE ASSOCIATION Limited, 10 and 11, John-street, Adelphi, W. (removed from 44, Strand).

M. R. G. H. JONES,

SURGEON DENTIST

25, GREAT RUMER LANE, LONDON

(Opposite the British Museum).

Will be glad to forward his Pamphlet on Painless Dentistry, free, solicited by post, which explains the most unique system of the adjustment of Artificial Teeth without pain.

Consultation free from 10 to 4.

DINNERFORDS MAGNERIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this Pure Solution as the best remedy for ACIDITY of the STOMACH, BRUISING HEADACHE, GOUT, and INDIGESTION, and as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Invalids.

DINNERFORDS MAGNERIA

OLD Dr. JACOB TOWNSEND'S SARSAPA-

RILLA.—The best Autumnal Medicine for the Blood, Boreth the Disorders, Gout, and all Skin Diseases. In bottles 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 12s., of all Chemists. Chief Depot, 131, Fleet-street, E.C.

DEAN, STEEL & CO.

GRIFFITH & FARRAN'S EDUCATIONAL BOOKS.

GEORGE DARNELL'S COPY BOOKS

ARE THE BEST FOR HOME TEACHING.
ARE THE BEST FOR USE IN PRIVATE SCHOOLS.
ARE THE BEST FOR USE IN NATIONAL SCHOOLS.
ARE THE BEST FOR SECURING THE RESULTS REQUIRED BY THE SCHOOL BOARD INSPECTORS.

They are published as follows, at 2d., 3d., 4d., and 6d. each, viz.:-

DARNELL'S UNIVERSAL COPY BOOKS. 16 Numbers, each 2d. | DARNELL'S LARGE POST COPY BOOKS. 16 Numbers, each 6d.

DARNELL'S FOOLSCAP COPY BOOKS, 24 Numbers, oblong, each 3d.; or superior paper, marble covers, each 4d. The attention of Clergymen and Schoolmasters is especially called to these well-known and popular Copy Books.

DARNELL'S EDUCATIONAL BOOKS.

DARNELL'S ARITHMETIC made INTELLIGIBLE to CHILDREN. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

This Work may be had in Three Parts. Part I. 6d.; Part II. 6d.; Part III. 6d.—A KEY to Parts II. and III. 1s. (Part I. does not require a Key.)

DARNELL'S GRAMMAR made INTELLIGIBLE to CHILDREN. Cloth, 1s.

DARNELL'S INTRODUCTION to ENGLISH GRAMMAR; being the first 33 pages of 'Grammar made intelligible.' 3d.

DARNELL'S SHORT and CERTAIN ROAD to READING. Cloth, 6d.; in Four Parts, paper covers, each 1½d.

DARNELL'S SHEET LESSONS; being Extracts from the above, printed in very large bold type. For the Set of Six Sheets, 6d.; neatly mounted on boards, 3s.

DARNELL'S (T.) PARSING SIMPLIFIED. Cloth, 1s.

NEEDLEWORK AS REQUIRED BY THE EDUCATIONAL CODE.

BY THE SENIOR EXAMINER OF NEEDLEWORK TO THE SCHOOL BOARD FOR LONDON.

PLAIN HINTS for THOSE who HAVE to EXAMINE NEEDLEWORK—whether for Government Grants, Prize Associations, or Local Managers. To which is added, Skeleton Demonstration Lessons, to be used with the Demonstration Frames, and a Glossary of Terms used in the Needlework required from the Scholars in Public Elementary Schools. 2s.

NEEDLEWORK DEMONSTRATION SHEETS, exhibiting by Diagrams and Descriptions the formation of Stitches in Elementary Needlework. The size of the Sheets (15 in number) is 30x22 inches. Each 9d.; Mounted on Rollers and Varigated, 2s. 6d.

THE DEMONSTRATION FRAME for CLASS TEACHING; with Special Needle and Cord. Complete, 7s. 6d.

PLAIN NEEDLEWORK, arranged in SIX STANDARDS, with Hints for the Management of Classes, and Appendix on Simultaneous Teaching. Nineteenth Thousand, 6d.

PLAIN CUTTING OUT for STANDARDS IV., V., and VI., as now required by the Government Educational Department. Adapted to the Principles of Elementary Geometry. Sixth Thousand. Price 1s.

A SET of the DIAGRAMS referred to in the Book may be had separately, printed on stout paper, and enclosed in an Envelope, 1s.

PLAIN KNITTING and MENDING, arranged in SIX STANDARDS; with Twenty Diagrams. Thirteenth Thousand, 6d.

SPECIAL SUBJECT READING BOOKS, BY J. R. BLAKISTON, M.A.

GLIMPSES of the GLOBE: a First Geographical Reading Book. By J. R. BLAKISTON, M.A., Author of 'The Teacher,' &c. Cloth, 1s.; paper boards, 9d.

GLIMPSES of ENGLAND: a Geographical Reading Book. By J. R. BLAKISTON, M.A. Fcap. 8vo. paper boards, 9d.

IMPORTANT TO TEACHERS.—These two Books cover the whole of the knowledge required to secure a Class Grant for Geography in Standards II. and III. To follow immediately.

GLIMPSES of the BRITISH EMPIRE. By the SAME AUTHOR. Being a Supplementary Reader for Use in the Upper Standards.

TROPICAL READING BOOKS. Intended for Use in the West Indies and elsewhere. Written at the request of the Right Rev. Bishop Courtenay, Bishop of Kingston, Jamaica. By E. C. PHILLIPS. Profusely illustrated. Paper boards, with attractive Wrapper. Book I. 9d.; Book II. 1s.; Book III. 1s.

CAYZER'S ARITHMETIC AND ALGEBRA.

ONE THOUSAND ARITHMETICAL TESTS; or, the Examiner's Assistant. By T. S. CAYZER, Head Master in Queen Elizabeth's Hospital, Bristol. Eleventh Thousand. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

All the operations of Arithmetic are presented under forty heads, and on opening at any one of the Examination Papers a complete set of Examples appears, carefully graduated.

KEY, with Solutions of all the Examples in the One Thousand Arithmetical Tests. By THOMAS S. CAYZER. Cloth, 4s. 6d. The ANSWERS only, cloth, 1s. 6d.

ONE THOUSAND ALGEBRAICAL TESTS, on the same Plan. 8vo. cloth, 2s. 6d. ANSWERS to the ALGEBRAICAL TESTS, cloth, 2s. 6d.

SPECIAL TO SCIENCE TEACHERS AND STUDENTS.

A GLOSSARY of BIOLOGICAL, ANATOMICAL, and PHYSIOLOGICAL TERMS. For Teachers and Students, in Schools and Classes connected with the Science and Art Department, and other Examining bodies. By THOMAS DUNMAN, Physiology Lecturer at the Birkbeck Institution and the Working Men's College. Crown 8vo. cloth, 2s. 6d.

"Will be serviceable to the persons for whom aid it is designed."—Nature.

"An excellently arranged volume."—Saturday Review.

GRIFFITH & FARRAN'S CATALOGUE of Standard Educational Works is sent post free on application.

* * See GRIFFITH & FARRAN'S CATALOGUE for Books of Instruction and Amusement, Travel and Adventure, Picture Books and Story Books, of all sizes and all prices, suitable for SUNDAY SCHOOL REWARDS and SCHOOL PRIZES, CHRISTMAS and NEW YEAR'S GIFTS and BIRTHDAY PRESENTS.

GRIFFITH & FARRAN, WEST CORNER OF ST. PAUL'S CHURCHYARD, LONDON.

Editorial Communications should be addressed to "The Editor"—Advertisements and Business Letters to "The Publisher"—as the Office, 20, Wellington-street, Strand, London, W.C.
Printed by R. J. FLEMING, Athenæum Press, Took's-court, Chancery-lane, E.C., and Published by JOHN FRANCIS, at No. 20, Wellington-street, Strand, W.C.
Agents for NEWCASTLE, MANCHESTER, BIRMINGHAM, and MR. JOHN HENRI, Edinburgh;—for LONDON, Mr. JOHN ROBERTSON, Dublin.—Saturday, September 4, 1880.

THE MIDDLESEX HOSPITAL.—The WINTER SESSION will open on MONDAY, October 14th, with the DISTRIBUTION of PRIZES in the New Lecture Theatre. R.N.M. the DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE is expected to preside on the occasion.

ONE IMPORTANT CHANGE, which is now being consistently observed, provides the most complete means for the Education Officers present at the University of Toronto and the College of Physicians and Surgeons and the other University of Toronto.

TWO ENTRANCE EXAMINATIONS, of the mental value of 25 and 25 per cent, namely for Two Years, will be completed for OCTOBER 1st and 2nd.

Further information may be obtained from the Dean or the Registrar.

OFFICE: 1001, 1001, 1001, 1001.

ADMISSION: 1001, 1001, 1001, 1001.

THE MULTIPLEX COPYING PROCESS
 gives Forty Copies of Circulars, Maps, Drawings, Plans
 This Process has been adopted by the War Department, who have paid the inventor (Mr. Watson, New York) the privilege of using it throughout all their Departments. No uniform wearing off, fading and discoloration. Negatives available for plans. Post particulars sent free.

THE WOODBURY PERMANENT PHOTOGRAPHIC PRINTING COMPANY have now brought their WOODBURYTYPE Process to such perfection that it is generally recognized as the best means of reproducing Works of Art, Portraits from Life, Views from Nature, Architectural Designs, etc.

[illegible]

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
25, GIFFORD STREET, LONDON, W., ask to call attention to their system of producing BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS
in PERMANENT PHOTOGRAPHY by means of GIFFORD'S

It presents the following ADVERTISEMENTS -

FIRST - For annual editions of 250 to 1,000 it is cheaper than any business method, on the basis of the original plan is small.

SECOND - Living photographic it presents an accurate faithful copy of the subject desired to be represented; such a picture as the reader sees is as a true representation.

THIRD - The illustrations are printed direct on the page of the book.

MAGNIFICENT WORKS have already been entered to the following list:-
PALEOGEOGRAPHICAL. 'The Cretaceous Almonds,' 'The Stratum of the Early Tertiary of the Paleogeographical History,' 'Murchison's Common Fossil Shell,' &c.
MINERALOGICAL. 'The Crystalline of Crust and Marine Gases for the WENTWORTH'S—Journal of the British Museum, Mr. R. V. Bend's 'Change of Mind' and the Museum for the Nineteenth Century, &c.

BOOKS OF PRIZE.—1 item and 10 copies, by J. Thomson F.R.S., a manuscript work, in manuscript with over 20 maps, photographs, &c. 'The Voyage of the Challenger,' by Sir Wyville Thompson; and many smaller works.

TOPICAL.—Sold at Auction, August, 'On the Museum,' and many others.

CIVIL ENGINEERING.—See Exposition publique des Travaux, executed under the direction of a Department of the State, published by J. Bachelin-Lévy, Nos. 41, Paris. This magnificent work gained the gold medal at the Paris Exposition 1878.

ARCHITECTURAL.—The Roof Sculptures of Norwich Cathedral, with a History of the Cathedral, by the Very Rev. Geo. Domes of Norwich.

A vast number of works in other departments, large and small, have been illustrated by the Autotype Process of John Lubke, Esq.

COMET.—As a specimen of comets, it may be stated that ALL Illustrations to a dummy No. volume for an edition of 1,000 would cost more than 10d. per copy.
* Price List and specimens sent upon application.

[illegible]

Wrote of Art as an art form to make a statement if money came in the picture. The book is a collection of essays and interviews. The author is a well-known figure in the art world. The book is a collection of essays and interviews. The author is a well-known figure in the art world. The book is a collection of essays and interviews. The author is a well-known figure in the art world.

BERNARD QUARITCH'S GENERAL CATALOGUE OF BOOKS, Manuscripts in Chinese, with a Japanese Index.

One gigantic vol. 8vo. 2-2,200 pp., half-bound maroon, $1.50.

The CATALOGUE has 1,200 numbers but covers a variety almost infinite regarding subject and description, or nearly 100,000 volumes.

Price: $1.50. It is not to be sent free but is sent free to those who are in the habit of ordering books from the publisher.

It is not to be sent free but is sent free to those who are in the habit of ordering books from the publisher.

It is not to be sent free but is sent free to those who are in the habit of ordering books from the publisher.

MEICHAARD QUATRICHE A NEW LIBRARY are most anxious to regularize LIBRARIES, or to occasional buyers on the pre-payment of the following price per volume:

PRIVATE LIBRARIANS and Books from all the great BOOK SALERS are asked only to my name. Book Librarians are therefore requested to state frequent visits to it, frequently, so as to ensure the preservation JOBS WANTED, however men, old or new, are provided according to opportunities arise.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S EDUCATIONAL PUBLICATIONS.

SCIENCE PRIMERS.

Under the Joint Editorship of Professors HUXLEY, ROSCOE, and BALFOUR STEWART.

12mo. Illustrated, 1s. each.

- Introductory. By Prof. HUXLEY, F.R.S.
Chemistry. By Prof. ROSCOE, F.R.S. With Questions.
Physics. By Prof. B. STEWART, F.R.S. With Questions.
Physical Geography. By Prof. GRIKIE, F.R.S. With Questions.
Geology. By Prof. GRIKIE, F.R.S.
Physiology. By M. FOSTER, M.D. F.R.S.
Astronomy. By J. N. LOCKYER, F.R.S.
Botany. By Sir J. D. HOOKER, K.C.S.I. F.R.S.
Logic. By Prof. JEVONS, F.R.S.
Political Economy. By Prof. JEVONS.

* Others to follow

ELEMENTARY SCIENCE.

- Astronomy. By J. N. LOCKYER, F.R.S. With Illustrations, 2s. 6d.—QUESTIONS, 1s. 6d.
Botany. By Prof. OLIVER, F.R.S. F.L.S. With Illustrations, 4s. 6d.
Chemistry. By Prof. ROSCOE, F.R.S. With Illustrations, 4s. 6d.
CHEMICAL PROBLEMS ADAPTED to the SAME. By Prof. THORPE. With KEY, 2s.
Chemistry.—Owens College Junior Course of Practical Chemistry. By F. JONES. Preface by Prof. ROSCOE. 2s. 6d.
Questions on Chemistry. By FRANCIS JONES. 12mo. 3s.
Logic, Deductive and Inductive. By Prof. JEVONS, F.R.S. 2s. 6d.
Physiology. By Prof. HUXLEY, F.R.S. With Illustrations, 4s. 6d.—QUESTIONS, 1s. 6d.
Political Economy for Beginners. By M. G. FAWCETT. With Questions, 2s. 6d.
Physics. By Prof. B. STEWART, F.R.S. With Illustrations, 4s. 6d.
Natural Philosophy for Beginners. By I. TODD, M.A. F.R.S. Part I. PROPERTIES OF SOLID and FLUID BODIES, 2s. 6d. Part II. SOUND, LIGHT, and HEAT, 2s. 6d.
Physical Geography. By Prof. A. GRIKIE, F.R.S. With Illustrations, 4s. 6d.—QUESTIONS, 1s. 6d.
Class-Book of Geography. By C. B. CLARKE, M.A. F.R.S. With Maps, 3s.
Sound; an Elementary Treatise on. By Dr. W. H. STONE. Illustrated, 2s. 6d.

MANUALS FOR STUDENTS.

- Inorganic Chemistry. By Professors ROSCOE and SCHÖENBEIN. Vol. I. NON-METALLIC ELEMENTS, 2s. Vol. II. METALS, 2 Parts, 12s. each.
Gegenbaur's Comparative Anatomy. A Translation by F. J. HILL. Revised, with Preface, by Prof. RAY LANKFESTER. Illustrated, 6vo. 21s.
Text-Book of Physiology. By MICHAEL FOSTER, M.D. F.R.S. Illustrated, 6vo. 71s.
A Treatise on Embryology. By F. M. BALFOUR, F.R.S. Illustrated, 6vo. Vol. I. 12s. (Vol. II. in the press.)
A Text-Book of Physiological Chemistry. By Prof. ARTHUR GAMGEE, F.R.S. Illustrated, 6vo. (Vol. I. just ready.)
Elementary Practical Physiology. By MICHAEL FOSTER, M.D. F.R.S., and F. N. LANGLEY, B.A. Crown 6vo. 5s.
The Student's Flora of the British Islands. By Sir J. D. HOOKER, K.C.S.I. F.R.S. Globe 6vo. 12s. 6d.
Physiography: an Introduction to the Study of Nature. By Prof. HUXLEY, F.R.S. With Illustrations, crown 6vo. New and Cheaper Edition, 6s. (Just ready.)
Elementary Biology. By Prof. HUXLEY, F.R.S., assisted by R. N. MARTIN, M.B. D.Sc. Crown 6vo. 6s.
The Principles of Science. A Treatise on Logic and Scientific Method. By Prof. W. STANLEY JEVONS, LL.D. F.R.S. Crown 6vo. 12s. 6d.
Manual of Political Economy. By Prof. FAWCETT, M.P. Crown 6vo. 12s. 6d.

HISTORY AND LITERATURE PRIMERS.

12mo. 1s. each

Edited by JOHN RICHARD GREEN.

- Homer. By the Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE.
English Grammar. By R. MORRIS, LL.D.
Rome. By M. CREIGHTON, M.A. Maps.
Greece. By C. A. FYFFE, M.A. Maps.
English Literature. By Rev. STOPFORD BROOKE, M.A.
Europe. By E. A. FREEMAN, D.C.L. Maps.
Greek Antiquities. By J. P. MARIAPPE, M.A. Illustrated.
Roman Antiquities. By Prof. A. S. WILKINS. Illustrated.
Classical Geography. By H. F. TOZER.
Geography. By GEORGE GROVE, F.R.G.S. Maps.
Children's Treasury of Lyrical Poetry. By F. T. PALGRAVE. In Two Parts, each 1s.
Shakespeare. By Prof. DOWDEN.
Philology. By J. PAILE, M.A.
Greek Literature. By Prof. JEBB.
English Grammar Exercises. By R. MORRIS, LL.D., and H. C. BOWEN, M.A.
France. By C. M. YONGE. Maps.
English Composition. By Prof. NICHOL.
* Others to follow.

Primer of Pianoforte-Playing. By FRANKLIN TAYLOR. Edited by GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L. 12mo. 1s.

HISTORICAL COURSE.

Edited by E. A. FREEMAN, D.C.L.

- General Sketch of European History. By E. A. FREEMAN, D.C.L. With Maps, 2s. 6d.
England. By E. THOMPSON. Maps, 2s. 6d.
Scotland. By MARGARET MACARTHUR. 2s.
Italy. By W. HUNT, M.A. 3s.
Germany. By JAMES SIMS, M.A. 3s.
America. By J. A. DOYLE. Maps, 4s. 6d.
European Colonies. By E. J. PAXER. Maps, 4s. 6d.
France. By C. M. YONGE. Maps, 3s. 6d.
* Others to follow.

- A Short History of the English People. By J. R. GREEN. With Maps, 8s. 6d. (Just Thru.)
Analysis of English History, based on the above. By C. W. A. TAIT. 2s. 6d.
Readings from English History. Edited by J. R. GREEN. 3 vols. 1s. 6d. each.
Old English History. By E. A. FREEMAN, D.C.L. With Maps, 6s.
Camæos from English History. By C. M. YONGE. 4 vols. 1s. each.
History of England. By M. J. GUEST. With Maps, 6s.

- A Shakespearian Grammar. By Dr. ARBOTT. 6s.
Longer English Poems. Edited by Prof. MALES. 4s. 6d.
Historical Outlines of English Accidence. By Dr. R. MORRIS. 6s.
Historical English Grammar. By the same. 2s. 6d.
On the Study of Words. By Archbishop TRENCH. 4s.
English, Past and Present. By the same. 6s.
Select Glossary of English Words, used formerly in senses different from the Present. By the same. 6s.
Economics of Industry. By A. MARSHALL, M.A., and MARY P. MARSHALL. 2s. 6d.
A Short Geography of the British Islands. By JOHN RICHARD GREEN and ALICE STOPFORD GREEN. With 20 Maps, 6s. 6d.

MODERN LANGUAGES.

Progressive French Course. By EUGÈNE FARNACHET. First Year, 1s., Second Year, 1s. 6d. (Third Year in the press.)

Progressive French Reader. By the same Author. First Year, 2s. 6d. (Second Year in the press.)

Progressive German Course. By the same. First Year, 1s. 6d.; Second Year, 2s.

First Lessons in French. By H. COURTHOPE BOWEN, M.A. 12mo. 1s.

French Dictionary. By G. MASSON. 6s.

German Dictionary. By Prof. WHITNEY and A. H. EDGREN. 7s. 6d.—German-English Part, 6s.

German Grammar. By Prof. WHITNEY. 4s. 6d.

German Reader. By the same. 5s.

Beaumarchais.—Le Barbier de Séville. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by L. F. BLOUNT. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Molière.—Le Malade Imaginaire. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by F. TAYLER, M.A. 2s. 6d.

New Guide to German Conversation. By L. TYLDETT. 2s. 6d.

Handbook to Modern Greek. By E. VINCENT and T. O. DICKSON. 2s.

ELEMENTARY DIVINITY.

By Dr. MACLEAR.

- A Class-Book of Old Testament History. 4s. 6d.
A Class-Book of New Testament History. 4s. 6d.
A Class-Book of the Church Catechism. 1s. 6d.
A First Class-Book of the Catechism. With Scripture Proofs. 6d.
A Shilling Book of Old Testament History.
A Shilling Book of New Testament History.

Scripture Readings for Schools and Families. By C. M. YONGE. 5 vols. price 1s. 6d. each. Also, with Comments, 2s. 6d. each.

The Bible in the Church. By Canon WESTCOTT D.D. 12mo. 4s. 6d.

The Book of Common Prayer: an Elementary Introduction to. By F. PROCTOR and Dr. MACLEAR. 12mo. 6s. 6d.

Children's Treasury of Bible Stories. By Mrs. GASKIN. Edited, with Preface, by Dr. MACLEAR. Part I. OLD TESTAMENT, 1s. Part II. NEW TESTAMENT, 1s. Part III. THE APOSTLES, 1s.

ART.

- Linear Perspective and Model Drawing. By L. ANDERSON. Illustrated, 2s.
Drawing-Book for Beginners. By P. H. DELANOTTE. Illustrated, 2s. 6d.

TRANSLATIONS.

- Cicero's Academics. Translated by J. E. KEID, M.A. 8vo. 5s. 6d.
Cicero's Letters. Translated from Watson's Selection by Rev. G. B. JAMES, M.A. 10s. 6d.
Homer's Odyssey. By BUTCHER and LANG. New Edition, Revised and Corrected, 10s. 6d.
Horace in English Prose. By LONSDALE and LEE. With Introduction, Notes, &c. 3s. 6d.
Plato.—The Republic. By J. L. DAVIES, M.A., and D. J. VAUGHAN, M.A. 4s. 6d.
Plato.—Enthyphro, Apology, Crito, and Phaedo. By F. J. CURCH. 4s. 6d.
Tacitus. By CHURCH and BRODRIBB.
The History. 6s.
The Annals. 7s. 6d.
The Agricola and Germany, with the DIALOGUE ON ORATORY. 4s. 6d.
Theocritus, Bion, and Moschus. By A. LANG, M.A. 6s.
Theophrastus.—The Characters. An English Translation from a Revised Text. With Introduction and Notes. By Prof. H. C. JEBB. 4s. 6d.
Virgil in English Prose. By LONSDALE and LEE. With Introduction, Notes, &c. 3s. 6d.

[See next page.]

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S EDUCATIONAL PUBLICATIONS.

ELEMENTARY CLASSICS.

(Time, price 1s. 6d. each.)

- Virgil.—Æneid V. Edited by A. CALVERT, M.A.
Horace.—Odes. Book I. Edited by T. E. PAGE, M.A.
Selections from Ovid. Edited by E. S. SHUCKENBURY, M.A.
Cæsar.—The Gallic War. Second and Third Campaigns. Edited by W. G. RUTHERFORD, M.A.
Thucydides. Book IV. Chaps. 1–41. Edited by C. E. GRAVES, M.A.
Herodotus. Selections from Books VII. and VIII. Edited by A. H. COOKE, B.A.
Virgil.—Georgic, II. Edited by Rev. J. H. KEENE, M.A.
Horace.—Epistles and Satires. Selected and Edited by Rev. W. J. V. BAKER, M.A.
Greek Elegiac Poets. Selected and Edited by Rev. H. KYNASTON, M.A.
Livy.—Scenes from Hannibalian War. Adapted for the Use of Beginners. By G. C. MACULAY, M.A.
Cæsar.—Scenes from the 5th and 6th Books of the Gallic War. By C. COLEBECK, M.A.
 * Others to follow. [In preparation.]

MACMILLAN'S CLASSICAL SERIES.

- Æschylus.—Perseus. Edited by A. O. PRICKARD, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Cicero.—The Second Philippic Oration. From the German of Halm. By Prof. JOHN E. B. MAYOR, M.A.
The Catinian Orations. From the German of Halm. With Addition. By Prof. A. S. WILKINS, M.A. 2s. 6d.
Pro lege Manilia. Edited, after Halm, by Prof. A. S. WILKINS, M.A. 2s. 6d.
Pro Roscio Amerino. Edited, after Halm, by E. H. DONKIN, M.A. 4s. 6d.
Demosthenes.—De Corona. Edited by E. DRAKE, M.A. New and Revised Edition. 4s. 6d.
Homer's Iliad.—The Story of Achilles. Edited by J. H. PRATT, M.A., and WALTER LEAF, M.A. [In the press.]
Homer's Odyssey. Books IX.—XII. Edited by Prof. J. E. B. MAYOR, M.A. Part I. 2s.
Juvenal.—Select Satires. Edited by Prof. J. E. B. MAYOR, M.A. Satires I. and XI. 2s. XII.—XVI. 2s. 6d.
Livy. Books XXI. and XXII. By W. W. CAPES, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Martial.—Select Epigrams. Edited by Rev. E. H. STEPHENSON, M.A. 6s.
Ovid's Fasti. Edited by G. H. HALLAM, M.A. [In the press.]
Ovid.—Heroidum Epistulae XIII. Edited by E. S. SHUCKENBURY, M.A. 4s. 6d.
Plautus.—Miles Gloriosus. Edited by Prof. R. Y. TYRRELL. [In the press.]
Pliny's Letters. Book III. Edited by Prof. J. E. B. MAYOR. With Life of Pliny by G. H. BENDALL, M.A. [Nearly ready.]
Sallust. Edited by C. MERVILLE, B.D. 4s. 6d.
 THE CATALINA and JUGURTHA separately, 2s. 6d. each.
Tacitus.—Agricola and Germania. Edited by CH. MICH and G. DROUIN. 2s. 6d. Separately, 2s. each.
The Annals. Book VI. By the Same Editors, 2s. 6d.
Terence.—Hauton Timorumenos. Edited by E. S. SHUCKENBURY, M.A. 2s. With Translation, 4s. 6d.
Phormio. Edited by Rev. JOHN BOND, M.A., and A. B. WALPOLA, B.A. 4s. 6d.
Thucydides. Books VI. and VII. Edited by The Rev. P. FRUST, M.A. 2s.
Xenophon.—Hellenica. Books I. and II. Edited by H. HALLSTON, B.A. 4s. 6d.
Cyropædia. Books VII. and VIII. Edited by Prof. ALFRED GOODWIN, M.A. 2s.
Anabasis. Books I.—IV. Edited by Professors W. W. GOODWIN and J. W. WHITE. [Nearly ready.]
Memorabilia Socratis. Edited by A. R. CLARKE, B.A. 6s.

CLASSICAL WORKS.

- First Latin Grammar. By M. C. MACMILLAN, M.A. 1s. 6d.
School Latin Grammar. By H. J. ROBY, M.A. 2s.
Latin Prose Composition. By H. BELCHER, M.A. 1s. 6d.—KEY, 2s. 6d.—Part II. 1s.
Latin Prose Composition, Hints to writers. By A. W. POTTS, LL.D. 2s.
Passages for Translation into Latin Prose. By the same. 2s.—KEY, 2s. 6d.
Latin Prose Composition, First Steps. By G. RUST, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Synthetic Latin Delectus. By E. RUSH, B.A. 2s.
A Grammar of the Latin Language. From PLAUTUS to SEXTIUS. By H. J. ROBY, M.A. In Two Parts. Third Edition. Part I.—Crown 8vo. 5s. 6d.—Part II. 10s. 6d.
Greek and Latin Etymology, an Introduction. By J. FEILS, M.A. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.
Homeric Dictionary. By Dr. G. AUTENRIETH. Translated by Dr. KERN. 2s.
Greek Prose Composition, First Steps. By E. JACKSON. 1s. 6d. Second Steps, 2s. 6d. [Key in preparation.]
Greek Iambics for Beginners. By Rev. H. KYNASTON, M.A. 4s. 6d.—KEY, 4s. 6d.
Greek for Beginners. By Prof. J. B. MAYOR. Part I., 1s. 6d., II. and III., 2s. 6d. Complete, 4s. 6d.
First Greek Reader. By Prof. JOHN E. B. MAYOR. 4s. 6d.
First Greek Grammar. By W. G. RUTHERFORD, M.A. New Edition, Enlarged. 1s. 6d.
Syntax of the Greek Moods and Tenses. By Prof. GOODWIN. New Edition. 4s. 6d.
Elementary Greek Grammar. By Prof. W. W. GOODWIN, F.R.S. 4s. 6d.
First Lessons in Greek. By Prof. J. W. WHITE. [Nearly ready.]
Elements of Greek Grammar. By Prof. J. G. GREENWOOD. 4s. 6d.

- Juvenal.—Thirteen Satires. With Commentary by Prof. J. E. B. MAYOR, M.A. Crown 8vo. Vol. I. 7s. 6d. Vol. II. 10s. 6d.
Selections from the Attic Orators before Demosthenes. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by Prof. E. C. JENK, M.A. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

MATHEMATICAL WORKS.

- By BARNARD SMITH, M.A.
Arithmetic and Algebra. 10s. 6d.
Arithmetic for the Use of Schools. 4s. 6d.—KEY, 2s. 6d.
Shilling Book of Arithmetic. For National and Elementary Schools. 10s. Or separately Part I. 2s.; Part II. 2s.; Part III. 2s. With ANSWERS. 1s. 6d.—KEY, 4s. 6d.
School Class-Book of Arithmetic. 10s. 2s. Or in Three Parts, 1s. each.—KEY, Three Parts, 2s. 6d. each.
Arithmetic in Theory and Practice. By J. BROOK-SMITH. 4s. 6d.
Exercises in Arithmetic. By S. FIDLEY. 6s.
Algebraical Exercises. Progressively Arranged. By G. A. JONES, M.A., and C. H. CHRYNE, M.A. 2s. 6d.
 By T. DALTON, M.A.
Rules and Examples in Arithmetic. 2s. 6d.
Rules and Examples in Algebra. Part I. 2s. Part II. 2s. 6d.
Note-Book on Practical, Solid, or Descriptive Geometry. By J. H. ADAM and G. S. FRITH CHAMLI. 2s.
Geometrical Note-Book. By F. E. RITCHIE. 2s.

MATHEMATICAL WORKS.

- By J. M. WILSON, M.A.
Elementary Geometry. Books I. to V. New Edition, Enlarged. 4s. 6d.
Solid Geometry and Conic Sections. 4s. 6d.
Natural Geometry: an Introduction to the Logical Study of Mathematics. With Explanatory Models. By A. MAULT. 1s.
 MODELS to illustrate the above, in Box, 12s. 6d.
Plane Trigonometry: Graded Exercises in. By J. WILSON, M.A., and S. R. WILSON, B.A. 4s. 6d.
Elements of Descriptive Geometry. By J. R. MILLAR, C.E. 6s.
Conic Sections: a Geometrical Treatise. By W. H. DREW. Crown 8vo. 2s.—SOLUTIONS, 4s. 6d.
 By I. TODHUNTER, M.A. F.R.S.
Euclid for Colleges and Schools. 1s. 6d.
Mensuration for Beginners. 2s. 6d.
Algebra for Beginners. With numerous Examples. 2s. 6d.—KEY, 4s. 6d.
Trigonometry for Beginners. 2s. 6d.—KEY, 4s. 6d.
Mechanics for Beginners. 4s. 6d.—KEY, 4s. 6d.
Algebra for the Use of Colleges and Schools. 7s. 6d.—KEY, 10s. 6d.
The Theory of Equations. 7s. 6d.
Plane Trigonometry. 6s.—KEY, 10s. 6d.
Spherical Trigonometry. 4s. 6d.
Conic Sections. With Examples. 7s. 6d.
The Differential Calculus. With Examples. 10s. 6d.
The Integral Calculus. 10s. 6d.
Examples of Analytical Geometry of THREE DIMENSIONS. 4s.
Analytical Statics. With Examples. 10s. 6d.
 By S. PARKINSON, D.D. F.R.S.
Mechanics, an Elementary Treatise. 6s. With Examples. 2s. 6d.
A Treatise on Optics. 10s. 6d.
 By Prof. G. BOOLE, F.R.S.
Differential Equations. Crown 8vo. 14s. Supplementary Volume, 2s. 6d.
Calculus of Finite Differences. 10s. 6d.
An Elementary Treatise on Conic Sections and Algebraic Geometry. By G. H. FUCILE, M.A. 7s. 6d.
Dynamics of a Particle. By Prof. TAIT and J. M. WILSON. 12s.
Dynamics of the System of Rigid Bodies. By E. J. ROOTH, M.A. F.R.S. Third Edition, Enlarged. 8vo. 21s.
The Elements of Dynamic. By Prof. W. R. CLIFFORD, F.R.S. Part I. KINETIC. 7s. 6d.
The Theory of Electricity. By L. CUMMING, M.A. With Illustrations, 1s. 6d.
Mathematical Problems. Devised and Arranged by J. WOLSTENHOLME. New Edition, Enlarged. 8vo. 12s.
Units and Physical Constants. By Prof. J. D. EVERETT, F.R.S. 4s. 6d.
Elementary Applied Mechanics. By Prof. T. ALEXANDER, C.E. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

 CATALOGUES OF EDUCATIONAL AND OTHER WORKS FORWARDED ON APPLICATION.

MACMILLAN & CO. Bedford-street, Strand, W.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S NEW WORKS.

BY MORTIMER COLLINS.

THOUGHTS IN MY GARDEN. By MORTIMER COLLINS. Edited by EDMUND YATES. With Notes by the Editor and Mrs. MORTIMER COLLINS. 2 vols. post 8vo. 21s.

"Whether by mistake or from design the best of Mr. Mortimer Collins's works has been reserved for final publication. Indeed, nothing gives so full or so fair an idea of his genius and talent as the essays, notes, and poems now presented to the world under the title of 'Thoughts in my Garden.'—St. James's Gazette."

CHARLES DICKENS'S CONTRIBUTIONS TO
'BENTLEY'S MISCELLANY.'

The MUDFOG PAPERS, and OTHERS. By CHARLES DICKENS. Author of 'The Pickwick Papers.' Now First Reprinted. In crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.

BY MISS DE FONBLANQUE.

FIVE WEEKS in ICELAND. By Miss DE FONBLANQUE. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

"Graphic, mazy, and interesting."—St. James's Gazette.

BY MARY FITZGIBBON.

A TRIP to MANITOBA. By Mary FITZGIBBON. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

BY THE REV J. C. BOYCE.

NIGH TO the END; or, a Passage in Sacred Prophecy, now in Course of Translation into History, considered. By the Rev. J. C. BOYCE, M.A. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

POPULAR NOVELS, AT ALL LIBRARIES.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE FIRST VIOLIN.'

The WELLFIELDS. By Jessie Fothergill, Author of 'Probation' and 'The First Violin.'

TRANSLATED BY MRS. TYRELL.

LIZZIE of the MILL. From the Original, by Mrs. CHRISTINA TYRELL, Translator of 'No Surrender,' &c. 2 vols. crown 8vo.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF 'CUT ADRIFF.'
PIOUS FRAUDS; or, the Dawn of Love. By ALBANY DE FONBLANQUE, Author of 'A Tangled Skein,' 'Cut Adrift,' &c. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

NEW WORK BY MRS. HENRY WOOD.

Immediately, in 3 vols. crown 8vo.

JOHNNY LUDLOW. Second Series. By MRS. HENRY WOOD, Author of 'East Lynne,' &c.

UNIFORM EDITION.

NOVELS OF MRS. HENRY WOOD.

To be obtained at all Booksellers, in crown 8vo. cloth, price 6s. each.

EAST LYNNE (3 vols. 10s. 6d.)
THE CRIMINALS (3 vols. 10s. 6d.)
MRS. HALLIBURTON'S TROUBLES
THE MASTER OF GREYSTANDS
VERNER'S PRIDE
WITHIN THE MAZE
LADY ADELAIDE
DE SYRANCE
HOLAND YORKE
LORD OAKBURN'S DAUGHTER
TERRA
SHADOW OF ABILITY
ONWALD GRAY

DENSE HOLLOW
GEORGE CANTERBURY'S WILL TREVILYN HOLD
MILDRED ARKELL
ST. MARTIN'S EVE
ELSTREE POLLY
ANNE HEREFORD
A LIFE'S SECRET
RED COURT FARM
ORVILLE COLLEGE
PARKWATER
EUNA
POMEROY ARMY

HURST & BLACKETT'S NEW WORKS.

13, Great Marlborough-street.

MONSIEUR GUIZOT in PRIVATE

LIFE (1787-1874). By his Daughter MADAME DE WITT. Translated by Mrs. SIMPSON. 1 vol. 8vo. 15s.

"Madame de Witt has done justice to her father's memory in an admirable record of his life. Mrs. Simpson's translation of this singularly interesting book is in accuracy and grace worthy of the original and of the subject.—Review of Reviews."

"The work is replete with interesting reminiscences, and the reading public may be congratulated on having a literary treat provided for them."—Globe

We congratulate Mrs. Simpson on an excellent translation of a pleasing book.—Westminster Review. The number of the work is as charming as the matter. Whitaker's Review

TALES of OUR GREAT FAMILIES.

SECOND SERIES. By EDWARD WALFORD, M.A. 2 vols. 21s.

"The social rank of the persons whose lives and characters are delineated in this work, and the inherent romance of the stories it contains, will secure it a widespread popularity."—Standard

THE VILLAGE of PALACES; or,

CHRONICLES of CHATEAU. By the Rev. A. G. L'ESTRANGE. 2 vols. crown 8vo. 21s.

CHEAP EDITION of YOUNG Mrs.

JARDINE. By the AUTHOR of 'JOHN HALIFAX.' Forming the New Volume of HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY 6s. bound and illustrated.

"There is much tenderness and good feeling in this book. It is pleasant and wholesome."—Athenæum

THE NEW NOVELS.

KISS AMELIA B. EDWARDS'S NEW NOVEL.

Now ready, at all the Libraries, in 3 vols.

LORD BRACKENBURY.

By AMELIA B. EDWARDS.

Author of 'Barbara's History,' &c.

ST. MARTIN'S SUMMER.

By SHIRLEY SMITH, Author of 'His Last Stake,' &c. 3 vols.

The TENTH EARL.

By John Berwick HARWOOD, Author of 'Lady Maria,' &c. 3 vols.

"The Tenth Earl" has plot and substance, incident and vitality."—Athenæum

"The Tenth Earl" is very amusing reading."—John Bull

A VERY OPAL.

By C. L. Pirkis.

"A novel of considerable merit. There is a mixture of observation and at times a kind of quiet humor which renders one of Jane Austen."—Standard

"A thoroughly amusing novel. The characters are sketched with a firm hand, and the plot is ingenious and well worked out."—Sunday Times

FORESTALLED.

By M. BETHAM-EDWARDS, Author of 'Hilly,' 'Edgely,' 'Bollings' in 'Western France,' &c. 2 vols. 15s.

"Those who can appreciate a quiet, original, interesting, and carefully written story will welcome 'Forestalled' with satisfaction."—Spectator

WOOLERS and WINNERS.

By Mrs. O. LINDSEY BAKER, Author of 'The Manchester Man,' &c. 3 vols.

A MODERN GREEK HEROINE.

"A very clever novel."—Standard

ROY and VIOLA.

By Mrs. Forrester, Author of 'Viva,' 'Mignon,' &c. 3 vols. (Just ready)

BOOKS FOR THE COUNTRY.

Each Work complete in 1 vol. price 5s. (any of which can be had separately), elegantly printed and bound, and illustrated by Mr. J. OILBRANT, MILLAIS, HUNT, LECH, POYNTER, FOSTER, TENNIEL, SANDYS, R. HUGHES, SAMBURNES, &c.

HURST & BLACKETT'S

STANDARD LIBRARY

OF CHEAP EDITIONS of POPULAR MODERN WORKS.

See Rich's Nature and Human Lost and Found. By the Rev. Mrs. Norton.

Barbara's History. By Amelia B. Edwards.

Life of Irving. By Mrs. Oliphant.

No Church. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Alce Forbes. By George Mac Donald, LL.D.

Across. By Mrs. Oliphant.

A Noble Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Diogenes the New American. By Robert Falconer.

Donald LL.D. By George Mac Donald, LL.D.

The Woman's Kingdom. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Amelia of the Emerald Isle. By G. W. Damsie, D.L.L.

David Signified. By George Mac Donald, LL.D.

A Brave Lady. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Katharine. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

The Untold Word. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

A Maid in June. By Mrs. Oliphant.

My Little Lady. By E. Frances Poynter.

Phoebe Junior. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Life of Marie Antoinette. By Professor G. D. Young.

Str. Gible. By George Mac Donald, LL.D.

Don Quixote's American Humour.

The NEW VOLUME (now ready) comprises

YOUNG MRS. JARDINE.

By the AUTHOR of 'JOHN HALIFAX.'

STANDARD TEXT-BOOKS.

MR. CRUTTWELL'S CLASSICAL WORKS.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo. cloth. 6s. 6d.

1. A HISTORY of ROMAN LITERATURE, from the Earliest Period to the Times of the Antonines. By C. T. CRUTTWELL, M.A., Fellow of Merton College, Oxford, Head Master of Malvern College.

"Nothing at all equal to it has hitherto been published in England."—British Quarterly Review

"A most serviceable—indeed, indispensable—guide for the student.... The 'general reader' will be both charmed and instructed."—Quarterly Review

CRUTTWELL'S ROMAN LITERATURE.

2. SPECIMENS of ROMAN LITERATURE, from the Earliest Period to the Times of the Antonines.

Part I. ROMAN THOUGHT—Religion, Philosophy and Science, Art and Letters.

Part II. ROMAN STYLE—Descriptive, Rhetorical, and Humorous Passages.

With Synopses and Indices complete.

Edited by C. T. CRUTTWELL, M.A., Merton College, Oxford; and FRANK HANTON, M.A., King's College, London.

Cambridge. Crown 8vo. cloth. 10s. 6d.

"A work with a standing-ground of its own. Not only useful, but necessary for many classes of readers. The sound judgment exercised in arranging the plan and in the selection of the passages calls for hearty commendation."—Quarterly Review

PROFESSOR RAMSAY'S CLASSICAL WORKS.

In crown 8vo. cloth.

1. A MANUAL of ROMAN ANTIQUITIES:

Law, Constitution, Army and Navy, Public and Social Life, Agriculture, Religion, &c. For the Use of Advanced Students. By WILLIAM RAMSAY, M.A., Trinity College, Cambridge, late Professor of Humanity in the University of Glasgow. With Map, numerous Engravings, and very copious Index. Manual Edition. 6s. 6d.

2. An ELEMENTARY MANUAL of ROMAN ANTIQUITIES. Adapted for Junior Classes. With numerous Illustrations. Second Edition. 6s.

3. A MANUAL of LATIN PROSODY. Illustrated by Copious Examples and Critical Remarks. Sixth Edition. 6s.

DR. HAYDON'S VIRGIL.

VIRGILII OPERA. Edited by A. HAMILTON BRYCE, D.C.L., LL.D., Senior Classical Moderator in the University of Dublin. Text from HEYNE and WAGNER. English Notes, Original and Selected. From the leading German and English Commentators. Illustrations from the Antique. Thirtieth Edition. In 1 vol. fcap. 8vo. cloth. 6s. 6d. or in Three Parts:—

Part I. EUCOLIOS and GEORGICS. 2s. 6d.

Part II. The ENID. Books I.—VI. 1s. 6d.

Part III. The ENID. Books VII.—XII. 1s. 6d.

"Contains the pith of what has been written by the best scholars on the subject."—Athenæum

Uniform with the above.

HORATII OPERA.

Edited by JOSEPH CURRIE, formerly Head Classical Master in Glasgow Academy. Text from ORELLIUS. English Notes, Original and Selected from the best Commentators. Illustrations from the Antique. In 1 vol. fcap. 8vo. cloth. 6s. 6d. or in Two Parts:—

Part I. CARMENA. 2s.

Part II. SATIRAE and EPISTOLAE. 2s.

"The notes are excellent and exhaustive."—Quarterly Journal of Education

MENTAL SCIENCE.—S. T. COLERIDGE'S

ESSAY on METHOD. Archbishop WHATELY'S TREATISE on LOGIC and RHETORIC. Crown 8vo. cloth. 6s. 6d. (Binding separately.) Or, the Treatises separately, Method, 2s.; Logic, 2s.; Rhetoric, 2s. 6d.

The VOCABULARY of PHILOSOPHY:

Mental, Moral, and Metaphysical. With Quotations and References for the Use of Students. By WILLIAM FLEMING, D.D., late Prof. of Moral Philosophy in the University of Glasgow. Revised and Edited by HENRY CALDERWOOD, LL.D., Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Edinburgh. Crown 8vo. cloth. 6s. 6d. Third Edition.

SENIOR'S (NASSAU WILLIAM, M.A., late

Prof. of Political Economy at the University of Oxford) TREATISE on POLITICAL ECONOMY. Crown 8vo. cloth. 6s. Sixth Edition.

CRAIK'S HISTORY of ENGLISH LITERATURE

and of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE from the NORMAN CONQUEST. With numerous Excerpts and References. By GEORGE CRAIK, LL.D., late Professor of History and English Literature, Queen's College, Belfast. In 2 vols. royal 8vo. cloth. 3s.

CRAIK'S MANUAL of ENGLISH LITERATURE

For the Use of Colleges, Schools, and those preparing for Competitive Examinations. By GEORGE CRAIK, LL.D. Crown 8vo. cloth. 7s. 6d. Eighth Edition.

BELL'S THOMSON'S SEASONS. School

Grammar. With an Introduction and Notes by ROBERT BELL, Editor of the 'Annotated Series of British Books.' Fcap. 8vo. cloth. 1s. 6d. Third Edition.

D'ORSEY'S SPELLING by DICTATION.

PROGRESSIVE EXERCISES in ENGLISH ORTHOGRAPHY, for Schools and Civil Service Examinations. By the Rev. A. J. D. D'ORSEY, B.D., Chancellor's English Medalist. Fcap. cloth. 1s. Fourth Edition.

CHARLES GRIFFIN & Co. 10, Stationers' Hall-court, London.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1880.

CONTENTS

MALLESSEN'S HISTORY OF THE INDIAN MUTINY	327
EARLE ON ENGLISH PLANT NAMES	328
TWO STUDIES OF RABBLAN	329
NARRATIVE OF HALL'S 8-DOGS ARCTIC EXPEDITION	330
BORNER'S ACCOUNT OF YENNA	331
GLITERIAN HISTORY OF THE TYPE	332
ANCIENT TREATISES ON DOGS AND FISHING	333
ROYALS OF THE WARE	334
LAW BOOKS—PHILOLOGICAL BOOKS—RURAL BOOKS	335-336
LIBRARY TABLE—LIST OF NEW BOOKS	336-337
LOVE'S GILBERT, "GILBERT" IN THE "ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA," BRANFORD'S FIFTY FIFTH BIRTHDAY FESTIVAL INSCRIPTION, THE INTERNATIONAL LIT- ERARY CONGRESS, MR. J. WATSON	337-338
LITERARY GLEANINGS	338
SCIENCE—PATTERSON'S BIRDS, FISHER, AND OCTACRA OF BELFAY LUNN, LIBRARY TABLE GEOGRAPHICAL NOTES, THE DECIPHERMENT OF KETIA, ASTRO- NOMICAL NOTES, NOTES FROM LONDON, GOSWIP	338-341
PIRA ARTS—RICH IN NORWEGIAN ANTIQUITIES; LI- BRARY TABLE, THE PRIVATE COLLECTIONS OF ENG- LAND, GOSWIP	341-342
MUSIC—THE WEEK; GOSWIP	342-343
DRAMA—RECENT DRAMAS; GOSWIP	343-348

LITERATURE

History of the Indian Mutiny, 1857-1859.
By Col. G. B. Malleson, C.S.I. Vol. III.
(Allen & Co.)

THIS volume brings the history of the Indian Mutiny to a close. Its predecessors were devoted chiefly to the events which took place in Eastern India, the North-West Provinces, and the Punjab. Of the sixteen chapters in the volume before us nine are taken up with Madras, Bombay, and Central India. Of the remaining chapters one is allotted to the exploits of officers in charge of civil districts, one to the deeds of the Indian navy, and one to an examination of the true causes of the outbreak.

One of the most prominent characters of the mutiny was Tantia Topse. This man, a Mahratta, was brought up in the household of the last of the Peshwas, and when the latter died became mushib or aide-de-camp to his adopted son the Nana. When the mutiny broke out he simply obeyed the man whom he recognized as his liege lord and sovereign. At his orders Tantia waged war against us, but he was guilty of no atrocities. And yet we hanged him! Col. Malleson considers it probable that posterity will condemn the putting of this man to death, and we agree with Col. Malleson. As is pointed out in this volume, there is an analogy between Tantia Topse's case and that of Hofer:—

"Posterity has condemned Napoleon for causing Hofer to be shot. There is considerable analogy between the cases of Hofer and Tantia Topi. Neither was born under the rule of the nation against which he fought. In both cases the race to which each belonged was subjugated by a foreign race. In both cases the insurrection of the subdued race was produced by causes exterior to its own immediate interests. In both cases the two men cited rose to be the representatives of the nationality to which each belonged. In both—Hofer in the one, Tantia Topi in the other—they resisted the dominant race in a manner which necessitated the calling forth extraordinary exertions. In both cases the leader was a hero to his own countrymen. The one, the European, is still a hero to the world. The other, the Maráthá—well—who knows that in the books and corners of the valleys of the Chambal, the Narbadá and the Párbati, his name, too, is not often mentioned with respect and affection?"

His achievements as a commander were of a most extraordinary nature. During the last nine months of his career he, though surrounded by columns intent upon his capture, baffled every effort to catch him. In the course of that period he several times made the tour of a district comprising an area of nearly a hundred and sixty-two thousand square miles, had crossed the Nerbudda, and threatened the weak points of Western India.

"His marches were wonderful; he had a good eye for selecting a position, and he had a marvellous faculty for localities. But when that has been said, everything has been said. Unable to detect the weak points of his adversaries, he never took advantage of their mistakes or their too great daring; he never exposed himself in action, and he was the first to leave the field. On many occasions a judicious use of his cavalry, always superior in numbers, would have so crippled the English that further pursuit by them would have been impossible. With a little more insight and a little more daring he could, whilst retreating before them, have harassed the flanks and the rear of his pursuers, have captured their baggage, and cut up their camp-followers. But he never attempted anything of the sort. Provided he could escape from one place to harass them in another, with a chance of striking at Indur, at Barodah, at Jodhpur, or at Jaipur, a blow similar to that which he had struck successfully at Gwalíar, he was satisfied. Then, again, the fact that the enemy marching against him were English sufficed, no matter how small their numbers, to scare him.....But fighting was repugnant to Tantia. He did not understand it. He was a guerilla leader, content to fire at his enemy and then to run away. For the lives of his followers he cared nothing."

The marches of some of his pursuers were also remarkable. Brigadier Parke accomplished 240 miles in nine days, with a force of horse artillery, cavalry, and infantry mounted on camels. Brigadier Somerset at the head of a similar force performed first 240 miles in nine days, and afterwards seventy miles in forty-eight hours. Col. Holmes, with some guns and a small body of European and native infantry not mounted, marched fifty-four miles through a sandy desert in a little over twenty-four hours. Col. Malleson is severe on the want of activity and enterprise of General Whitlock, who was intended to co-operate with Sir Hugh Rose in Central India, but rendered the latter little or no assistance:—

"In every particular the action of Sir Hugh Rose had cleared the way for the action of General Whitlock.....The defeat of Tantia Topi on the Bítwah alone made it possible for Whitlock to march on Bandá.....Whitlock's march on Kirwi had been made possible by the annihilation of the force of the nawáb of Bandá at Kálpí."

Both Bandá and Kirwee were entered without opposition, and in both enormous treasures were found. Neither Sir Hugh Rose's force nor the other co-operating columns were allowed to share in the prize. As Col. Malleson well puts it:—

"Fortune had given to Sir Hugh Rose the toil, the exposure, the danger; to General Whitlock the bloodless conquest and the spoils of war."

Naturally in the history of a war the military actor in the drama is the most prominent. In fact, however, in 1857-58 every Englishman in India was more or less a soldier, or, at all events, a possible soldier. The display, too, of the best military virtues was by no means confined to military men.

The civilians employed in isolated districts almost without an exception did high honour to their country. They had in many instances to rely on little more than moral influence and such material resources as could be extemporized by themselves, for there were either no armed men at their disposal or those armed men were known to be disaffected. Mr. B. Dunlop's achievements during this stirring time were of a romantic character. Magistrate and collector of Meerut, travelling in the Himalayas when the mutiny broke out, he hastened to return to his post. On the road he received a summons from his commissioner to join him before Delhi. On arriving at the British camp he was told that, his locum tenens being dead, he must hasten to resume his duties at Meerut. No escort being available, he was only accompanied by a single orderly. After a perilous ride he reached Meerut. Almost immediately after his arrival nine Sikh horsemen reported to him that they were the only loyal troopers in a detachment of the 1st Oude Cavalry, which, having murdered three Englishmen, had ridden off to join the rebels at Delhi. They proffered their services to Mr. Dunlop, and he at once accepted them. The nine Sikhs formed the commencement of the Khaki Rissalah. The history of the formation of this corps is as follows. The civil treasury was almost empty, no military aid for collecting revenue in the district could be obtained, and the native bankers and merchants positively refused to lend money to Government. Mr. Dunlop, under these circumstances, resolved to raise a corps of mounted men for police duties. The brigade major, Col. Whish, gave his hearty co-operation, and in a short time the Khaki Rissalah, so called from its uniform, which was of a khaki or dust colour, was formed. Major Williams, the superintendent of police, was appointed commanding officer, and many military officers whose regiments had mutinied and civilians who were refugees at Meerut volunteered. Such was the energy displayed that in three days one troop, composed of Englishmen, Eurasians, and a few Sikhs, was fit for duty. Towards the end of June, 1857, the Khaki Rissalah began its active career by attacking, with the aid of a few of the Carabineers and two guns, a number of Gujar who had occupied some villages only five miles from Meerut. The expedition was successful; other expeditions followed, and with daily increasing ease the revenue was collected. One of the most daring of Gujar leaders was Sáh Máll, zemindar of Bájrú, who had since the commencement of the mutiny maintained a semi-independence in the town of Baráuth, belonging to the Meerut division, but close to Delhi. He reckoned on immunity, owing to this proximity to the rebel army, and had for weeks been carrying fire and sword into the neighbouring villages. Mr. Dunlop determined to, as it were, cut him out, trusting that the rapidity of his own movements would enable him to escape from the troops certain to be sent after him from Delhi. Towards the end of July the expedition set out. It was composed of 2 mountain guns, 40 men of the 60th Rifles, 2 sergeants and 20 armed bandsmen, 27 armed native retainers, and 40 men of the Rissalah. The little force marched to the village of Duhaorah, little more than twenty miles from Delhi. They heard on their arrival heavy firing in the direction of Deolah, a village seven miles distant. Sending to ascertain the cause, they learned during the night that Sâh Mâll was at the village of Basaod, and intended to attack Deolah the next morning. At daybreak Dunlop's force marched on Basaod, whereupon Sâh Mâll evacuated it. No revenue had been collected from the subdivision since the civil establishments had been driven out in May. Dunlop determined to put an end to this state of things. While the force marched along the right bank of the East Jumna canal, he, accompanied by a tahsildar and two mounted orderlies, visited all the villages on the left bank, moving parallel to the force, and collecting supplies as he went. His audacity succeeded. From the first two villages the inhabitants had fled, the third village was inhabited by Gujars, but, impressed by his boldness, the armed men left as he entered. In the next four villages his reception was not unfriendly. From each he carried off two of the principal landowners as security for revenue. He had scarcely arrived at the next village, which was known to be friendly, when Sâh Mâll, at the head of 2,000 followers, appeared in sight. Dunlop had been in the mean time reinforced by two more men, one a native officer; his little party therefore consisted of six. With such odds against him, however, he had no option but to fall back, abandoning the sheep and hostages he had collected.

"But the danger was not over. A horseman, armed with a matchlock and drawn sword—subsequently ascertained to be Bagdâ, nephew to Sâh Mâll—rode at Dunlop. Under ordinary circumstances the combat would probably have been short. But Dunlop was riding that morning, for the first time, a horse which had an insane dread of fire-arms. His position would have been ludicrous but for its danger. 'The animal,' he writes, 'proceeded to the charge alternately tripping along sideways, or waltzing round on its hind legs, springing clear off the ground at every discharge of my revolver.' Ultimately, however, Dunlop succeeded in depriving Bagdâ of his thumb and in mortally wounding his charger. He then rode after his friends, leaving his pith helmet, which had fallen off in the fight, as a trophy on the field."

A few hours later Dunlop, who had joined the column, had an engagement with the Gujar leader, whose force was routed, he himself being slain in the pursuit. Several subsequent expeditions took place, and each was successful. When, however, Delhi fell, the district quieted down, and the task of the Khaki Russalah had been practically completed. We could, if space permitted, give many similar instances of fertility of resource and courage on the part of district officers, but we must be content to refer the reader to Col. Malleeson's eloquent pages.

The concluding chapter, which is devoted to a consideration of the causes of the mutiny and of the question whether it was a mutiny or a rebellion, is of general interest and extremely well written. Col. Malleeson, in effect, says that it was a rebellion in which the Sepoys were naturally the chief agents of the disaffected among the princes and chiefs of India. The real cause of the outbreak, he maintains, was bad faith, and the attempt to force Western ideas on an Eastern people. The cartridges were only the instruments employed to create and focus discontent.

"Before the plans of the leaders of the revolt were ripe the cartridges and the chapatties were nothing more than gunpowder stored in a magazine. When the opportune moment arrived, when the minds of the sepoys and the agricultural classes had been instructed to receive any ideas, however absurd, then the cartridges and the chapatties were rammed into them, and were exploded."

In conclusion, we would again express our regret that Col. Malleeson should have employed the pedantic mode of spelling names of places in India adopted by Government. Scientifically it may be correct, but it puzzles even Anglo-Indians unless they are well versed in Oriental languages. Much more does it puzzle the general reader, who certainly cannot be expected to recognize the familiar Meerut, for example, under the recent form of "Mîrath."

English Plant Names from the Tenth to the Fifteenth Century. By John Earle, M.A. (Oxford, Clarendon Press.)

THE Professor of Anglo-Saxon in the University of Oxford has given us a most delightful little book on old English plant names. We are not sure whether the botanist or the student of language will find it the more useful, but we are sure that to many who are neither the one nor the other it will give an additional zest to their summer wanderings to be enabled, under Mr. Earle's guidance, to peer back through the long vista of the past, and learn what our fathers thought concerning trees and wayside flowers. The modern names of plants have become mere signs, and tell us nothing, but their older forms are most of them instinct with the life and thought of the people who used them. Some, indeed, such as ac, the oak, and æsc, hæsch, the ash, were so old when we first find them in use that they can have conveyed no note of their origin to those who employed them, but by far the greater portion of the names we meet with in these lists have a distinct meaning. They are generally translations of the Latin or of Greek through a Latin medium, or set forth some fancied resemblance to other objects in nature. The interest of our forefathers in plants was in no sense scientific; to them they were important as medicines and as charms; and magic and medicine were so blended in their minds that it is not easy to tell whether the action of any given herb was thought to be produced by the plant itself or by the stellar or spiritual influences with which it was believed to be in harmony. The notion of physical law could never have been quite absent, but it was held so vaguely that in the popular mind it was almost always overshadowed by the mythological dream world. An important part of the popular belief was that the uses of each individual herb were indicated by its outward form. Hence have arisen the names of many of our common plants, and the names once acquired have become another starting-point for fresh developments in folk medicine. To this day these superstitions are prevalent; eyebright is still gathered as a specific for sore eyes, adder's-tongue for serpent bites, and more than one of the plants known as bloodwort to stop bleeding at the nose.

The dialike—hatred would not be too strong a term—which many of the peasantry have for certain quite harmless plants and the contemptuous names they have in consequence given to them are well explained.

"We can plainly enough," Mr. Earle says, "discern two motives in the old names, one leading to specific, the other to generic observation. There was the medicinal motive and there was the contemplation of nature, the former conscious and avowed, the latter implicit and instinctive. In most cases the plant was considered solely for its healing virtues; therefore an affectionate individual acquaintance was sought, while a certain antipathy was excited against plants that resembled but were not the true plant. For this temper of mind the plants in honour had names and were the right ones; any other that looked like them were merely the wrong sort and spurious. This was the prevalent habit, and it promoted towards those plants which were most useful and best known a jealous specific partiality."

The fifth word-list is from the vocabulary at the end of Ælfric's grammar. Its forms are of the first half of the eleventh century. In some respects it is the most interesting in the volume, as it contains the English forms of sundry natural objects not connected with botany. "Torrens," for instance, is glossed burns, "provincia," scir, and "nemus vel saltus," holt. Mr. Earle's comment on this last word is that it is used "now only in local names." This is surely an error, for, not to mention living authors, among whom several might be quoted who use it, a chain of authorities might be made out, beginning with Chaucer and ending with Clare, which would show that the word never died out in written English. In Norfolk, Cambridgeshire, and Lincolnshire it is constantly on the lips of the people.

In a fifteenth century vocabulary (number seven of Mr. Earle's collection) we find "Urticetum, a netyl-buske," and "Felicetum, a brakyn-buske." Busk, or in ordinary modern English bush, means, as we understand it, either a single shrub or a group of hard-wooded plants. We know no part of England where it could now be used for a patch of fern or a bed of nettles, nor do such glossaries as we have within reach furnish, so far as we can make out, anything analogous. The only parallel instance we can find is a passage in the Scotch version of 'The Battle of Otterbourne,' where Douglas says:—

Of bury me by the bracken bush,
Beneath the blooming brier;
Let never living mortal ken
That a kindly Scot lies here.

The genuineness of this ballad has more than once been called in question. Surely, however, this mention of the bracken bush is strong evidence that it is the work of one or more of the old minstrels, not of some modern imitator.

Mr. Earle's volume is so small that it may well serve as a pocket companion. He has, however, found room in it for an eloquent plea for English plant names and an English botanical nomenclature which shall be at once scientific and yet not so full of ugly, hard words as to drive all persons who have not learned Latin to despair.

"Botany," he says, "has this great practical advantage over all other sciences as a means of universal culture, that the materials of it are the most generally accessible of any scientific materials in the world... Why should we allow a pile of heterogeneous names, however admirably drilled and however necessary for world intercourse of botanists, to stand as a barrier between our people and the fairest gate of knowledge? These strange names are all but barren of interest in themselves; what interest they possess springs wholly out of the objects they represent; the objects and their mutual relations might be learned quite as effectually through congenial names if only one-thousandth part of the labour that has been expended on those were bestowed on these."

When we call to mind that the study of plants is one of the chief pleasures of many of the more intellectual among the operatives of our densely packed towns, it does seem little short of cruelty to compel them to pursue their studies among the briars and thorns of two dead languages. We sincerely hope that Mr Earle's most reasonable appeal will stir up some competent person to compile such a work as he proposes. It may be well to mention that Skinner's 'Etymologicon Lingue Anglicane,' 1671, contains a copious list of English plant names, from which all those which are manifestly taken from Latin and Greek are omitted. The 'Cruydt-Boeck' of Rembert Dodoens, published at Leyden in 1608, contains a similar catalogue along with others for the more important European tongues. We have not examined the other catalogues, but, so far as the English one is concerned, we can testify to its having been made by a person familiar alike with plant lore and the English tongue. It would be doing a service both to philology and botany if some one would reprint these interesting catalogues.

La Politique de Rabelais. Par Hermann Ligier. (Paris, Fischbacher.)

Les Portraits de Rabelais. Par Georges d'Albenas. (Montpellier, Camille Coulet.)

THE study of Rabelais published by Dr. Ligier adds little to the information we already possess. This fact is, indeed, conceded by the author, who pays full tribute to the almost exhaustive work of M. Gustave Fleury, 'Rabelais et son Œuvre,' which, on its first appearance four years ago, was reviewed in our columns, and to the less elaborate but instructive treatises or essays of Deléduze, J. Ch. Brunet, E. J. B. Rathery, Ginguéné, Lenient, François Guizot, Réville, Arnould, Michelet, and Sainte-Beuve. Since the effort to fit to real personages the fictitious characters of Rabelais was abandoned little real difficulty has attended those who have sought, "par curieuse leçon et méditation fréquente, rompre l'os et sugérer la substantifique mouelle" of his meaning. Individual references may be still obscure. Not seldom, probably, they are purposely so. Nothing was further from the intention of Rabelais than to make his meaning so plain that he who ran might read. Whole pages of his work are mere nonsense, a tub thrown to the whale of the Parliament or the Sorbonne. Still the purpose, moral, social, political, of Rabelais stands out as distinct for practical purposes as a beacon light. What thinkers have found in him that has reconciled them to his coarseness and induced them to wade through a mass of filth

Profound as that Serbonian bog
Betwixt Damietta and Mount Casius old
Where armies whole have sunk, is now the property of the world. So far in advance of subsequent writers did he stride in his insight into the sources of national welfare or national degradation, that we may acquit of hyperbole a writer in the Revue Politique et Littéraire when he says, "Je me contente de souhaiter que nous fassions jusqu'à Montaigne et Rabelais un pas en arrière; ce serait un grand pas en avant."

A work of Ginguéné, first published in 1791, and reprinted last year, 'De l'Autorité de Rabelais dans la Révolution présente et dans la Constitution civile du Clergé,' showed the manner in which the French Revolution, though it failed always to attain the goal to which Rabelais pointed, ran constantly along the grooves he had laid down. Since this effort, practically the first, to trace the serious purpose of Rabelais, his works, no longer in the Index, as in pre-revolutionary times they were, have received the attention they merit, and are now understood.

The course pursued by Dr. Ligier is that generally adopted in dealing with Rabelais. A glance at the sixteenth century, its actions (faits) and its opinions (idées), is succeeded by a picture of Rabelais in the midst of his surroundings. Then follows an exposition of his views concerning royalty and its surroundings, the clergy, the nobility, the administration of law, education, and the people. Upon these subjects little that is new remains to be said. Only in the chapter which deals with the views of Rabelais concerning the people do we find ourselves quitting what may now be called the high road of Rabelaisian commentary. It is a little amusing, perhaps, to find a phrase like the following, which appears in the chapter in question: "Rabelais a au plus haut degré le sentiment de la solidarité humaine." It is, however, true that Rabelais, in spite of his singular and, to men of Northern race, inexplicable delight in cruelty, displays a profound sympathy with humanity, especially with that portion of it which is feeble and oppressed. In this respect he differs, as Dr. Ligier affirms, not only from Machiavel, between whom and Rabelais a rather forced comparison is instituted, but from Erasmus and Montaigne. There is, indeed, according to English ideas, something thoroughly French in the manner in which beneficence as an idea is lauded and extolled by Rabelais, while in deeds it is wholly disregarded. In the slaughter of Dindenaunt (in English Ding Dong), his shepherds, and his sheep by Panurge, who, after causing the calamity, seizes an oar when he sees the animals and men in the water, "non pour ayder aux moutonniers, mais pour les engarder de grimper sus le nauf et evader le naufrage," Dr. Ligier sees nothing more than a proof of the cruelty of Panurge. It is, however, assumably witnessed by all on board the vessel, among whom are not only Friar John, who is avowedly present, but Pantagruel and Rabelais himself. It may, of course, be said that cruelty was as characteristic as licence of expression of the time of Rabelais, an age concerning which a contemporary poet wrote:—

Chacun, pour cacher son malheur,
S'attache le ris au visage
Et les larmes dedans son cœur.

While, however, coarseness of expression was useful or indispensable to Rabelais as a protection, the same cannot be said of cruelty. In his contempt for individual life, as in the other respects pointed out by Ginguéné, Rabelais seems to anticipate the French Revolution, and to link the tortures and holocausts of the Place Maubert with the decapitations of the Place de la Révolution, and the massacres at Béziers and Carcassonne with the noyades at Nantes.

Some value attaches to the defence of Rabelais that is founded by Dr. Ligier upon his letters. In spite of the inexplicable condemnation of Rabelais—for which subsequent, if inadequate, atonement was made—by Voltaire, the opinion that Rabelais was a drunken monk, or that he accompanied the Cardinal Jean du Bellay to Rome in the capacity of a buffoon, is now wholly disregarded. Were it otherwise the correspondence which remains, small in bulk as this is, would serve to dispose of such a fiction. The letters are those of a shrewd and accurate observer, and contain opinions upon the motives and actions of those in high places which account for the care taken by the writer that they should reach their destination without being tampered with or intercepted. Not before has the value of this testimony received its full tribute. Had nothing of Rabelais been preserved but his correspondence, we should have been compelled on the strength of this to accord him the character of a man of keen and penetrating insight. With the evidence of his serious purpose supplied thus by himself must be accepted the proofs afforded of the estimation in which he was held by men of highest mark with whom he was thrown into intimacy. The opinions of the most illustrious of these are quoted in the prefaces to the more important editions of the works. Dr. Ligier enumerates among the close friends of Rabelais who honoured him with their esteem and confidence Georges d'Armagnac, Bishop of Rodez, subsequently ambassador to Venice and Rome and Cardinal Archbishop of Toulouse and Avignon, and his successor at Venice, Guillaume Pelicier, Bishop of Narbonne, and afterwards of Maguelonne and Montpellier. In the letters of the latter the references to M. le docteur Rabelais are almost deferential. When he despatches to the neighbourhood in which Rabelais lives his maitre d'hôtel, Pelicier declares that

"Il ne veut pas le laisser passer sans présenter à Rabelais ses bonnes et affectueuses recommandations et faire offre qu'il n'épargne aucunement tout ce qu'il connaîtra être commode en sa maison."

In respect to the authorship of the fifth book, Dr. Ligier holds with the majority of critics, in opposition to the opinion of M. Burgand des Marets and Rathery, whose edition he uses, that the subject matter forms a continuation and development of what had gone before; that the augmented bitterness of tone is attributable to indignation at the fate which had attended his friends Marot, Étienne Dolet, and Buonaventure Desperiers; and that the inferiority of workmanship occasionally apparent is a sign of declining years. He accepts also, what is now generally believed, that the Calvinistic portion of this book is assignable to some one, probably Henri Estienne, by whom, after the death of Rabelais, it was prepared for the press. It must also be remembered, so far as concerns weaknesses of style as well as strength of expression, that this book never underwent at the hands of its author the kind of revision bestowed upon its predecessors. Rabelais was an artist—a fact which escapes the attention of some of his commentators. It is easy, however, to believe that the care bestowed upon revision was due less to desire to avoid literary censure than to escape the stake. "Jusqu'au feu exclusivement" Rabelais was prepared to go, but the limits within which safety was to be found were laid down on no map. Parliament and Sorbonne were both dead against him, and if once his firm ally the king—Francis I. or Henry II.—failed to see the point of his jokes his chances were but poor. So trivial was the offence which Dolet expiated at the stake, there was scarcely a chapter of 'Gargantua' or 'Pantagruel' that would not supply matter fifty times more dangerous. Had the fifth book, then, been published in the lifetime of Rabelais, it would doubtless have undergone close revision, and have assumed a somewhat different shape. As it is, however, the chief portion bears unmistakable traces of the hand of the master, and the interference of the editors did not probably extend far beyond the insertion of a little strong Calvinism. In his early life Rabelais was impressed with the teaching, probably oral, of Calvin. Nothing, however, was less likely to take a permanent hold upon the founder of Pantagruelism, the man of large faith, large life, large drollery, and large charity, than the bigoted and sectarian views of Calvin. Whenever, then, we find traces of Calvinism in the fifth book we are as certain that the original has been tampered with as we are when, in posthumous editions of the entire work and in the English translation, we find the condemnatory references to Calvin excised.

Numerous as are the portraits of Rabelais, there is not one the authority of which is incontestable. Scarcely a town or a château of importance is there in the districts between the Loire and the Garonne which does not boast the possession of one or more likenesses of the great Tourangeau. Most of these are, however, without a vestige of authority, and not a few are purely fantastic. Upon the existing portraits of Rabelais, or upon such of them as he has been able to inspect, M. Georges d'Albenas, of Montpellier, has written a study, the conclusions of which are entitled to respect. Three of those which have most influenced subsequent effort he has reproduced by a process of heliogravure. First in rank stands in his estimation the oil painting still shown at the Ecole de Médecine of Montpellier. Evidence to prove that this was in the place it now occupies in 1619, or between sixty and seventy years after the death of Rabelais, is supplied, since in the following year Rauchin, dwelling in the course of an inaugural address upon the physicians of eminence belonging to the Medical University of Montpellier, whose portraits he had caused to be placed in the "salle d'assemblées des professeurs," mentions in the list François Rabelais. Corroborative evidence of the antiquity and the fidelity of this portrait is also forthcoming. Scarcely inferior in value is said to be the portrait which is shown in the Bibliothèque de Genève, while one of two which form a portion of the Musée de Versailles is stated to have serious claims to consideration.

Among engraved portraits those by Léonard Gualtier and Michel Lasne, which present Rabelais in his advanced age, stand foremost. The engraving by Michel Lasne, like the Montpellier portrait, is reproduced in the volume, the third illustration being a portrait by Sarrahat, a skilful engraver of the early portion of the eighteenth century, to whom is assignable the responsibility of furnishing the type which has become generally popular.

That the portraits which have the strongest claim to acceptance are those which it is most pleasant to believe genuine students of Rabelais will readily believe. There are presented, indeed, in the pictures of Rabelais we recall two types of manhood so distinct that it is impossible both should be veracious. One, which depicts a man thoughtful and dignified, with a square massive head, broad brow, long nose, and wide nostrils, scarcely reveals the humourist behind the scholar; a second, with its protuberant forehead, laughing eyes, round and projecting cheeks, and sensuous lips, parted in laughter and displaying a splendid set of teeth, conforms exactly to the idea formed of Rabelais by those who know him wholly by report. The graver type, of which that at Montpellier is probably the original, is exhibited in the large and apparently modern picture of Rabelais which adorns the Hôtel de Ville of Chinon, his birthplace; the second, which is accepted by Sarrahat, is found not only in the Musée of Versailles, where it is numbered 3166 in the catalogue, but in the pictures preserved at the châteaux of Chenonceaux and Azay le Rideau, concerning which M. d'Albenas is silent. In the English editions in current use the portraits have no value. Evans's edition supplies a medallion slightly altered from one by Lasne in the Carte du Chinonais, which accompanies some editions of the works; Bohn gives a smirking face, in which an effort has apparently been made to combine the designs of Lasne and Sarrahat; and the portrait in the English version with M. Doré's designs, first printed by Camden Rotten, is amusingly idealized.

Narrative of the Second Arctic Expedition made by Charles F. Hall. Edited under the Orders of the Hon. Secretary of the Navy by Prof. J. E. Nourse, U.S.N. (Trübner & Co.)

THE sumptuous quarto must be considered an enduring protest against the historic charge that republics are ungrateful. The late commander of the Polaris was a sufficiently remarkable man, but his discoveries were not great. To science he added but little accurate information: his geographical explorations in the upper reaches of Smith Sound were shown by Sir George Nares's expedition to be even less than the world was willing to allow; while the energy and enthusiasm which under more favourable circumstances might have been devoted to sound work were squandered away on a search highly laudable in itself, but which must be considered, in the light of cold reason, as little better than a wild-goose chase. The truth is that poor Hall was—in the least offensive sense of the term—a great-hearted monomaniac, whose character unsuited him for acting under the orders of one better fitted for command than himself, and whose deficient education and general training rendered his appointment to the head of the Polaris expedition unfortunate for science. The story of that expedition need not be recapitulated. All has never been revealed, but we are already in possession of sufficient information regarding its proceedings to know that it failed mainly owing to dissensions, to want of discipline, and to the egotism of its commander being resented by those who considered that their superior attainments in book knowledge and navigation ought to have entitled them to more consideration than unhappily they received at his hands. To the Polaris expedition Hall sacrificed his life, and, whatever might have been his faults, out of the turmoil of scandal to which its proceedings gave rise his name emerges most creditably of all who took part in it. To this the United States have not proved insensible, and have treated his memory with all due respect. They published the history of the work accomplished by the Polaris with a splendour to which none of our Arctic expeditions has been considered worthy of aspiring. Having completed this task, Congress bought from Hall's relations, for 15,000 dollars, the papers and journals of his former expeditions, and commissioned Prof. Nourse to edit them in a work on which are lavished all the resources of the printer's, cartographer's, and engraver's arts. Indeed, the appliances of a government establishment have been drawn on with unnecessary liberality, for many of the costly photo-lithographs are, though interesting and decorative, not essential to the full comprehension of the text. However, as Uncle Sam pays for all, John Bull has no right to complain; but, on the contrary, ought to thank the Washington authorities for issuing such a volume for free distribution to the great libraries and scientific institutions of Europe and America.

Though, with true Western ornateness, Hall styled himself "Captain" on the title-page of his first work, he was, we believe, trained as a printer in Cincinnati, and until—seized with a fancy for engaging in the search for the remains of Franklin's expedition—he took passage on board a whaler for Cumberland Sound had never seen the sea. The vague, aimless life he led among the half-civilized Eskimo in Smith Sound is narrated in his 'Arctic Researches.' Returning from that expedition, he succeeded, though in the face of many obstacles, in gathering together sufficient supplies and funds for a second and more extended expedition, the object of which was to search King William's Land for any records of the Erebus and Terror which might be buried under cairns in the vicinity of the spot where McClintock had ascertained that the ships had been lost.

He did not, it is needless to say, discover any records, but he obtained various relics of the lost ships, and collected some more or less apocryphal stories regarding their hapless crews. Among other tales which for a time he firmly believed was one which represented Capt. Crozier as being still alive among the natives. This was, of course, a mere fabrication. Indeed, Hall fell into numerous errors of this description. He expected that every one ought to be as interested in his life's work as he was himself, and though afterwards he avoided this blunder, he extracted the most erroneous information from the Eskimo, simply because he put "leading questions" to them, and naturally received such replies as his witnesses saw he wished to obtain. During these sledge journeys he noted many useful particulars about native life, and had he been properly trained as an ethnologist and geologist he might have done much sound scientific work. As it is, we are everywhere met with loose statements, unsatisfactory theories, and an entire absence of data circumstantial enough to satisfy the requirements of modern research. Hall's defects of character also came out painfully on these expeditions. His sanguine temperament looked for enthusiasm equal to his own from all with whom he came in contact. The lukewarmness of the whaling captains, therefore, annoyed him, and he was always seeing opposition and mutiny where a man less of one idea might have found only ignorance and half-heartedness. As it was, he shot one of his men. The chief interest of the volume must, however, always remain with the notes about the Eskimo. The tribes on the western shores of Davis Strait and Baffin's Bay were never numerous, and of late years they have much decreased, and will in time disappear. Hence any particulars about them are interesting, more especially with a view to the comparison of their habits and traditions with those which Rink has so industriously collected from the opposite Greenland shore.

Prof. Nourse has himself no personal acquaintance with the Arctic regions, but in editing Hall's papers he obtained the valuable aid of Mr. Bryan, who was astronomer of the Polaris expedition. The result is that there are few errors to be noted in his pages, and very little which the specialist could have desired otherwise. Here and there, in such misnomers as "Lady Jane Franklin" (p. xvii) and "Admiral Collinson, C.B., now Elder Brother of the Trinity House" (p. 12), the editor shows that he is not quite abreast of British courtesy titles. But, apart from such excusable slips, he states the whole subject fairly, and while not unwilling to render that customary "homage, aids, and reliefs" which, as a "literary vassal," Maraulay declares a biographer must pay to his liege lord, he does not conceal the defects of Hall's character and the causes which led to the partial or entire failure of his expeditions. He, however, wastes much anxious thought over trifles. For instance, he seems undecided whether to call the natives of the Arctic regions "Innuits," "Eskimo," or "Eskimos," and finally resolves that, as Hall asserts they hated to be called by either of the two latter names, he should adopt the former. It was very natural that the natives of the Arctic regions should, like any other people, dislike being styled by a name which is strange to their language, though in reality the term "Innuits" is by no means universal. It means, at most, only "the people," as indeed do most aboriginal tribal names. "Eskimo," which is consecrated by long usage, and ought to be retained to designate the extreme northern race of America and the immediate Asiatic shore (Tusks), is not of French origin, as its old form of "Esquimaux" would lead us to suppose. It is in reality derived, not from an "Indian root signifying sorcerer," but either from the Abenaki "Eskimato" or the Ojibwa "Askimeg," the term in both cases signifying "those who eat raw flesh." Hence Prof. Nourse has gone beyond his commission when he spells the word sometimes as "Eskimos," and he twice misquotes Dr. Rink's "Tales and Traditions" in so far that he makes that writer call his late subjects "Eskimos." The book is illustrated by a profusion of maps. Some of these are fac-similes of native sketches, and are therefore of peculiar ethnographic value. Others are reproductions of Hall's own work, while several are general charts of the Arctic regions. These are, for the most part, up to date. It is, however, curious to notice that on the large pocket map prepared by the Washington hydrographer the Queen Charlotte Islands are represented as if they consisted not of three islands, but of one, and, instead of being perfectly well known, were unexplored on their eastern shore. These are, however, slight blemishes in a fine work, which gives us access to much hitherto unpublished information about early American voyages to the North, about the wintering of the whalers in Cumberland Sound, and the whale and seal trade generally, and lastly, but mainly, about the Eskimo, and the courageous man whose best years were spent among them, and of whose strange life this volume is the partial chronicle.

La Province Chinoise du Yunnan. Par Émile Rocher. Deux Parties. (Paris, Lemeray; London, Trubner & Co.)

Numerous attempts have of late years been made to open communication with Western China through the province of Yunnan. From the side of Burmah we have sent several expeditions into the province; from the north-west Russia has striven to reach the same goal, but without success; while the neighbourhood of Cochin China has induced the French to make repeated efforts to attain the same object from the south. The attempts made in 1866-69 by a French commission to find a practicable route by way of the Cambodia river having proved failures, there remained only the more direct and shorter line of communication by the Hung Kiang or Red River, which connects the south-eastern portion of the province with the Gulf of Tong-king. By this route the two termini are separated by only two hundred miles as the crow flies, and the river is navigable. The only point, therefore, to be discovered was the extent of that unknown quantity, the hostility of the intermediate independent tribes. This M. J. Dupuis, a French merchant, determined to put to the test, and after having overcome numerous obstacles thrown in his way, both by the Annamite authorities and the mountain chiefs, he succeeded in forcing his way into Yunnan.

At this time (1869) the Mussulman rebels were in possession of the greater part of the province, and M. Dupuis, sympathizing with the mandarins in their struggles against their turbaned enemies, volunteered to bring into the province by his newly discovered route some French guns for their succour. In the mean time, before the guns could arrive, it was arranged that M. Rocher, who had associated himself with M. Dupuis, should proceed at once to Yunnan by way of the Yang-tse Kiang, taking with him some light pieces of artillery, and that on his arrival he should occupy his time, until the advent of M. Dupuis, by making a survey of the mineral resources of the province. This programme was faithfully carried out, and two goodly-sized volumes contain the record of M. Rocher's share in the enterprise.

It has been remarked that there is an unusual want of religious clanship between the different bodies of Mussulmans in China, and this same fact forced itself on the attention of M. Rocher on his advancing into Yunnan, where, when a death struggle was going on between the Chinese and their Mohammedan fellow subjects, one would naturally have expected to find religious enthusiasm more than usually intensified. Speaking, however, of the neighbourhood of Tan-tan, M. Rocher says:—

"On almost all the ramifications of the chain of the Liang-shan there are hamlets peopled by Moslems, with whom the I-jên, or aborigines of these mountains, rarely mix. In spite of the presence of three distinct races, Chinese, Moslems, and I-jên, the Mohammedan rebellion counted only a very few adherents in this spot, and during seventeen years of civil war peace remained unbroken."

In other parts of the province things were a more warlike aspect, and even

"the merchants or buyers went armed to the teeth; usually they carry a leather sheath containing two sabres or cutlasses, with handles covered with a leaf of silver or some other metal, and sometimes adorned with precious stones, according to the wealth of the owner."

The investigation of some of the more accessible of the mines which abound in Yunnan fully occupied the time left at M. Rocher's disposal. There are probably not many regions in the world of equal area which are richer in minerals than Yunnan. In describing the plain of Lin-an, in the south-eastern part of the province, M. Rocher says:—

"Without speaking of cereals or other plants common to this district, the province possesses mines of great wealth; iron, copper, tin, silver, gold, lead, coal of various qualities are found together."

In another part of the province he found a palpable piece of evidence of the abundance of copper in the shape of a temple built entirely of that metal:—

"Not the least morsel of wood has been used in the construction; tiles, doors, windows, &c., all are of the same metal."

In his second volume he gives a systematic survey of the metallic resources of the province, which leaves nothing to be desired either in the way of fulness or accuracy.

As is well known, there exist a great number of indigenous tribes in Yunnan, and we could have wished that M. Rocher had interested himself more in studying their languages and their means of written communication. Speaking on this subject, he says: "These different tribes, of which we have told as much as we could learn during our travels in the province, have, so far as we know, neither a primitive religion nor written monuments." Capt. Gill, however, in the neighbouring province of Sze-chuen found, among cognate tribes, books written in hieroglyphic characters, and the probability is, therefore, that a more industrious search would have revealed the fact that works of a similar nature exist among the aborigines of Yunnan also. But M. Rocher would probably plead that the main object of his residence in the province was of sufficient importance to leave him little leisure to indulge in philological researches; and he has certainly done full justice to the history of Yunnan, both past and present.

At the close of 1872 illness compelled M. Rocher to seek medical aid at Shanghai, not before, however, he had welcomed M. Dupuis on his arrival from the Gulf of Tong-king. During the years 1871-72 so strenuously had the imperialists exerted themselves that they had little need of the guns which then reached them. City after city had fallen into their power, and at last, in January, 1873, Ta-li Fu, the only remaining rebel town of importance, became their prize. M. Rocher thus describes the use they made of their victory:—

"The Fu-t'ai (or Viceroy), under pretext of celebrating the deliverance of the city, invited all the Mohammedan chiefs to a grand dinner; those who had openly combatted the capitulation suspected a trap in this invitation, while those who had been the authors of it, and on whom honours had been heaped, saw in it only an ordinary ceremony. Yang Yu-ho alleged indisposition in order to stay at home, and sent one of his lieutenants in his place. All the other persons invited went; the Fu-t'ai received them well, praised them highly, and at the moment when they were passing into the banquetting hall soldiers posted with this purpose seized those of the guests who were pointed out to them, and seventeen heads rolled on the floor. Immediately the Fu-t'ai gave orders for the discharge of six shots as a signal for commencing the massacre in the town. It was the eleventh day of the occupation. What followed is indescribable: the soldiers throw themselves mercilessly even on those who had shown them hospitality, so that the population, which supposed the whole matter at an end, were taken by surprise, and did not even attempt to defend themselves at first. Presently the instinct of self-preservation asserted itself, and although the massacre continued, night permitted energetic men to form themselves into groups. In the villages of Lao-yang, Ta-chiao, and the suburbs to the north of the town, the victims were counted by thousands. There the soldiers, fatigued with cutting off heads, set the houses on fire, and waited with loaded muskets the rush of the inhabitants to the doors. After three days of this human butchery Ta-li and its neighbourhood presented an awful spectacle: out of 50,000 men, 30,000 had perished in these terrible days, and the rest were dispersed."

The River Tyne: its History and Resources.
By the late James Guthrie. (Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Reid.)

One who fell but little short of being a poet himself has said that none but poets should write about rivers. Had this canon been enforced, the public would have been deprived of an interesting and most instructive book. There is no conscious poetry in it, it is true, and no river in the north of England—perhaps not one in the whole island, the royal Thames only excepted—more fully deserves rich imaginative treatment. It is mysteriously intertwined with all our earliest history. What the men who dwelt by its side and fished in its clear waters called it before Cæsar's time we shall never know. That the Romans had a name for it seems certain, but it has probably not come down to us, though they have left some trace of themselves on almost every mile of its banks. It may be that the Saxon invaders first gave it the name it now bears, or, as is far more probable, adopted, with such change as their tongues found needful, the old designation. The name is not known before their time, nor can we now interpret it, or even tell with certainty of what speech it is a relic. Guesses more than we care to remember have been made, but not one of them has received the assent of competent philologists. From the days of Bede to our own the Tyne has been constantly a subject of discourse. Cutting in halves as it does the old kingdom of Northumbria, it runs through a line of country studded with points that have become memorable in northern annals. The abbays of Tynemouth, Hexham, and Jarrow may be said to have stood on its banks, and the blood of half the battles which were fought with the marauding Scotch to have mingled with its waters. Jarrow was a port in Eadric's time, and is said to have been able to accommodate at once the whole royal navy. There had been a military post at the spot now called Newcastle, on the Moot Hill, and the same place was pitched upon by Robert, the son of the Conqueror, as the site of a fortress. It was not, however, this building, but the new castle erected by his brother Rufus, which gave a name to the great coal emporium. A history of the Tyne such as we picture to ourselves should tell us of these things and of much else beside: of the long-lasting and especially cruel Border wars; of Saxon monasticism, and of the fate of the Tyne abbays after the monks had gone out and the lay lords come in; how Hexham has been "ruinated," as a Northumbrian would say, in quite recent days under the shallow pretence of restoration; and how Tynemouth was much more than a mere picturesque ruin when it was held for the Parliament in 1648 by Henry Lilburne, a brother of the notorious agitator Freeborn John, who, when the king's friends were making their last wild plunge, went over to them with the greater part of his troops, and held the place for Charles until it was stormed and the revolvers put to the sword by a body of troops despatched from Newcastle. The author dwells in the early pages on some of these things, and from the way they are treated we have little doubt but that he could have written a most interesting book about the great river's history as a whole. He preferred, however, to devote his attention almost wholly to its relations to traffic; and we do not blame him. There are so few books on mercantile subjects which are at the same time literature that it is pleasing to come upon one which, dealing mainly with shipping, navigation, dredging, and the coal trade, is at the same time easy, not to say agreeable, reading.

Coal is to Newcastle more than cotton is to Manchester. The exigencies of war may have called it into being, and the fish with which the Tyne and the sea abounded may have helped to enrich its early merchants, but for many a long day coal has been king there; and although iron is a pretender now claiming allegiance, it will be long before there is a change of dynasty. The English are a mercantile folk, but they have been slow in learning the simplest principles on which prosperous trading is based. We do not mean that the particular movement known as "free trade" did not make its way so rapidly as might have been looked for, though there may still be found in Parliament and the more secluded rural districts men who are said to be unable to comprehend the notion. Our thoughts go back to an earlier time, before protection, as our fathers understood it, was thought out as a principle. A battle many centuries long had to be fought against irritating restrictions and monopolies of almost every conceivable sort. Those who suffered of course complained loudly, but there were few even of the wisest who comprehended that causing the trader to work in shackles lessened the riches and power of the country. Historians have not dwelt on this phase of mediæval and more modern life as they ought to have done; but there has been good reason for this. Until quite recent days, though some of the more outrageous of the facts were known, the evidence was for the most part locked in manuscripts, and so scattered as to be inaccessible. A history of the north of England coal trade which should go into sufficient detail would be valuable for this purpose. What the lamented author has done in the matter is but to give a sketch. Slight as it is, thoughtful persons will find it profitable reading. The greater part of the volume is occupied by details of the important engineering works which have been from time to time undertaken for the improvement of the channel and mouth of the river. They are, we imagine, but dimly comprehended beyond the circle of a few professional engineers and the Newcastle, Shields, and Gateshead men who are personally interested in them. If such vast undertakings had been brought to a successful termination in France or Holland, Englishmen would have known all about them, for they would have had a place in guide-books. It would not be amiss if some of the travellers who think it needful to see Katwyk sluice and examine into the details of how Haarlem mere was drained would inform themselves as to the great works which have been undertaken and completed on the Tyne within the last few years. The author has much to tell about dredging, and shows how from a very small beginning this mode of deepening a river has become one of the most powerful of human agents, upwards of 5,200,000 tons having been removed from the bed of the Tyne in one single year. He does not, however, inform us who was the first person to whom it occurred to use the dredge for this purpose. Ordinary books of reference give no help. We believe it was employed in the Low Countries at an early period. On another matter he gives what to us is new knowledge.

"Steam vessels were," he says, "first used as tugs in 1818, on the suggestion of Mr. Joseph Price, of Gateshead. In the summer of that year a Hull trader, the Friends' Adventure, a laden vessel, was drawn by Mr. Price's vessel, the Eagle or the Perseverance, from Newcastle quay to the sea, being the first time a sailing vessel was ever towed by a steamboat."

Mr. Price was a benefactor to his fellow creatures in two directions. He was, we gather, a Gateshead shipowner, not a man who was anxious to show his scholarship. Had the latter been the case, instead of the good English word "tug," which every one can understand and pronounce, we should have had inflicted upon us some barbarous Greek compound, like unto those now countless others which cover us with shame whenever we open a modern dictionary. The work was left in manuscript by its author, and had not, we gather, undergone final revision. We find no signs of this in the text, which, so far as we have means of testing it, is almost absolutely trustworthy. The only error we have detected is the statement that glass is thought to have been introduced into England in the seventh century, whereas we know that it was employed and probably made here in the Roman time, if not earlier. It is also not quite accurate to speak with any hesitation whatever as to the use of pit-coal in the north of England by the Romans. Of late years the matter has been put beyond doubt. A cart-load of coal was found, just as the legionaries had left it, some time ago at the station of Cilurnum, and a quantity more has been come upon in the excavations at South Shields, in a position which makes it certain that the Roman inhabitants had brought it there.

An index ought to have been added, and it would have been well if the long plans, which are many times folded, had been mounted on linen. It is almost impossible to use the book without injury to them.

Of English Dogges, the Diversities, the Names, the Natures, and the Properties. A Short Treatise written in Latine by Johannes Caius of late Memorie, Doctor of Physicke in the Universitie of Cambridge. And newly drawne into English by Abraham Fleming Student. "Natura etiam in brutis vim ostendit suam." Scene and allowed. Imprinted at London by Richard Iohnes, and are to be sold ouer against St. Sepulchres Church without Newgate, 1576. ('Exchange and Mart' Office.)

A Treatise of Fysshynge wyth an Angle. By Dame Juliana Berners. Being a Fac-simile Reproduction of the First Book on the Subject of Fishing printed in England by Wynkyn de Worde at Westminster in 1496. With an Introduction by Rev. M. G. Watkins, M.A. (Elliot Stock.)

It is significant of the way in which the literary taste of our day is tending towards antiquarianism that two reprints of the same rare book should have appeared within a few weeks, almost within a few days, of one another. Mr. Arber has reproduced it in the third volume of that medley which he calls 'An English Garner,' and for the other reprint, it comes from the oddest and most unexpected source, to wit, from the office of the Exchange and Mart. It is with the latter volume only that we are concerned. The publisher's notice, which serves as preface, declares: "The following pages are a reprint, line for line, and even error for error, of the earliest book on dogs in the English language." Not that there is any pretence of the booklet being a fac-simile, for only "the title-page is an exact copy, taken by photography, of the one to the book in the British Museum," and, this being said, the reader is left without further note or comment. Dr. John Caius was one of the most famous men of his time, and the second founder of Gonville and Caius College, in the University of Cambridge. He was one of the last of those peripatetic students who went about Europe, from university to university, in search of new lore, and in the hope of collecting the last discoveries of the scientific investigators of his time. What Cornelius Agrippa had done, and Paracelsus and Conrad Gesner, that John Caius did. Assuming that the occult philosophers who were prying into the dark things of Nature had stores of tremendous secrets, which could only be revealed to an inner circle of votaries who should patiently sit at their feet and wait for the revelation of their mystic arcana, young Caius went to gather this,

The sacred knowledge, here and there dispersed
About the world, long lost or never found.

Born and bred at Norwich, he entered at Gonville Hall in the University of Cambridge, and after getting a fellowship at his college, he started off on his travels about 1539, with an unusual amount of learning, some little fortune, and a boundless and insatiable craving for knowledge. He actually became Professor of Greek at Padua. He dabbled in theology; he was an enthusiastic antiquary. He made copious notes upon all the famous libraries in Italy which he visited. He was an unwearied student of natural history, and beyond compare the first anatomist and the most renowned English physician of his generation. Of course he was at one time denounced as an atheist, and at another as a crypto-Papist; and indeed it seems that his days were shortened by the persecution of some ignorant bigots, who hounded on a fanatical mob—for it was no better—to pillage the doctor's college at Cambridge under pretence of destroying Popish vestments and other abominations.

The treatise 'Of English Dogges' was originally written in Latin, and published in 12mo. in 1570. The work was compiled in fulfilment of a promise made to Gesner some years before, and attracted at the time great notice. It was not till three years after its author's death that it appeared in an English version by Abraham Fleming, one of the most prolific scribblers of his day, whose name, though it is almost forgotten now, is yet the name of a man of no mean acquirements, and one whom his contemporaries regarded with respect. Fleming prefixed to his translation three specimens of his own composition,—one which he calls "A Prosopopoicall Speech of the Booke," in English verse; an address, "To the well disposed Reader," in English prose; and an "Epistola Dedicatoria," addressed to Dr. Perna, Dean of Ely, in exceedingly good and classical Latin. The "Prosopopoicall Speech" is, of course, an address by the book itself, which begins by remarking that some books deal with one subject, some with another:—

Some tell of serpentes sundry sortes,
Some tell of plantes the full effect:
Of English dogges I sound reportes,
Their names and natures I detect,
My forhed is but baulde and bare:
And yet my bodys beutifull,
For pleasunt flowres in me there are,
And not so fyne as plentifull.

It is to be presumed that by his "forhed" the speaker means his binding, for the title-page is by no means "baulde and bare." Having given us a taste of his poetical skill, Fleming explains himself more at large, and much more intelligibly, in his prose address.

"An ignorant man," he says, "would never have been drawn into this opinion, to think that there had been in England such variety and choice of dogges, in all respects (not only for name but also for quality) so diverse and unlike. But what cannot learning attain? What cannot the ray of knowledge open? What cannot the lamp of understanding lighten? What secrets cannot discretion detect? Finally, what cannot experience comprehend?"

Then, proceeding to eulogize Gesner and Caius, he winds up with a word to cavillers:—

"As for such as shall merr and match at the English abridgment and teare the English translation, being absent, with the teeth of spitefull envy, I conclude in brevity their eloquence is but curriake; if I serve in their meat with wrong sauces, ascribe it not to unskilfulness in coquetry, but to ignorance in their diet, for, as the poet saith,

Non enim est ars culin coque, sennae [sic] palato:
Nunquid coquus domini debet habere gulam.

It is not enough that a cook understand,
Except his Lords's stomach he hold in his hand."

When we are once handed over to Dr. Caius's own work, we find ourselves dealing with a book of really very great interest. In the manner of treatment of his subject the author, as might have been expected, starts on the old ambitiously analytical plan of dividing and subdividing his subject, as a Scotch minister does with his sermon; thence we learn that "All English Dogges be either of: a gentle kind, serving the game; a homely kind, apt for sundry necessary uses; a curriake kind, meet for many toyces." Having again subdivided their "kinds" in more than one arbitrary fashion, he proceeds at last to give a more particular account of the various sorts of dogs known in England, and in doing this he has produced what is for the modern reader as curious and amusing a little volume as he can well hope to find. One may turn over the pages at random, and the eye can hardly fail to light on something quaint and noteworthy in the matter, the language, or the illustrations. Thus it will be new to most people that there is a

"Dogge.....whom we call Terrars, because they (after the manner and custom of ferrets in searching for conies) creep into the groundes [terra?], and by that means make afraid, wyppes, and byts the Fox and the Badger in such sort that either they teare them in pieces with their teeth being in the bosom of the earth, or else hayle and pull them perforce out of their lurking angles, dark dungeons and close covers."

Neither is it known to mankind in general that "The Grehounde [sic].....hath his name of this word, Gre, which word soundeth Grades in Latin, in English degrees. Because among all dogges there are the most principal, occupying the chiefest place, and being amply and absolutely the best of the gentle kind of hounds."

The learned doctor had evidently a weakness for etymology, and even when he had said all he had to say in the way of description of his various "Dogges," he found it needful to add "A Supplement or Addition containing a demonstration of Dogges' names, how they had their Original," which supplement we seriously commend to the attention of Prof. Skeat and Mr. Wedgwood, not forgetting the editors of the Philological Society's new English Dictionary.

Dr. Caius had cultivated his faculties of observation, and his shrewd notes upon the genus homo, and especially upon that variety of it which is to be found in his own country, are sometimes very apt and very instructive. Thus, in giving an account of the spaniel, he says:—

"There is also at this day among us a new kind of dogge brought out of France, for we Englishmen are marvellous greedy gaping gluttons after novelties, and covetous covarantes of things that be seldom, rare, straunge and hard to get."

One of these "novelties," he tells us, happened in his own time:—

"A Hare (being a wild and skippish beast) was seen in England to the astonishment of the beholders, in the year of our Lord God 1564, not only dancing in measure, but playing with his former feet upon a tabaret, and observing just number of strokes (as a practitioner in that art), besides that, nipping and pinching a dogge with his teeth and claws, and cruelly thumping him with the force of his feet. This is no trumpery tale," he adds, "nor trifling toys (as I imagine), and therefore not unworthy to be reported."

Happily, however, he not only reports "things straunge and seldom," but he gives us, too, the every-day accounts of the "dogges" of his time. Whether the Canis lunarius—in English "the Mooner"—is still to be met with we are unable to say, but in Caius's time we infer that he was no rarity. His singular name, we learn, was given him

"because he doth nothing else but watch and ward at on ynche, waiting the wearisome night season without slumbering or sleeping, having and waving at the Moone,.....a quality in mine opinion straunge to consider."

Perplexing as this idiosyncrasy of the Mooner appeared to Dr. Caius, there were still "straunger" things to note. Take the following as an instance:—

"Some Dogges there be, which will not suffer fiery coals to be scattered about the hearth, but with their paws will rake up the burning coals, musing and studying first with themselves how it might conveniently be done. And if so be that the coals cast too great a heat then will they bury them in ashes and so remove them forward to a fit place with their noses."

After this the tricks of "the puppetly and peasantly curra, which some frumpingly tearme lysteing hounds," or of the "Dogge called the Daunser," or of him called "the Spaniel gentle or the Comforter" will appear comparatively tame, and yet the reader will find those sections—as, indeed, the whole book—full of charming passages, with a freshness and rugged beauty of language such as only the sixteenth century writers knew how to employ. The publishers have done well in bringing out so delicious a little volume, and it is sure to be well received.

But really the unhappy creature who tried to translate Fleming's "Epistola Dedicatoria," should be kept from such tasks for the future. Fleming addressed his letter "Doctissimo viro et Patrono suo singulari D. Perne." This is rendered "To the most learned man, and his especial patron E. Perne." It seems that the "translator" could not make out the meaning of the capital D, so he resorted to the expedient of cy-près, and substituted for it the next letter. Perne's name was Andrew. Again, Fleming reminds Perne that he was conjunctissimus with Caius, familiaritatis naru. In the "translation" we find this rendered "bound by ties of family to yourself." A few lines further on Fleming explains why he resolved on making his English version; because, he says, novitate rei nonnihil delectatur. It is hard to see how even a tyro should so bungle as to make this mean that the writer was "covered with delight with the novelty of its appearance." After this it is not surprising that the poor man should find himself hopelessly at sea when he comes upon the common idiom nascio an, or that he should suppose that "O most ornate er!" is a usual rendering for ornatissime vir, or that he should apostrophise Geener as "O talent worthy of a white stone!" And yet, after all, these and the like curiosities are hardly out of place in a book of this sort; they add a certain zest and piquancy to the volume, and are in keeping with the general "straungeness" of its contents.

That the race of learned bookellers is not yet extinct, as some grumblers are fond of asserting, might easily be proved if it were worth while to do so. As long as men continue to collect libraries, to hunt for book rarities, to be curious in their taste for tall copies, first editions, unique volumes, or even famous binders' specimens, so long will there continue to be intelligent and enterprising booksellers, who will exhibit enthusiasm in their pursuits, and who will inevitably become men of wide and recondite learning, and, almost as inevitably, chivalrous and accomplished bibliophiles themselves. Mr. Elliot Stock is one of these. No mere trade venture or hope of realising a money return could have suggested the superb reprint of Dame Juliana Berners's book. It is not only a reprint in fac-simile as ordinarily understood. Such "fac-similes" are far from answering to the description given of them by their editors. The volume before us is actually a reproduction by photography of the original book as published by Wynkyn de Worde in 1496, and printed on paper specially manufactured for the publisher at considerable cost. So exact is the resemblance of the new to the old that it would require but very little manipulation by a skilful craftsman in the art of getting up a forgery to produce from Mr. Stock's reprint a copy which any one but an expert might well be excused for accepting as a genuine Wynkyn de Worde. For all practical purposes the reprint is as good as the original. The number of diligent students of our early printed literature has of late increased so largely, and the minute scrutiny to which such early printed books are subjected is so much more common than it used to be, that reprints of this character, on which entire confidence can be placed, have now something more than a merely æsthetic value. Mr. Stock is doing a real service to English literature in enabling careful students to examine for themselves such points of interest as the spelling, punctuation, and typography of the early printers, and all but bringing to our own library tables those precious rarities which hitherto few men were fortunate enough to catch a sight of more than once or twice in a lifetime. We are glad to see that Mr. Stock announces the appearance before long of 'The Book of St. Albans' as a companion volume. We heartily hope that the venture may meet with all the success it deserves, and we must express our belief that if English bibliophiles know their own interest they will not be slow to encourage such magnificent undertakings as this. Independently of higher considerations, it is by no means improbable that this small issue of Mr. Stock's beautiful reprint may be absorbed far more rapidly than any similar work would have been even ten years ago.

NOVELS OF THE WEEK.

The Shadow of a Life. By Beryl Hope. 3 vols. (Allen & Co.)

Ard Righ Deighnach na Teanhrach.—The Last Monarch of Tara: a Tale of Ireland in the Sixth Century. By Eblana. (Dublin, Gill & Son.)

Steadfast unto Death. By Mrs. Berens. (Remington & Co.)

MISS ELLA HAMILTON, who is supposed to tell the story of 'The Shadow of a Life,' is a remarkable autobiographer, for she never fails to remark upon her own method of address or the manner in which she receives the words of others: "My face became rather rosy at this reminder"; "I said rather flippantly"; "I said indifferently"; "I laughed scornfully"; "I answered nervously"; "I answered with quivering lips" (these quivering lips, by the way, are much used to express emotion by men as well as women). Altogether, the young lady seems throughout her story to be attitudinizing before a glass. She is, when the story opens, the daughter of a country doctor, and her great desire is to get into better society. "Why was it, I thought, that Heaven had placed me in such a peculiar position that the only available friends I had were people with whom it was impossible to associate?" Her discontent is much increased when she has the opportunity of contrasting the lives of Lady Constance Milford and her set with those of her Halton neighbours. When she calls on the Thorburns,

"a boy of about fourteen presented himself before us, with very grimy hands and a striped jacket which was much too large for him... His hair looked as if it had not been brushed for a considerable time, though it was plastered with hair-oil, which sent forth a fragrant odour, and he had evidently been eating onions. He seemed as if it had caused him considerable exertion to get to the door, for he panted prodigiously, which improved the flavour of the onions for us!"

When she goes as governess to Lady Constance's friend she is terribly afraid of being treated with rudeness and hauteur. However, she is kindly used, and flirts with a Capt. Douglas. "I felt that I was very naughty to flirt with him in this manner, but it was very nice," &c. It will be observed that Miss Ella is a rather vulgar mix, and when, by one of the strange revolutions common in fiction, the doctor turns out to be a nobleman in disguise, and his elder brother is slaughtered in a railway accident to pave the way for his becoming an earl, "Lady Ella's" promotion considerably exceeds her merits.

'The Last Monarch of Tara' is a tale written with the object of giving a picture of life in Ireland in the sixth century. The book has an Irish and an English title, and one of the means which the author adopts to bring Irish life before the reader is the introduction of numbers of modern Gaelic words as glosses embedded in the text:—

"After traversing several of these streets, they found themselves in the agricultural part of the monastery; looking in at the seamhach (stables) for the horses and carts, and at the buailidh (booleys) for the ba (cows), caoire (sheep), and muca (pigs)."

The story begins with the arrival of a Greek student in Meath, and describes what he saw of Ireland and the historical events which took place up to his appointment to the chair of Greek in an Irish college in the year of the death of Dermait Mac Cearbhaill, last King of Tara. Tara and its lands were probably held by the chief king of Ireland as his demesne because they were in the centre of the best pastures of the country. Cattle were the measure of wealth, and the pasturage of Tara was the revenue attached to the office of ardrigh, or king of all Ireland. From his demesne the ardrigh was called King of Tara, and the name remained long after the place had ceased to be the king's home. Thus, by the last monarch of Tara, Eblana means the last ardrigh who lived on the lands, and not the last chief king of Ireland. Tara owed its desertion, according to Irish historians, not to a foreign foe, but to the curse of a native ecclesiastic. King Cearbhaill violated the sanctuary of St. Ruadhan by dragging out an enemy who had taken refuge there, whereupon Ruadhan, as is told in the chronicle called the 'Book of Clonmacnoise,'

"and a bishop that was with him took their bells that they had, which they rung hardily, and cursed the king and place, and prayed God that no king or queen ever after would or could dwell in Tara, and that it should be waste for ever, as it fell out accordingly."

Eblana, in her attempt to depict life in Ireland in the days of Dermait, shows an enthusiasm for her country which deserves admiration, but this is the only merit of her book. If the Irish of the sixth century were to be made more real to us by the use of Irish words, it should have been by Old Irish words, and not by nineteenth century forms. But the book has a graver defect in its ludicrous misrepresentation of the state of Ireland. The period is not one which need be constructed conjecturally. Some materials for a true picture are to be found in old tales and in the ancient laws, which give an unconscious view of the state of society. A short study, for example, of the lives of Irish saints and of early Western theology would teach that all the Greek known in Ireland in the sixth century was the character and a very limited vocabulary. It is curious to compare the false picture, as drawn by Eblana, with the true, as given in the volumes of the Irish laws. Eblana thus depicts female life in the sixth century:—

"She [the queen] was surrounded by her ladies of honour and provincial queens, princesses, and ladies, all arrayed in the greatest magnificence. The ladies.....discussed them [the laws] in all their bearings, religious, civil, and social; then passing from those to a variety of other subjects, viz., literature, match-making, &c., after which they amused themselves by chess playing, listening to the tales of the times of old; again, to the music of the creit (harp) or the ceis (charmer), anon to the songs of the maidens; sometimes they would walk through the various apartments of the grianan; sometimes they would go out for a better sight of the various amusements of the people than could be obtained from the windows, or would drive in their chariots through the surrounding country."

The following is the reality as shown in the history of a law relating to women:—

"Adamnan happened to be travelling one day through the plain of Bregia with his mother behind him, when they saw two armies engaged in mutual conflict. It happened then that Ronait, the mother of Adamnan, observed a woman with an iron reaping-hook in her hand dragging another woman out of the opposite battalion with the hook fastened in one of her breasts, for men and women went equally to battle at that time."

Eblana describes great houses two hundred feet long, with pillars and candelabra:—

"Most of the middle-class houses were oblong buildings divided into three parts by two rows of pillars, which supported the roof. The fire and candelabrum were in the central division, which was about two-thirds of the whole length."

But in a legal tract on the noble classes, which is not likely to diminish their splendour, the aire-forgaill, a noble corresponding in position to the Duke of Norfolk, is described as having a house not more than thirty feet long. Eblana denounces with some justice the ignorance of things Irish which prevails in Ireland, but if she had herself mastered some of the literature of the country before writing she might have given the uninformed public a true and well-founded, instead of a false and groundless, view of the state of Ireland in the sixth century.

'Steadfast unto Death' is "a story of the Irish famine of to-day," the scene being laid in the west of Ireland, and the time being last winter. The hero who is steadfast unto death is tried and executed for the murder of an estate agent in which he was not concerned. But to have proved his innocence he must have condemned the good-for-nothing husband of the woman who had formerly been his sweetheart, and therefore he prefers to remain silent. It is hardly within the powers of the ordinary writer of fiction to succeed with such an extraordinary act of heroism. Fiction rather demands that there should be a reprieve. That such a blunder should be carried out would be too painful if the story were presented with vigour. Fortunately for the reader, Mrs. Berens does not possess the skill to wound him very deeply. Such a story requires more careful treatment in detail. It is impossible for one's mind to accept the statement that a man should have been convicted of murder last spring because there were found in his pockets some bullets which fitted the pistol found near the murdered man's body. What makes the matter worse is that the murderer confessed the crime to his own little daughter, who was the hero's particular friend, and that the hero contrived to get the murderer shipped out of the country. A very little ingenuity, therefore, would have improved the girl's character, which seems peculiarly heartless, even at her tender age, and given a semblance of probability to the story. But the author's object seems to have been to show that justice fails sometimes and allows the innocent to be punished. That, unfortunately, is true, but it is absurd to suppose that such a mistake could be made in the case presented by Mrs. Berens. The book cannot be passed over without notice being called to the fact that Mrs. Berens writes the phrase corde que corde correctly,—a thing which the reader of novels will hardly remember to have seen before. The illustration which serves as a frontispiece does not add to the attractiveness of the book, being ill drawn and very carelessly engraved. The outline stamped on the cover is much better.

LAW BOOKS

A Treatise on the Law of Negligence. By HORACE SMITH, B.A. (Stevens & Sons.)

THE subject of this treatise is one of great and growing importance. "It cannot be doubted," as the author says, "that in the progress of civilization a constantly increasing amount of care is required of men in proportion to the increased skill and intelligence which they are found to possess, to the increased difficulties of the duties which they undertake to perform, and to the keener sense of responsibility towards others which is characteristic of a more refined age"; and there is truth in the statement which he adds, that "there is a tendency both in the recent judgments of the judges and in the enactments of the Legislature to widen the responsibilities of men in their conduct towards each other." The work is divided into eight chapters. In chapter i. the subject is defined and its divisions mapped out; chapter ii. deals with "neglect of duties requiring ordinary care"; chapter iii. with "neglect of duties requiring skill or more than ordinary care"; chapter iv. with "neglect of duties requiring less than ordinary care"; chapter v. with "contributory negligence"; chapter vi. with "presumptions of negligence"; chapter vii. with "injuries causing death (Lord Campbell's Act)"; and chapter viii. with "damages." We think that Mr. Smith has produced a useful work, though on one great branch of the subject, viz., "negligence in the management of ships," it is not, and does not profess to be, an exhaustive treatise.

The Law relating to Money-Lenders and Borrowers: being a Treatise on Bills of Sale, Personal Security, and Monetary Dealings with "Expectant Heirs." By DANIEL RANKIN MACALPIN. (Reeves & Turner.)

THE objects of this treatise appear to be to discuss the law relating to usurious contracts, and to state the risks specially incidental thereto. The author also hopes that the work may be of service to "unfortunate borrowers who are often tempted into contracts the legal effect of which they do not understand." The subject of bills of sale occupies about two-thirds of the work, the remaining third being devoted to a consideration of I.O.U.s, promissory notes, bills of exchange, and "money-lending transactions with 'expectant heirs.'" In an appendix several forms of bills of sale are given, and certain Acts of Parliament, including the important Bills of Sale Act, 1878, are reprinted. The work, particularly the chapters on bills of sale, will be found of use by persons who have to do with the branch of law treated of, and we hope that "unfortunate borrowers" may learn wisdom from Mr. Macalpin's labours.

PHILOLOGICAL BOOKS.

Neuägyptische Grammatik. Von Adolf Erman. (Leipzig, Engelmann.)—This is one of the best Egyptian grammars which have yet appeared. It treats of the language as known from the hieratic papyri of the New Kingdom, as it is called, these documents being chiefly of the nineteenth and subsequent dynasties, and is far more methodically arranged and fuller of examples than some of the later Egyptian grammars. The differences of style between the hieroglyphic and hieratic writings are of course well known to the students of hieratic papyri, but have not yet been fully embodied in grammars. The numerous examples cited to illustrate each grammatical form are most valuable, and an attentive study of them would render the student master of the hieratic style of writing and the grammatical construction of Egyptian. He would then only have to contend with palaeographical difficulties, which in some cases are by no means slight. The author has certainly thoroughly placed the subject before his readers. Of course, the research is not altogether novel, the late C. W. Goodwin, Mr. Le Page Renouf, Prof. Lushington, and others in this country having treated or touched on grammatical forms or translated from the hieratic; while on the Continent M. Chabas, M. Lauth, Prof. Eisenlohr, Maspero, and others have given translations and transcriptions of hieratic papyri, and afforded the author the opportunity of completing this special work. The examples have been transcribed into hieroglyphic forms and transliterated according to the scheme proposed by M. Lepsius in 1874, and universally adopted. The hieratic style is, of course, only available for advanced scholars, but a comparison of the examples cited by the author with the hieratic papyri from which they are derived would soon render any student master of the hieratic style and script. The work is executed in the manner best calculated to advance a knowledge of the grammar. All it wants is an index.

Dr. G. W. Leitner, Principal of the Lahore College, has published a small but important pamphlet upon the language of the Bashgeli Kafirs, a portion of the interesting and secluded pagan mountaineers occupying the summits of the Hindu Kush, with whom we are now being brought into relations. This is a very valuable contribution to our scanty knowledge of this Aryan language of the Indian family.

The Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge has published a translation of the Book of Common Prayer in the language of the Ojibbeway Indians of North America, in the peculiar syllabic character which the missionaries have fashioned for themselves. It is much to be regretted that they should have done so; it may be convenient for the moment, but the return to the syllabic method, which has been exploded for more than two thousand years, is a mistake and will retard the civilization of the people which use it.

We have received the fifty-seventh Annual Report compiled by the Secretary of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland, which gives a very complete account of the publications of all countries relating to the history and literature of the East, of discoveries of MSS. and inscriptions, as well as of books in preparation. The last, however, we think might have been omitted in a report, for many of them remain often in a state of preparation.—M. Renan's annual report in the Journal Asiatique gives, as usual, an account of publications made in France only, and is, as may be expected, written in a brilliant style. M. Renan, however, we are sorry to say, is too polite in his short notices of works, for if he is not always laudatory he never criticises, and seldom gives his own views in a determined way. Thus, for instance, speaking of M. Halévy's new publication on the so-called Accadian or Sumerian inscriptions, he says:—"M. Guyard a pris parti pour M. Halévy dans la querelle de ce savant contre le reste de l'école, et reconnaît dans les textes qu'on a qualifiés d'accadiens ou de sumériens une cryptographie, non une langue réelle.....M. Oppert n'admet pas l'hypothèse de M. Halévy, non plus que M. Lenormant." We should have expected to know which side M. Renan, as one of the representatives of Semitic studies in the Académie des Inscriptions, takes. We may mention another instance. Of M. Schwab's translation of the letter of Elijah of Pessaro (the passages concerning Cyprus appeared in the Athenæum two years ago, a fact ignored both by the French translator as well as by the reporter) M. Renan says:—"Le style hébraïque est, à ce qu'il paraît, remarquablement pur." The Athenæum, in noticing M. Goldberg's edition of Elijah's letter, stated that not only is the edition full of clerical mistakes, but that even lines are omitted in it. On the other hand, the Hebrew in which the letter is written is far from being correct and pure, even from a Rabbinical point of view.

The first volume of the Atti del IV. Congresso Internazionale degli Orientalisti (Florence, Le Monnier), just issued, contains many interesting memoirs—on hieroglyphs by MM. Schiaparelli, Naville, and Maspero; on the decipherment of the Lybico-Berber inscription by M. Letourneux; and on Gheez (Amharic) by M. Sapeto. In the Semitic department we may mention M. Lenormant's essay on Adonis-Tammuz; a paper on the first home of the Semites, by Dr. Hommel, reproduced in his book 'Die Sangeethere im Arabischen'; and Prof. Ascoli's important memoir on early Jewish epitaphs in the province of Naples (the last two have been already noticed in our columns). In the Arabic branch we find several articles on Astrolabes; on philosophy by Prof. Dieterici; and Ibn Sab'in's letter to the Emperor Frederic II. (the last was noticed in the Athenæum). Prof. Weil's essay 'Mahomet avait-il écrit?' and Prof. Krehl's memoir, 'Ueber die Sage von der Verbrennung der Alexandrinischen Bibliothek durch die Araber,' are very instructive. The latter comes to the same conclusion from Arabic sources as Gibbon did, viz., that the Museum Library in Alexandria was no more in existence in the time of Omar; the Arabs found, in consequence, nothing to burn, except, perhaps, some minor libraries.

RUSSIAN BOOKS.

M. MICHEL DRAGONOFF, formerly Professor in the University of Kiev and editor of several valuable collections of Little-Russian songs and stories, but now, thanks to Russian bureaucracy, the chief intellectual centre of Russian revolutionary thought at Geneva, has lately printed several books and pamphlets which are now before us. His "Ukraine collection," named 'Gromada' or 'The Commune,' is now in its fifth volume; but as it is in "Little-Russian" the circle of its readers is naturally restricted. For the same reason the "novel of popular life" by MM. Mirny and Bilik, entitled 'Khlib Revut' vol,' &c., a title explained by the authors as equivalent to the French proverb, "Les chevaux se battent quand il n'y a pas de foin dans le râtelier," and the tale called 'Pan-Narodol'ubets,' or the 'Democratic Lord,' are likely to be perused by few foreigners. But the four pamphlets lately published by M. Dragonoff are in the better known language of Great Russia, and are therefore more accessible to the public. The chief aim of two of them, 'Solovy's Basyami ne Kornyat' ('Fables won't feed a Nightingale') and 'Bulko bui Boletu, a Cherti Budut' ('Where there is a Swamp, there will Devils be'), is to prove that in spite of the improvements effected by Loris Melikof the troubles of Russia cannot be brought to an end, and "no serious advance on the part of Russia is possible, unless her fundamental laws are altered in the direction of political freedom." In 'Terrorism and Liberty' the same ideas are maintained, a strong protest being made against the apparently unwise, decidedly harsh proceedings of officials with regard to the impulsive class of students at the universities. In much of what is said about the dull cruelty of those officials most readers will agree; but few will sympathise with the tone in which the Nihilist murders and other outrages, which have lately brought liberal opinions into discredit in Russia, are discussed. According to M. Dragonoff, those demonstrations are not at all of a Socialist character. The European Socialists, he says, struggle against capital. Of what account to them are crowned heads? It is only necessary, he adds, to remark the persons against whom the Nihilist proceedings were directed, to understand the real meaning of those actions: "Spies, Crown lawyers, police masters, gendarmes, finally the Tsar—all servants and representatives of political, and not economical, power." The preface to 'Byelinsky's Letter to Gogol'—a letter written in 1847—is chiefly devoted to the Little-Russian question so fully discussed in the 'Gromada,' the chief aim of which journal, according to its editor, is "the application of the idea of European federal socialism to the Ukraine, otherwise Little-Russia, divided between Russia, Poland (Galicia), and Austria-Hungary (the Bukovina and Ugorskaya Rus)."

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

MR. W. J. FITZPATRICK has printed an unpublished Essay on Education and the State of Ireland, by Bishop Doyle. He has also republished his Life of that notable prelate, which on its first appearance was much praised by the Athenæum. It has been long out of print. The present issue contains all Dr. Doyle's letters to Spring Rice, and a large number of other letters now printed for the first time. Messrs. Gill & Son, of Dublin, are Mr. Fitzpatrick's publishers.

We have received from M. Calmann Lévy, of Paris, the ninth volume of the reprint of M. Louis Blanc's letters from England, which contains those for 1869. The work continues to be defaced by a great number of printer's errors.

MR. BERNARD QUAINANCE's latest General Catalogue of Books is a wonderful volume. It was originally issued in numbers from July, 1877, to November, 1879, and is now published as a complete whole. The number of books included in it is 21,809. With the help of the table of contents and the general index it is not impossible to find one's way about in this vast list. In many cases the descriptions of the books are made more full by the addition of interesting notes and extracts, and in every respect it is obvious that the work has been done with much labour and care.

We have on our table Every-Day English, by R. G. White (Trübner).—Papers of the Manchester Literary Club, Vol. VI., edited by J. H. Nodal (Manchester, A. Heywood).—The Folklore Record, Vol. III. Part I. (Nichols & Sons).—Sanitary and Social Lectures and Essays, by O. Kingsley (Macmillan).—Short Studies of American Authors, by T. W. Higginson (Trübner).—A Comparative Grammar of the Gaudian Languages, by A. F. R. Hoernle (Trübner).—Text-Book of Elementary Plane Geometry, by J. Petersen (Low).—Science Lectures for the People, 1879-80 (Heywood).—The Practical Fisherman, Part VII. ('The Bazaar' Office).—Progress of Dentistry, by J. J. Wedgwood (Marsh & Co.).

—Brain and Nerve Exhaustion, by T. S. Dowse (Baillière).—"Change" as a Mental Restorative, by J. Mortimer-Granville (Bogue).—The Highland Handbook and List, July (Low).—Text-Book of Historical and Geographical Terms and Definitions, by J. Oswald (Simpkin).—Johnston's Bible Atlas (Johnston).—Plain Living and High Thinking, by W. H. Davenport Adams (Hogg).—College Days at Oxford, by the Rev. H. C. Adams (Griffith & Farran).—The Shawnee Prophet, by E. and L. Egglestone (Ward & Lock).—Picked Up in the Streets, by E. Rowe (Allen & Co.).—John Noakes and Mary Styles, by C. Clark (J. R. Smith).—Eddertine, and other Poems, First Series, by W. T. Maseon (Stock).—The Sacrifice: a Drama, by D. Sinclair (Wigan, 'Observer' Office).—Echoes from the Orient, by E. King (Kegan Paul).—The Historical Poetry of the Ancient Hebrews, Vol. II., by M. Heilprin (New York, Appleton & Co.).—The Passion Play at Ober-Ammergau, by F. Schoeberl (Munich, Krull).—Theosophy and the Higher Life, by G. W. (Trübner).—The Jesus of History and the Jesus of Tradition Identified, by G. Solomon (Raeves & Turner).—The Children of Holy Scripture, by L. Massay (Camell).—The Principles of Catholic Reform, by M. H. Loyson (Rivingtons).—Der Gott des Christenthums, by Dr. J. Rei (Prague, F. Ruvnac).—Εὐρυπαρμάρια 'Εὐλαπρία, by Ἰωάννης Β. Τέλλου (Buda-Pesth). Among New Editions we have The Moor and the Lock, 2 vols., by J. Colquhoun (Blackwood).—Domestic Economy and Household Science, by R. J. Mann (Stanford).—The Construction of Gas-Works, by S. Hughes, rewritten by W. Richards (Lockwood).—Advice to Singers, by a Singer (Weiss).—Sermonic Fancy Work, by J. P. Ritchie (Whittingham).—Luxurious Bathing, by A. W. Tuer (Field & Tuer).—and Geflügelte Worte, by G. Buchmann (Berlin, F. Weidling). Also the following Pamphlets: In Memoriam Louis Eugène Napoleon, by J. H. Hawley (Mitchell).—Can Disease protect Health? by E. Robinson (E. W. Allen).—The Treatment of Cancer and Tumours, by A. Marsden, M.D. (Wyman & Sons).—and Conciliation and Arbitration in Trade Disputes, by G. Howell (Sotheran).

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

St. Athanasius's Discourses on the Incarnation of the Word of God, with English Translation, &c., by Rev. J. Ridgway. 12mo. 5/6.

Fine Art.

Illustrations (E. S.) Designs for Church Embroidery and Casket Work from Old Examples, 8vo. 1/6 cloth case. Bodley's (E. R.) Scottish Arms, being a Collection of Armorial Bearings, A.D. 1270-1678, 1 vol. folio, 210/6.

Poetry.

Sharp's (J.) Poems and Hymns, 12mo. 4/6.

History and Biography.

McCarthy's (J.) History of Our Own Times, Vols. 3 and 4, 8vo. 12/6 each, cl. Walker's (J.) The Volunteer Force History and Manual, 4/

Philology.

D'Aubigné's Histoire de Bayart, with Grammatical and Explanatory Notes by J. Bud, 12mo. 3/6. Dowse's (L.) French Pronunciation and Reading, 12mo. 2/6. Horace's Epistles, Book 3, and Epistola ad Pisonem, Latin Text after Orellius, with English Commentary and Notes by Rev. Sir E. W. Cox, 12mo. 2/6.

Science.

Carr's (G. S.) Synopsis of Elementary Results in Pure and Applied Mathematics, Vol. 1, 8vo. 12/6. Mamer's (F. A.) New and Easy Method of studying British Wild Flowers, 8vo. 10/6.

Literature.

Auerbach's (B.) Brigitte, a Tale from the German by C. Dell, 12mo. 2/6. (Thos. Miller's German Authors.) Cooper's (N. C.) What will Society Say? 2 vols. 8vo. 21/6. Douglas's (Mrs. M.) Two Rose Trees, the Adventures of Twin Sisters, 8vo. 2/6. Germain's (Mrs. E. A.) Left to Starve, and No One wants the Blame, 8vo. 2/6. Lloyd's (W. D.) The Undiscovered Country, 8vo. 10/6. Lloyd's (Mrs. D.) Arnold Leigh, a Novel, 8vo. 10/6. Pictures and Prattle for the Nursery, 4to. 2/6. Russell's (W. C.) A Sailor's Boyhood, 3 vols. 8vo. 31/6. Warren's (Hon. J. L.) Guide to the Study of Book-Plates (Ex-Libris), 8vo. 16/6.

FOREIGN.

Theology.

Fleiss (Dr. Viet.) Die Chronologie der Bibel, 8vo. Schuchowits (H.) Der Postivismus im Mosaismus, 8vo.

Colich Theodori Fragmenta Theologica, ed. P. Krueger, 8vo. Joly (Georges Anselme de) De la Propriété Littéraire et Artistique, 4fr. Frost (A.) Etude sur le Régime Ancien de la Propriété, 3fr.

Philology.

Dilmann (A.) Der Geschichte d. assyrischen Reichs im 4 bis 6 Jahrh., 2m. 50.

Science.

Göbelitz (Dr. H. B.) u. March (Dr. W. v. d.) Der Geologie v. Bismarck, 8m.

General Literature.

Audet, Grand, et Motton: Supplément à la Cuisinière de la Campagne et de la Ville, 3fr. Conférences Pédagogiques de Paris en 1880: Rapports et Procès-verbaux, 3fr. Montepin (X. de) Jean-Jacques, Suite et Fin de l'œuvre No. 12, 3 vols. 4fr. Roussière (Paul): Le Secret d'Or, 3fr.

LOVER'S SILENCE.

WHEN she whose love is even my air of life Enters, delay being past, to bless my home, And ousts her phantom from its place, being come Herself to fill it; when the importunate strife Of absence with desire is stilled, and life With Heaven is earth; why am I stricken dumb, Abashed, confounded, awed of heart, and numb, Waking no triumph of song or welcoming life? Be thine own answer, Soul, who long ago Didst see the awful face of Beauty shine, Silent, and silently rememberest yet That glory which no spirit may forget, Nor utter, save in Love, a thought too fine For souls to ignore or mortal sense to know.

A. MARY F. ROBINSON.

"GREEK" IN THE 'ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA.'

Sept. 3, 1880.

A WRITER on the 'Encyclopædia Britannica' (vols. x.-xi.) in the Athenæum of September 4th did me the honour of describing my article on Greek history as "brilliant," but complained that I had represented ostracism as a punishment inflicted on a person accused of a definite offence. Will you kindly allow me to inform my courteous reviewer that I must have failed to make my meaning clear! The sense which I intended to convey was that Themistocles was popularly accused of complicity in the intrigues of Pausanias; and that when an ostracism was held this belief principally contributed to the result, viz., that the required 6,000 votes were given against Themistocles. In my 'Attic Orators' I had occasion to discuss the question whether the speech 'Against Alcibiades,' ascribed to Andocides, is really his work. I there explained in detail the machinery of ostracism, and pointed out that this very misconception of it (as inflicted on a person definitely accused) is one of the traits which most surely prove the speech to have been composed by a late Greek rhetorician ('Attic Orators,' vol. i. p. 137).

Nor can I plead guilty to a charge which very few persons, I think, would be more sorry to deserve—that of treating Polybius as "a mere chronicler." Here are the words in my article:—

"His style, plain and straightforward, is free from the florid rhetoric of the time. But the distinction of Polybius is that he is the last Greek writer who in some measure retains the spirit of the old citizen life. He chose his subject, not because it gave scope to learning or literary skill, but with a motive akin to that which prompted the history of Thucydides, viz., because, as a Greek citizen, he felt intensely the political importance of those wars which had given Rome the mastery of the world." To the same effect I wrote also in my 'Primer of Greek Literature' (p. 144).

The admirable article on Greek history from 323 B.C. to 1453 A.D. is, I may add, by the Rev. H. F. Tozer, Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford, author of the well-known 'Lectures on the Geography of Greece,' and editor of Finlay. Mr. Tozer's initials will be found at the end of the article, and his name at the beginning of the volume. R. C. JARA.

THE DATE OF SHAKESPEARE'S FIFTY-FIFTH SONNET.

Not marble, nor the gilded monuments Of princes, shall outlive this powerful rhyme; But you shall shine more bright in these contents Than unwetted stone, beam'd with sluttish time. When wasteful war shall statues overturn, And brule root out the work of masonry, Nor Mars his sword nor war's quick fire shall burn The living record of your memory 'Gainst death and all oblivious enmity Shall you pace forth, your praise shall still find room, Even in the eyes of all posterity That wear this world out to the ending doom. So, till the judgment that yourself arise, You live in this, and dwell in lovers' eyes.

Malone compared the first line of this sonnet with the beginning of Horace's well-known ode, 'Eregi monumentum,' &c. (iii. 30). And the resemblance is manifest not only in the thought, but also, to some extent, in the language. But, so far as I am aware, evidence is wanting that Shakespeare possessed much, if any, acquaintance with Horace. But it may be urged that, in the absence of such general acquaintance, he may well have been familiar with the particular ode now in question. And this might have been admitted apart from the evidence which I am about to adduce.

Francis Meres, in his 'Palladis Tamia, Wit's Treasury,' published in 1598, together with other eulogies of Shakespeare, gives the following:—

"As Ovid saith of his worke;

Jungue opus eregi, quod nec Jovis ira, nec ignis, Nec poterit ferrum, nec edax abolere vetustas.

And as Horace saith of his;

Eregi monumentum aere perennius, Æquale situ pyramidum altius; Quod non imber edax, non Aquilo impotens Possit diruere, aut innumerabile Annorum series et fuga temporum;

so say I severally of Sir Philip Sidney's, Spencer's, Daniel's, Drayton's, Shakespeare's, and Warner's works;

Nec Jovis ira, labree, Mars, ferrum, Scintilla, quousque, Hoc opus unde, locus, turbo, vetusta ruunt.

Et quoniam am pulcherrimum hoc opus ever-tendum tres illi Dii conspirabant, Cronus, Vulcanus, et pater ipse gentis;

Non tamen annorum series, nec flamma, nec cinis, Aeternum potuit hoc abolere deum." Fol. 263, 268.

My position is that Shakespeare's quotation or allusion was not derived directly from Horace, but from this passage in Meres. It may be regarded as certain that the award of immortality to himself and other distinguished contemporaries would attract, more or less, the attention of the great poet; and there is little difficulty in accounting for his making allusion to the passage from Horace after he had read Meres's book. And it is noteworthy that there are some things in the sonnet which find their analogies not in the passage from Horace, but in Ovid and in the Latin appendix tacked on by Meres. Thus it is Ovid, and not Horace, who speaks of the destructive agencies of fire and sword, "nec ignis, nec poterit ferrum." But if Shakespeare alludes to both Horace and Ovid it may well appear probable that he had in view Meres's quotations, and not the original works. But I would direct more particular attention to the seventh line of the sonnet—

Nor Mars his sword nor war's quick fire shall burn.

It seems to me that the source of this line is to be found in Meres's "Non.....Mars, ferrum, flamma." This conclusion is strengthened by the incongruity in Shakespeare's line, the verb "shall burn" suiting only "war's quick fire," and not the preceding "Mars his sword." It will be seen, I think, upon reflection that this incongruity is easily accounted for if the words "Mars," "sword," and "fire," or the ideas they represent, were borrowed together from Meres. The elements composing this line are not to be found in combination elsewhere in Shakespeare, nor is the sword of Mars elsewhere mentioned.

I may add that the expression "all oblivious enmity" (which Malone changed into "all-oblivious enmity") finds its explanation in the numerous influences tending to produce oblivion mentioned by Meres, though perhaps the word "ennity" has especially in view the supposed hostile conspiracy of the three deities.

Taking into account the allusion to Horace and the correspondence with Meres, there can be little doubt that the fifty-fifth sonnet was written after the publication of the 'Palladis Tamia' in 1598. We must therefore conclude that those critics are in error who infer, from the mention in this same book of Meres's of Shakespeare's "sugred Sonnets among his private friends," that the whole of the sonnets collected and printed in 1609 already (in 1598) existed in manuscript. To the fifty-fifth sonnet I should assign the approximate date of 1599. But to justify this date it would be requisite to consider the hundred and forty-fourth sonnet, as contained in 'The Passionate Pilgrim,' as well as the three years' space indicated in the hundred and fourth.

THOMAS TIER.

THE NEWLY DISCOVERED PHOENICIAN INSCRIPTION.

1, Adam Street, Adelphi.

THE inscription in Phœnician characters recently discovered in Jerusalem, mentioned in the Athenæum of September 4th, was communicated to the Committee of the Palestine Fund five weeks ago. The squeeze was, however, practically illegible, only a few letters being visible. These are, as Prof. Socin says, in the form of highest antiquity. The Committee on receiving the squeeze took steps recommended to them as most likely to secure a more perfect copy of the inscription. The results of their action in the matter, if successful, shall be communicated to the readers of the Athenæum.

W. BERNANT.

THE INTERNATIONAL LITERARY CONGRESS.

Lisbon, August 27, 1880.

SENHOR JULIO LEREMIA, a writer of distinction, and Secretary-in-Chief of the International Literary Congress, which will open its sessions in Lisbon on the 20th of September, has already sent a large number of letters of invitation to Portuguese writers and journalists. The sessions of the Congress will be held in the library of the Academy of Sciences, a vast and magnificent hall, well adapted for the purpose. The days of meeting will be fixed so as not to coincide with those fixed for the Anthropological Association. Not only Lisbon writers and journalists have been invited, but others from all parts of Portugal. The delegate named by the French Government is M. Mario Prath, the author of 'Les Vagabonds.' The Portuguese authorities are busy with preparations, and will show every attention to the foreign and native members of the Congress, and it is said the king will give a court fitte in their honour.

Senhor Mendes Leal, Portuguese Minister in Paris, who is now here, and Silva Tullio, Director of the Public Library, will take a leading and official part in organizing the proceedings.

M. L.

MR. JAMES WATSON.

We regret to see the announcement of the death of Mr. James Watson, the head of the old publishing firm of James Nisbet & Co., of Berners Street. In the course of a long and active life Mr. Watson had rendered good service to several important institutions, and his personal character had endeared him to a large circle of friends. Under his direction, as Chairman of the Statistical Committee of the School Board, the census was taken of the juvenile population of London, and the whole system of the school accommodation of the metropolis rearranged and enlarged to meet the growing need. In literary circles Mr. Watson was known not only as the head of an enterprising firm of publishers, but as one of the directors of Mudie's Library, where his practical knowledge of the commerce of literature and his intelligent sympathy with its highest aims found ample scope. Mr. Watson, who had long been in a declining state of health, expired on Wednesday in last week.

Literary Gossip.

THE Duke of Marlborough has abandoned the idea of having the Sunderland Library sold by auction. It was announced in the Athenæum of July 17th that Messrs. Puttick & Simpson had received instructions for such a sale.

MR. WALTER POLLOCK is about to bring out a version of the 'Nuits' of Alfred de Musset, which will be published by Messrs. Bentley & Son.

MESSRS. DALZIEL BROTHERS will soon publish a series of Bible illustrations from original drawings by Sir Frederick Leighton, P.R.A., E. J. Poynter, R.A., G. F. Watts, R.A., E. Burne Jones, F. Madox Brown, Holman Hunt, and others. The book, which is to be called 'Dalziel's Bible Gallery,' will be issued early in November by Messrs. George Routledge & Sons.

MR. CHARLES KENT has prepared for immediate publication by Messrs. George Routledge & Sons a new edition of the works of Father Prout. In the biography prefixed to it Mr. Kent has brought together a number of well-authenticated facts in regard to the life of the Rev. Francis Mahony, here for the first time published, more especially in relation to the incidents marking the exemplary close of it at Paris in the old wit's well-known last home in the entresol of the Rue des Moulins.

THE Cambridge University Press has in preparation a selection of Greek inscriptions, edited by the Rev. E. S. Roberts, Fellow and Tutor of Gonville and Caius College. The selection will be accompanied by introductions and annotations, and will include the principal inscriptions representative of Greek palaeography, dialectology, and archaeology. A preface will contain, besides other matter, a sketch of the history of the Greek alphabet, illustrated by inscriptions in reduced fac-simile.

MR. HENRY BLACKBURN is preparing a new and revised edition of his 'Pyrenees,' with one hundred illustrations by Gustave Doré, containing a description of summer life at French watering-places and some account of Lourdes in 1880. This edition will form one of Messrs. Sampson Low & Co.'s new "Art Travel Series" of cheap and handy volumes for travellers.

IN the forthcoming Report of the Deputy-Keeper of the Public Records there will appear an exhaustive calendar of the valuable Norman Rolls, by Mr. Ewald, F.S.A., of the Record Office. These rolls, which relate to the occupation of Normandy by Henry V. and shed much new light upon the history of the times, have hitherto not had their contents made public. The Record Office has exercised a wise discretion in the publication of such a calendar. To the French Government, and especially to the Society of Antiquaries of Normandy, this Report of the Deputy-Keeper will be particularly valuable.

SIR GEORGE DUCKETT is continuing his papers on 'The Test and Penal Statutes in 1686,' as illustrated by the canvases made by King James of the deputy-lieutenants and magistrates of the various counties. As we have already mentioned, he has printed the answers from Cumberland, Westmoreland, and Yorkshire. The paper containing the answers from Sussex is in the press, and the work will end with the replies from Wales, the lieutenantships of which included in 1688 Gloucestershire, Monmouthshire, Herefordshire, and Bristol. The series will thus display a fair proportion of counties, nearly half, in fact, of the entire number in the Rawlinson collection.

A CORRESPONDENT writes:—

"It appears that the MS. of a portion of the second part of the long-delayed 'Glossary of the Lancashire Dialect' has now been sent to press. The first part, containing the words from A to E, appeared nearly five years ago. The work was begun by the Manchester Literary Club, but in future the responsibility for its issue will probably be undertaken by the English Dialect Society. The whole of the glossary, it is expected, will be completed early next year, and the introduction, dealing with the grammar, pronunciation, and literature of the dialect, completing the entire work, will also be published during the year 1881."

A MANUAL of Indian geography is being compiled by Dr. George Smith, the author of the biography of the Rev. Dr. Duff.

THE Rev. James Copland, M.A., of Dunedin, New Zealand, author of 'Reasons why we believe the Bible' and other works, has ready for publication a work to be entitled 'Alleged Scientific Contradictions to the Bible Doctrine of Man,' in which he analyzes the doctrine of evolution.

MESSRS. JOHN WALKER & Co. will shortly publish an edition of the 'Pilgrim's Progress,' to be called the Elstow edition. The book will be illustrated with twenty-four full-page engravings and a number of woodcuts. The publishers announce a novelty in the binding of the volume. There will be inserted in it portions of the old oaken woodwork removed from Elstow Church during its "restoration."

MR. HENRY IRVING will open the bazaar which is to take place in the Birmingham Town Hall next month for the purpose of reducing the debt on the building fund of the Perry Bar Institute.

THE monument to Mr. William Jenkyns, M.A., of the Bengal Civil Service, who perished with Sir Louis Cavagnari at Cabul about twelve months ago, has now been completed by Mr. John Hutchinson, R.S.A. The leading feature of the memorial, which is to be placed in King's College, Aberdeen, is a bust in alto rilievo, the head being shown in three-quarters front. A bronze plate underneath the monument will record in Latin the main incidents of Mr. Jenkyns's career and the circumstances of his lamented death.

LORD LYTTELTON has accepted the presidency of the Harborne and Edgbaston Literary Institute for the ensuing year.

A MEETING of the Wordsworth Club will be held at the Rothay Hotel, Grasmere, on the 29th inst. The Bishop of St. Andrews, President elect, will take the chair. At this meeting the constitution and rules of the society will be discussed and settled.

MR. SHERIFF NICHOLSON will, it is expected, be the first occupant of the Gaelic chair in the University of Edinburgh.

MESSRS. GRIFFITH & FARRAN will publish shortly for little readers a series, entitled "The Tiny Natural History Series," of twelve story-books about animals.

"OUR BOYS' LITTLE LIBRARY" and "Our Girls' Little Library" are the titles of two series, of twelve books each, which Messrs. Griffith & Farran have designed especially for school prizes and rewards. They consist of pictures and reading for little folks. Nearly every page contains an illustration. They will be published shortly.

'BELLIE'S PINK BOOTS' is the title of a new book by Joanna H. Matthews, the author of the "Bessie" books, which enjoy much popularity on the other side of the Atlantic. The new book will be published by Messrs. Griffith & Farran during the Christmas season, and will contain sixteen coloured illustrations by Ida Waugh.

THE same publishers will issue immediately 'Nimpo's Troubles,' by Olive Thorne Miller, author of 'Little Folks in Feathers and Fur,' illustrated by Mary Hallock and Sol. Eytinge. It will appear in their three-and-sixpenny series.

WHEN, some two years ago, the commission appointed by the French Minister of Education to select books to be admitted into the libraries of the colleges and lycées decided to include the translations of Mr. Herbert Spencer's works, they made an exception of his work on education, certain passages of which would, it was thought, prejudice students against classical culture. Since then, however, Mr. Spencer's assent has been obtained to an edition omitting the objectionable passages, and this is now published at sixty centimes, under the authority of the administration. The most recent translations of the book are into Spanish, Greek, and Bohemian, previous translations having been made into French, German, Italian, Russian, Hungarian, Dutch, Danish, and Japanese.

MR. HURFFER's recent volume of 'Musical Studies' has been translated into Italian by Signor Visetti, and arrangements have been made for translating it into French also.

IN the report of the Perpetual Secretary, read at the annual meeting of the French Academy, it was stated that M. Chéruef's 'Histoire de France pendant la Minorité de Louis XIV.,' which gained the first Gobert Prize, threw much light on Mazarin's Italian policy. M. Chéruef had made a careful search into Mazarin's unpublished letters and memorandum books. The second Gobert Prize was awarded this year, as it was in 1879, to the Abbé Mathieu for his 'L'Ancien Régime dans les Provinces de Lorraine et Barrois.' A short work on the Thirty Years' War obtained for M. Charveriat the Thiers Prize. M. Ernest Lavisse's 'Étude sur l'Histoire de Prusse' and M. du Bled's 'Histoire de la Monarchie de Juillet' shared the Théroutanne Prize. Honourable mention was accorded to M. Bourelly's 'Étude Historique sur le Maréchal Fabert.' The Bordin Prize was adjudged to M. Baudrillart for his 'Histoire du Luxe public et privé depuis l'Antiquité jusqu'à nos Jours.' The Marcellin Guérin Prize was divided between M. Decharmes for his 'Mythologie de la Grèce Antique,' M. Paul Stapfer for his 'Shakespeare et l'Antiquité,' and M. Ernest Bertin for his 'Les Mariages dans l'Ancienne Société Française.' Two-thirds of the recently founded Janin Prize for the best translation of a Latin author have been given to M. Cass-Robine for his version of the Satires of Persius and Juvenal, and the remainder to M. Eugène Rostand for a verse translation of Catullus.

WE regret to record the death of Mr. James Fisher, who had been for more than twenty years a confidential assistant in the establishment of Messrs. Williams & Norgate. Mr. Fisher was essentially a student. It was his practice for many years to devote his leisure hours to the acquirement of various languages, and thus to obtain the knowledge which enabled him to peruse a vast number of the books which came in his way. His death took place after an illness of only a few hours.

SCIENCE

The Birds, Fishes, and Cetacea commonly frequenting Belfast Lough. By Robert Lloyd Patterson. (Bogue.)

FROM the title-page of this book we learn that its author is Vice-President of the Belfast Natural History and Philosophical Society, and from the book itself it appears that he is a sportsman who can use his eyes, and who likes to learn accurately as much as he can of the birds, beasts, and fishes with which he meets in his frequent expeditions on the lough. The great store of gossip which he has thus gathered was first made public in papers read by the author at various times before the local society of which he is vice-president. As usual friends, for once not injudiciously, advised that these should be offered to a wider public, and the result is the present book.

OF course an account of the natural history of any particular district, even if confined strictly to local matters, need not by any means be solely of local interest. Mr. Patterson has, we think, with too great modesty under-estimated the general value of the local information which he supplies, and has, therefore, supplemented it with quotations, most of them interesting enough in themselves, from other writers on kindred subjects; so that of the entire bulk of his book about two-thirds are made up of extracts from Gray's 'Birds of the West Coast of Scotland,' Saxby's 'Birds of Shetland,' Seton's 'St. Kilda,' and numberless other equally accessible books. There are even quotations from, or references to, such well-known books as Mrs. Brasse's 'Voyage of the Sunbeam' and Mr. Black's 'Madcap Violet.' Yet the original matter in the book is of quite sufficient merit to have stood by itself, and would, we think, have been more interesting to ornithologists if unobscured by so much foreign matter. There are plenty of passages as good as the following description of animal life in the lough:—

"When the shoals of fry or young fish come into the lough in large numbers, the larger fish and the birds accompany them, and then it is that our beautiful bay looks its best. The waters are full of fish; its surface covered with the smaller divers, razor-bills, puffins, and guillemots, and the air above peopled with the gulls and terns. Among the latter the skuas are busy. One might fancy them having heard of 'that good old plan, that they may take who have the power, and they may keep who can'; this seems at least to be their practice. High above all the rest soar the majestic gannets. Here and there the attacks of the fish force the fry into a mass or 'ball' at the surface. This is soon perceived by some birds, who hasten to prey upon them, the guillemots and razor-bills—or 'cutties,' as they are familiarly called here—diving down and attacking them from below, while the terns and gulls pick them up and devour them on the surface. After three or four rapid beats of the wings, and then a long, graceful, undulating sweep, with them apparently motionless, the pretty Manx shearwater, locally called the mackerel-cock, now appears on the scene, and, carefully tucking away his long wings, sits down among the fry quietly to enjoy his meal. The cries and splashing of these birds quickly attract others from all directions, and among these one or two skuas—always on the look out for such opportunities—may be seen. The skua singles out a bird which it observes to have been successful in fishing, and, swooping down upon its unfortunate victim, pursues it relentlessly, till the gull in terror casts up part of its food. This accomplished, the skua, after picking up the dainty morsel, flies quietly away. The attention of one of the bottle-nosed whales, some of which are generally on the lough on such occasions, staying as long as the fry stay, will now be attracted, and he generally puts an end to the fun by swallowing half the ball of fry at a mouthful."

One passage, when compared with similar passages in Mr. Rodd's recently published 'Birds of Cornwall,' is curious. Mr. Rodd notes in some detail the increasing number of starlings in Cornwall in the spring and summer months. Mr. Patterson remarks that about thirty years ago these birds were quite rare in the neighbourhood of Belfast, and quotes from Thompson, a trustworthy authority, the statement that they were abundant there about the beginning of this century, but that they almost entirely disappeared for about forty years from that time. Thirty years ago starlings began to reappear in the neighbourhood, and within twenty years they had increased so abundantly that Mr. Patterson says he saw flocks of not less than 10,000 to 12,000; and since that time they have continually increased in number. This variation, either in the actual number or in the local distribution of these birds, noticed by two such observers as Mr. Rodd and Mr. Patterson—the former in Cornwall, the latter in Ireland—deserves attention. In another passage there is a curious suggestion that skates "use the holes called the 'temporal orifices,' which are in the head immediately behind the eyes, for the purpose of looking through,"—that is to say, that the skate sees the ground through these orifices and through its own mouth!

It is a pity that so many of the notes are given in their original bald diary form. It is not easy to read much matter such as the following:—"20th March, 1875.—Meet, but not all, of the few guillemots and razor-bills seen to-day were still in winter plumage. Some of them exhibited change, but one of the former was in full summer dress."

The book ought to be welcome, not only to naturalists, but to sportsmen and to yachtsmen cruising off the English, Scotch, or Irish coasts; for it contains a mass of pleasant gossip about nearly all the birds and many of the fishes which are commonly met with during such expeditions, and this gossip is not only pleasant, but is also trustworthy.

English Trees and Tree Planting. By William H. Ablett. (Smith, Elder & Co.)
Arboriculture for Amateurs, &c. Same author. ('Bazaar' Office.)

The Tree Planter and Tree Propagator, &c. By Samuel Wood. (Crosby Lockwood & Co.)
The Tree Pruner, &c. (Same author and publishers.)

THE love of trees is, happily, widely spread among us. Country gentlemen are wont to take as much interest in their woods and plantations as in their shorthorns. They glory in the noble oaks and stately limes which deck their parks, and they do wisely, for there are few nobler objects in creation than a finely proportioned tree. Sometimes the passion runs into extravagance, as when fashion or favour sets in one direction to the exclusion of others. Conifers were at one time the object of such unreasoning preference. No one doubts their value as timber trees, nor their effectiveness for ornamental purposes, especially in the young state; but many of them are unsuited to our climate, and, still more, become positively ugly as they advance in age. The excessive preference for one group of trees does harm also by the consequent neglect of other trees equally useful and ornamental. The average planter plants elms and oaks, limes and planes, poplars and willows, and thinks he has exhausted the means within his reach. A visit to the nearest tree nursery or to a good collection of trees would reveal to him a wealth of noble species, noble in build, noble in foliage, noble in colour, hardly as the common oak, and as varied in branching and in foliage as it is possible to conceive. The "run" upon conifers has, to a large extent, led to the neglect of these fine plants,—to such an extent, indeed, that even practical landscape gardeners are very imperfectly acquainted with them, while professed foresters, almost without exception, are ignorant of them. The public also stand in need of information as to the mode of treating trees so as to derive the greatest benefit from them. We are not alluding so much now to the management of timber trees as to that of those grown for ornament. With their love for trees many people have a corresponding hatred of the pruning knife, still more of the axe; yet, for want of the judicious use of the one and the timely application of the other, more trees are ruined, more plantations spoiled, than from any other cause whatever. The state of the trees in Kensington Gardens is a case in point. If a tree be felled, or even if some of its branches be lopped, some indignant taxpayer, wholly ignorant of the proper management of trees, forthwith writes to the Times, and the hands of those who know better are at once tied. The result we see now in the enforced demolition of scores upon scores of trees, a large proportion of which might have been saved had proper care been given at the right time. Another point which people in general are apt to forget is that the trees require food, and that if this be systematically removed, or not supplied, the trees must of necessity suffer. Again, it is too often overlooked that a tree must die at some time or other, sooner or later according to the kind, and according to the conditions under which it is growing. If this fact is to some extent ignored in the case of trees, still more so is it in that of shrubs. There is room, then, for some good treatise which, while avoiding the details and technicalities necessary for the professed forester or the student of botany, shall convey to the amateur a sufficient knowledge of the different kinds of trees best adapted for growth in this country, of their respective uses, and of the best mode of managing them. Such information we hoped to have found in Mr. Ablett's books, and to some extent we do find it, but the history he gives of deciduous and coniferous trees is very meagre and incomplete, and is, moreover, marred by numerous errors. As an illustration, we may mention that only three or four varieties of elm are mentioned, only one beech, the common one, and so with several of the genera. The more practical details relating to management are treated with equal meagreness: a page or two are devoted to transplanting machines, without any indication of the size of the trees that may be transplanted, the season at which it may be done, or the average cost of the procedure. Mr. Ablett's smaller work is, to our thinking, the better of the two; it is a digest, apparently, of the larger volume, and is all the better for the absence of irrelevant matter.

The other two works on our list call for no remark except an expression of astonishment that a publisher should have been found for them.

The Shipowner's and Engineer's Guide to the Marine Engine. By William Allan. (Sunderland, Reed & Co.)

MR. ALLAN tells us that his object is to assist the owners of steamships to form a better understanding than usually prevails of the marine engine and the use of its various parts. His book is well adapted to his end. Its chief fault is that Mr. Allan, being, as we learn from the title-page, a poet, indulges in language unsuited to his present theme. His knowledge of his subject, however, becomes apparent to those who read on undeterred by "fine" writing. The book contains a sketch of the progress of marine engines from 1840 to 1880. It then enters into the subject of the purchase of these engines, and gives a draft specification of a pair of marine engines of the inverted direct-acting compound surface condensing type. Formulae and other detailed information complete the work, which bears ample proof of the practical familiarity of the writer with the main points of the marine engine. The progress of steam navigation in England may be stated in few words. In 1840 there were in the United Kingdom nine firms of marine-engine builders. Seventy-four steamers, with a total register tonnage of 10,150 tons, were built in that year, and furnished with engines. At present the number of marine-engine builders is forty, exclusive of several small firms chiefly engaged in tug-boat building; and in 1878 these firms put engines on board 490 steamships, with a total register tonnage of 287,080 tons. The work is one of too technical a nature to interest any but those concerned in some way in the subject, but by them it will be found of value. The following anecdote, however, is too good not to be quoted: "The M— of L—, while on a run from Wessang to Hong Kong, gave every evidence that the propeller was loose on the shaft, a heavy knocking being heard, which gradually grew worse; the engineer determined to see what was amiss, and, if possible, to remedy the defect without running up a heavy bill or detaining the ship; previous to getting into Hong Kong he constructed a long canvas tube from a tarpaulin, the bottom of which was formed from the end of a barrel, to which the canvas was carefully secured; he stitched several hoops of half-inch round iron in the interior of the tube; at a convenient height from the bottom he had two arm-bags stitched on, and also a side-light glass carefully sewn in. On the vessel reaching Hong Kong he had all in readiness for his feat, so after placing heavy weights in the bottom he got in himself, the arm-bags were secured round his wrists, and he was lowered over the stern, when he found the propeller nut almost off the end of the shaft; a hammer being lowered to him, he secured the nut in its place, and actually fitted in a new through key. A cheap and simple mode like this for examining propellers is worthy of notice, and speaks volumes for the genius of the engineer." We give the extract with its own punctuation, only adding the remark that something more than stitching and sewing must have been adopted by this ingenious and thoughtful engineer to keep his open-topped diving ball free from water during his visit to the propeller. We hope that the owners of the craft made a due acknowledgment for the cost which was thus saved.

GEOGRAPHICAL NOTES.

THE Revue de Géographie publishes an interesting article on M. Aristide Dumont's project for irrigating a considerable tract of partly sterile lands in the valley of the Rhône. This great work, first suggested twenty-five years ago, has now been declared to be of "public utility," and if the communes and landowners concerned are prepared to guarantee 120,000*l.* a year it will be carried out. The grand canal of irrigation taps the Rhône a few miles below Vienna, at a height of 464 feet above the sea level; it follows the left bank of the river as far as Morins, where it passes through a gigantic siphon to the right bank. It then gradually turns away from the river, skirts the shore of the Mediterranean, and terminates at Béziers, 104 feet above the sea. The total length of this canal will be 200 miles, and its cost 4,400,000*l.* By means of it about 400 towns and villages, with half a million of inhabitants, will obtain a permanent supply of water. 113,180 acres can be irrigated in summer, and all the vineyards within reach flooded during winter, as a protection against the ravages of the phylloxera.

Capt. Bloyet, the leader of the French East African expedition, left Zanzibar on the 14th of June, and arrived on the 2nd of July at Kondoa, in Usangara, where he proposes to found a scientific station. His reception on the part of Munie M'Bongo, the native chief, left nothing to be desired.

The members of the German expedition, whose object is the establishment of a similar station near the southern extremity of the Tanganyika, left Zanzibar on the 17th of July.

The Belgian Government have secured the services of Herr Otto Lindner on their African exploring expedition. The Allgemeine Zeitung, from which we learn this, regrets that so competent a traveller should be thus lost to Germany. Herr Lindner was from 1873 to 1876 a member of the Gutzfeldt expedition, sent out by the German Society for the Exploration of Equatorial Africa. He was much valued at Chincho station, as well as a meteorological observer as for his clever management of the natives, whose language he quickly mastered. When that station was broken up he entered the service of Holland, and became chief of the Dutch factories on the Congo. There he met Stanley, and would have joined him after the expiration of his contract had not family affairs called him home.

Mr. T. B. Johnston's Map of South Africa (Cape Town, Juta; London, Longmans & Co.) is drawn on a scale of forty miles to the inch, and extends north to lat. 21° S. It is evidently based upon official documents not generally available in this country, exhibits the new political divisions, including those of the territories recently "proclaimed" or "reserved" in Damara Land, and will answer well for purposes of reference.

Rauf Pasha, Gordon's successor as Governor-General of the Egyptian Sudan, has declared it to be his intention to carry on the work begun by his predecessor. It will be one of his first duties to examine 2,065 petitions which have been presented against Gessi. The latter has recently forwarded 1,300 kandars of ivory, worth about 28,000*l.*, but his proximate dismissal is nevertheless talked about. Now that the trade in the countries of the Bahr el Ghazal has once more been thrown open, Gessi, the terror of slave-dealers, will certainly be in the way of the Greek and Arab traders who have already left Khartum to engage in it. Gessi's treatment of a Turkish "Pasha" implicated in the murder of King Munez and charged with other atrocities has raised powerful enemies against him.

We have received the Pupil's Copy-Book for Map Drawing (Johnston), consisting of four maps of England in various states of progress.

THE DECRYPTMENT OF KHITA: BILINGUAL SEAL OF KING TARKONDÉMOS

Those who want to make out the Khita part of the bilingual seal (Assyrian and Khita) discovered by Dr. Mordtmann, and identified as Khita by Prof. Sayce, can readily do so. The plate in the Anthropological Journal, last number, p. 369, contributed by Mr. Dunbar Heath, gives the material parts of a parallel Carchemish inscription identified by me. The two heads in the third group (top line) are the first two characters, then come ||; a sail-like emblem, say λ ; next $\Delta\Delta$ and a high-pointed Δ . The material part consists of the two animal heads and ||. These I give as Tar[s], Ku[no], Timme. In the parallel inscription the latter is separated, and the name I believe to be Tarkon (=Tarquin). Mr. W. Harry Rylands has suggested Tirkaka as an equivalent. The words Tar and Ku mean animals, but also king and god, and represent the family totems and fetiches of the king. My rendering of these words is in conformity with my previous representations of the linguistic relations of Khita. || appears to be a common character for son, offspring, $\Delta\Delta$ for country or land, and λ the emblem for king. The tall character is Zumez, but I do not know what object the character stands for. It will be seen that the king Tarkondemos must be in Carchemish as well as Cilicia, and that the Khita of that place is the same as that of Lydia and Phrygia.

HYDE CLARK.

ASTRONOMICAL NEWS

AFTER the unusual interval of more than four months another small planet has been discovered, No. 217, which was found by M. Coggia at Marseilles on the night of the 30th of August.

We have received the Memoirs of the Italian Spectroscopical Society for last April. It consists of two papers. The first is by Dr. Ferrari, on the connexion between terrestrial and atmospheric disturbances and the period of the rotation of the sun and other phenomena in the solar system, particularly the number of perihelion passages of comets which have been determined to take place at certain seasons of the year. This has been called forth by the papers on the same subject published last year by Prof. Zenger, of Prague, to which attention has already been called; it will no doubt lead to further examination, and, as Dr. Ferrari remarks, has a bearing on the connexion between comets and meteoric showers. The other paper in this number contains the observations of the solar spots and faculae made at Rome during the first three months of the present year by the editor, Prof. Tacchini. Although on the whole the number and extent of these are increasing, the partial ebb and flow in the increase is interesting, particularly in reference to the period of the sun's rotation.

The discovery of the variability of a star θ^2 from the North Pole by M. Ceraski, of Moscow (as mentioned in the Athenæum for July 31st from No. 2324 of the Astronomische Nachrichten), at once attracted the attention of Dr. Julius Schmidt, the indefatigable director of the Observatory of Athens. From his observations he considers that the period of this interesting variable is a little less than five days ($4^d 23^h 35^m \cdot 1$ or $4^d 22^h 27^m$). In the nature of its changes of light (the whole of these being accomplished in a short time) it comes under the same category with Algol or β Persei, one of the discoverers of the variability of which was Palisach, the farmer of Probus, near Dresden, whose name is in most astronomical books spoiled wrong, and whose acute vision was long ludicrously exaggerated, from its being supposed that he detected Halley's comet on Christmas Day, 1758 (its first predicted return), with his naked eye, whereas he really found it, after a long search, with a telescope of eight feet focal length of which he was in possession.

NOTES FROM LISBON.

The following is abridged from the accounts given by the Portuguese papers of the preparations for the Anthropological Congress, which is to assemble here on the 19th inst.

The museum, organized by Senhores Carlos Ribeiro and Conde de Delgado, is now ready for the reception of the members of the Congress.

Entering the galleries, the largest cupboards to the left and the centre vitrines are devoted to the revelations of the kitchen-middens met with among the mounds of Muge, in the valley of the Tagus, about ninety-five kilometres from Lisbon—one of the places the Congress will visit on the 24th, going in a special train from Santarém. There exist in these remains of the prehistoric kitchen all the characteristics of the discoveries made by the Scandinavian anthropologists. There were found objects of human industry, remains of vertebrate animals, and human skeletons, embedded in the mass of shells and molluscs.

Specimens are to be seen of two deposits of the Neolithic and Palæolithic epochs, taken from a grotto in Peniche on the northern part of the coast of Portugal; there are also the precious collections from Casa da Moura, Coesada, and Serra d'El-rei, which have been well described by Senhor Carlos Ribeiro; the small collection from the grotto of Vimieiro, well known as the scene of a British battle; and the valuable and interesting collections from the grottoes of Lapa Furada (Coasada), Porto Covo (Cimra), and Cascaes, at the mouth of the Tagus. There are important collections from Oeiras, Palmella Alcobertas, Cova da Raposa (Sabuga), Serra de Montejunto (Cercal), Carvalhal (Torque), and other places. The objects found in the dolmens of Mont' Abrasão, Estrem, Pedra dos Mouros, Aqualva, Niza, and Sepultura da Granja do Marques are also exhibited. An important discovery was lately made in a grotto at Cercal, where was found a head of the Hyena spelæa.

It may be necessary to alter the programme laid down for the proceedings. The questions to be treated by the Congress are: 1. Are there proofs of the existence of man in Portugal during the Tertiary epoch? 2. What are the characteristics of the Palæolithic age in Portugal during the Quaternary epoch? 3. What are the characteristics of the Neolithic age in Portugal—(a) in the kitchen-middens of the valley of the Tagus; (b) in the natural or artificial caverns containing human remains and products of art; (c) in the megalithic monuments? 4. What are the ideas acquired on the anatomical characters of the inhabitants of Portugal in the prehistoric times? 5. Upon what facts may be ascertained the transition of the age of polished stone to that of copper and the metals in Portugal? 6. What are the ascertained facts respecting the civilization of the peoples who inhabited Portugal before the Roman dominion?

The Congress will assemble in Lisbon on the 19th, 20th, and 21st inst. On the 22nd the members will make their first excursion to Otta and Azambuja, for the study of the questions relative to the existence of the Tertiary man, and the examination of the sub-divisions of the various cuttings of soil of the strata of Miocene fossils. On the 23rd a session will be held; on the 24th the members will make an excursion to Santarém and up the valley of the Tagus; on the 25th there will be a session; on the 26th a visit to the museums, picture galleries, and libraries of Lisbon; on the 27th an excursion to Cascaes and Cintra; on the 28th a session; and on the 29th will take place the closing session of the Congress. The proceedings will be enhanced by a banquet at the Ajuda, given by Dom Luis I., and a ball at Cascaes on the birthday of the Prince Dom Carlos. The Portuguese Government will do their best to facilitate travelling and access to all the historic monuments, museums, libraries, and everything worth seeing, besides providing refreshments.

M. L.

Science Gossip.

Two entrance scholarships to University College, London, in connexion with its engineering department are offered for the first time by the Gilchrist Trustees for open competition at the end of this month.

M. DAVANNE has exhibited to the Académie des Sciences some sheets of nickel rendered malleable by a new process introduced by M. Gurnier. The brittleness of nickel is stated to arise from the little oxygen it holds with much tenacity. This is removed by a very small addition of phosphorus—from four to six thousandths—and extreme malleability is obtained.

M. A. PURN communicated to the Académie des Sciences at the Séance of August 16th a note, 'Nouveaux Résultats d'Utilisation de la Chaleur Solaire obtenus à Paris.' He states that he is able to utilize as much as eighty per cent. of the solar heat by his new reflector and boiler. The new reflector consists of three truncated cones placed at an inclination of 45°. The boiler, which is of a novel construction, contains fifty litres of water (1760 pints each), and when the sky is clear this will boil within forty minutes, an effect six times greater than that obtained in Algiers by M. Mouchot.

M. FOMARD, Vice-President of the Meteorological Commission of Vaucluse, has just published a new theory of the mistral, the result of long-continued observation.

PROF. N. JOLLY, correspondent of the Institute, has just published in the Mémoires de l'Académie des Sciences, Inscriptions, et Belles-Lettres de Toulouse an 'Exposé Sommaire de la Doctrine de Charles Darwin: Objections faites ou à faire à cette même Doctrine.'

An International Sanitary Congress will be held at Washington in January, 1881, under the authority of the Government of the United States.

The Second International Geological Congress will be held at Bologna in September, 1881. A prize of 5,000 francs will be awarded for the best international scale of colours and conventional signs for the representation of geological formations on maps and sections.

In the month of July, 1880, appeared a new journal named L'Electricité, published by the Sixth Section of the Société Impériale Technique Russe. The list given of the persons taking an active and permanent part in relation to this journal contains the names of M. Alexeeff, Professor of Physics in the Technical School of Artillery; M. Wladimsky, President of the Physical Section of the Imperial Society of Natural Science; Prof. Latchinoff, M. Jablonskoff, and others of equal reputation.

FINE ARTS

DONATE GRANT WORKS: ORIENT LEAVING THE PRÆTORIUM: CLEOPATRA ENTERING JERUSALEM: THE BRAZEN SERPENT. (The latter just completed, each 20 by 26 feet, with 'Dreams of Plato's Wife, Soldiers of the Cross,' 'Night of the Crucifixion,' 'Scene of Calvary,' etc., at the DOME GALLERY, 25, New Bond Street. Lady, 7th to 10th—4s.)

Norwegian Antiquities. Arranged and Explained by Prof. O. Rygh, of Christiania. Vol. I. (London and Christiania.)

THE present volume of this important work is occupied with the typical remains which have been discovered in Norwegian soil from the prehistoric ages of the civilization of that country. This long ante-historic time antiquaries divide into three periods or ages: the stone age, which still awaits chronological definition; the bronze age, the termination of which Scandinavian antiquaries are agreed to place in the first centuries of the Christian era; and the older iron age, which, broadly speaking, may be said to come to an end within or with the eighth century after Christ.

Remains from the stone age are found in great quantities in Southern Scandinavia. As we proceed northward they become more scattered, and are found in Norway in lesser numbers than in any other of the Scandinavian lands, a fact which shows that from time immemorial the country has been the thinnest peopled in the north. Yet scattered as the stone age remains are, they are found all over the country and even far north of the Arctic circle. Strange to say, no grave or burial-place of the stone age has been found in Norway, while, on the other hand, places have been detected which must have been factories for the manufacture of stone implements, as is evident from the thick débris and the many implements strewn among them in various states of workmanship. Thus Norway, for some time of this period at any rate, had its own native stone civilization; but it was of an imitative character: no Norwegian discovery of the time evinces any distinctly different type from that of the stone implements found in Southern Sweden, Denmark, or Northern Germany. The stone age in the North falls into two distinct periods, the older stone age and the younger or later, which distinguishes itself from the older by more careful and artistic execution of work, and by an awakening sense for graceful forms and balanced proportions. Implements clearly assignable to the older stone age are of exceedingly rare occurrence, and it remains still a matter of speculation how far Norway may or may not have been inhabited at the early time of the older stone age. Probably it was not. Prof. Rygh leaves the question open as to what race of humanity may have been in possession of the country during the period which the present stone implements illustrate. The often repeated assertion that the race must have been of Lapp origin, or identical with that people, receives no corroboration from successive discoveries, and modern archaeologists are gradually abandoning that position. So far as inference can be drawn from the relics of this age, it would seem that even up to its very close the people of Norway knew how to sustain life in no other way than by hunting and fishing. The ninety-one objects selected for illustrating the manufacture of this period are chiefly of the class of weapons; thus we have axes in flint and slate, with or without handle holes, and daggers, spearheads, arrows, and clubs with handle holes. There are also found flint scrapers, saws, knives straight and curved, and a few specimens of whetstones in quartzite. Of the bone manufacture, which went hand in hand with that of stone—though apparently implements of bone were in far less demand than those of stone—there is only one illustration, an axe made of elk-horn.

With the advent of the bronze age, which, under any circumstances, must be referred to a time anterior by several centuries to the Christian era, a marked change sets in. Artistic execution now enters on the decorative stage; weapons become more adapted to their uses; a strong tendency is evinced to depict the most prominent features of the civilization of the people in symbolic signs on rocks and mountain sides ("Helleristninger"). From these it is inferred with certainty that now the people had advanced so far in civilization as to know the art of building and navigating ships; they were familiar with agriculture, and had learned the advantage of domesticating the horse, the sheep, and the ox. Moreover they had mastered the intricate problem of making textile fabrics; they had even gone further, and learned to work on them artistic patterns. They knew how to work bronze, a compound metal of nine parts of copper and one of tin; they also knew the use of gold and silver. All the metal manufacture produced during the bronze age had to be done in a material imported from abroad, for as yet the Norwegians knew not (any more than other Scandinavians) how to work copper from the ore, and in their home had no access to any mines yielding tin. The bronze civilization found its way to the North, not, as so many weighty authorities have taken great pains to prove, from the West or from the South, that is, from the peoples on the south side of the Alps, but from the East, from Asia through South-eastern Europe, proceeding northward by two clearly distinguishable currents, one taking a more westward course up the valley of the Danube, and spreading in time through Eastern Germany to the Baltic; the other, at a somewhat later period, proceeding more directly northward through the plains of Eastern Europe, following the watershed of the great rivers which run into the Eastern Baltic. In Scandinavia both currents united, and formed one homogeneous civilization, which from its southern base on the shores of the Baltic spread further northward, and finally over the whole of Norway, even to its northernmost limits. Some antiquaries have been inclined, on the ground that the bronze age yields comparatively fewer finds than the stone age, to assign a correspondingly shorter duration to the former. In itself it is not unlikely that the stone age was immeasurably longer, but for all that the bronze age must have been of long duration to have effected the general spread of an imported material along the whole coast and over the whole highlands of Norway. True, bronze finds are not numerous as yet in Norway, but they are becoming more numerous every year, and their rarity only bespeaks a scanty population, that again a correspondingly slower march onward in civilization, and consequently a correspondingly longer period required for the substitution of one phase of civilization for the other. The bronze age must have lasted through many centuries in the North.

Unlike the bronze civilization, that of the iron makes its way to Scandinavia directly from the South, from the races who, on the northern side of the Alps, had adopted the use of the metal from the inhabitants of Italy. In all probability iron had been used in Southern and Western Europe for a long time before its northward invasion diverted the bronze current from the East, and finally overthrew the reign of bronze in the North. In the advance of the iron civilization three distinct and successive waves are clearly discernible. In its first advance the civilization bears trace of no Roman influence; it proceeds from its Transalpine base with distinctly Celtic features, and continues thus until Roman legions begin to propagate the civilization of the Empire north of the Alps in the first centuries of the Christian era, when the Roman type begins to preponderate. The numerous remains found in the North from this period are frequently accompanied by Roman coins, as well as by objects which bear obvious traces of Roman workmanship, the name of the maker or the factory being not unfrequently on them. This Roman wave of civilization sets steadily onward until about the beginning of the sixth century, when a new type of civilization is met with. This type resembles closely that which Frankish, Burgundian, Alemannic, and Anglo-Saxon grave-finds bring to light, but manifests a still stronger tendency to what Prof. Rygh calls "barbaric development," which in reality means more free and more fantastic treatment. In point of fact, this style in its main features is identical with that which the, broadly speaking, contemporary illuminations of the Lindisfarne Gospels, the Book of Kells, and St. Chad's Gospels so splendidly illustrate. With this style, which we venture to call the British, we would recommend Scandinavian archaeologists to become more closely acquainted than they are at present. Parenthetically we may observe that in art, in decorative art especially, this style bids fair to become the style of the future in Scandinavia. In its historical and archaeological relations it seems to be but imperfectly known there.

With the finds that belong to the second or Roman period of the early or older iron age, writing, that is Runes, begins to put in an appearance in the North. Broadly speaking, the runic writing reaches the North in the course of the first two centuries of the Christian era. It is never associated with finds belonging to the bronze period, a fact of much importance in the runic controversy. We have seen that for many centuries before Christ the bronze civilization advanced to the North from the very base, whence some of our runologists have tried to prove that the runes must have been brought to the North. The first European cradle for the bronze civilization must have been the regions inhabited by those "Thracian Getae, who were found not only south of the Balkans in the valley of the Maritza, but were spread over the Wallachian and Bessarabian plains from the Danube to the Dnieper," during those very ages when the bronze civilization was advancing westwards and northwards.

It should be added that the Norwegian text of Prof. Rygh's classical work is accompanied by an accurate French translation, which will render the contents of it accessible to the great majority of the archaeologists of this country.

An Illustrated Handbook of Indian Arms. By the Hon. W. Egerton. (Allen & Co.)—This tractate is a catalogue of examples in the India Museum, and it was intended to be one of a series descriptive of the several sections of that institution. We gather from Dr. Forbes Watson's statement that, although the other members of the series were begun, their publication is by no means certain. If such is the case, it is a matter for considerable regret that is, presuming the unpublished handbooks are equal in merit and value to Mr. Egerton's. Still it is hard to see the use of publishing the "Sketch of the Military History of India" in a catalogue of a collection of Indian arms. The "Sketch" is clear and concise, and doubtless it is faultless history; but what then? The account is only to the point when it is ethnographical, and not historical. The essay preliminary to the catalogue proper possesses many attractions to the student of weapons and armour, of Indian art and military metallurgy. Mr. Egerton has compressed into a few pages a large and complex mass of notes, illustrative and historical, about the origin, character, and uses, national and ethnological, of the implements and garments at South Kensington, which form an unparalleled collection, and deserve much more attention than they have received from soldiers, archaeologists, and artists. That there is something "outlandish" in the works themselves, and in the art applied to them much which is out of keeping with Western notions, and often less beautiful than costly, is undeniable, but this should not lead any one to overlook that noble armoury of which we have now for the first time anything like a useful key. Mr. Egerton points out that examples of Indian art most affected by previous writers are usually architectural, or derived from textile fabrics and illuminations. Nevertheless, Indian metal work alone supplies as great a variety as the architectural, while there is as strongly marked a line between Aryan and Turanian art, i.e., between the arms of the north and south of India, as between the architecture of the Taj Mahal and the Temple of Chillumbrum. The art of both varieties of arms was borrowed from Assyria, if not from Egypt. It is not within our rules to follow the compiler of a catalogue into the minutiae of which he acquires practically inexhaustible knowledge while compiling his book. Apart from curious details of the early history of artillery, weapons which were derived in India from the Turks, long renowned as gun-makers, this volume comprises many valuable notes on weapons which are comparatively little known to European collectors, such as the quoits of the Sikhs of Lahore, made of beautifully thin steel and inlaid with gold, which the warrior launched with such deadly aim that it was said he could kill a man at eighty paces. In India are timbala which are audible a league off. Bows and arrows are not so strange as in Scotland, where Major Dugald Dalgetty encountered them and was quite shocked. We say nothing of poisoned darts, of maces, of coats of mail, and fire-arrows, such as Ammianus Marcellinus wrote of as used in his time and dipped in naphtha. Great guns were, after the Turkish fashion, cast upon the spot. In 1543 Sher Shah Ser brought all the brass of the camp and made mortars to bombard the fort of Raison. Akbar's artillery (1556-1606) was, like certain famous Turkish guns, made to take to pieces for transport and fitted together again. In 1549 a Constantinopolitan, named Humain Khan, cast a tremendous piece at Ahmednuggur, which weighed about forty-two tons, and became an object of worship. An Italian engineer, called Rume Khan, used this big piece, and actually fired sacks of copper coins out of it—a kind of grape, no doubt. At Decca was a piece thirty-six feet long, of hammered iron, looped round its body, and which discharged a stone equivalent to an iron ball of 400 pounds. It was worshipped till 1780, when it disappeared; being on an island in the river, it was undermined by the current, and now lies under water.

THE PRIVATE COLLECTIONS OF ENGLAND. No. LVIII.—DUNCOMBE PARK, HELMSLEY.

ONE of the most valuable of the examples of late Italian origin in this gallery is the small, fine, and carefully finished version of Carlo Dolci's famous large picture of the 'Martyrdom of St. Andrew,' which is in the Pitti Palace. Lord Feversham's picture was at Leeds some years ago, and attracted there as much admiration as it really deserved. The saint is suffering according to the legend which describes his death, and the design justifies Dr. Waagen's admiration, although the terms "unusually noble and energetic in dramatic conception, with great power of clear colouring" are not quite satisfactory as applied to a picture by Carlo Dolci, who could hardly be said to possess power to design anything which is really "noble." At any rate, the work is extremely dramatic and energetic; the groups are distinguished by movement, and are happily composed. The figures wear Italian costumes of the seventeenth century, which do not assort at all with the subject and its history; very quaint is the association of the light hose and jerkins, peaked hats and tall socks' feathers of St. Andrew's stalwart executioners with the quasi-classic dress of the martyr in the middle of the group. The spirited conception of the subject can hardly be overpraised by those who remember what perfunctory inventions served the world in Dolci's time. Many a better master has become famous through work inferior to this.

We thank Dr. Waagen was right in attributing to L'Orbetto that 'Adam and Eve' which has long borne the name of Domenichino, under which Mr. Duncombe bought it of some Dr. Bragge of the days of the old dilettanti. The first parents are naked; Eve is standing with Cain and Abel, the latter being on her shoulder, while Adam looks admiringly at the group. The figure of Eve is stately and graceful to a degree which is to be admired, although it is rather affected in its motive. The whole is commendable for the studious care it evinces as well as for its bright, clear colouring and illumination. A picture which looks like a good Domenichino represents the Virgin standing with outspread hands and looking up and lamenting. A faint glory has been cleverly introduced about her head, this displays that taste for spectacular devices which the painter frequently indulged for the benefit of a generation of admirers who could not conceal their delight in such performances. Apart from this the work is an extraordinarily valuable example of its kind, rich in colour and tone; the draperies are characteristically luminous and soft in handling; the carnations have been thoroughly studied, and the hands are exceptionally good in draughtsmanship and design. Dr. Waagen overlooked this picture, and he condemned "a large landscape with a fisherman in the foreground" which was shown to him as a Domenichino, but which we did not see at Duncombe Park. The German critic thought it was too hard and cold for Zampieri, and that it was a good Grimaldi.

A picture of Venus and Adonis bears the name of "Titan," and represents life-size figures embracing, a design of considerable spirit, but not painted by the great master whose name it bears. It resembles a Zustris or Liberi in its clear and somewhat hard carnations, smooth modelling, comparatively thin impasto, and lengthiness of the limbs of the figures, which are cleverly composed, but defective in fusion of tones and tints, to say nothing of the golden flesh hues which are never absent in the great Venetian's works. This interesting painting is said to have been given by the last Grand Duke of Tuscany to Field-Marshal Wallis in acknowledgment of the good discipline maintained by the troops under the command of that officer when in possession of Milan. Two works of Claude are in the Drawing-Room at Duncombe Park, and respectively entitled 'Morning' and 'Evening.' They seem to be tolerably good and genuine examples of the artist's skill. In the former, the trees on our left are grouped cleverly; on the other side appears a pond with cattle; beyond, towards the middle distance, are a mill, a cascade, and more trees, with a bridge, a temple, and more water. In the latter picture a herd of cattle are traversing the front, on our right are trees and smaller foliage. A large painting of a 'Storm,' by N. Poussin, is exceptionally dark, and very like a work in the National Gallery. The motive of the example before us is decidedly animated and impressive.

Two small upright landscapes, painted on copper by Salvator Rosa, are of great value, and distinguished by some unusual merits. They are finished with extreme delicacy and minuteness, much in the fashion which has given a charm to some of the works of the able Flemish copyists of the eighteenth century: the composition of their masses of light, shade, colour, and tone, the chiaroscuro they exhibit, and the fine, dignified "romance" of their motives, can hardly be too much admired. In one a lake, which was painted with something like the solemn feeling of Elzheimer, occupies part of the middle distance; a palace on its distant bank has the stately grace of Salvator's taste in its refined phase. Behind the palace lofty hills are intersected by a deep though sunlit ravine, and rise high in the glowing air. In the right mid-distance a beautiful promontory enriches the lake with its dense and happily arranged foliage of a dark tone, and here a ferry has been placed; the boat is about to receive its passengers. Nearer to the spectator is a herdman with cattle (one of the animals is crimson (?), a curious, and perhaps accidental, defect, which we cannot explain). In front is a road, and on it are a man and a boy. Splendid sunlight passes between the trunks of a finely grouped clump of trees on our left. Altogether this is a luminous and brilliant picture, of small dimensions for Salvator, and of such rare and fine quality that the injuries visible in the cow and the sky are more than usually to be regretted. Nothing can exceed the charm of the azure vapours on the distant hill-side and the shadowed cliffs of the lake below them. The companion landscape is nearly equal in value to the above, and in a less injured condition. A smooth blue river flows between low limestone banks, which recede in the vista formed by two masses of dark foliage, which in an opening display a large fortress in a plain. A woman with two cows and a sheep are in the near middle distance. A piping shepherd is followed by his flock and a goat; the whole group advance on a road, and in doing so emerge to light from the dark shadows of the group of graceful trees. In the middle distance and on the banks of the stream two shepherds are conversing. A seared tree on our left suggests autumn; a pure and richly tinted sky is filled with well-modelled heaps of cumuli. Delicate, rich, brilliant, and solid as this work is, we are bound to say that it resembles much more nearly the refined and solemn beauty of the inspiration of Elzheimer than the heavy hands and, even at his best, demonstrative mood of Salvator Rosa.

The following are by English artists. One of the best known of Hogarth's portraits is the life-size, whole-length 'Garrick as Richard III.' being a representation of the scene in Shakespeare's drama. The vigorous design gives a fine idea of the subject, which is Garrick, and not Richard, and exhibits the fulness of action which was supposed to be suited to the character, and the most intense expression imparted to every limb of the performer, from the rigidly extended fingers to the toes which press firmly on the floor, and the very swing of the draperies of the actor's dress and of his couch. The costume is, of course, absurd, being that which was formerly attributed to Spanish gentlemen, to Macbeth, and to Hamlet—trunk hose, puffed breeches, a jerkin with slashes and puffs, and a short, curled wig. These are undoubtedly due to Garrick; the disproportions of the figure, the awkward posing of the legs, and the objectionable reddish-brown colour of the tent are Hogarth's. To Hogarth likewise we owe the solid, masculine, and learned painting of the figure, including the flesh, especially the admirable bare hands and the clothed legs, the breadth of the effect, and fine treatment of the armour piled on our right of the design. This picture might well be compared with the 'Sigismunda' by Hogarth which has lately been added to the National Gallery, a comparison to the advantage of the latter. It appears from J. T. Smith's 'Life of Nollekens,' vol. i. p. 25, that Dance also painted Garrick as Richard III. We wonder what has become of this picture.

By Hoppe is an excellent and solid portrait of Mr. Duncombe, the collector of these paintings, and another of Lady C. Duncombe. There are in this gallery several other good portraits. Besides these is a Reynolds, a fancy piece, called, we believe, 'Fehna,' and representing a child squatted on the ground, holding a kitten in her arms, and dressed in white. A picture by Wootton of Pope's villa and of Rievaulx Abbey at morning, evening, and noon, by a painter whose name escaped us, are interesting. By Landseer are (1) an unfinished sketch of a mountain landscape, with seated figures of a man and woman on a road on our right, a pony near them; (2) a large head of a dog, looking straight before him, very animated in expression and action; (3) a half-length sketch of a stag bellowing, as in 'Night'; and (4) a boy, dog, and sheep in a mountain landscape.

We have now to consider some of the most valuable, if not the noblest, pictures in the collection at Duncombe Park. These are the works of masters of the Low Country schools. The first in order of these is ascribed to Rubens, and looks very like a good Jordaens. It is one of those experiments in representing artificial illumination which all the painters of the later Dutch School affected, Honthorst being the most fortunate experimentalist, Rembrandt the greatest and most pathetic master of all of them. The picture comprises the half-length, life-size figure of an old woman, who holds a lighted candle in one hand and shades its flame with the other; the powerful light falls on her face while she looks downwards and forwards with a serious and animated expression on her rugged and yet not undignified features. A boy (or girl) looks over the candle-bearer's shoulder, and speaks to her with admirably conveyed gaiety and energy. Both faces are extremely natural and attractive. The modelling of all parts of this work is extremely large and bold in style, the impasto is solid and learned. It is well known as 'The Candlelight Picture.' It has been "laid down" on a larger canvas than that originally employed—an operation which has not been beneficial to the whole as a work of art. We understand that 'The Candlelight Picture' was at one time stolen from its place of deposit, and was clumsily repaired.

A capital example of the second period of P. Wouwermans's manner in painting is the large landscape comprising the figures of a hawking party on an extraordinarily extensive scale. We have a wide and open view of a limestone country, quite different from the sandy plains and rounded knolls of the artist's usual subjects, with high, white cliffs and a winding river. The hawks are in pursuit of their game, and the hunters follow them with energy and many shouts and demonstrations of passionate interest in the chase. Among the followers is a lady who, behind a black servant, sits on a pillion and under an umbrella. A horseman is casting off another hawk. An attendant carries game slung over his shoulders. Several spectators sit on spare horses and watch the manœuvres of the flying birds as they rise in circles and climb the sky itself. Near these spectators are many dogs to be used as retrievers. All the figures are touched with rare and complete firmness and precision, designed with unusual animation, and combined with great skill in a happy and expressive composition, with wealth of incident and much variety of actions. As usual with fine pictures by Wouwermans, this one exhibits the artist's great felicity in depicting the atmosphere, so that we cannot fail to be affected by a sense of its loftiness and brilliant yet soft illumination. The clouds have been so masterfully understood, and depicted with such extreme care and delicacy, as to supply what is really a powerful contrast to most old painters' pictures, in which the ignorance or the carelessness of their authors is but too distinct. To the composition of his cloudy masses Wouwermans gave an amount of attention which distinguished him honourably from the greater number of his contemporaries. Here a vast loop-like bulk of cirri blows before the wind of the higher air and forms what may be called a wing of that prodigious stratum of the same vaporous formation, which has been arranged with such care that, without obvious art, its lines assist in expressing the movements on masses of the birds and figures, and aid the general aerial perspective of the painting. In respect to the latter quality the tenderness of the toning of the clouds and the delicate gradations of their lights and shadows are precious technical elements.

By J. Both is what Dr. Waagen rightly called "a large picture of fine composition," the distance of which "is of airy delicacy." It is a noble "landscape," representing a summer afternoon effect, such as Both loved to paint, and of which he succeeded in giving at least a true general impression, although not an inch of his many large canvases will bear the searching examination of an expert in art or a student of nature of the class of which Mr. Ruskin is the high priest. A road winds between a river and irregular hills; from the latter a cascade is falling among the nearer and water-worn rocks. Two beeches lean over and cross each other in the middle of the composition; their shadows slope towards us on the road, and are thus skilfully disposed features of the design. The travellers on this road are a muleteer, a beggar, and a peasant woman, all of whom converse. The last-named person holds a distaff, and, as she trudges, spins her thread. The calm water reflects the rocky sides of the river, the hills, some of the foliage, and the sunny haze, to paint which was Both's especial delight. These are, of course, the ordinary materials of the artist's compositions, and they were gathered in the Ardennes or in South Italy, painted in the manner of Cuyp, and with a quasi-Neapolitan motive which is oddly at variance with the Dutch inspiration. On the whole, this is a very excellent example of Both, some of the merits of whose works are obscured by the too frequent darkening of the pigments. This has affected the foreground of this picture injuriously; nevertheless, the sky could not be better than it is.

A good Hobbema is always welcome, a signed one is unusually so. Such a work appears in the collection before us, and represents a road in a vista seen nearly in a straight line at right angles to the picture plane. The vista is marked by gleams of rainy sunlight and dark cold shadows of trees. A gentleman and his servant walk towards us, attended by a dog, who gambols before them. Peasants are going away in the foreground on our left. Groups of dark oaks of the richest foliage are disposed near the middle of the work; logs lie by the roadside, a cottage is on our right. The sky, which even for Hobbema is very cold, may have been painted on, but it is difficult to feel assured on that point, so very unequal are this master's skies, the best being of the most precious quality, as full of light, if not so profound and tender of tone, as Wouwermans's better productions are, while inferior Hobbemas generally have painty and opaque skies. The "serious" and sincere inspiration of the artist has given dignity to the simple composition before us, which, artless as at first sight it appears to be, has really been considered with extreme care, and proves to have been very deftly balanced in all its parts. We seem to catch a glimpse of the entrance to some Dutch gentleman's park in a rainy yet sunny spring morning two hundred years ago, just at the moment when he set out on his business of inspecting his lands or visiting his neighbours, while a keen, steady, and strong breeze rushed in the foliage, and, as of the sea itself, drove its wave-like masses before the blast. This landscape is unusually important as regards its size and second to none of its order in brightness and expressiveness. The treatment of the foliage is, as to the last-named quality, of first-rate interest.

By Sir P. Lely, and painted in the manner of Van Dyck, is a fine portrait of a man seated and wearing a robe of brown embroidered in gold; the bag of the seals is on his left, while he holds his gloves in his left hand, and wears a richly laced cravat and a brown wig. The name of the sitter has escaped us. Not so our impressions of the portrait. It is very richly painted, and distinguished by a serious motive, of extreme rarity in Lely's but too frequently failing mood. The face, an intelligent and dignified one, is in three-quarters view to our left, the eyes are to the front. There is a capital typical example of Mieris in the picture of a boy in the act of blowing bubbles from a tobacco-pipe. The boy is in the Dutch costume and stands at a window which serves as a framework to the figure. A woman with a lap-dog stands smiling behind the boy; the velvet cap and white feather of the latter lie on the sill; a bottle of water, with a sunflower in it, is on our right; above is a bird in a cage; a vine trails about the opening, the sides and top and bottom of which are treated architecturally, with mouldings and other enrichments. On a label below the opening is the date "M. D. CXLIII." This is a first-rate example of a characteristic class of pictures, of which Mieris was the ablest producer, although other well-known painters gave us similar works, comprising figures grouped at stone window openings, and occupied with fish, birds, or bubbles. There is a famous instance at Dresden. That now in question is most elaborately painted. A snail crawls slowly and cautiously upwards on the inscribed tablet, and in the minute execution of its shell illustrates the astounding skill and patience of Mieris. This little gem is without a flaw, except so far as regards the characteristic hardness and metallic quality of the handling and the colour. Extreme smoothness of the technique is not to be considered a defect in such a work; the expressions of the faces are so animated and truthful as to be charming; the drawing and solidity of every part leave nothing to be desired. As to these elements, see the blooming sunflowers at the side of the window, and the bottle which, stuck on a peg in the wall, serves the needs of nestling birds.

Probably the finest and most valuable picture in Lord Faversham's collection is a noble Rembrandt, being a life-sized portrait of a Dutch merchant seated at a window and holding with both hands a letter and a pen. His dress comprises a black coat, white collar, and large brown felt hat. The face is in rather less than three-quarters view to our left, the figure is in profile; the eyes are turned to the front with an extraordinarily lifelike expression, and they look down and seem to be meditating deeply on the contents of the letter. Profound and intense is this look. The work is rather black, but not opaque in the shadows of the flesh, and it exhibits a full impasto which is extremely luminous. The chief light is, of course, on the cravat, and this connects the secondary lights of the face and the letter in an unusually happy manner. Outside the window appears a view of the sea, with a ship on fire in the distance, thus suggesting the subject of the letter and the merchant's thoughts, the undercurrent of trouble which marks his features. This admirable and highly pathetic portrait is in perfect condition; it is signed and dated "Rembrandt, 1658."

At the time of our visit the greater portion of the sculptures at Dancombe Park were covered, in consequence of extensive repairs then in progress. These works enrich a large central hall of Lord Feversham's mansion, and, grouped as they are, have as a whole a very imposing effect. The most important of them is the 'Dog of Alcibiades,' so-called by a misnomer which is due to a considerable resemblance between it and the well-known statue in the Uffizi, Florence. This dog has a tail, and may therefore be said to have nothing to do with Alcibiades. It is almost entirely perfect, the left forefoot only having been restored. Much of the history of the statue in this country may be read in J. T. Smith's 'Nollekens and his Times,' i. 292, ii. 169, and 'Bowtell's Johnson,' by Croker, 8vo. p. 573. Other sculptures are a Discobolus standing at ease, of Roman work, and, like the dog, of Parian marble; a Mercury, Apollo, and Bacchus, life-size figures; and a certain number of modern busts.

In the next paper of this series we propose to begin an account of works of art in Nostel Priory, near Wakefield, the property of Mr. Bowland Winn, M.P., a collection which is famous for containing the most important version of the portrait composition attributed to Holbein, representing Sir T. More and his family, and a large number of Italian and Dutch pictures of great interest and merit, by Teniers, Ruysdael, N. Poussin, Rembrandt, Verboom, W. Van de Velde, Guido, C. Jonson, Canaletto, three Van Dycks, including a fine example of great beauty, two works of the rare master Elsheimer, a Murillo, Steenwyck the Elder, P. Veronese, S. Rosa, Van der Helst, Berchem, P. Neefs, Karel du Jardin, J. Van Kessel, De Heem, Breughel, Claude, Cuyt, Brauer (two), and a capital Outade. Besides these are Gainsboroughs, R. Wilsons, and Hogarth's portraits of Mrs. Clive and Lady Thornhill. Dr. Waagen described some of these examples, being the more remarkable of those which hang in the rooms to which visitors are usually admitted at Nostel.

Just-But Gossip.

We are very glad to learn that the authorities have declined to interfere in respect to the carving of a portrait of Mr. Street in a corbel supporting an oriel window on the north side of the quadrangle of the court in the new Courts of Justice, London. We trust this portrait is a good likeness, and that it may long endure as an example of the highly interesting and sensible practice of representing the architects of great buildings on the exterior of their works; this is apart from what else may be desirable inside the Law Courts building.

Mrs JENNIE (JENNIS) LANDSEER, the last bearer of the name among the immediate descendants of John Landseer, A.R.A., the well-known engraver, died on the 29th ult. at Folkestone. This lady was a painter and an engraver, and the etcher of some of the works of her brother Sir Edwin. The children of John Landseer were, in the order of their births, as follows: Jane (who married Mr. Charles Christmas, and died many years ago), Thomas, Charles, Anna Maria, Edwin Henry, Jessica, and Emma. The last survives as Mrs. Mackenzie, and was Sir Edwin's housekeeper for many years.

At a recent meeting of the Dean and Chapter of Durham an order was issued for clearing out the crypt under the older part of the library, formerly the refectory. The suggestion that it was highly desirable that this should be done dates back to the visit of the Royal Archaeological Association in 1855; but corporate bodies are proverbially slow to adopt suggestions or to move, and the work of exploration has only lately begun. Very few persons have been aware of the existence of this crypt, which for many centuries has been choked up with stones and rubbish, and entirely closed to the public. It was, indeed, not a desirable place to visit without lights and a guide, having holes full of clay and water. It is entered by a grating in the passage leading from the college to the cloisters, runs the entire length of the old library, and is remarkable as being the very earliest remains of building in Durham. It consists of a series of apartments with a passage in the centre. It is supposed that it was originally open from one end to the other, but was afterwards divided off into cellars, admission to which was obtained by a series of Norman doorways. The building is supported by square piers, and the roof is groined, though at present concealed by a thick coating of lime. Light was formerly obtained by some windows on the south side, but these are now below the level of the earth, and consequently useless. A square opening in the roof is believed to mark the spot where a lift conveyed food into the refectory above. The work of excavation will necessarily be slow and difficult, but when it is completed the crypt is to be lighted with gas, and the public will be admitted to it.

A CORRESPONDENT says that Audley House, in Crane Street, Salisbury, dating from the early part of the fifteenth century, at one time the property of the Earls of Castlehaven, and more recently used as a workhouse, but now for some time unoccupied, is threatened with destruction, the Corporation having it in contemplation to sell it to the Dean and Chapter, on the understanding that a grammar school should be erected on its site. It is earnestly to be hoped that one of the most beautiful and interesting specimens of our early domestic architecture may be saved from the fate which has unfortunately befallen so many of the old houses in Salisbury.

The well-known Romanesque church at Kirkdale, near Kirby-Moorside, which bears the name of St. Gregory, and has been supposed to be older than the Conquest, is now in the hands of restorers. It has long been in need of repairs. Much Gothic work has been intruded into this building of yore; an oaken and high-pitched roof, slated, is among the intended new features. Another fine and well-known church, being that of North Walsham, near Cromer, is about to undergo restoration.

A CORRESPONDENT who has been visiting antiquities in East Anglia calls the attention of those whom it may concern to the fact that certain portions of the celebrated brass of Sir Simon de Felbrigg and his wife in Felbrigg Church, Norfolk, are loose in the matrix, and exposed to risks which a little care would obviate.

The Essex Archaeological Society has issued a formal complaint and remonstrance against the removal of numerous monumental inscribed stones above graves of the Conyers family in the church at Epping. The Conyerses were of Copt Hall, and several generations were buried in Epping churchyard. During a late "restoration" these memorials have been made to give place to tiles. The Conyerses bought Copt Hall of Lord North and Grey in 1749. This removal is but one of innumerable examples of such practices; it ought not to be tolerated unless the slabs are placed against the walls of the church inside.

The Arundel Society has issued a chromolithograph by Herren Storch and Kramer, of Berlin, produced under the superintendence of Prof. Gruner from a drawing by Signor Marchi, representing the interior of the Piccolomini Library at Siena, with the frescoes of historical subjects and other decorations painted, between 1502 and 1507, by Pinturicchio on the ceiling, coffer, and walls of that famous building. This work is complementary to a previous publication by the same society, issued many years ago, and delineating the interior of the Arena Chapel at Padua and Giotto's frescoes, the crowning illustrations of Gothic painting, as those of Pinturicchio are among the most genuine masterpieces of the renaissance of painting in Italy. The lithograph before us is an extremely interesting picture, and gives a tolerable idea of the splendour and richness of colour of the interior, apart from certain inexplicable elements of the perspective represented, elements which, it is fair to say, present enormous difficulties to all but masters of that science. The contrasts of light and shadow in the chamber have been reduced, so that practically they do not give force and solidity to the print. It gains thereby in clearness as much as it loses in verisimilitude, pictorial merit, force of tone, and brilliancy of illumination.

A new School of Art is about to be erected at Bedford Park for Chiswick, Acton, and the neighbourhood. The Duke of Devonshire is the President, and the Marquis of Bute and Mr. Leopold de Rothschild, are the Vice-Presidents of the institution. The architect to the new buildings is Mr. Maurice B. Adams, A.R.I.B.A., of Bedford Park, and the art masters are Mr. E. S. Burchett, of South Kensington, and Mr. F. Hamilton Jackson, late of the Slade School. The Chairman of the School of Art Committee is the Vicar of Chiswick, the Rev. Lawford Dale. The style of architecture chosen is Old English, worked out in red brick-work and "rough cast" plaster work.

The inauguration of the monument of Titian at Cadore occurred on the 5th inst.

Great progress is being made with the rebuilding of the Hôtel de Ville, Paris. Nearly 1,250 workmen of all classes are employed in this task, including 150 carvers in stone.

The German papers record the death of Prof. Hermann Anschütz as having occurred on the 30th ult., in his seventy-ninth year. He was a pupil of Cornelius and Hartmann, and painted in the manner of those learned operators the ceiling of the Odéon at Munich, and in the Royal Palace of that city reproduced in fresco and encaustic designs by L. Von Klenze and Zimmermann. An artist of this character was certain to become a professor; accordingly we find Anschütz in the Chair of Painting of the Munich Academy during more than thirty years.

Our Naples Correspondent writes:—"The Italia has a letter from a correspondent expressing regret and indignation at the gross neglect with which the picturesque palace of the Queen Donna Anna is treated. Every one who has visited Naples and driven to Posillipo must have seen and admired that imposing pile of buildings, which is now treated in a manner worthy of barbarians. In one part there is an eating-house, to increase the accommodation of which the first story has been thrown down. Yet more, adds the correspondent, the neighbours, when they have need of materials for building, break down the walls, destroy the vaulted roofs, and carry off the stones. 'It is a disgraceful vandalism.' The interior serves as a refuge for smugglers, thieves, and others, so that the police might do well to exercise some surveillance there. But what is the Commission for the Preservation of Monuments of the Olden Time about? There is not a more striking feature in the drive to Posillipo and the Strada Nuova, and it is sad to see so interesting a relic of the past so unworthily occupied and going so rapidly to destruction."

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

THE one hundred and fifty-seventh meeting of the three choirs of Gloucester, Worcester, and Hereford, which has been held at Gloucester during the present week, has been in more respects than one of greater artistic importance than is frequently the case with provincial musical meetings. Those to whom the arrangements of such festivals as these are entrusted have a difficult task before them in the selection of their programmes. On the one hand, they have to cater for an audience the larger part of which has seldom an opportunity of hearing a musical performance on a large scale, and whose art education is, therefore, necessarily imperfect. Such hearers will naturally be more attracted by the announcement of some familiar work, such as the 'Messiah,' than by any promise of novelties, while many would doubtless rather hear a ballad sung by a favourite vocalist than any oratorio which could be offered them. As the object of the festival is a charitable one, the proceeds being devoted to the benefit of the widows and orphans of the clergy of the three dioceses, the management cannot afford to disregard what may be called the commercial aspect of the question; while, on the other hand, those among the committee (and we are happy to believe they are not few) who have at heart the progress of musical art in this country will not be content with the mere repetition of works which have been heard, one might almost say, ad nauseam. If the festival of the three choirs is to retain its position as one of the important musical events of the year, it is rightly felt that, while the claims of the charity are not ignored, something must be done for the cause of music. The programme of the festival just ended shows how it is possible to reconcile these apparently conflicting interests. Under the advice of Mr. C. Harford Lloyd, the organist of Gloucester Cathedral, and the conductor of the present festival, a scheme has been drawn up, the only objection to which is the excessive length of some of the performances. For the sake of those who prefer well-worn and often-heard music the 'Messiah' and 'Elijah' are given, besides various popular songs in the miscellaneous concerts; while such works as 'St. Paul,' Mozart's 'Requiem,' and Spohr's 'Last Judgment,' though not novelties, are not so often heard as to have become wearisome even to the frequenters of our London concert-rooms. One morning has been chiefly occupied with the performance of works almost or entirely unknown to the majority of our audiences—Leo's 'Dixit Dominus,' Palestrina's 'Stabat Mater,' and Beethoven's 'Missa Solennis' in D. The claims of native art have been duly considered by the production of new cantatas by two English composers—Mr. Henry Holmes and Mr. Hubert Parry; while the lovers of instrumental music have been gratified by the introduction of symphonies by Mozart, Schubert, and Schumann. Such a programme as this is not only worthy of the festival, but is in the highest degree honourable to Mr. Lloyd, who, like a true artist, has not shrunk from the large amount of heavy work involved in the preparation of music much of which is of no ordinary difficulty.

The cast of soloists engaged has been a very strong one, including the names of Madame Albani, Miss De Fonblanque, and Miss Anna Williams as sopranis, Madame Patey, Miss Hilda Wilson, Miss Wakefield, and Miss Damian as contraltis, Mr. Edward Lloyd and Mr. Joseph Maas as tenors, and Mr. Frederic King, Signor Ghiberti, Mr. Francis, and Mr. Santley as basses. The orchestra of sixty-four performers, led by M. Sinton, consisted chiefly of London professors of eminence in their various departments; while the chorus, numbering about 250 voices, consisted of the three choirs of the cathedrals, reinforced by singers from London and the principal provincial towns.

As usual, Monday was devoted to a full rehearsal with orchestra, chorus, and principals. It is perhaps inevitable that the whole of the rehearsal for the festival should be crowded into one day, but it is none the less a matter for regret. The performers were engaged in the cathedral from half-past ten till five, and again in the evening at the Shire Hall from half-past seven till twenty minutes after midnight. Such a day's work is far too much for any average strength; it puts an undue strain on both the physical and mental powers; and it is worthy of the consideration of the managers of these festivals whether they cannot in future adopt the plan carried out at the last Leeds Festival of spreading the rehearsal over two days. This would of course add somewhat to the expense of the festival, but there can be no doubt that the gain to the performance would well repay the slight additional outlay.

The performance of 'Elijah,' with which the festival was inaugurated on Tuesday morning, was surprisingly good, considering the exertions of the performers on the previous day. Had slips and shortcomings been noticeable, it would have given no cause for astonishment, and every allowance might have been made; but no such allowance was needed. The chorus sang not only with accuracy, but with an amount of spirit and an evident heartiness that were good to hear. Some falling off in energy might be remarked in the latter part of the performance, but this was doubtless due to the fatigue resulting from overwork at rehearsal. It is not often that a more uniformly satisfactory performance of Mendelssohn's great work has been heard. The principal solo parts were excellently given by Madame Albani, Miss Anna Williams, Madame Patey, Miss Damian, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley, who were supported in the less important portions by Miss De Fonblanque, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. George Cox, Mr. F. King, and Signor Ghiberti.

At the first of the two miscellaneous concerts in the Shire Hall, which was given on Tuesday evening, the most important feature was the production of Mr. Hubert Parry's scenes from Shelley's 'Prometheus Unbound,' a work for solo voices, chorus, and orchestra, composed expressly for this festival. Anything from Mr. Parry's pen deserves the consideration due to the work of an earnest, thoughtful, and conscientious artist. In his style the composer shows a strong leaning to the modern German school of music as exemplified in one direction by the works of Brahms and in another by those of Wagner. Of the former Mr. Parry's instrumental works are an illustration; while the scenes from 'Prometheus' are written, one might almost say, under the inspiration of 'Tristan und Isolde.' It would, therefore, be obviously premature to endeavour, after a single hearing, and without an opportunity of studying the score, which is still unpublished, to pass a final opinion upon a work so elaborate and in many respects so removed from the ordinary track as Mr. Parry's. In attempting a musical illustration of Shelley's beautiful but mystic poem the composer undertook a task of no ordinary difficulty.

Those who are acquainted with the third part of Schumann's 'Faust' music will imagine how congenial such a subject as the 'Prometheus' would have been to him; but a writer less confident in his own powers or less in sympathy with the poet might well have hesitated before setting such lines as those depicting the sufferings of the Titan or the voices of the Hours. While it would be too much to say that Mr. Parry has been uniformly successful in rising to the height of his subject, he may be honestly credited with much real poetic feeling and with no ordinary dramatic power. Of the former the song of the Earth, "I felt thy torture, son," the succeeding chorus of Spirits, "From unremembered ages," as well as the whole of the final scene, give proof; while the opening solo of Prometheus chained to the rock, the chorus of Furies, and the address of Jupiter to the other Deities, are dramatically most excellent. In his treatment of the text Mr. Parry shows great tact; every word, every change of sentiment, receives its appropriate expression. The orchestration, though at times a little overloaded, is frequently masterly, and shows a perfect knowledge of the resources of the instruments. The chief fault of the work is the absence of contrast and repose. With a commendable desire to avoid the commonplace, Mr. Parry keeps his music too continually at high pressure. Storm succeeds storm, crash follows crash, until one feels that an eight-bar phrase with nothing but tonic and dominant harmony would be an absolute relief. The mental digestion is no more able than the physical to exist entirely on highly-seasoned food. Still, on the whole, there is far more to praise than to blame in the new work. It contains much really original and beautiful thought, and leads us to hope for even better things hereafter from Mr. Parry's pen. The performance, which was conducted by the composer, was fairly good. The music is very difficult, and requires, in order to receive full justice, more rehearsal than it had been possible to secure for it. The solo parts were well sung by Miss Anna Williams, Madame Patey, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Francis, while the chorus, though coarse at times, sang very creditably. The principal item of the rest of the far too long concert was Mozart's Symphony in A flat. Beethoven's Overture to 'Fidelio,' the Festival March from Gounod's 'Polyeucte,' and various solos by Madame Albani, Miss Hilda Wilson, Miss De Fonblanque, Miss Damian, Miss Wakefield, Mr. Maas, Mr. F.

King, and Signor Ghilberti completed the programme.

The performance of Wednesday morning in the cathedral opened with Schubert's Unfinished Symphony in a minor, which was followed by Mozart's 'Requiem'; the second part of the programme consisted of Spohr's 'Last Judgment.' Of music so familiar it will suffice to say that the performance in general was highly efficient, though some portions of both works, especially the 'Requiem,' suffered from the rapid tempo which Mr. Lloyd adopted, the result, in all probability, of over-anxiety. The solos in Mozart's mass were sung by Miss De Fonblanque, Madame Patey, Messrs. Lloyd and Santley; while in Spohr's oratorio they were allotted to Misses Anna Williams and Damian, and Messrs. Maas and King. The chorus singing in both works deserves high praise.

Of the remaining events of the festival, which occur too late for notice this week, we shall speak in our next issue.

Musical Gossip.

It is said that Madame Christine Nilsson has been engaged at the San Carlo, Naples, especially for the part of Margherita in 'Mefistofele.'

ANTON RUBINSTEIN has added a new movement to his 'Ocean' Symphony, which already contained six.

The eleventh part of Mr. Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' has been issued, carrying the work from "Opera" to "Palestrina."

Among the works performed at the Promenade Concerts during the week were Rubinstein's 'Ocean' Symphony and Mr. F. Clay's cantata 'Lalla Rookh.' Mr. Weist Hill is engaged to conduct the new season, commencing October 2nd, and Herr Josef Gungl will direct the dance music.

A VERY satisfactory report has been issued by the Birmingham Musical Association, founded last autumn for the twofold purpose of giving cheap concerts of high-class music and of affording musical instruction to the lower classes at the smallest possible cost. The first of these objects has already been carried to a successful issue. Twenty-two concerts were given in the Town Hall, to which the charge for admission was sixpence and threepence, and the average attendance was no less than 2,663. Among the works performed in their entirety were Mendelssohn's 'Athalie,' 42nd Psalm, and 'Lauda Sion'; Gounod's 'Messe Solennelle,' Haydn's 'Spring,' Dr. Stainers' 'Daughter of Jairus,' Gade's 'Erl King's Daughter,' and Prof. Macfarren's 'May Day,' together with selections from various oratorios and orchestral works. The result of the season was a slight profit, and the Association has thereby been encouraged to persevere with its excellent work.

ERNST FRIEDRICH WENZEL, one of the best professors of the piano in Germany, died at Kösen, near Merseburg, on the 16th ult., at the age of seventy-two. On the foundation of the Conservatorium of Leipzig in 1843, Mendelssohn appointed Wenzel one of the professors of the piano, and he continued to hold this post until his death.

THE Neue Zeitschrift für Musik announces that Herr Jean Becker will in future give his quartet concerts not with his previous colleagues, Messrs. Chiofetti, Mani, and Hegyesi, but with his three children, Jeanne, Hans, and Hugo.

EDUARD HALLBERGER, the music publisher of Stuttgart, died on the 29th ult., at the age of sixty.

THE jubilee of the Bach-Gesellschaft at Hamburg is to be celebrated at the end of this month by a musical festival extending over three days —September 30th to October 2nd. Handel's 'Solomon,' Bach's 'Magnificat,' and a portion of Liszt's 'Christus' will be among the principal works produced. Herr Ad. Mehrkens will be the conductor.

AN arrangement of Wagner's 'Liebesmahl der Apostel' as a pianoforte duet is shortly to be published. Herr Jadasohn, of Leipzig, is the arranger.

THE novelties of the Hamburg opera season, which commenced on the 1st inst., will be Boito's 'Mefistofele' and Rubinstein's 'Der Dämon.'

A CYCLE of Wagner's operas will be given at Munich in the course of the season. The series will include the whole of the master's works, from 'Rienzi' to 'Götterdämmerung.'

M. CHODURA, the music publisher of Paris, has purchased the copyright of Offenbach's latest operetta, 'Contes d'Hoffmann,' for 50,000 francs.

A young debutante, Fräulein Meisslinger, has made a brilliant success at Vienna in the arduous rôle of Fides in 'Le Prophète.'

Our Naples Correspondent writes:—"An institution worthy of all praise has been formed in this city under the auspices of six distinguished masters of music. It consists of schools of music for both sexes for the study of singing, harmony, double-bass, and composition. Like similar institutions existing in St. Petersburg, London, Berlin, Vienna, and Paris, it will be divided into sections. Singing will be entrusted to the Maestro Costa; harmony, counterpoint, and composition to Maestri Dall'Orefice and De Nardis. The division for the study of the pianoforte will be placed under the care of Maestri Russomandi and Gonzales, and the section for the study of the harp will be entrusted to Maestro Lebano. There will also be a class for the elements of music, which will be under the direction of Maestro Guarino."

DRAMA

LYCEUM.—SOLIS LINDSAY AND MANAGER, MR. HENRY IRVING.
—SATURDAY NEXT, September 11th, 8th night of the present season, when will be presented the Legendary Drama of 'THE MAID OF NORTHUMBERLAND.' LOUIE FABIAN, DAN FRANCK, MR. IRVING.
—LYCEUM.

RECENT DRAMAS.

The Maid of Northumberland: a Dramatic Poem. By Daniel Bedinger Lucas. (New York, G. P. Putnam's Sons.)

Ginevra and The Duke of Guise: two Tragedies. (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

NOR a little perplexing to the majority of readers are at first the geographical indexes afforded in 'The Maid of Northumberland.' A feeling akin to bewilderment is inspired in reading

Northumberland:
Behold upon the South, Old Bluff holds up
His signal hand, while Windmill answers him
Still further out: they are in Lancaster.
Now draw your lines between them two and us,
Then split the fork exact, you hit Stungay
In Middlesex; and here's Northumberland.

The explanation of this strange muddle of names, as it appears to Englishmen, is that 'The Maid of Northumberland' is, in spite of its pre-eminently English title, an American play, and that this curious conglomeration of remote districts occurs in the State of Virginia. It is a story of the Southern rebellion, of blockade running, of Confederate bonds and the like, and is apparently written with an eye to the stage. From this point of view it is open to the objection that the principal business—that of two treasures, or what appear to be such, being buried close together, and the stone which has been placed to mark the one being for a similar purpose rolled away to the other, and so leading to the disentanglement of a wrong box—is not likely to be dramatically effective. In literary respects the play, though not without merit, is open to condemnation. It is written in what may be called irregular verse. Whatever may be the advantages of irregular verse in French composition, its employment in English is a mere excuse for slovenly workmanship. At his "own sweet will" Mr. Lucas employs prose, blank verse, or rhymed verse, and he puts just as many syllables or accents into a line as suits his convenience or his caprice. Some capacity for painting character is shown, and there is some genuine if not very striking humour. The belief of Caspar Queen, the toll-keeper, in the value of his Confederate bonds is amusing. In describing the proceedings of a court-martial Mr. Lucas rises into satire. It is difficult, but not impossible, to believe that officers might have been found as stupid as those he depicts.

A good deal of the language Mr. Lucas employs strikes us as more forcible and less reverent than we are accustomed to in this country. There appears some reason to believe that a standard in these matters is used in America altogether different from our own. Sometimes, moreover, we encounter words and phrases which we hesitate to describe as Americanisms, though how else to describe them we know not. It is just possible that the word "set" in the third of the following lines is used in a proper sense. We are afraid, however, though the author is entitled to the benefit of the doubt, that it is meant for set:—

Hist! there's a note of danger while we talk—
That's Jesse's sign to put me on my guard:
I shut the box; set you upon it, dear.

Among the plays with which the world is little likely to concern itself, but which may be read not only without weariness, but with some pleasure, 'The Maid of Northumberland' is entitled to a respectable place.

'Ginevra' and 'The Duke of Guise' deal with two epochs so near together that more than one character appears in both. One play may, indeed, be considered a species of sequel to the other. Both have a quasi-historical basis, though both as regards detail belong to fiction. 'Ginevra' deals with the massacre of St. Bartholomew, and introduces the slaughter of Francis, Duke of Guise, known as le balafre, together with that of Coligny and other Huguenots. Into this grim theme is worked a love interest, the heroine who gives her name to the play being the daughter of Cosmo Ruggieri, the physician to Catherine de Medicis (sic). She is a wholly conventional heroine, and dies in a conventional manner, defending the life of her lover. The best part of the play is the description of the quasi-hysterical demonstrations of Charles IX. In literary merit 'Ginevra' is entitled to rank as respectable, though the style is abrupt and spasmodic. It is astonishing that writers cannot see how comic appear such lines as these with the stage directions which accompany them. Davila, the villain of the play, is addressing the hero. He speaks:—

Come on then, since Thou hast a mind to die. (They fight.) Ha! I am wounded
To the death. Fate conquers. Take my curse.
(Exit)

If we were without bad tragedians the necessity of speaking such lines would beget them.

In 'The Duke of Guise' a more dramatic point is reached. This play terminates with the assassination of the duke at Blois, and with the death of Catherine de Medicis immediately afterwards. A love intrigue, which seems to have been suggested by that between Lord Leicester and Amy Robsart, is a cause of the duke's discomfiture and death. Very little feeling for the epoch depicted is shown in the treatment. The Duke of Guise was little likely to be as squeamish in wooing as he appears in these pages.

Dramatic Gossip.

The promised novelty at the Haymarket has been postponed, and the theatre itself has been abruptly closed, the cause assigned being the excessive heat of the weather. Monday, the 20th inst., is fixed for the reopening of the theatre.

MR. IRVING will reopen the Lyceum on Saturday next with the 'Corsican Brothers.'

MR. E. ROSE's farce of 'Mad' has been revived as a lever de rideau at the Imperial Theatre, the sisters Lionel resuming the characters of the two heroines, and disclosing once more the striking resemblance to which the piece owes its origin.

'Le CARDINAL DUBOIS,' a melo-drama in five acts and six tableaux, by M. Alfred Belle, has been produced at the Théâtre du Château d'Eau, which house, after a short season of opera, has returned to purely dramatic entertainments. The plot turns upon a marriage which the cardinal is supposed to have contracted in his youth—an idea which is not without some foundation in tradition.

'LES NUITS DU BOULEVARD,' an old-fashioned melo-drama by MM. Zaccane, Th. Henry, and Mary Cluquet, in five acts and eight tableaux, has been produced at the Théâtre des Nations. It shows the unmasking by an Englishman, Sir Beverley, of some desperadoes who, on the strength of the titles they have assumed, have obtained a footing in fashionable life.

THE Théâtre des Variétés has reopened with Madame Judic and M. Dupuis in 'La Femme à Papa.'

THE revival of 'Athalie' at the Comédie Française has incurred the general condemnation of the Parisian press. Mlle. Lerou, who plays the heroine, has caused, however, a strong sensation. With very little gallantry, the French journals condemn the personal appearance of the débütante while admitting her remarkable powers. Judging from the description given, Mlle. Lerou, who obtained a noticeable triumph at the Conservatoire, seems likely to prove a veritable tragedienne—a thing the stage since the death of Rachel has not seen.

E. WERNER, whose novels we have frequently had occasion to notice in English translations, has just had a success upon a new field. Some time ago the Munich Court Theatre invited the dramatic authors of Germany to compete for a prize for the best play. Ninety-nine accepted the invitation, sending thirty tragedies, thirty-one dramas, and thirty-eight comedies. E. Werner, who until then had never written a play, sent in a comedy, which was recommended by the committee as the only play worthy to carry off the prize, which it therefore obtained. It is called 'Superstition,' and will be produced in the course of the coming season. E. Werner is the nom de plume of a lady—Eusebius Birstenbinder.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—E. M. W.—E. C. P.—C. E. B.—received.
No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW LIST.

PRACTICAL BLOWPIPE ASSAYING.

By GEORGE ATTWOOD, F.G.S. Assoc. Inst. C.E.
F.C.S. Mem. Am. Inst. M.E., &c.

With 74 Woodcut Illustrations.

[Just ready.]

NEW NOVEL, NOW READY,

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'GINK'S BABY,'

L I S A L E N A.

By EDWARD JENKINS.

In 2 vols. crown 8vo. 5s.

A SAILOR'S SWEETHEART.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL,

Author of 'The Wreck of the Grosvener,' 'John Holdsworth, Chief Mate,' &c.

In 3 vols.

[Will be published shortly.]

Now ready, in wrapper Part VI. price 1s. of

MR. WILLIAM BLACK'S SUNRISE:

a Story of These Times.

FORTY YEARS' RECOLLECTIONS:

Literary and Political By THOMAS FROST, Author of 'The Secret Societies of the European Revolution,' &c. Crown 8vo. cloth extra, price 10s. 6d.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT!

Messrs. SAMPSON LOW & CO. beg to inform admirers of the Writings of

WASHINGTON IRVING,

That they will publish, at short intervals, a

COMPLETE LIBRARY EDITION OF HIS WORKS (27 VOLUMES), Copyright, Unabridged, and with the Author's Latest Revisions.

This will be called the "DROFFREY CRAYON" Edition, and will be handsomely printed in large crown 8vo. on superfine laid paper, and each Volume, of about 400 pp., will be fully illustrated, price 15s. 6d. per Volume.

The following Volumes are ready:—

- I. A HISTORY OF NEW YORK. With Introduction by Charles Decker Warner.
- II. THE SKETCH-BOOK.
- III. BRACEBRIDGE HALL.
- IV. TALES OF A TRAVELLER.
- V. THE ALHAMBRA.

Now ready, demy 8vo. 420 pages, cloth extra, price 5s. 6d.

NAVIES OF THE WORLD: giving Complete Descriptions of the Plans, Armament, and Armour of the Naval Vessels of Twenty of the Principal Nations, together with the latest Developments in Ordnance, Torpedoes, and Naval Architecture, and a Concise Summary of the Principal Naval Battles of the last Twenty Years, 1850 to 1870. By Lieut. EDWARD W. VERNY, U.S.N. With more than 400 Plans, Sketches, &c., and a Complete Index.

Now ready, crown 8vo. cloth extra, price 10s. 6d.

EVERY-DAY ENGLISH. By Richard

GRANT WHITE. It treats of Speech, Writing, Grammar, Words, and Phrases pointing out the Errors which abound in our common use of English, and, by its happy combination of learning and humour, makes a book which all intelligent persons can read with equal profit and enjoyment.

Now ready, small post 8vo. cloth extra, price 2s. 6d.

MOUNTAIN AND PRAIRIE: a Journey

from Victoria to Winnipeg, old Peace River Pass. By the Rev DANIEL M. GORDON, B.D. Ottawa. With Maps and Illustrations.

Now ready, demy 8vo. cloth extra, price 14s.

The AUSTRALIAN ABROAD.

Sketches from the Main Routes round the World. Second Series—Ceylon, India, and Egypt. By JAMES KINGDON. With many fine Illustrations. Uniform with the First Series.

The New Volume of the "Tauschitz Series" of German Authors is entitled, BRIGITTA: a Tale. By Berthold

AURIBACH, Author of 'On the Heights,' &c. Translated by CLARA HILL. Cloth, 18mo. price 2s.

BEATRICE MELTON'S DISCI-

PLINE. By MAUD JEANNE FRANK, Author of 'Masha,' 'Minnie's Mission,' &c. Small 8vo. cloth gilt, price 6s.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLS & RIVINGTON,
Crown Buildings, 188, Fleet-street, E.C.

In stiff paper cover, 1s. 6d. each; or cloth gilt, 2s.

THE CHANDOS CLASSICS.

SALE 2,500,000.

This Series aims at supplying the best literature that is not copyright at a price and in a style that is only representative by an enormous circulation. Sold by all Booksellers.

THE CHANDOS CLASSICS.

SALE 2,500,000.

The Times says:—"Thanks to the 'Chandos Classics,' it is in the power of any one to become possessed of a very respectable library—respectable both in quantity and quality—for a sum of money that some years ago would hardly have sufficed to place one complete edition of a good writer on the bookshelf. For 2s. a volume nearly all the best poetical works of the English language and many good prose works can now be purchased, in good type and most serviceable binding."

THE CHANDOS CLASSICS.

SALE 2,500,000.

A Series of Standard Works in Poetry, History, and General Literature, largely used in Colleges and Schools.

In crown 8vo. stiff paper cover, 1s. 6d. each; or cloth gilt, 2s. each.

1. SHAKESPEARE.
2. LONGFELLOW.
3. BYRON.
4. SCOTT.
5. ARABIAN NIGHTS.
6. ELIZA COOK.
7. LEGENDARY BALLADS.
8. BURNS.
9. JOHNSON'S LIVES OF THE POETS.
10. DANTE (The Vision of). Carey.
11. MOORE.
12. DR. BRYANT'S THREE TOURS.
13. BUTLER'S HUDIBRAS.
14. COWPER.
15. MILTON.
16. WORDSWORTH.
17. HAWTHORNE'S TWICE TOLD TALES.
18. ENGLAND, Hallam and De Lolme.
19. THE SARACENS, Gibbon and Ockley.
20. LOCKHART'S SPANISH BALLADS and SOUTHEY'S ROMANCE OF THE OLD.
21. ROBINSON CRUSOE.
22. SWISS FAMILY ROBINSON.
23. Mrs. HEMANS.
24. GRIMM'S FAIRY TALES.
25. ANDERSEN'S (HANS) FAIRY TALES.
26. SCOTT'S DRAMATISTS AND NOVELISTS.
27. SCOTT'S ESSAYS.
28. SHELLEY.
29. CAMPBELL.
30. KEATS.
31. COLERIDGE.
32. POPE'S ILIAD. Maxman's Illustrations.
33. POPE'S ODYSSEY. Ditto.
34. HOOD.
35. REPRESENTATIVE ACTORS.
36. ROMANCE OF HISTORY—ENGLAND.
37. HUNGARY. FRANCE.
38. Ditto. SPAIN.
39. Ditto. ITALY.
40. Ditto. INDIA.
41. GERMAN LITERATURE.
42. DON QUIXOTE (Life and Adventures of).
43. EASTERN TALES.
44. BOOK OF AUTOBIOGRAPHIES.
45. POPE.
46. MACKAY.
47. GOLDENMITH'S POEMS, &c.
48. THE KORAN (Complete).
49. OXFORD'S FRENCH SONGS, including COSTELLO'S LAYS OF THE TWO ADAMANTS.
50. GIL BLAS (The Adventures of).
51. THE TALMUD (Selections from).
52. VIRGIL (Dryden's) (The Works of).
53. DODD'S BEAUTIES OF SHAKESPEARE.
54. ROMANCE OF LONDON—Historical, &c.
55. ROMANCE OF LONDON—Supernatural, &c.
56. A CENTURY OF ANECDOTES.
57. WALTON'S ANGLER.
58. HERBERT'S (GEORGE) WORKS.
59. HERBERT'S Bishop POETICAL WORKS.
60. HALF-HOURS WITH THE BEST AUTHORS.
61. Ditto. 6s.
62. Ditto. 6s.
63. Ditto. 6s.
64. Ditto. 6s.
65. HUNYAN'S PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.
66. FUGITIVE POETRY. 1800—1878.
67. PEPEY'S DIARY.
68. EVELYN'S DIARY.
69. TOWNSEND'S EVERY-DAY BOOK OF MODERN LITERATURE.
70. Ditto. 6s.
71. MONTGOMERY (JAMES).
72. SPENSER'S FAERY QUEEN.
73. WHITE'S NATURAL HISTORY OF SELBORNE. Illustrated.
74. KEBLE'S CHRISTIAN YEAR.
75. LAMB'S POEMS AND ESSAYS.
76. ROSCOE'S ITALIAN NOVELISTS.
77. ROSCOE'S GERMAN NOVELISTS.
78. ROSCOE'S SPANISH NOVELISTS.
79. GIBBON'S LIFE AND LETTERS.
80. GRAY, BEATTIE, and COLLINS.
81. PERCY'S RELIQUES. Edited by E. WALFORD.
82. GEMS OF NATIONAL POETRY.

FREDERICK WARNE & Co. Bedford-street, Strand.

CHATTO & WINDUS, PUBLISHERS.

Now ready, Vols. III. and IV. (Completing the Work), demy 8vo. cloth extra, 12s. each,

A HISTORY OF OUR OWN TIMES.

FROM THE ACCESSION OF QUEEN VICTORIA TO THE GENERAL ELECTION OF 1880.

By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P.

"Criticism is disarmed before a composition which provokes little but approval. This is a really good book on a really interesting subject, and words piled on words could say no more for it. . . . Such is the effect of its general justice, its breadth of view, and its sparkling buoyancy, that very few of its readers will close these volumes without looking forward with interest to the two [since published] that are to follow."—Saturday Review, in notice of Vols. I. and II.

ILLUSTRATED EDITION IN MARK TWAIN'S NEW STYLE.

A New Edition, crown 8vo. cloth extra, with 214 Illustrations, price 7s. 6d.

A TRAMP ABROAD. By Mark Twain.

"The fun and tenderness of the conception, of which no living man but Mark Twain is capable, its grace and fantasy, and slyness, the wonderful feeling for animals that is manifest in every line, make of all this episode of Jim Baker and his joys a piece of work that is not only delightful as mere reading, but also of a high degree of merit as literature. . . . The book is full of good things."—Athenæum.

OUIDA'S NEW VOLUME OF COLLECTED STORIES.—Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 10s. 6d., and at every Library,

P I S T R E L L O, and other Stories. By Ouida.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.—Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 6s.

M O T H S. By Ouida.—"Not only the author's finest work, but one which marks a new epoch in fiction."—Morning Post.

NEW NOVEL BY JULIAN HAWTHORNE.—In a few days, 2 vols. crown 8vo. at every Library,

E L L I C E Q U E N T I N, and other Stories. By Julian Hawthorne.

CHARLES GIBBON'S NEW NOVEL.—Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 10s. 6d., and at every Library,

I N P A S T U R E S G R E E N, and other Stories. By Charles Gibbon.

Now ready, crown 8vo. cloth extra, 6s., the SECOND VOLUME of

BRET HARTE'S COLLECTED WORKS, Arranged and Revised by the Author. Containing Earlier Papers—The Luck of Roaring Camp, and other Sketches—Bohemian Papers—Spanish and American Legends—Tales of the Argonauts, &c.

VOLUME I. contains: THE COMPLETE PORTUGAL and DRAMATIC WORKS OF BRET HARTE. With a fine Steel-plate Portrait, specially engraved for this Edition, and an Introduction by the Author.

MISS G. BOWERS'S NEW HUNTING SKETCHES.—Just ready, handsomely half bound, oblong 4to. 21s.

LEAVES from a HUNTING JOURNAL. By G. Bowers, Author of 'Canterers in Crampshire,' &c.

Coloured in Fac-simile of the Originals.

SECOND EDITION, Revised.—In One thick Volume of 1,200 pages, crown 8vo. half-Roxburghe, 12s. 6d.

The READER'S HANDBOOK of ALLUSIONS, REFERENCES, PLOTS, and STORIES.

By the Rev. Dr. BREWER.

"Dr. Brewer has produced a wonderfully comprehensive dictionary of references to matters which are always cropping up in conversation and in every-day life, and writers generally will have reason to feel grateful to the author for a most handy volume, supplementing in a hundred ways their own knowledge or ignorance, as the case may be. . . . It is something more than a mere dictionary of quotations, though a most useful companion to any work of that kind, being a dictionary of most of the allusions, references, plots, stories, and characters which occur in the classical poems, plays, novels, romances, &c., not only of our own country, but of most nations, ancient and modern."—Times.

Crown 8vo. cloth extra, with Frontispiece, 7s. 6d.

CREDULITIES, PAST and PRESENT. By William Jones, F.S.A., Author of 'Finger-Ring

Lore,' &c.

NEW VOLUMES OF THE PICCADILLY NOVELS.

Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 8s. 6d. each.

JEZEBEL'S DAUGHTER. By WILKIE COLLINS.UNDER WHICH LORD? By E. LYNN LINTON. With 12 Illustrations by Arthur Hopkins.DONNA QUIXOTE. By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P. With 12 Illustrations by Arthur Hopkins.QUEEN of the MEADOW. By CHARLES GIBBON. With 12 Illustrations by Arthur Hopkins.THE SEAMY SIDE. By the Authors of 'Ready-Money Mortiboy.'HIGH SPIRITS. By JAMES PAYN.NEW VOLUMES OF "THE MAYFAIR LIBRARY."

Fcap 8vo. cloth limp, 2s. 6d. each.

THE SPEECHES of CHARLES DICKENS. With Chapters on Dickens as a Letter-Writer, Poet, and Public Reader.
LITERARY FRIVOLITIES, FANCIES, FOLLIES, and FROLICS. By WILLIAM T. DOBSON.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITIONS.

Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 6s. each.

MYTHS and MARVELS of ASTRONOMY. By RICHARD A. PROCTOR.PLEASANT WAYS in SCIENCE. By RICHARD A. PROCTOR.

CHATTO & WINDUS, PICCADILLY, W.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

NEW NOVELS.

Now ready, 3 vols. crown 8vo. 31s. 6d.

WHITE WINGS: A YACHTING ROMANCE.

By WILLIAM BLACK,

Author of 'Macleod of Dare,' 'Macleod Violet,' &c.

The Daily News says:—"To follow the White Dove in her cruises among the Western Highland Islands is to have one exquisite effect of sea and mountain scenery presented after another, to pass from magical sunsets to driving storms of rain... to enjoy in fact, in imagination, an ideally charming yachting excursion, without the danger and the fatigue."

Now ready, 2 vols. crown 8vo. 12s.

LOVE AND LIFE:

AN OLD STORY IN EIGHTEENTH-CENTURY COSTUME.

By CHARLOTTE M. YONGE.

Just ready, 3 vols. crown 8vo. 31s.

THE REBECCA RIOTER:

A STORY OF KILRAY LIFE.

By E. A. DILLWYN.

Now ready, 3 vols. crown 8vo. 31s. 6d.

THE LADY RESIDENT.

By HAMILTON PAGE.

S. T. COLERIDGE'S POETICAL

and DRAMATIC WORKS. Founded on the Author's latest edition of 1854, with many additional Pieces now first included, and with a collection of various Readings. 4 vols. fcap. 8vo. 31s. 6d. [Nearly ready.]

CICERO'S LIFE and LETTERS;

being a Translation of the Letters included in Mr. Watson's Selection, with Historical and Critical Notes. By the Rev. G. E. JEANS, M.A. 8vo. 10s. 6d. [Just ready.]

A LATIN GRAMMAR for SCHOOLS.

By H. J. BOBY, M.A., Author of 'A Grammar of the Latin Language from Plautus to Suetonius.' Crown 8vo. 5s. [Now ready.]

GREEK ELEGIAC POETS,

Selections from. By H. KYNASTON, M.A., Principal of Cheltenham College. 18mo. 1s. 6d. ("Macmillan's Elementary Classics.") [Just ready.]

ENGLISH MEN of LETTERS.

Edited by JOHN MOZLEY.

BYRON. By Professor NICHOL. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.

"Decidedly one of the most valuable and careful of the whole series."—Athenæum.

TWO WORLDS are OURS. By the

Rev. HUGH MACMILLAN, LL.D. F.R.S.E., Author of 'Bible Teachings in Nature.' Globe 8vo. 6s. [Just ready.]

OUT of the DEEP: Words for the

Sorrowful. From the Writings of CHARLES KINGSLEY. Extra fcap. 8vo. cloth extra, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

ART at HOME SERIES. New Volume.

THE MINOR ARTS: Porcelain Painting, Wood Carving, Stencilling, Modelling, Mosaic Work, &c. By CHARLES G. LELAND. Crown 8vo. with Illustrations, 2s. 6d.

MACMILLAN'S SIX-SHILLING NOVELS. New Volume.

A DOUBTING HEART. By ANNIE KEARY. Crown 8vo. [Just ready.]

Part XI. now ready, price 3s. 6d. (Opera to Palestrina).

A DICTIONARY of MUSIC and MUSICIANS. Edited by GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L.

MACMILLAN & CO. London.

"That useful resuscitant of dead knowledge, yclept NOTES AND QUERIES, the antiquaries' newspaper." Quarterly Review.

Every SATURDAY, 24 Pages, Price 4d. of all Booksellers.

NOTES AND QUERIES:

A Medium of Intercommunication for Literary Men, Artists, Antiquaries, Genealogists, &c.

"When found, make a note of."—CAPTAIN CUTLER.

CONTAINING EVERY WEEK AMUSING ARTICLES ON SOME OF THE FOLLOWING SUBJECTS:

ENGLISH, IRISH, and SCOTTISH HISTORY,

Illustrated by Original Communications and Inedited Documents.

BIOGRAPHY,

Including unpublished Correspondence of eminent Men, and unrecorded Facts connected with them.

BIBLIOGRAPHY,

More especially of English Authors, with Notices of rare and unknown Editions of their Works, and Notes on Authorship of Anonymous Books.

POPULAR ANTIQUITIES and FOLK-LORE,

Preserving the fast-fading Relics of the old Mythologies.

BALLADS and OLD POETRY,

With Historical and Philological Illustrations.

POPULAR and PROVERBIAL SAYINGS,

Their Origin, Meaning, and Application.

PHILOLOGY,

Including Local Dialects, Archaisms, and Notes on our old Poets.

GENEALOGY and HERALDRY,

Including Histories of Old Families, completion of Pedigrees, &c.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES, QUERIES, and REPLIES,

On points of ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY, TOPOGRAPHY, FINE ARTS, NATURAL HISTORY, MISCELLANEOUS ANTIQUITIES, NUMISMATICS, PHOTOGRAPHY, &c.

Published by JOHN FRANCIS, 20, Wellington-street, Strand, W.C.

And may be had, by order, of all Booksellers and News-vendors.

60th Edition, with Portrait, 1s. 6d.

BUTTER'S SPELLING.

BUTTER'S READING and SPELLING, in Easy Gradations. 72nd Edition, 1s. 6d. Simpkin & Co., and all Booksellers.

Tenth Edition, post 8vo, 1s.

DR. WATTS on ASTHMA: a Treatise on the only Successful Method of Curing this Disease. By ROBERT G. WATTS, M.D. F.R.S.L., F.C.S., &c., 4, Baldocton-street, Cavendish-square, London, W. London: C. Mitchell & Co. Red Lion-court, Fleet-street.

Revised Edition, pp. 386, bound, 1s., or 11s. 6d. HOMOEOPATHIC FAMILY INSTRUCTOR. By DR. RICHARD WASHINGTON EPPA. Describes fully and Prescribes for a Hundred Diseases.

London: James Epps & Co. 45, Threadneedle-street, and 120, Fleet-street.

Now ready, with a Chart showing the Ocean-Routes, and illustrating the Physical Geography of the Sea, crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

THE OCEAN as a HEALTH-RESORT: a Handbook of Practical Information as to Sea Voyages, for the Use of Tourists and Invalids. By WILLIAM S. WILSON, L.R.C.P. Lond., M.R.C.S.E. J. & A. Churchill, New Burlington-street.

Now ready, demy 4to.

APPENDICES to YOUNG'S ANALYTICAL CONCORDANCE. Containing Hebrew and Greek Lexicons, Views, Maps, Facsimiles, &c. Price to subscribers, 11s. 6d. half Morocco, 12s. 6d. cloth, 11s. 6d. sewed, post free. P.O. payable to George Adam Young & Co. 15, Nicolson-street, Edinburgh.

FOURTH EDITION, WITH AN APPENDIX.

Just published, 8vo. cloth, 16s.

FIRST PRINCIPLES. By HERBERT SPENCER. Fifth Thousand. With an Appendix dealing with Critics (which may be had separately, price 6d.) Williams & Morgan, 14, Elmfield-street, Covent-garden, London: and 20, South Frodoch-street, Edinburgh.

THE ARABIC LANGUAGE.

FOR TRAVELLERS IN SYRIA, PALESTINE, ARABIA, AND EGYPT.

CATAPAGO'S ENGLISH and ARABIC DICTIONARY. In Two Parts. Arabic-English and English-Arabic. Second Edition. 8vo. viii and 1,000 pp. cloth, 8s. (1872.)

FARIS EL SHIDIAC'S PRACTICAL GRAMMAR of the ARABIC LANGUAGE. With Reading Lessons and Vocabulary. Second Edition. By Professor H. G. WILLIAMS. 18mo. cloth, 5s. (1880.)

These two works are all that is needed to acquire a knowledge of speaking the widely-spread Arabic Language.

Barnard Quaritch, 12, Piccadilly, London.

PRINCIPAL DAWSON'S POPULAR GEOLOGICAL WORKS.

"Since Hugh Miller no geologist has possessed so graphic a pen as Dr. Dawson."—Literary Characterist.

Just published, with 44 Illustrations, 7s. 6d.

FOSSIL MEN and their MODERN REPRESENTATIVES. An Attempt to Illustrate the Character and Condition of Prehistoric Man in Europe by those of the American Race. By J. W. DAWSON, LL.D. F.R.S. F.G.S.

"A keen observer of the habits of the red man, and a diligent student of American antiquities, he is able, by analogical reasoning, to throw light upon the probable condition of prehistoric man in Europe, and upon the nature of the relics which he has requested to us."—Athenæum.

II. The STORY of the EARTH and MAN. Sixth Edition, 20 Illustrations, 7s. 6d.

"A very able and interesting sketch of geological science."—Speaker.

III. The ORIGIN of the WORLD. According to Revelation and Science. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

IV. LIFE'S DAWN on EARTH. Being the History of the oldest-known Fossil Remains, and their Relations to Geological Time and to the Development of the Animal Kingdom. Second Thousand, numerous Illustrations, 7s. 6d.

London: Hodder & Stoughton, 27, Paternoster-row.

Now ready, Second Edition, Enlarged, price 3s. 6d.

THE VOICE and PUBLIC SPEAKING. A Book for all who Read and Speak in Public. By J. P. SANDLAND, M.A. Mr. Sandland in a Letter to the Author, says:—"I receive your work with great interest and satisfaction. I am truly glad that you are calling public attention to these matters."

London: Hodder & Stoughton, 27, Paternoster-row.

IN AND OUT OF LONDON

The New Alphabetical Railway Guide (price 6d.) for Travellers. On the First of every Month.

THE LONDON and PROVINCIAL BRADSHAW: by Alphabetical and Tabular Arrangement.—Advertisements should be sent to Adams & Francis, 25, Fleet-street, E.C.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.

ADAMS & FRANCIS insert ADVERTISEMENTS in all Newspapers, Magazines, and Periodicals. Terms for transacting business, and List of London Papers, can be had on application to Adams & Francis, 25, Fleet-street, E.C.

VINGT-SEPT ANS D'HISTOIRE des ÉTUDES ORIENTALES Rapports faits à la Société Asiatique de Paris de 1840 à 1867. Par JULEN MOHL, Membre de l'Institut, Secrétaire Asiatique. Ouvrage publié par sa Veuve Trélat. Paris: Hienwald.

Just ready, price 1s. cloth, coloured edges.
HAND-BOOK for WRITERS and READERS. Comprising Daily Blunders Corrected, Synonyms of 15,000 Words, and Classical Dictionary. London: Walsingham & Co.

Just published, price 1s. cloth; 1s. 6d. half bound.
A DICTIONARY of DAILY BLUNDERS. Comprising a Collection of Mistakes often made in Speaking and Writing. Corrected from the best Authorities. Same size and price.

REJECTED ADDRESSES; or, the New Theatreum Futurum.

Just published, folio, 8s.
DESIGNS and PLANS for the CONSTRUCTION and ARRANGEMENTS of the NEW MODEL VIOLIN. London: H. K. Lewis, 130, Covent-street, W.C.

New ready, price 1s. post free, 1s. 1d.
THE THEORY of WAGES. By C. P. J. VAN DER BERG, Secretary to the Company for Working the Netherlands State Railways. Translated from the Dutch. London: S. Macdonald & Co. 21, Old Bailey, E.C.

E V E R Y D A Y.
"It contains no."—Pall Mall Gazette.
"It is throughout, a touch of nature, and a sensible mass for what is good."—Pall.
"Pleasant, and by no means dull."—Chart Journal.
Cloth, 8s., boards, 1s. 6d.
Basingstoke, 7, Arundel-street, Strand.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW WORK BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE GAMEKEEPER AT HOME.'

Now ready, crown 8vo. 1s.

ROUND ABOUT A GREAT ESTATE.

By RICHARD JEFFERIES.

Author of 'The Gamekeeper at Home,' 'Wild Life in a Southern County,' 'The Amateur Poacher,' &c.

"As fresh, as picturesque, and as daintily written as 'The Gamekeeper at Home.' A very pleasant volume."—Globe.

"The work of one who is an intelligent and observant lover of nature and of country life. We have read his book with pleasure and recommend it to others."—Queen.

NEW VOLUME BY MATTHEW ARNOLD.

PASSAGES from the PROSE WRITINGS of

MATTHEW ARNOLD. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Contents: 1. LITERATURE. 2. POLITICS and SOCIETY. 3. PHILOSOPHY and RELIGION.

NEW and OLD: a Volume of Verse. By John

ADDINGTON SYMONDS, M.A., Author of 'Renaissance in Italy,' &c. Crown 8vo. 8s.

"The production of a man of decidedly poetical sympathy and imagination; of delicate and refined taste and feeling, and rare accomplishment as a writer of various verse."—Daily News.

ENGLISH TREES and TREE PLANTING. By

WILLIAM H. ABLETT. Demy 8vo. 12s. 6d.

"To country gentlemen the book will be invaluable."—Examiner.

"Calculated to be of great service to such as need a practical guide to English forestry."—Live Stock Journal.

NEW NOVEL.

OLIVER CONSTABLE: Miller and Baker.

By SARAH TYTLER,

Author of 'Citizeness Jacqueline,' 'Scottish First,' &c.

8 vols. post 8vo.

"An exceedingly interesting tale. We regard it as one of the best works of the gifted authoress."—Chart Journal.

"Miss Tytler writes exceedingly well. Her novel does her very great credit, and merits a well-earned success."—Daily News.

London: SMITH, ELDER & Co. 15, Waterloo-place.

NOTICE.

NOW READY,

VOL. I. SIXTH SERIES,

OF

NOTES AND QUERIES.

With Copious Index, price 10s. 6d.

JOHN FRANCIS, 20, Wellington-street, Strand, London, W.C.

E P P S ' S C O C O A.

GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

JAMES EPPS & Co. HOMOEOPATHIC CHEMISTS, LONDON,
MAKERS OF EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.—Sold in Labelled Boxes only.

Just published, fcap. 8vo. 188 pages, price 2s. 6d.
EXERCISES in CONTINUOUS LATIN PROSE. Consisting partly of Imitative Exercises, partly of Extracts from English Authors (25 in all); with an Introduction on Difficult Constructions. Order of Words, style &c. By JAMES MOIR, M.A. Head Classical Master in Glasgow Academy. Edinburgh: James Thin Glasgow & Kennerly.

PHOENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD-STREET and CHANCERY CROSS, LONDON. Established 1782. Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements. Insurances effected in all parts of the World. JOHN J. BROOMFIELD, Secretary.

SUN FIRE OFFICE. Thoroughbred-street E.C. Charing Cross, S.W. Established 1720. Home and Foreign Insurances effected. Loss insured in 14 1/2 days. FRANCIS B. MELTON, Secretary.

EAGLE INSURANCE COMPANY, 7, FILL MALL. For LIVES ONLY ESTABLISHED 1807. Accumulated Funds £2,000,000. Also a subscribed Capital of more than £1,000,000. Reports, Prospectuses, and Forms may be had at the Office, or from any of the Company's Agents, post free. GEORGE HUMPHREYS, Actuary and Secretary.

LOSS OF TIME IS LOSS OF MONEY.

ACCIDENTS CAUSE LOSS OF TIME. And may be provided against by a Policy of the RAILWAY PASSENGERS ASSURANCE COMPANY. The Oldest and Largest Accidental Assurance Company. Right Hon. Lord KINNARD, Chairman. Subscribed Capital, 1,000,000. Moderate Premiums. Bonus allowed to Insurers of Five Years standing. A fixed sum in case of Death by Accident, and a Weekly Allowance in the event of injury. ONE MILLION and a HALF has been paid in COMPENSATION. Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64, Cornhill, London. WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

NOTICE.—MARKS, DURLACHER BROS. 203, OXFORD-STREET, W. ANTIQUE WORKS of ART and general Objects of Decoration. The authenticity of every Object guaranteed.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S STEEL PENS. Sold by all Stationers throughout the World.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS THROUGHOUT on MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM. The Original, Best, and most Liberal.

No extra charge for time given. Illustrated Price Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post free. F. MOEDER, 249, 247, 250, Tottenham Court-road, and 12, 13, and 14, Newwell-street, W.C. Established 1852.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious Warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room suites from 8. 6s. to 50 Guineas. Drawing-room suites from 8. 6s. to 45 Guineas. Dining-room suites from 11. 7s. to 40 Guineas. And all other Goods in great variety. F. MOEDER, 249, 247, 250, Tottenham Court-road, and 12, 13, and 14, Newwell-street, W.C. Established 1852.

A POLLINARIS WATER. "L'écoulement de Pollinaria."—Harper, Book IV. Ode 1.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1879.

ANNUAL SALE, 4000,000.

POLLINARIA COMPANY, Limited, 14, Regent-street, London, E.W.

PROTECTION FROM FIRE.

BRYANT & MAY'S PATENT SAFETY MATCHES.

ADVANTAGES—
Are not POISONOUS.
Are free from SMOKE.
Are manufactured Without Phosphorus.
Are perfectly barbed.
To the Operators employed.
Are very WAMP PROOF.
LIGHT ONLY ON THE BOX.
RIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.
PROTECTION TO HEALTH.

M. R. G. H. JONES,

7, GREAT RUSSELL-STREET, LONDON.

(Opposite the British Museum).

Will be glad to forward his Pamphlet on Painless Dentistry, free, enclosed by post, which explains the most unique system of the adjustment of Artificial Teeth without pain. Consultation free, from 10 to 5.

DINNIFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this Pure Magnesia as the best remedy for ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEARTBURN, HEADACHE, COLIC, and INDIGESTION, and as the safest Agent for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNIFORD'S MAGNESIA.

OLD DR. JACOB TOWNSEND'S SARSAPARILLA.—The best Antiseptic Medicine for the Blood, Scrofula Disorders, Ulcers, and all Skin Diseases. In bottles, 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 11s., of all Chemists. Chief Depot, 121, Fleet-street, E.C.

DEAN, STEEL & Co.

CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED.

JAPANESE POTTERY.

By A NATIVE.

Edited by A. W. FRANKS, F.R.S. F.S.A.

Forming New Volume of the "South Kensington Art Handbooks."

Large crown 8vo.

[This day.]

WALKS THROUGH the CITY of YORK. By Robert DAVIES, F.S.A. Edited by his WIDOW. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

BRITISH BEE FARMING: its Profits and Pleasures.

By JAMES F. ROBINSON. Uniform with the "Farming for Pleasure and Profit" Series. Large crown 8vo. 6s.

"It puts before the public, on unquestionable authority, an unvarnished and honest statement of the advantages and difficulties (such as these are) of bee-keeping, and is in itself, therefore, a far more powerful incentive to the industry than any number of philanthropic or sentimental exhortations to the same object." Daily Telegraph.

The INDUSTRIAL ARTS of INDIA. By George C. M.

BURDWOOD, C.S.I. Large crown 8vo. with Map and 114 Illustrations, 9s.

"Dr. Burdwood has thoroughly assimilated all the latest æsthetic and archaeological discoveries, and fully recognizes the influence of Greek and Egyptian culture upon the Indian world. Altogether, the work is pleasant to read, beautifully illustrated, and thoroughly worthy of Dr. Burdwood's deserved reputation as a learned and appreciative student of Oriental art."—St. James's Gazette.

SOLDIERS of the VICTORIAN AGE. By C. R. Low.

2 vols. demy 8vo. 30s.

"The soldiers of the Victorian era have found a worthy biography in the historian of the Indian navy. Mr. Low possesses not only a most agreeable style, but is a most industrious collector of facts, while his knowledge of public affairs generally is very extensive. He is thus able to interest his readers, and his estimates of men are in just proportion because he sees how their actions stand in relation to surrounding events. All our military worthies are included, and as the story of each campaign in which they were engaged is told by such a competent raconteur as Mr. Low, our readers will see that they may enjoy a treat if they choose to do so by obtaining the volumes for themselves."—Broad Arrow.

CURIOSITIES of the SEARCH-ROOM. A Collection of Serious and Whimsical Wills. By the Author of 'Flemish Interiors,' &c. Demy 8vo. 16s.

"A book full of entertainment, and that for the most part of a novel nature." John Bull.

The RACEHORSE in TRAINING. With some Hints on

Racing and Racing Reform. By WILLIAM DAY. Demy 8vo. 10s. Third Edition.

The UNDERLYING PRINCIPLES of INDIAN FISCAL

ADMINISTRATION. By JOHN HECTOR. Crown 8vo. 4s.

HISTORY of the ZULU WAR and its ORIGIN. By FRANCIS H. COLENSO. Assisted in those Portions of the Work which touch upon Military Matters by Lieut.-Colonel EDWARD DURNFORD. Demy 8vo. 16s.

"Miss Colenso presents, in an attractive style, a complete account of the origin, course, and conclusion of the most notable episode in South African affairs. Where military matters are treated, she has had the able assistance of Lieutenant-Colonel Edward Durnford, one result of which is the most thorough and graphic account of the Landwana disaster that has yet appeared. In short, the book on the whole is the best that has been written on a campaign that was a blunder."—World.

ON DUTY: a Ride through Hostile Africa. By Parker

GILMORE, Commandant of Native Levies during the late Zulu War. Demy 8vo. 16s.

BOSWELL and CROKER'S BOSWELL. By Percy Fitz-

GERALD. Demy 8vo. 12s.

SKETCHES in the HUNTING FIELD. By Alfred E. T.WATSON, Editor of the Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News. Illustrated by John Sturgess. Demy 8vo. 12s. Second Edition.THE LETTERS OF CHARLES DICKENS.

(NOW FOR THE FIRST TIME PUBLISHED.)

Edited by his SISTER-IN-LAW and ELDEST DAUGHTER.

2 vols. demy 8vo. 30s. Second Edition. Fifth Thousand.

NEW NOVELS.

BELLES AND RINGERS.

By HAWLEY SMART.

1 vol.

E R O S:

FOUR STORIES.

By SARAH TYTLER, Hon. LEWIS WINGFIELD,

Miss B. M. BUTT, and Miss G. BUTT.

2 vols.

THERE'S RUE FOR YOU.

By Mrs. ARTHUR KENNARD.

2 vols. Second Edition.

THOMAS CARLYLE'S WORKS.
LIBRARY EDITION, COMPLETE.

In 34 vols. demy 8vo. cloth, 15l.

PEOPLE'S EDITION.

37 vols. small crown 8vo. 2s. each.

BARTOR RESARTUS.

FRENCH REVOLUTION. 3 vols.

LIFE of JOHN STERLING.

OLIVER CROMWELL'S LETTERS and

SPEECHES 5 vols.

On HEROES and HERO WORSHIP.

PAST and PRESENT.

CRITICAL and MISCELLANEOUS ESSAYS.

7 vols.

LATTER-DAY PAMPHLETS.

LIFE of SCHILLER.

FREDERICK the GREAT. 10 vols.

WILHELM MEISTER. 3 vols.

TRANSLATIONS from MUSEUS, TIECK, and RICHTER. 2 vols.

The EARLY KINGS of NORWAY; also an Essay on the Portraits of John Knox. With General Index.

CHARLES DICKENS'S WORKS.

THE POCKET VOLUME EDITION.

30 vols. small fcap. 8vo. 2l. 6s.

THE ILLUSTRATED LIBRARY EDITION.

30 vols. demy 8vo. 10s. each, or Set of 30 vols. 15l.

THE "CHARLES DICKENS" EDITION.

21 vols. crown 8vo. cloth, with Illustrations, 2l. 6s. 6d.

With Illustrations.

PICKWICK PAPERS.

MARTIN CHuzzleWIT.

DOMBEY and SON.

NICHOLAS NICKLEBY.

DAVID COPPERFIELD.

BLEAK HOUSE.

LITTLE DOBBIE.

OUR MUTUAL FRIEND.

BARNABY RUDGE.

HOWEY TOMCOX.

CHRISTMAS STORIES.

OLD CURIOSITY SHOP.

A CHILD'S HISTORY of ENGLAND.

A TALE of TWO CITIES.

SKETCHES by BOZ.

AMERICAN NOTES and REMARKS

ON

GENTLEMAN MAGNAN.

HAYDN STONE.

GREAT EXPECTATIONS.

HARD TIMES and PICTURES from ITALY.

UNCOMMERCIAL TRAVELLER.

THE HOUSEHOLD EDITION.

22 Volumes, containing nearly 900 Illustrations by F. Barnard, J. Mahony, F. A. Fraser, O. Green, &c. Price 2l. 10s. 6d. in cloth; and 2l. 10s. in paper binding.

FARMING for PLEASURE and PROFIT. By

ARTHUR BOLAND. Edited by WILLIAM ABLETT. 8 vols. large crown 8vo. 6s. each.

DAIRY FARMING, MANAGEMENT of COWS, &c.

POULTRY KEEPING.

TREE-PLANTING, for ORNAMENTATION or PROFIT.

STOCK-KEEPING and CATTLE-REARING.

DRAINAGE of LAND, IRRIGATION, MANURES, &c.

ROOT-GROWING, HOPS, &c.

CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED, 199, PICCADILLY.

Editorial Communications should be addressed to "The Editor"—Advertisements and Business Letters to "The Publisher"—at the Office, 20, Wellington-street, Strand, London, W.C.
Printed by R. S. FRANKS, Athenæum Press, Took's-court, Chancery-lane, E.C.; and Published by JOHN FRANKS, at No. 20, Wellington-street, Strand, W.C.
Agents: for Scotland, Messrs. Bell & Macdona; and Mr. John Macdonald, Edinburgh;—for Ireland, Mr. John Robertson, Dublin.—Saturday, September 11, 1880.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 2760.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1880.

PRICE
THREEPENCE
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

ROYAL SCHOOL OF MINES.

During the THIRTIETH SESSION 1880-81, which will commence on the 1st of OCTOBER, the following COURSE of LECTURES and PRACTICAL DEMONSTRATIONS will be given:

1. Chemistry. By S. Franklin, F.R.S., F.R.M.
2. Surveying. By T. H. M. W. D. P. R.
3. Metallurgy. By W. H. W. D. P. R.
4. Mining. By W. H. W. D. P. R.
5. Geology. By John W. D. P. R.
6. Applied Mechanics. By T. H. M. W. D. P. R.
7. Physics. By W. H. W. D. P. R.
8. Metallurgy. By W. H. W. D. P. R.

The Lectures for the Session of 1880-81 will be given on the 1st of OCTOBER, on the 1st of NOVEMBER, and on the 1st of DECEMBER.

There are two annual payments of 20s. each, and a third of 10s. each, for the Session of 1880-81, and for the Session of 1881-82, and for the Session of 1882-83.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

By special permission of the Lords of the Committee of Council on Education, the Society will deliver Thirty Lectures on the HISTORY of the British Empire, from the earliest times to the present day, on SATURDAY AFTERNOONS, at Three o'clock, commencing on the 1st of OCTOBER, and ending on the 1st of DECEMBER.

The Lectures will be given by the following gentlemen:—

MR. HENRY BLACKBURN, Editor of 'Academy' and 'The Standard', will deliver Twenty Lectures on the HISTORY of the British Empire, from the earliest times to the present day, on SATURDAY AFTERNOONS, at Three o'clock, commencing on the 1st of OCTOBER, and ending on the 1st of DECEMBER.

PROFESSOR TENNANT'S LECTURES ON MINERALOGY.

Professor Tennant, who has been appointed to the Chair of Mineralogy in the University of London, will deliver a course of Lectures on Mineralogy, on SATURDAY AFTERNOONS, at Three o'clock, commencing on the 1st of OCTOBER, and ending on the 1st of DECEMBER.

The Lectures will be given by the following gentlemen:—

MR. HENRY BLACKBURN, Editor of 'Academy' and 'The Standard', will deliver Twenty Lectures on the HISTORY of the British Empire, from the earliest times to the present day, on SATURDAY AFTERNOONS, at Three o'clock, commencing on the 1st of OCTOBER, and ending on the 1st of DECEMBER.

PAC-SIMILES IN COLOUR.

The ANNUAL SOCIETY for the year 1880-81, will be held on the 1st of OCTOBER, at the Royal Academy, and will be attended by the following gentlemen:—

MR. HENRY BLACKBURN, Editor of 'Academy' and 'The Standard', will deliver Twenty Lectures on the HISTORY of the British Empire, from the earliest times to the present day, on SATURDAY AFTERNOONS, at Three o'clock, commencing on the 1st of OCTOBER, and ending on the 1st of DECEMBER.

FINE ARTS.—MR. J. B. DICKSON'S CLASSES

MR. J. B. DICKSON, who has been appointed to the Chair of Fine Arts in the University of London, will deliver a course of Lectures on Fine Arts, on SATURDAY AFTERNOONS, at Three o'clock, commencing on the 1st of OCTOBER, and ending on the 1st of DECEMBER.

ARTIST (Exhibitor) gives LESSONS IN OIL PAINTING.

The Artist, who has been appointed to the Chair of Art in the University of London, will deliver a course of Lectures on Art, on SATURDAY AFTERNOONS, at Three o'clock, commencing on the 1st of OCTOBER, and ending on the 1st of DECEMBER.

INQUIRY WANTED.—The Proprietors of the IRONWORKERS require the SERVICES of a Competent and experienced Carpenter for the FURNISHING of their works, in the City of London, and in the County of Middlesex.

LIBRARIES, MUSEUMS, PICTURE GALLERIES.

LIBRARIES, MUSEUMS, PICTURE GALLERIES, and other institutions, are invited to send their orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

WANTED, a few LECTURES ON LITERARY SUBJECTS.

A few LECTURES ON LITERARY SUBJECTS, on SATURDAY AFTERNOONS, at Three o'clock, commencing on the 1st of OCTOBER, and ending on the 1st of DECEMBER.

A NOVELLETTE OF ENGLISH LIFE.

A NOVELLETTE OF ENGLISH LIFE, by an experienced writer, will be published in the next issue of the 'Athenæum', and will be attended by the following gentlemen:—

AUTHORS required to CONTRIBUTE to High-class Monthly Quarterly.

AUTHORS required to CONTRIBUTE to High-class Monthly Quarterly, on SATURDAY AFTERNOONS, at Three o'clock, commencing on the 1st of OCTOBER, and ending on the 1st of DECEMBER.

ADVERTISER, who purposes relinquishing

ADVERTISING, is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

AN experienced JOURNALIST requires more

AN experienced JOURNALIST requires more work, and is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

EDITOR WANTED for SCOTCH CONSERVATIVE NEWS-PAPER.

EDITOR WANTED for SCOTCH CONSERVATIVE NEWS-PAPER, on SATURDAY AFTERNOONS, at Three o'clock, commencing on the 1st of OCTOBER, and ending on the 1st of DECEMBER.

LONDON HOME.—The Widow of a distinguished

LONDON HOME.—The Widow of a distinguished gentleman, who has been appointed to the Chair of Home in the University of London, will deliver a course of Lectures on Home, on SATURDAY AFTERNOONS, at Three o'clock, commencing on the 1st of OCTOBER, and ending on the 1st of DECEMBER.

EDITOR of High-class LONDON CONSERVATIVE WEEKLY is open to accept an immediate RE-ENGAGEMENT, on SATURDAY AFTERNOONS, at Three o'clock, commencing on the 1st of OCTOBER, and ending on the 1st of DECEMBER.

SUB-EDITOR for NIGHT DUTY WANTED on

SUB-EDITOR for NIGHT DUTY WANTED on SATURDAY AFTERNOONS, at Three o'clock, commencing on the 1st of OCTOBER, and ending on the 1st of DECEMBER.

WANTED, ENGAGEMENT by the Chief Sub-

WANTED, ENGAGEMENT by the Chief Sub-EDITOR, on SATURDAY AFTERNOONS, at Three o'clock, commencing on the 1st of OCTOBER, and ending on the 1st of DECEMBER.

A JOURNALIST (21), of fourteen years' ex-

A JOURNALIST (21), of fourteen years' experience, is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

TIME and CAPITAL.—A GENTLEMAN pos-

TIME and CAPITAL.—A GENTLEMAN possessing a large sum of money, is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

TO CAPITALISTS.—WANTED, a Gentleman

TO CAPITALISTS.—WANTED, a Gentleman with moderate capital, is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

TOMAGAZINE PROPRIETORS.—An Established

TOMAGAZINE PROPRIETORS.—An Established firm, is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

PRESS.—A JOURNALIST of energy and experi-

PRESS.—A JOURNALIST of energy and experience, is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

PRESS.—A JOURNALIST, who has had expe-

PRESS.—A JOURNALIST, who has had experience, is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

THE PRESS.—The Advertiser, who has had con-

THE PRESS.—The Advertiser, who has had considerable experience, is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

THE PRESS.—An accomplished JOURNALIST,

THE PRESS.—An accomplished JOURNALIST, is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

NEW LITERARY ENTERPRISE.—A MAGA-

NEW LITERARY ENTERPRISE.—A MAGAZINE, is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

C. MITCHELL & CO., Agents for the Sale and

C. MITCHELL & CO., Agents for the Sale and Purchase of Newspapers, is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

C. MITCHELL & CO. are instructed to DISPOSE

C. MITCHELL & CO. are instructed to DISPOSE of the COPYRIGHT of a TRADE PAPER, on SATURDAY AFTERNOONS, at Three o'clock, commencing on the 1st of OCTOBER, and ending on the 1st of DECEMBER.

C. MITCHELL & CO. are favoured with instru-

C. MITCHELL & CO. are favoured with instructions to DISPOSE of the COPYRIGHT of a TRADE PAPER, on SATURDAY AFTERNOONS, at Three o'clock, commencing on the 1st of OCTOBER, and ending on the 1st of DECEMBER.

C. MITCHELL & CO. are favoured with instru-

C. MITCHELL & CO. are favoured with instructions to DISPOSE of the COPYRIGHT of a TRADE PAPER, on SATURDAY AFTERNOONS, at Three o'clock, commencing on the 1st of OCTOBER, and ending on the 1st of DECEMBER.

C. MITCHELL & CO., Agents for the Sale and

C. MITCHELL & CO., Agents for the Sale and Purchase of Newspapers, is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

A FRENCH LADY, Professor in a High School,

A FRENCH LADY, Professor in a High School, is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

AN ENGLISH LADY, of much experience in

AN ENGLISH LADY, of much experience in teaching, is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

WANTED TO PURCHASE.

WANTED TO PURCHASE, on SATURDAY AFTERNOONS, at Three o'clock, commencing on the 1st of OCTOBER, and ending on the 1st of DECEMBER.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.—To be

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.—To be a member of the University, is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

QUEEN'S COLLEGE, IRELAND.—The Pro-

QUEEN'S COLLEGE, IRELAND.—The Professor of the University, is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

A PROTESTANT FRENCH FAMILY desires to

A PROTESTANT FRENCH FAMILY desires to find a home, is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

TWO BROTHERS, one M.R.C.S., the other a

TWO BROTHERS, one M.R.C.S., the other a Graduate in Medicine, is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

MR. H. B. COTTERILL (Clam. Trip. Camb.)

MR. H. B. COTTERILL (Clam. Trip. Camb.) is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

TUTOR (experienced) wishes RESIDENT EN-

TUTOR (experienced) wishes RESIDENT ENGAGEMENT, is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

MRS. W. DINZEL BURTON receives an

MRS. W. DINZEL BURTON receives an invitation to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

EDUCATION in SWITZERLAND.—New

EDUCATION in SWITZERLAND.—New FRANCHISE ACADEMY, is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

MORNING CLASS for the SONS of GENTLE-

MORNING CLASS for the SONS of GENTLEMEN, is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

ACADEMY for the HIGHER DEVELOPMENT

ACADEMY for the HIGHER DEVELOPMENT of the mind, is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

THE MESSRS A. and H. LEECH'S SCHOOL

THE MESSRS A. and H. LEECH'S SCHOOL, is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

HEATH BROW SCHOOL, HAMPSTEAD.—

HEATH BROW SCHOOL, HAMPSTEAD.—The School, is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

STATIONERS' SCHOOL, Bolt-court, Fleet-

STATIONERS' SCHOOL, Bolt-court, Fleet-street, is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

THE LONDON INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE,

THE LONDON INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE, is invited to send his orders to the Proprietors of the Ironworkers, who will be glad to supply them with the best and most reliable materials.

APPROVED EDUCATIONAL WORKS.

PHYSICAL, HISTORICAL, POLITICAL, AND DESCRIPTIVE GEOGRAPHY.

By KEITH JOHNSTON, F.R.G.S.

Editor of the 'Africa' Volume in 'Stanford's Compendium of Geography and Travel.' Late Leader of the Royal Geographical Society's East African Expedition. Large post 8vo. with illustrations and 21 Maps. cloth, 12s.

"The work is a clear, simple, and accurate exposition of the main facts and principles in the various departments of geography, not only useful as a text-book for colleges and the higher schools or as a handy reference book, but to a large extent very interesting reading."—Times.

GEOGRAPHY FOR LITTLE CHILDREN.

By ANTONIA KIMMERN.

Post 8vo. cloth, with 40 Illustrations and Maps, 1s.

"The language is simple, the type large and clear, while the pages are enlivened by some good maps and many illustrations. These are sure, cannot fail to prove very winning to all such little folk as the 'Dolly, Paddy, and Tooty,' to whom this little volume is dedicated."—Saturday Review.

THE INSTRUCTIVE ATLAS OF MODERN GEOGRAPHY.

Intended for the Use of Young Pupils. Containing 17 Coloured Maps, each 17 in. by 14. Uniform in size and price with the 'Instructive Picture Books.' Fcap. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

"This new Atlas cannot fail to become a popular one. It is evidently designed with a view to making it not so much a work of reference as an aid to the teacher. The individual Maps, of which there are seventeen, are beautifully bold in outline, are not crowded with a host of unnecessary names, and are so clear and distinct that no difficulty whatever will be experienced in deciphering any single name. All the Maps are brought down to the present date."—Schoolmaster.

ELEMENTARY PHYSICAL ATLAS,

Intended chiefly for MAP DRAWING, and the Study of the Great Physical Features and Relief Contours of the Continent, with an Introduction to serve as a Guide for both purposes. By the Rev. J. P. FAUNTHORPE, M.A. F.R.G.S. Episcopal of Whitelands Training College. Ninth Edition. Sixteen Coloured Maps, with Descriptive Letter-press, containing Hints on Map Drawing, &c. Price 4s.

Also, intended chiefly for Use with above:—

OUTLINE ATLAS; containing 16 Maps, coloured wrapper, 1s.

PROJECTION ATLAS; containing 16 Plates of Projections. Coloured wrapper, 1s.

BLANK ATLAS; 16 leaves of blank paper for Map Drawing. Coloured wrapper, 6d.

THE PHYSICAL GEOLOGY AND GEOGRAPHY OF GREAT BRITAIN.

By ANDREW C. RAMSAY, LL.D. F.R.S., Director-General of the Geological Surveys of the United Kingdom. Fifth Edition, greatly enlarged. Post 8vo. with Geological Map printed in Colours, and numerous Additions, Illustrations of Fossils, Sections, and Landscapes, price 15s.

"No better introduction to the principles of geology could possibly be recommended to the English reader. It is a work of the highest value, and one worthy to take a foremost place among popular manuals of science."—Nature.

THE PHYSICAL GEOLOGY AND GEOGRAPHY OF IRELAND.

Part I. Geological Formation of Ireland; Part II. Physical Geography of Ireland; Part III. The Glaciation of Ireland. By EDWARD HULL, M.A. F.R.S., Director of the Geological Survey of Ireland, Author of 'The Coal-Fields of Great Britain,' &c. With Maps and Illustrations. Post 8vo. cloth, 7s.

"We can heartily recommend this book as an excellent introduction to the practical study of the geological features of Ireland. It will take a rank equal to that of the best treatises which refer to England or Scotland, and its style is such for elegance and plainness as to recommend it to the younger disciples of this science."—Spectator.

A SHORT HISTORY OF NATURAL SCIENCE,

And of the Progress of Discovery from the Time of the Greeks to the Present Day. For the Use of Schools and Young Persons. By ARABELLA M. BUCKLEY, Author of 'The Fairyland of Science,' 'Botanical Tables for the Use of Junior Students,' &c. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. with 77 Illustrations. cloth, 7s. 6d.

"Guides to literature abound, guides to science, similar in purpose and character to Miss Buckley's 'History,' are unknown. The writer's plan, therefore, is original, and her execution of the plan is altogether admirable.... She sees clearly what she describes, and the interest felt by the author is imparted to the reader. Diagrams and Illustrations of the letter-press add to the value of the compendium."—Fall of St. Germain.

ATLAS OF ANATOMY;

Or, Pictures of the Human Body, in 21 Coloured Plates, comprising 100 separate Figures. With Descriptive Letter-press by Mrs. FENWICK MILLER, Member of the London School Board; Author of the Physiological Sections of 'Simple Lessons for Home Use,' &c. Fcap. 8vo. 12s. 6d.

"Mrs. MILLER has made a most successful endeavour to encourage the general study of anatomy in a precise, and yet in a form which would be termed a popular form. This atlas is a really systematic work on anatomy, and will, we believe, play no mean part in the diffusion of true, pure, scientific knowledge."—Lancet.

CHEMISTRY FOR SCHOOLS:

An Introduction to the Practical Study of Chemistry. By C. HAUGHTON GILL. Fourth Edition. With 100 Illustrations. Crown 8vo. cloth, 4s. 6d.

"An eminently practical and useful work. Any one with a slight knowledge of the science, or who has the help of a teacher, could hardly wish for a better book. There are a great number of experiments described, and they are nearly all of an easy and simple character."—Educational Times.

BOTANY FOR CHILDREN.

An Illustrated Elementary Text-Book for Junior Classes and Young Children. By the Rev. HENRI HENSLAW, M.A. F.R.S. F.G.S., Author of 'Floral Dissections.' With 20 Full-Page Illustrations, post 8vo. cloth, 4s. A few copies, with the Illustrations Hand-Coloured, cloth gilt, 6s. 6d.

"Just such an elementary text-book of botany as might be put into practical use in schools, without the slightest doubt that children would take to it."—Edinburgh Review.

FLORAL DISSECTIONS,

Illustrative of Typical Orders of the British Natural Orders. Lithographed. By the Rev. GEORGE HENSLAW, M.A. F.R.S. F.G.S. For the Use of Schools and Students in Botany. Eight Plates, containing many hundred illustrations. demy 4to. with Descriptive Letter-press, boards, 4s.

"In the light of several years' experience of text-books and teaching, we venture to assert that it is one of the very best guides to systematic botany hitherto issued from the press."—Schoolmaster.

Detailed Lists of EDWARD STANFORD'S EDUCATIONAL PUBLICATIONS may be obtained on application, or by post for one Stamp

London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

THE BATTERSEA SERIES OF STANDARD READING BOOKS FOR BOYS.

Written and Compiled by the Rev. E. DANIEL, M.A.,

Principal of St. John's College, Battersea.

STANDARD	I.	II.	III.	IV.	V.	VI.	Illustrated	pp.	price 8d.
"	"	"	"	"	"	"	"	140	price 1s.
"	"	"	"	"	"	"	"	154	price 1s. 6d.
"	"	"	"	"	"	"	"	244	price 1s. 6d.
"	"	"	"	"	"	"	"	268	price 2s.
"	"	"	"	"	"	"	"	308	price 2s. 6d.

"The Editor set himself the task of preparing a set of books which might be used to teach reading and the communication of knowledge with a secondary class. He has done his work well, and we can commend these books most heartily to the attention of readers. The whole series will be found admirably adapted for elementary schools."—Schoolmaster.

ALSO,

THE BATTERSEA PRIMERS FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.

Written by the Rev. E. DANIEL, M.A.

PRIMER	I.	II.	Illustrated	Large type	pp.	price 8d.
"	"	"	"	"	42	price 6d.
"	"	"	"	"	64	price 6d.

"The hints to Teachers in the Primers will be found most useful in exciting the thought and estimation even of those who are learning their letters, while the stories for little boys' reading are just what will interest them."—Church Bell.

THE WHITELANDS SERIES OF STANDARD READING BOOKS FOR GIRLS.

Post 8vo. cloth.

Edited by the Rev. J. P. FAUNTHORPE, M.A., Principal of Whitelands College, Chelsea.

STANDARD	I.—ILLUSTRATED SHORT STORIES, &c.	pp.	price 8d.
"	II.—ILLUSTRATED EASY LESSONS.	104 pp.	1s. 6d.
"	III.—INSTRUCTIVE LESSONS.	Illustrated. 200 pp.	1s. 6d.
"	IV.—ORIGINAL STORIES and SELECTED FORMS.	264 pp.	1s. 6d.
"	V.—DOMESTIC ECONOMY and HOUSEHOLD SCIENCE.	308 pp.	2s. 6d.
"	VI.—SUPPLEMENTARY DOMESTIC ECONOMY and LITERARY READING BOOK.	352 pp.	2s. 6d.

"We can say, without hesitation, that the girl who has read through this series will not only have acquired the power of reading well, but will also have gained much knowledge that will be useful to her in after life."—School Guardian.

SIMPLE LESSONS.

Chiefly intended for Home Use and Elementary Schools. By Mrs. FENWICK MILLER; G. PHILLIPS REYAN, F.R.S.; Dr. MANN, F.R.G.S.; J. C. BUCKMASTER, B.A.; Mrs. BENJAMIN CLARKE, J. J. POPE; M. A. PROCTOR, B.A.; Rev. F. O. MORRIS, M.A.; Rev. G. HENSLAW, F.R.S.; Rev. T. E. CHALLAN, M.A.

Contents:—Our Daily Life—How and Why We Breathe—Food—Drink—Cookery—Plain Needlework—Clothing—Air and Ventilation—The Sick—Cases that Spread—Weather—Astronomy—Birds—Flowers—Money—Lemon, cloth, 2s. 6d. The Simple Lessons are also published separately, 2s. each, or 16s. per 100 assorted. The Set of 14, in Card Case, 3s.

"Couched in clear, straightforward language, these papers cannot fail to be understood by children, and, collected together in their present form, will be as useful for home teaching as for regular school instruction."—Graphic.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY AND HOUSEHOLD SCIENCE.

Adapted for Home Education, and for Schoolmistresses and Prep-Teachers. By ROBERT JAMES MANN, M.D., late Superintendent of Education at Natal. Second Edition. Post 8vo. cloth, 4s. 6d.

"There have been many similar works; but after testing this, the latest of them, on a number of salient points, we have no hesitation in recommending it as in every respect worthy of confidence."—Examiner.

SCHOOL MANUAL OF THE LAW OF MOSES.

An Abstract, with Introduction, Explanations, Questions, and Glossary of some Scripture Terms. Compiled by JAMES PERKINS, M.A., Assistant-Master in the City of London School. Post 8vo. limp cloth, 1s. 6d.

"We strongly recommend it to those who have to prepare lessons for advanced Bible Classes, able to exercise thought and intellect."—Guardian.

THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE: its Grammar and History.

Together with a Treatise on English Composition, and Sets of Exercises and Examination Papers for the Assistance of Teachers and Students. By the Rev. HENRY LEWIS, B.A., Principal of the Cullum Training College. Eighth Edition. Fcap. 8vo. cloth, 3s.

"As a text-book for students in training colleges and for pupil-teachers, we can strongly recommend the volume as one that will furnish them with the conclusions of an intelligent and careful writer."—National Society's Monthly Paper.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS ON THE FRENCH GRAMMAR,

For use by the candidates preparing for the Local and other Examinations. By V. LAURENT B.L., of the University of Paris, French Teacher at the Walsell and Lichtfeld Grammar Schools. Crown 8vo. cloth, 2s.

BEAUVOISIN'S FRENCH VERBS AT A GLANCE:

A Summary of the French Verbs, embracing an entirely New System of Conjugation. Fortieth Thousand. Demy 8vo. 1s.

CONSTRUCTIVE LATIN EXERCISES,

For Teaching the Elements of the Language on a System of Analysis and Synthesis, with Latin Reading Lessons and copious Vocabularies. By the late JOHN ROBERTSON, M.A. Eighth Edition. 18mo. cloth, 4s. 6d.

A FIRST ALGEBRA FOR USE IN JUNIOR CLASSES.

By the Rev. R. ALBAN MADDEN, M.A., Second Mathematical Master of Christ's Hospital. Fifth Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Fcap. 8vo. cloth, 1s. 6d.

"Mr. Madden has rendered the introduction to Algebra extremely simple.... All the explanations are extremely clear."—School Board Chronicle.

SCHOOL-BOOKS PUBLISHED BY LONGMANS & CO.

TEXT-BOOKS OF SCIENCE AND HISTORY.

TEXT-BOOKS of SCIENCE, Mechanical and

Physical, adapted for the use of Artisans and of Students in Public and Science Schools. Edited by C. W. MERRIFIELD, F.R.S. Small 8vo. with Woodcuts, &c.

- ABNEY'S PHOTOGRAPHY. 3s. 6d.
 ANDERSON'S STRENGTH OF MATERIALS. 3s. 6d.
 ARMSTRONG'S ORGANIC CHEMISTRY. 3s. 6d.
 BALL'S ASTRONOMY. 6s.
 BARRY'S RAILWAY APPLIANCES. 3s. 6d.
 BLOXAM'S METALS. 3s. 6d.
 GOODEVE'S MECHANICS. 3s. 6d.
 GOODEVE'S MECHANISM. 3s. 6d.
 GORE'S ELECTRO-METALLURGY. 6s.
 GRIFFIN'S ALGEBRA and TRIGONOMETRY. 3s. 6d.
 JENKIN'S ELECTRICITY and MAGNETISM. 3s. 6d.
 MAXWELL'S THEORY OF HEAT. 3s. 6d.
 MERRIFIELD'S TECHNICAL ARITHMETIC. 3s. 6d.
 MILLER'S INORGANIC CHEMISTRY. 3s. 6d.
 PREECE and SIVEWRIGHT'S TELEGRAPHY. 3s. 6d.
 RUTLEY'S STUDY OF ROCKS. 4s. 6d.
 SHELLEY'S WORKSHOP APPLIANCES. 3s. 6d.
 THOMÉ'S STRUCTURAL and PHYSIOLOGICAL BOTANY. 6s.
 THORPE'S QUANTITATIVE ANALYSIS. 4s. 6d.
 THORPE and MUIR'S QUALITATIVE ANALYSIS. 3s. 6d.
 TILDEN'S SYSTEMATIC CHEMISTRY. 3s. 6d.
 UNWIN'S MACHINE DESIGN. 3s. 6d.
 WATSON'S PLANE and SOLID GEOMETRY. 3s. 6d.

EPOCHS of ENGLISH HISTORY. Edited by the Rev. MANDELL CREIGHTON, M.A.

- BROWNING'S MODERN ENGLAND, 1830-1874. 9d.
 CORDERY'S STRUGGLE AGAINST ABSOLUTE MONARCHY, 1603-1688. 6d.
 CREIGHTON'S (M.A.) ENGLAND and CONTINENTAL POWER, 1066-1216. 9d.
 CREIGHTON'S (Rev. M.A.) TUDORS and the REFORMATION, 1485-1603. 9d.
 ROWLEY'S RISE of the PEOPLE, 1215-1485. 9d.
 ROWLEY'S SETTLEMENT of the CONSTITUTION, 1688-1778. 9d.
 TANCOCK'S ENGLAND during the AMERICAN and EUROPEAN WARS, 1778-1830. 9d.
 YORK POWELL'S EARLY ENGLAND to the CONQUEST. 1s.

EPOCHS of ENGLISH HISTORY, as above, complete in 1 vol. with 23 Maps, 5s.

CREIGHTON'S SKILLING HISTORY of ENGLAND. Fcap. 8vo. 1s.

EPOCHS of MODERN HISTORY. Edited by C. C. COLBECK, M.A.

- CHURCH'S BEGINNING of the MIDDLE AGES. 2s. 6d.
 —COX'S CRUSADES. 2s. 6d.
 —CREIGHTON'S AGE of ELIZABETH. 2s. 6d.
 —GAIRDNER'S HOUSES of LANCASTER and YORK. 2s. 6d.
 —GAIRDNER'S PURITAN REVOLUTION. 2s. 6d.
 —GAIRDNER'S THIRTY YEARS' WAR. 2s. 6d.
 —HALE'S FALL of the STUARTS. 2s. 6d.
 —JOHNSON'S NORMANS in EUROPE. 2s. 6d.
 —LUDLOW'S WAR of AMERICAN INDEPENDENCE. 2s. 6d.
 —MORRIS'S AGE of ANNE. 2s. 6d.
 —SEEBOM'S PROTESTANT REVOLUTION. 2s. 6d.
 —STUBBS'S EARLY PLANTAGENETS. 2s. 6d.
 —WARBURTON'S EDWARD III. 2s. 6d.

Nearly ready,

LONGMAN'S FREDERICK the GREAT and the SEVEN YEARS' WAR.

EPOCHS of ANCIENT HISTORY. Edited by the Rev. Sir G. W. COX, Bart. M.A., and by C. SANKEY, M.A.

- BEESLY'S GRACCHI, MARIUS, and SULLA. 2s. 6d.
 CAPES'S AGE of the ANTONINES. 2s. 6d.
 CAPES'S EARLY ROMAN EMPIRE. 2s. 6d.
 —COX'S ATHENIAN EMPIRE. 2s. 6d.
 —COX'S GREEKS and PERSIANS. 2s. 6d.
 —GURTEIS'S MACEDONIAN EMPIRE. 2s. 6d.
 —JONES'S ROME to its CAPTURE by the GAULS. 2s. 6d.
 MERVILLE'S ROMAN TRIUMPHS. 2s. 6d.
 SANKEY'S SPARTAN and THEBAN SUPREMACIES. 2s. 6d.

CLASSICAL.

The PUBLIC SCHOOL LATIN GRAMMAR, for the Use of Schools, Colleges, and private Students. By B. H. KENNEDY, D.D., &c. Canon of Ely. Fifth Edition. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

The CHILD'S LATIN ACCIDENCE, extracted from Canon Kennedy's Child's Latin Primer; containing all that is necessary to lead Boys up to the Public School Latin Primer. 12mo. 1s.

The PUBLIC SCHOOL LATIN PRIMER. Edited with the sanction of the Head Masters of the Nine Public Schools included in R.M. Commission. 12mo. 2s. 6d.

SUBSIDIA PRIMARIA, STEPS to LATIN; Easy Companion-Books to the Public School Latin Primers for Beginners. By B. H. KENNEDY, D.D. Part I. Accidence and Simple Construction, 2s. 6d. Part II. Syntax, 3s. 6d. The KEY to Parts I. and II. 8s.

SUBSIDIA PRIMARIA, Part III. Manual of the Rules of Construction in the Latin Compound Sentence; being a Supplement to the Public School Latin Primer. By B. H. KENNEDY, D.D. 12mo. 1s.

PALESTRA LATINA; or, Second Latin Reading Book, adapted to the Public School Latin Primer. By B. H. KENNEDY, D.D. 12mo. 6s.

WHITE and RIDDLE'S COPIOUS LATIN-ENGLISH DICTIONARY, founded on the larger Dictionary of Freuden. Seventh Edition, complete in One Volume, 4to. 91s.

WHITE'S COLLEGE LATIN-ENGLISH DICTIONARY, abridged for the Use of University Students. Fourth and Cheaper Edition. Royal 8vo. 12s.

WHITE'S JUNIOR STUDENT'S LATIN-ENGLISH DICTIONARY, for the Use of Schools. Square 12mo. 7s. 6d.

WHITE'S NEW ENGLISH-LATIN DICTIONARY, for the Use of Schools. Square 12mo. 4s. 6d.

WHITE'S JUNIOR STUDENT'S COMPLETE LATIN-ENGLISH and ENGLISH-LATIN DICTIONARY. Square 12mo. 12s.

WHITE'S LATIN-ENGLISH DICTIONARY, for the Use of Middle-Class Schools. Square fcap. 8vo. price 3s.

WHITE'S GRAMMAR-SCHOOL LATIN TEXTS.

- CÆSAR, GALLIC WAR. Books I. and II., V. and VI. 1s.
 CÆSAR, GALLIC WAR. Books III. and IV. 9d. each.
 CICERO, CATO MAJOR, and LÆLIUS. 1s. 6d. each.
 EUTROPIUS, ROMAN HISTORY. Books I. and II. 1s. Books III. and IV. 1s.
 HORACE, ODES. Books I., II. and IV. 1s. each.
 HORACE, ODES. Book III. 1s. 6d.
 NEPOS, MILTIADES, CIMON, PAUSANIAS, ARISTIDES. 9d.
 OVID, SELECTIONS from EPISTLES and FASTI. 1s.
 OVID, SELECT MYTHS from METAMORPHOSES. 9d.
 PHÆDRUS, SELECT EASY FABLES. 9d.
 PHÆDRUS, FABLES. Books I. and II. 1s.
 SALLUST, BELLUM CATILINARUM. 1s. 6d.
 VIRGIL, GEORGICS. Book IV. 1s.
 VIRGIL, ÆNEID. Books I. to VI. and Book X. 1s. each.
 LIVY. Books XXII. and XXIII. Latin Text, with English Notes and Vocabulary. 12mo. 2s. 6d. each Book.

A NEW ELEMENTARY GREEK GRAMMAR, intended as a Companion to the Public School Latin Primer. By the Rev. E. ST. JOHN FABRY, M.A. 12mo. 3s. 6d.

WHITE'S GRAMMAR-SCHOOL GREEK TEXTS.

- ÆSOP (FABLES) and PALÆPHATUS (MYTHS). 82mo. 1s.
 HOMER'S ILIAD. Book I. 1s.
 HOMER'S ODYSSEY. Book I. 1s.
 LUCIAN, SELECT DIALOGUES. 1s.
 XENOPHON, ANABASIS. Books I., III., IV. and V. 1s. 6d. each; Book II. 1s.
 ST. MATTHEW'S and ST. LUKE'S GOSPELS. 2s. 6d. each.
 ST. MARK'S and ST. JOHN'S GOSPELS. 1s. 6d. each.
 The ACTS of the APOSTLES. 2s. 6d.
 ST. PAUL'S EPISTLE to the ROMANS. 1s. 6d.
 The FOUR GOSPELS in GREEK, with Greek-English Lexicon. Square 22mo. 5s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S NEW WORKS.

BY MORTIMER COLLINS.

THOUGHTS IN MY GARDEN.

By MORTIMER COLLINS. Edited by EDMUND YATES. With Notes by the Editor and Mrs. MORTIMER COLLINS. 2 vols. post 8vo. 21s.

"Whether by mistake or from design the best of Mr. Mortimer Collins's works has been reserved for final publication. Indeed, nothing gives so full or so fair an idea of his genius and talent as the essays, notes, and poems now presented to the world under the title of 'Thoughts in my Garden.'—St. James's Gazette."

CHARLES DICKENS'S CONTRIBUTIONS TO
'BENTLEY'S MISCELLANY.'

The MUDFOG PAPERS, and
OTHERS. By CHARLES DICKENS, Author of 'The Pickwick Papers.' Now First Reprinted. In crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

BY MISS DE FONBLANQUE.

FIVE WEEKS IN ICELAND.

By Miss DE FONBLANQUE. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

"Graphic, racy, and interesting."—St. James's Gazette.

BY MARY FITZ-GIBBON.

A TRIP TO MANITOBA. By MARY FITZ-GIBBON. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

BY THE REV. J. C. BOYCE.

NIGH UNTO the END; or, a
Passage in Sacred Prophecy, now in Course of Translation into History, considered. By the Rev. J. C. BOYCE, M.A. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

NEW WORK BY MRS. HENRY WOOD.

On MONDAY NEXT, at all Libraries.

JOHNNY LUDLOW.

SECOND EDITION.

By Mrs. HENRY WOOD,
Author of 'East Lynne,' &c.

In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

POPULAR NOVELS,

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE FIRST VIOLIN.'

THE WELLFIELDS.

By JESSIE FOTHERGILL,
Author of 'Probation' and 'The First Violin.'

3 vols. crown 8vo.

TRANSLATED BY MRS. TYRRELL.

LIZZIE OF THE MILL.

From the Original, by Mrs. CHRISTINA TYRRELL, Translator of 'No Surrender,' &c.

2 vols. crown 8vo.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF 'OUT ADRIPT.'

PIOUS FRAUDS;

Or, THE DAWN OF LOVE.

By ALBANY DE FONBLANQUE,
Author of 'A Tangled Skein,' 'Out Adrift,' &c.

3 vols. crown 8vo.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington-street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

13, Great Marlborough-street.

HURST & BLACKETT'S NEW WORKS.

MONSIEUR GUIZOT IN PRIVATE

LIFE (1797-1872). By his Daughter, MADAME DE WITT. Translated by Mrs. SIMPSON. 1 vol. 8vo. 15s.

"This book was well worth translating. Mrs. Simpson has written excellent English, while preserving the spirit of the French."—Times.

"Madame de Witt has done justice to her father's memory in an admirable record of his life. Mrs. Simpson's translation of this singularly interesting book is in accuracy and grace worthy of the original and of the subject."—Saturday Review.

"This work is replete with interesting reminiscences, and the reading public may be congratulated on having a literary treat provided for them."—Standard.

"Mrs. Simpson's translation is in every respect admirable. The book gives a curious picture of French life."—Examiner.

"The social rank of the persons whose lives and characters are delineated in this work, and the interest of the stories it embodies, will ensure its widespread popularity."—Examiner.

The VILLAGE OF PALACES; or,
CHRONICLES OF CHELSEA. By the Rev. A. G. L'ESTRANGE. 2 vols. crown 8vo. 21s.

CHEAP EDITION OF YOUNG Mrs.
JARDINE. By the AUTHOR OF JOHN HALIFAX. Forming the New Volume of HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY. 6s. bound and illustrated.

"There is much tenderness and good feeling in this book. It is pleasant and wholesome."—Athenæum.

THE NEW NOVELS.

ST. MARTIN'S SUMMER. By
SHERLEY SMITH, Author of 'His Last Stake,' &c. 3 vols.

LORD BRACKENBURY. By
AMELIA A. EDWARDS, Author of 'Barbara's History,' &c. Second Edition. 3 vols.

"A thoroughly romantic story, with a clever plot. Some of the scenes are effective and powerfully written. It is above the average standard of modern fiction."—Morning Post.

"A capital plot and excellent writing are the features of 'Lord Brackenbury.' Miss Edwards is an artist in delineating character as she is in devising a plot. The story flows on with an easy current, which is refreshing and pleasant."—Standard.

The TENTH EARL. By John Berwick Harwood, Author of 'Lady Flavia,' &c. 3 vols.

"The Tenth Earl" has plot and substance, incident and vitality.

"The Tenth Earl" is very amusing reading."—John Bull.

A VERY OPAL. By C. L. Pirklis.

"A novel of considerable merit. There is a minuteness of observation and at times a kind of quiet humor which reminds one of Jane Austen."

"A thoroughly amusing novel. The characters are sketched with a firm hand, and the plot is ingenious and well worked out."—Sunday Times.

FORESTALLED. By M.
BETHAM-EDWARDS, Author of 'Kitty,' 'Bridges,' 'Holidays in Eastern France,' &c. 2 vols. 21s.

"Those who can appreciate a quiet, original, and carefully written story will welcome 'Forestalled' with satisfaction."—Spectator.

WOOLERS and WINNERS. By Mrs.
G. LINNÆUS BAKER, Author of 'The Manchester Man.' 2 vols.

A MODERN GREEK HEROINE.

"A very clever novel."—Standard.

ROY and VIOLA. By Mrs. Forrester,

Author of 'Vivian,' 'Mignon,' &c. 3 vols. [Next week.]

BOOKS FOR THE COUNTRY.

Each Work complete in 1 vol. price 6s. (any of which may be had separately); elegantly printed and bound, and illustrated by Mr. J. GILBERT, MILLAIS, HUNT, LEACH, POYNTER, FOSTER, TENNIEL, SANDYS, E. BUCHER, SAMBOLINI, &c.

HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY

OF CHEAP EDITIONS OF POPULAR MODERN WORKS.

Sam Slick's Nature and Human Nature. By John Halifax, Gentleman.

The Crescent and the Cross. By Elliot Warburton.

Nathalie. By Miss Lavanagh.

A Woman's World. By George Mac Donald, LL.D.

Women. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Adam Osborne. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Slick's Wife. By George Mac Donald, LL.D.

Cardinal Wiseman's Pope. A Life for a Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Leigh Hunt's Old Court Robert. Margaret and her Bridegroom.

Sam Slick's Old Judge. Dervin. By Elliot Warburton.

Sam Slick's Family Romance. The Laird of Norwiche. By Mrs. Oliphant.

The Englishwoman in Italy. Nothing New. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Frederick's Life of Jeanne d'Albion. The Valley of a Hundred Firms. Burke's Romance of the Forum.

Adèle. By Miss Lavanagh. Studies from Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Grandmother's Money. Jefferson's Hook about Doctors. Murre and Maid. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Sam Slick's. By Victor Hugo. St. Omer. By the Hon. Mrs. Norton.

Lost and Saved. By the Hon. Mrs. Norton.

Barbara's History. By Amelia A. Edwards.

Life of Irving. By Mrs. Oliphant.

No Church. Christian's Mistake. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Also 'The World of George Mac Donald, LL.D.'

EDUCATIONAL WORKS.

DESCHANEL'S NATURAL PHILOSOPHY.

An Elementary Treatise, Translated and Extended by J. D. EVERETT, D.C.L., F.R.S.E., Professor of Natural Philosophy in Queen's College, Belfast. Illustrated by 760 Wood Engravings and Three Coloured Plates, and accompanied by a Series of Problems. Fourth Edition, Revised. Medium 8vo. cloth, 18s.

Also, separately, in Four Parts, 11mp cloth, 4s. 6d. each.

Part I. MECHANICS, HYDROSTATICS, and PNEUMATICS. Part II. HEAT. Part III. ELECTRICITY and MAGNETISM. Part IV. SOUND and LIGHT.

ELEMENTARY TEXT-BOOK OF PHYSICS.

By Professor EVERETT, Translator and Editor of Deschanel's 'Natural Philosophy,' &c. Illustrated by numerous Woodcuts. Fcap. 8vo. cloth, 3s. 6d.

PRAXIS PRIMARIA.

Progressive Exercises in the Writing of Latin. With Vocabulary and Notes. By the Rev. ISAAC BURNS, D.D. Revised by the Author of 'The Public School Latin Primer.' Fourth Edition, Revised. Fcap. 8vo. cloth, 2s.—KEY (to Teachers only), 3s. 6d.

THE STUDENT'S ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

Etymological, Pronouncing, and Explanatory. By JOHN OGILVIE, LL.D. With about 300 Engravings on Wood. Imperial 8mo. cloth, red edges, 7s. 6d.; half-cloth, 10s. 6d.

CHEAPER EDITION.

DR. OGILVIE'S SMALLER DICTIONARY.

Etymological, Pronouncing, and Explanatory. Abridged from the 'Student's Dictionary' by the Author. Imperial 18mo. cloth, red edges, 3s. 6d.

ALGEBRA

Up to and including Equations of the First Degree. For Senior Pupils and Pupil Teachers. By JOHN G. KERR, M.A., Lecturer on Mathematics and Physics, Dundas Vale Training College, Glasgow, &c. Cloth, 1s. 3d.—KEY, 6d.

MYTHS AND LEGENDS OF ANCIENT GREECE AND ROME.

A Handbook of Greek and Roman Mythology, for Schools and Private Students. By E. M. BERENS. Illustrated from Antique Sculptures. Fcap. 8vo. cloth boards, 3s.

THE SHAKESPEARE READER.

Being Extracts from the Plays of Shakespeare. With Introductory Paragraphs, and Notes, Grammatical, Historical, and Explanatory. Fcap. 8vo. cloth boards, 1s.

THE NEWSPAPER READER.

Being Accounts of some of the most interesting and important Events of the Nineteenth Century, extracted from leading Contemporary Journals. By H. F. BUSHEY and T. W. REID. Fcap. 8vo. cloth (388 pp.), 3s.

THE BIOGRAPHICAL READER.

Sketches of Prominent Men by Eminent Authors. With Introductory Notes by the Editor. Illustrated by numerous Authentic Portraits. Fcap. 8vo. cloth boards (288 pp.), 2s.

THE POETICAL READER.

Drawn up especially for the use of the Elementary Schools of England and Scotland. Fcap. 8vo. cloth boards (324 pp.), 1s. 6d.

LONDON, PAST AND PRESENT.

A Reading-Book for Elementary Schools. With numerous Authentic Illustrations. Fcap. 8vo. (283 pp.), cloth, 2s.

A MANUAL OF METHOD.

For Pupil Teachers and Assistant Masters. By ABR. PARK, F.R.G.S., F.E.I.S., &c. Interleaved with ruled paper. Second Edition, fcap. 8vo. cloth, 2s.

London: BLACKIE & SON, 49 and 50, Old Bailey.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1880.

CONTENTS.

FROST'S LITERARY AND POLITICAL RECOLLECTIONS	359
LOGG'S TRANSLATION OF THE CONFUCIAN TEXTS	360
REQUEST OF THE TIFT	361
TURKISH DICTIONARY AND GLOSSARY	362
SIR G. ANDERSON'S GUIDE TO LANCASHIRE	363
THE BOMBAY GAZETTEER, VOLS. V. AND VI.	364
CURIOSITIES OF THE BRANCH-BOOK	365
NOVELS OF THE WEEK	366
TRAVELS IN SPAIN	367
LIBRARY TABLE—LIST OF NEW BOOKS	368-369
NEWCASTLE FREE LIBRARY, JEREMIAH BUCHANAN'S SHORT- HAND, NOTES FROM MAPLES; INTERNATIONAL LIT- ERARY CONGRESS, MISS CURRIER	369-370
LITERARY Gossip	370
SCIENCE—HARDWARE OF MEDICAL EDUCATION; LI- BRARY TABLE; GEOGRAPHICAL NOTES; ASTRONOMICAL NOTES, SOCIETIES, MISCELLANEOUS	371-373
FINE ARTS—LIBRARY TABLE; THE PRIVATE COLLEC- TIONS OF ENGLAND, MICKLE; Gossip	374-377
MUSIC—THE WALK, Gossip	377-378
DRAMA—THE CONCORD FRANKLINIAN LONDON; Gossip	378-380
MISCELLANEA	380

LITERATURE

Forty Years' Recollections, Literary and Political. By Thomas Frost. (Sampson Low & Co.)

MR. FROST has done a great public service by printing these 'Recollections.' The second half of his volume, readable and often amusing as it is, does not tell much that is new or important to know, but the earlier chapters, giving an evidently truthful account of his participation in the Socialistic and Chartist movements of the second generation of this century, are a really valuable contribution to the history of opinion in our own day. He tells us that he was about sixteen years old when he attended a meeting of Robert Owen's disciples at the Tivoli Gardens at Norwood, being attracted thither "partly by curiosity as to what Socialists were like, and partly by the announcement of a brilliant display of fireworks." The climax of the pyrotechnic exhibition was a fiery scroll with the motto, "Each for all, and all for each," and the great incident in the meeting thus concluded was the appearance on the platform of Robert Owen himself, "a little, benevolent-looking, quiet-mannered gentleman in an ordinary suit of black."

"I had just been reading Coleridge's 'Religious Musings,' and the brief address in which the philosopher of New Lanark had set forth the principles of his new constitution of society sent me to the poem again. The scheme of the philosopher seemed to be the due response to the aspirations of the poet. At that time, however, it interested me chiefly in its metaphysical aspect. It was not until after I had read the grand and wondrous poems of Shelley, two or three years later, that my mind became impressed with the connexion between the influence of circumstances in the formation of character and the new organization which Owen desired to give society. Socialism, as expounded by Owen, seemed to present a perfectly practicable solution of a problem which had been for some time working in my mind, namely, how the progress of the physical sciences and mechanical arts could be made most conducive to the happiness and well-being of the people. Without the means to such end, and the knowledge to apply them, civilisation would, it then seemed to me, be but the ripening of society into rottenness. This was clear to my mind from what I knew of the condition of the masses, and of the prevalence of every form of social evil, which, towards 1842, seemed to be approaching its climax."

These sentences are very significant. Coleridge's hazy teaching and Shelley's fierce denunciation were working in different channels for a great upheaval of English thought, and Owen's Socialistic system, while many, like Mr. Frost, accepted it for a time as a rough-and-ready panacea for all the evils that then afflicted the world, exerted a deep and marked influence upon multitudes who never acknowledged themselves his disciples.

The number of actual disciples or imitators, however, was far greater than people nowadays would suppose. Mr. Frost was never himself an inmate of Harmony Hall, being, as he says, crowded out by "thousands of others whose claims had precedence," and of whom only a favoured few could be admitted to the phalanstery before it collapsed, "not through defects inherent in the system, but owing to the difficulty which those who attempted to reduce it to practice experienced in adapting themselves to its requirements." Nor did he throw himself entirely into any of the smaller and more or less different enterprises that were started at the same time or shortly after. He gives us much curious information about them, however, and especially about one in which he was particularly interested.

This society, known as the Concordium, was started in the autumn of 1842 by William Oldham, at Alcott House, near Richmond. It was intended to be a gathering of "men and women of lawful nature and cultivated minds, in order that by and through them the mass of society might be leavened, and a new moral world evoked out of the chaos of old and effete institutions." When Mr. Frost found there was no room for him in Harmony Hall, he thought of joining the Concordium, and he went so far as to spend a day within its precincts:—

"I steamed up the Thames to Richmond on a bright September morning, and thence had a delightful walk to Ham Common. Arrived at the Concordium, I was received by a young man, clad in a chocolate-coloured blouse, and displaying a profusion of hair and beard, the former parted in feminine fashion—two characteristics which I found to be common to all the brotherhood. By him I was introduced to the Pater, a little elderly man, of ascetic aspect; and then, as dinner was already on the table, sat down to a repast, not exactly of—

An overflowing store
Of pomegranates and citrons, latest fruits,
Melons and dates, and figs, and many a root
Sweet and sustaining;

but of rice, sago, and raisin puddings, potatoes, carrots, and turnips—raw as well as cooked, the Concordists not only being strict vegetarians and water-drinkers, but believing that the process of cooking deprived fruits and vegetables of the etherealising properties which they attributed to them, in accordance with an idea which may be found in Shelley's 'Revolt of Islam,' in the description of the feast of the liberated nations. After dinner I had some conversation with Oldham on the points of difference between the Concordist system and that of Owen. These I found to be greater than I had been aware of, or was prepared for. I was disconcerted by the discovery that celibacy was recommended until the nature of the individual had become regenerated; and marriage was then to be placed under restrictions similar to those which prevailed among the Rappists of New Harmony, in the United States. Self-denial and asceticism were enjoined, as a means of rehabilitating the fallen nature of man; and the use of animal food was regarded with as much horror as by the votaries of Brahma. 'Would you kill? Would you shed blood?' Oldham asked, on my expressing dissent from his extreme vegetarianism, which extended even to the exclusion from the table of butter, milk, and eggs. I felt that I was not sufficiently etherealised for fraternisation with the Concordist brotherhood; so, after hearing an afternoon lecture from William Galpin, who had lately seceded from the Rational Society, and having a walk in the garden with Colin Murray Campbell, the young man by whom I had been received, I took my leave of them."

Mr. Frost's strongest reason for not entering the Concordium appears to have been his contemplated marriage, a step of the extreme sinfulness of which Oldham wrote to warn him. Not only, in the judgment of "the Pater," was he, in his twenty-second year, "too young for such an engagement," and "the young woman too old," she being his senior by nine months, but the thing itself was denounced. "A pretended union, or a supposed union, sanctioned by the corrupt law of the land," Oldham wrote, "is a complete delusion," leading in the end to "nothing but pain, crying, ugliness, filth, and discontent." Mr. Frost, however, might have lived at the Concordium all through its brief period of existence without putting off his wedding day. Oldham's disciples soon left him, chiefly, it would seem, because the growing austerity of their "Pater" restricted their diet to raw carrots and cold water.

But Mr. Frost was not yet cured of his Owenite craze. He attempted to get "some twelve or fifteen persons of both sexes" to join him in establishing a "communitorium," and when that project failed he wasted a good deal of labour, time, and money in producing Owenite literature. All, however, was in vain, and he at length discovered that "we are not a gregarious people, and there are very few of us who would not prefer a cottage and a garden, in individual possession, to a dormitory and common rights in the most splendid communitorium or phalanstery that has ever been imagined."

Mr. Frost's experiences help to show the faults and fallacies of Owen's teaching, and to explain the failure of all endeavours to put them into practice; but they also help to show what real and useful truths were mixed up with the absurdities of Owenism. Mr. Frost very properly defends his sometime master from the monstrous charges of immorality and impiety which were brought against him in his lifetime, and are still believed in by a good many people. He also points out the important service rendered to posterity by Owen's promulgation of opinions on both social and political questions which are now almost universally approved of.

Even while he was dabbling with these Owenite projects, Mr. Frost appears to have been much more of a Chartist than a Communist, and his volume concisely tells the story of the Chartist movement almost from its commencement to its close. Beyond some personal details, there is nothing very fresh or important in Mr. Frost's narrative; but it furnishes, at any rate, a quite satisfactory vindication of his own share in the movement. It is now well known that the Chartist leaders were by no means such desperate characters as they were supposed to be when people who at present rejoice in the triumph of the political views they advocated shuddered even at the mention of their names; but at the same time it is now generally acknowledged that the objects which the Chartists aimed at would have been attained all the sooner had they gone to work more prudently and wisely. In Mr. Frost's case, at any rate, Chartism was nothing very terrible. He was able to work zealously for the reforms it aimed at without being anything but a peaceable and steady-going citizen. His Chartism, in fact, seems to have been only useful to him in what is known as "getting on in the world." It certainly helped him to become a successful journalist.

His immediate friends may gather from his pages a very complete account of his literary career, and much that he has to tell will be interesting to a wider circle of readers. His relations with revolutionists as unlike one another as Feargus O'Connor and David Urquhart reveal something of the characters of both men, and from them we pass on to such worthier if more prosaic promoters of the nation's welfare as the brothers Chambers and John Cassell. For both the Edinburgh and the London pioneers of cheap popular literature Mr. Frost did a good deal of work. While in Mr. Cassell's service, having for his immediate chief Mr. Millard, who was a sort of general editor for the La Belle Sauvage establishment, he had an adventure which is amusing enough:—

"I have said that Miss Meteyard was not a frequent contributor, but she was the first whom I had the pleasure of meeting. I had been on the staff only a few days, when Mr. Millard rushed one morning into my room pale and excited. 'Here is Miss Meteyard coming up with some complaint!' he exclaimed. 'Some mistake—I can't explain now; but pray see her, and say I am not here.' In a moment he had disappeared into his own room, the door of which he closed and locked; and, before I had recovered from my surprise, the overseer ushered into my room a fair-haired young lady, who was evidently suffering from mental excitement. I rose to receive her, and the overseer, who had sent one of the reading-boys to warn Mr. Millard of her coming, explained the object of her visit. 'Miss Meteyard complains of an error in the composition of her last article,' said he. 'I have explained to her that it was a mistake of the compositor, which was unfortunately overlooked by the reader, but she wishes to see Mr. Millard.' 'Mr. Millard is not here at present,' said I, turning to the lady, and placing my only chair for her, 'but I shall be happy to be the medium of anything you may wish to say to him.' 'Such a very stupid mistake is unpardonable!' exclaimed Miss Meteyard, her tone and manner evincing strong excitement. 'Mr. Millard should have detected it, and had it corrected. Look at that, sir!' Producing the last number of the magazine, she pointed to a line in an article from her own pen, in which Adonis had been printed Adonis, in a quotation of the first line of Shelley's monody on the death of Keats.

Oh, [sic] weep for Adonis—he is dead! 'It is so ridiculous,' she continued. 'It makes nonsense of the quotation. Adonis was a youth beloved by Venus.' 'I sincerely sympathize with you,' said I, 'and I am sure Mr. Millard will regret extremely a mistake so annoying to you; but what can we do, beyond making a note for an erratum?' 'It is so vexing! I could cry about it,' returned the fair authoress, and I feared for a moment that she would do so; but, having relieved her mind by the statement of her grievance, she calmed under the influence of sympathy, and presently took her departure. 'What is the matter?' inquired Mr. Millard, re-entering the room, after opening his door softly and looking towards the stairs to assure himself that his unwelcome visitor was gone. In a few words I acquainted him with the cause of our lady contributor's excitement. 'It is my fault,' said he, looking rather foolish. 'I struck out the Adonis in the proof, supposing it to be an error of the compositor. But who ever heard of Adonis? 'Shelley applies the name to Keats,' I returned. 'It looks like Greek.' 'I never read a line of Shelley in my life,' said he.

Mr. Frost's gossip about the last twenty or twenty-five years is more desultory and less interesting than that which refers to earlier times; but the whole book, short and well written, not too egotistical, and rarely ill-natured, is well worth reading.

The Sacred Books of China.—The Texts of Confucianism. Translated by James Legge. Part I. (Oxford, Clarendon Press.)

To read through the translation of these Confucian texts, and to sum up the result as an intelligible total, is a task to which few are equal. How much more difficult, then, the task of the translator himself! Dr. Legge is the only scholar, at least in Europe, who could have undertaken such a labour and brought it to a successful issue, and we are sure that if any Imperial Chinese "Order" were to be instituted in Peking for the special decoration of successful students, not natives, of Chinese literature, the author of the present work should be the first to receive it. The question that most concerns the reviewer is whether there is anything distinctly religious in these Confucian texts—religious, of course, in any right sense of the word. Dr. Legge says he has never hesitated in rendering both the names "Ti" and "Shang Ti" by our word God. If he is correct in so doing, then there can be no further question that the books in which these terms constantly recur have to do with religion. He, moreover, tells his readers that in the 'Shü King' he has marked with an asterisk the passages embodying more or less distinctly religious ideas. It is easy, then, to refer to these and from them to gather the character and the amount of the religious element to be found therein. We confess to a degree of hesitation in accepting all we thus find as pertaining to religion.

As to the origin of the words "Thien" and "Ti," or rather the symbols employed for them, we had always thought, contrary to the 'Shwo Wän,' and partly in agreement with the 'Lü Shü Kû,' that the symbol for "Thien" was composed of a line placed over "great" to signify not "what is above and great," but what is above "the elemental world"; for we would ask Dr. Legge, with all respect, whether the symbol for "great" (大) is not frequently used in the older books of China for the "order of the elements." Unfortunately we have not at hand the doctor's translation of the 'Yi King,' but, on referring to the passage quoted by Morrison ('Dict.,' sub voc. "Ta") from that work and the comment on it, it seems to us that it contains a definition of the symbol 天 in the sense we have indicated. At any rate, there can be little doubt that in Chinese translations from the Sanscrit this symbol frequently represents the word Mahat when used in the sense of "element"—as, for example, in the third stanza of the 'Sāṅkhyā Kārika,' and throughout that work compared with the Chinese version of the same. If this be so, the symbol for "heaven" (Thien) will denote that which is above or beyond "the elemental world," and so far it will be a suitable symbol for the Supreme Being; but yet it is at best "a vague term," and it can hardly convey to our minds the idea of "a supreme power ruling and governing all the affairs of men with an omnipotent and omniscient righteousness and goodness." The symbol "Ti" was perhaps a later invention to signify the same thing. We find in it an attempt to portray an existence or power transcending earth, the elements (the symbol for which—viz., a perpendicular stroke—seems to correspond closely with the Greek συνελευν), the heaven, and things above the heaven. The effort of mind which framed such a symbol was the same which in India led the founder of Buddhism to conceive something even superior to the "three heavens" and their occupants, which he could not define, but yet which existed, with this difference, however, that in the latter case the "something" was immaterial, whilst in China the idea of "matter" seems, in the early ages at least, to have been always associated with the conception of "the Supreme," whether represented by "Thien" or "Ti."

We have made these remarks because on this point there is permitted a freedom of opinion. With respect to the actual work of translation we should be less inclined to offer any opinion except one of entire satisfaction. In this first part there is placed before the reader the 'Shü King' in five divisions and thirty books. This work is otherwise called 'Book of Historical Documents.' It contains records of various kinds, relating to the period from about B.C. 2357 to A.C. 627. Dr. Legge says that "it is expressly devoted to historical remains in distinction from the poems, the accounts of rites, and other monuments of former times." Extending over such a lengthened period, about 1,700 years, these memorials have no connected method, but are simply historical fragments "with frequent and great gaps between them." It is to be borne in mind, however, that Confucius was not himself the author of them; the collection existed before his time, and hence in the 'Analects' he expressly quotes from them under the formula "the Shü says." In fact, they were probably more in number when Confucius lived than now, for some of them have been lost and others destroyed by feudal princes, who thereby, as Mencius says, desired "the better to perpetrate their own usurpations and innovations." The custom of writing on tablets memorials of business or any charge (edict) given by the king is very ancient, as we know both from Egyptian and Assyrian records. And this appears to have been one of the duties of a special officer in China at an early date. The Recorder of the Interior was expressly commanded to write in duplicate "all charges of the king," whilst the Recorder of the Exterior had charge "of the histories of the states in all parts of the kingdom." This was the case certainly as early as the beginning of the K'au dynasty, 1122 B.C. Mā

Twan-lin, the encyclopedist, asserts that the custom dated from the time of Hwang Ti (2697 B.C.); and Dr. Legge seems inclined to go further back than that remote period even, for he says, "I myself place the invention of written characters at an earlier date than that assigned to Hwang Ti," and the compilers of the Sui dynasty say that "historical documents began immediately with the invention of written characters." Whether this be so or not, the memorials of the 'Shū King' require us to go back at least to the date named above, 2357 B.C. The wonderful manner in which these documents have been preserved would form an interesting chapter among 'Curiosities of Literature.' Ordered to be burned by the tyrant of K'ien, B.C. 213, in common with all the old classical books except the Yi, they were preserved, or rather twenty-nine of them, by one Fū, who hid them in a wall; but an older copy afterwards came to light, hidden in the house of a member of the Khung or Confucian family; whilst a scholar named Tū Lin during his wanderings as a fugitive discovered a portion of the Shū on "lacquered" tablets, or perhaps "lacquered cloth," which "he guarded as his richest treasure and kept near his person." We can understand the feeling of Tū Lin towards these recovered documents if we remember how Constantine Tischendorf describes his rapture on discovering the Sinaitic codex of the Gospels, and the means he took to bring his treasure to a place of safety. After these several recoveries of the Shū documents they were finally engraved on stone with the other classics in the year 837 A.D., and are still thus preserved at K'ang-an in Shen-hai.

The documents as translated before us are interesting and instructive from a Chinese point of view, but almost useless in the field of comparative history. They partake of the isolation of the people themselves, and hence they will scarcely command the attention of Western scholars except as curiosities. They bring before us a succession of strange and sometimes grotesque allusions, abounding in names unknown to ordinary readers, and couched in a style not the most attractive in these days of rapid and earnest diction. Nevertheless they are well worth examination, and if antiquity lends a charm to such productions, it is something for the reader to find himself face to face with kings and dukes who flourished some centuries before Abraham was born. We wish that these writings, like those of Assyria and Egypt, could have rendered some service in the field of Biblical archaeology.

In the 'Shih King,' or 'Book of Poetry,' we have a collection of poetical fragments of an age at any rate as remote as the time of Confucius, the most recent of them being referred to the reign of the monarch Ting of the K'au dynasty (about 600 B.C.), and the oldest, forming a group of five only, to periods dating from 1766 B.C. to 1123 B.C. Dr. Legge divides the collection into four parts, corresponding to the Chinese division:—1. Fifteen books, containing 160 pieces descriptive of manners and events in several of the feudal states of K'au; to these he gives the title 'Lessons from the States' ('Kwo Fung'). 2. Eight books, containing seventy-four pieces and titles of six others, sung at the gatherings of feudal princes and their appearances at the royal court, which he calls 'Minor Odes of the Kingdom' ('Hsiao Yā'). 3. Three books, containing thirty-one pieces, sung on great court occasions; these Dr. Legge calls 'Major Odes of the Kingdom' ('Ta Yā'). 4. Three books, containing forty pieces, which are called 'Odes of the Temple and the Altar' ('Sung'). From the preceding account it will be seen that only the pieces in the last division are professedly of a religious character. As it is this character that gives them interest in connexion with the sacred books of the East, they are properly placed first in order by the translator. We notice at once how much they resemble in their general conception the hymns of the 'Rig Veda.' Substitute Agni or Vāyu or Indra for "meritorious ancestor," and we seem to be in the company of the old Aryan worshippers:—

"Priests, present the Soma libation! Priests, leaders of the ceremonies! may you, quickly bringing the offering to Indra, receive that recompense you desire"; and so on. Compare this with

"Ah! ah! our meritorious ancestor! Permanent are the blessings coming from him. Repeatedly conferred without end;—They have come to you in this place. The clear spirits are in our vessels. . . . There are also the well-tempered soups, Prepared beforehand with the ingredients rightly proportioned. By these offerings we invite his presence, without a word, Without (unseemly) contention (among the worshippers). He will bless us with the eyebrows of longevity, With the grey hair and wrinkled face in unlimited degree."—Ode 2, p. 308.

What is this but the prayer of the Aryan worshipper to heaven and earth?—

"Verily I propitiate by my invocation the mind of the benevolent father (Dyuloka, heaven) and the great and spontaneous affection of the mother (of all beings) (Pṛithivī, earth). The parents with kindness have secured the vast and manifold immortality of their progeny."

In fact, were there nothing but the style of these verses of the 'Sung' to guide us, we should not hesitate to give them the antiquity they claim. But there is still mixed up with the very religiousness of these poems a strange anthropomorphizing element, observable in the fact that they associate with worship paid to God a human being as His companion and representative. In the spring sacrifice, for instance, "offered to God to seek His blessing on the agricultural labour of the year," Hsiao K'au as the ancestor of the house of K'au is associated with Him; whilst in the autumn sacrifice, in the Hall of Light, we find King Wān as the founder of the K'au dynasty associated with Him. This is the difference, then, in all the religious observances of the Chinese betwixt them and the rest of the world, their absolute want of spiritual perception or faith in anything superhuman.

The third work translated in this volume is the 'Hsiao King' or 'Classic of Filial Piety,' concerning which little need be said, except that it has always been a favourite with the Emperors of China, and has received from several of them special study. Dr. Legge names six emperors who have published their labour upon it. And this will not be wondered at if it be remembered that filial piety is the foundation of ancestral worship, and this again is the secret of dynastic stability. Hence it is considered as the beginning and the end of all religious and moral training for the young. This will be evident from one short extract:—

"The Master said, 'The service which a filial son does to his parents is as follows:—In his general conduct to them he manifests the utmost reverence; in his nourishing of them his endeavour is to give them the utmost pleasure; when they are ill he feels the greatest anxiety; in mourning for them (dead) he exhibits every demonstration of grief; in sacrificing to them he displays the utmost solemnity. When a son is complete in these five things (he may be pronounced) able to serve his parents. He who thus serves his parents in a high situation will be free from pride; in a low situation will be free from insubordination; among his equals will not be quarrelsome. In a high situation pride leads to ruin; in a low situation insubordination leads to punishment; among equals quarrelsomeness leads to the winking of weapons. If those three things be not put away, though a son every day contribute beef, mutton, and pork to nourish his parents, he is not filial.'"—Pp. 480-481.

Dr. Legge tells his readers that he first translated the 'Hsiao King' about thirty years ago. We have therefore before us, as in his other labours, the result of a long acquaintance with his subject, an intimate knowledge of the language, and a matured judgment in the actual work of translation. More than this could not be desired.

Riquet of the Tuft: a Love Drama. (Macmillan & Co.)

ZEAL in behalf of the doctrine of the omnipotence of love, which it is the object of his book to preach, leads the author of the dramatic version of 'Riquet of the Tuft' into a species of pantheism. Like an ancient Greek, he assigns to everything in the tangible universe a tutelary genius, whose loving mission it is to tend upon and watch over it. In Shakespeare, perhaps, the real origin of these imaginary beings is found. They are twin sisters with those whom Prospero addresses as:—

Ye elves of hills, brooks, standing lakes and groves,
And ye that on the sands with printless foot
Do chase the ebbing Neptune and do fly him
When he comes back; you demi-puppets that
By moonshine do the green sour ringlets make,
Whereof the ewe not bites, and you whose pastime
Is to make midnight mushrooms, that rejoice
To hear the solemn curfew.

More important, however, than the potent purposes for which Prospero was able to use these "weak masters," and altogether different from those which Titania assigned her attendant elves, are the duties of the fairies in 'Riquet of the Tuft.' As seen by one whose eyes love has tardily purged of what is gross in mortal vision, their functions are to keep alive the beauty and the love in nature. In the ecstasy of the revelation afforded her, Callista, the heroine, speaks:—

O stay;—

I see the living Beauty of the world
Moving, a forming Spirit, through earth and air,
And kindling love; and all the quick-winged fays
That do the Spirit's bidding; some attend
On the thin blades of grass, and lift the heads
Of flowers o'ercharged with dew; and others sit
Round the huge pillars of the high-branched pines
And keep their armour gleaming—beautiful Love
Tending on knightly Strength—and soft the murmur
Of multitudinous delight that fills
The fragrant palaces above. O music

Ripples through wood and wave—I hear the laughter,
Sweet as joybells, of the fine spirits that live
Sphered in the sailing bubbles of the stream!
And every cloud that the strong driver, Wind,
Urres athwart the sky, glows with the wings
Of an elfin host: the sunlight is their food,
Which as they fly they drink. The world I thought Dead in its beauty, trembles like a woman
With the deep life of joy and thought and love.

The beings thus seen are not, Riquet, whose knowledge of the mysteries of Elf-land is close and accurate, assures her, to be confounded with the

Fairy elves

Whose midnight revels by a forest side
Or fountain some belated peasant sees,
Or dreams he sees, while overhead the moon
Sits arbitress, and nearer to the earth
Wheels her pale course.

They are an even more ineffable outcome of the beauty and tenderness of nature. "The greater spirits," Riquet says,

Are children of the moonlight. These are not Titania's fairies, but the living things
Which are the thoughts and loves of Nature.

In the manner in which he has, by means of the old legend of Riquet with the Tuft, which is one of the 'Contes de ma Mère l'Oye' of Perrault, enforced a pretty and poetical moral and advocated some hopeful theories concerning humanity, the author displays great ingenuity and some invention.
His work is, moreover, not wanting in characterization, and he may claim in the character of King Riquet—without the Tuft —to have enriched fairy literature with a new type. The quiet humour with which this personage is described is specially admirable.

In execution 'Riquet of the Tuft' is creditable. Without being absolutely a poet, and without possessing what Rivarol admirably calls "cet heureux pouvoir des mots qui sillonne si profondément l'atten-tion des hommes en ébranlant leur imagination," the author has real power of poetic expression and a vein of genuine melody.

The legend he dramatizes has, of course, been frequently used for stage purposes. A French féerie, entitled 'Riquet à la Houppe', was produced in the first half of the present century, with Potier as Riquet, and was adapted by Mr. Planché for the Olympic, at which house the same character was taken by Charles Mathews. These versions and others are humorous, though a certain measure of grace and earnestness underlies
Mr. Planché's comic couplets. In the treatment of the latest dramatization the attempt is made to give the whole a serious application. An experiment not wholly unlike this has been previously made by Mr. Gilbert in his 'Palace of Truth' and other pieces.
No imitation, conscious or unconscious, of Mr. Gilbert is to be traced. Such indebtedness as there is must be assigned to Shakespeare, whose fairy dramas have naturally coloured all subsequent fairy literature. Gentilla, the fairy to whose guardianship and protection Riquet owes his ultimate triumph over the heart of the Princess Callista, explains how she came to take so keen an interest in him. After charming with her wand his senses into slumber, she declares:—

His face is worn with pain, and yet his grief
And passion have so wrought it that it wins
Some of his mother's beauty. She was young
When first I loved her; the quick-footed wind,
That leads the choir of many-coloured clouds

To dance their morrice in the fields of heaven,
Was not more joyful. Oft in summer nights
We roved the woods, waking the flowers from sleep,
Then sat beside the moonlight streamlet, where
I told her tales of Faery while the dark
Thrilled with the nightingale.

The resemblance of this in conception, if not in execution, to the immortal rejoinder of Titania to the demand of Oberon for "a little changeling boy to be his henchman" is at once apparent. So natural, and even laudable, is it to follow the method of Shakspeare, no imputation of censure underlies our criticism. Some of the lyrics, of which several are interspersed through the pages, are dainty in workmanship, and catch happily enough the seventeenth century note. On the whole, the blank verse is good in quality. In the passage in which Riquet describes the illumination that proceeds from the love new sprung within his heart the author is seen to highest advantage.
This, as a specimen of his manner at its best, we quote:—

This is the Illex grove

I have seen in dreams—the very, very place,
And this the alley where the woodman said,
Callista walks so often, and alone.
I'll wait, and venture all, my love, my life,
On the bolder chance. The straightest man in the world,

Nay Oberon, his wings instinct with love,
Flying above the tumbling sea by night
To kiss Titania in her Indian cave,
Could not have sped more quickly to his end
Than I since yesternoon. I am all changed;
And I shall win my day. I love the world,
And all that meet me love me for my love.
The women and the children in the village,
Seeing my heart's wild rapture on my face
Were kindly with me, and the forest folk
Who gather the pine kernels made me rest
Last night around their fire in the glade,
And we were joyous; no one seemed to see,
So much the spirit of love within me wrought,
How I was made; and as I rode alone,
Nature, my mother, held me to her breast,
And I was glad, immeasurably glad
The clouds told me their secrets, and the streams
Talked with me as I passed; in every leaf
There was a song, and in all flowers Love
Whispered, and smiled on me.

Some scattered lines are very happy, such as

Through the woods my passion bore me on,
More tireless than the swallow's southern flight,
Constant as song within the skylark's heart,
And desolate without you as the night
On wastes of mountain snow.

Again:—

What a wild wonder is a woman's will!
Impulse commands it, hope, and faith, and love;
But conscience never, truth and justice never.

And, once more, the speech of Callista when, conquered by love, she leans her head upon her lover's breast, and answers his inquiry concerning her previous coldness:—

Ask me no more;
What matters that dull time, or what I was So long ago? I love you now, and since My head was on your breast, eternity
Has come and gone.

The banter in the character of Lanval the painter—who objects to disturbing with the gifts of thought the serene and soulless beauty of Callista—of the school that holds to "art for art's sake," and not only of that school, but of all æsthetic criticism, is good-natured and agreeable. Many of the subordinate characters have a fair measure of individuality. Among the humorous or quasi-humorous personages of the drama the place of honour belongs, as has been said, to King Riquet, who is not to be confounded with his son. Satire upon the benevolent monarch of feudal times, who while he was well supplied with animals to slay might perhaps let his subjects rest, could scarcely be lighter or happier. In this verse we find the influence of existing schools. This scarcely extends beyond the bounds outside which few pass, except those master minds who are to found schools of their own instead of repeating the shib-boleth of any existing institution.

Redhouse's Turkish Dictionary. Second Edition. Revised and Enlarged by Dr. Charles Walls. (Quaritch.)

A Practical Grammar of the Turkish Language.
By Dr. Charles Walls. (Same publisher.)

THE intelligent foreigner observant of English institutions may very usefully investigate our relation to the study of the Turkish language. Now, as formerly, we take upon ourselves a foremost position as to Turkey and the Turks, sometimes as protectors, sometimes as correctors. Our intelligent friend, who thinks we know all about them, will learn, first of all, that we have not a single professor of the Turkish language in England or India; next, that until this year we have not had a dragoman in our service throughout the Turkish empire who could write a State document in literary Turkish, although the dragomans are all natives of the country. Of late we have started a school of student dragomans, several of whom are of foreign descent and all of whom are lads, and thus there is no assurance of their having an English political education or the requisite Turkish education. Her Majesty's Government, so largely interested, spends nothing for the promotion of the study of the Turkish language. Nevertheless some of these students already promise well.

Disappointed in his expectations, our friend might think it well to abandon the subject, but, pushing the inquiry further, he would find that in the absence of State aid and of academic support something was still done by this anomalous people, the English.
In the person of Mr. J. W. Redhouse, who was trained in Constantinople, we have a most distinguished Turkish scholar, and from him have emanated standard dictionaries and grammars. One of the best dictionaries, that in English and Turkish by Mr. Redhouse, was printed by the munificence of the late Wm. Wheelwright, of New-buryport in New England, the pioneer of ocean steam navigation in the South Pacific, and a great benefactor to the Argentine States. Mr. Wheelwright's purpose was after the Crimean war to promote the labours of the American and English missions in Turkey. Thus in one way or another individual energy makes up for the supineness of our Government, and emulates the efforts of continental Governments.

Mr. Bernard Quaritch, who published the first dictionary of Mr. Redhouse so many years ago, has now brought out a new edition, urged on by the spirit of enterprise of those with whom he has been associated.
This gives us an occasion to consider what are the claims of the Turkish language itself. Before we do so, it may be well, in justice to the Turks, to say that as they have a deep interest in all matters English, their Government has done just about as much for the study of the English language as ours for that of the Turkish. We must, however, speak with a little reserve. Some years ago reformers at Constantinople found that, under the usual civilizing influence of their French advisers, the Turks were having French taught in the Imperial Naval School instead of English. The Sultan issued a decree to rectify this, but the French ambassador represented that it was very hard on a deserving Frenchman to be turned out of employment. The Sultan benevolently solved the difficulty by ordering that the Frenchman should teach English instead of French. This judgment was received with the greatest satisfaction by the young men in the school; they were no longer bothered with French, and as the Frenchman did not learn English he could not teach it, and they were never troubled about that. At one time there was only one political functionary of the Porte who could speak English.

Turkish, although spoken in so many dialects, is so uniform in plan that he who speaks Ottoman Turkish can work his way from European Turkey, through Asia Minor and Central Asia, to the Chinese dominions. It is the language of the reigning dynasty and political families of Persia, and of a large portion of its population; it holds a good place in the Caucasus, and reaches through Asiatic Russia from the Arctic regions to the Black Sea. It can be used in Egypt, Tunis, and Cyprus. Thus it is an important political language, and one most useful to the traveller. To our Indian empire it is of great importance in connexion with Afghanistan, Persia, Turkistan, and the Chinese territories. Nevertheless no provision is made for its study by the Indian authorities, though there is as head of the college at Lahore Dr. Leitner, the only man who has been a Professor of Turkish in England, and whose pupil at King's College was Dr. Wells, the editor of the dictionary now before us.

Turkish is a triple language like our own, and uses up Arabic and Persian materials, and in case of need European terms. It is, however, of much interest to philologists in belonging to the Ugro-Altaic class, of which it forms the most important member, and therefore is well qualified for giving an insight into their structure. Of late another feature of interest connected with Turkish is that it is used in the works of M. F. Lenormant as one of the languages illustrative of the Akkad. In this respect we may hope to get something remarkable from the distinguished scholar the Rev. Dr. Koelle, who during his stay in Constantinople has brought his linguistic attainments to bear on Turkish philology, and is stated to have made some discoveries which are of general interest.

Whoever looks at the paradigm of the Turkish verb given by Mr. Redhouse will recognize many of the forms of the copious English verb, "I am opening," "I was opening," "I have been opening," &c., and in fact there are many points in the structure of the two languages which illustrate each other, however remote they usually are. Indeed, in the teaching of Turkish and of many Turanian languages it would be a great assistance if the corresponding English forms were given. "Six sail of ships," "Six head of cattle," give us very good Turanianisms worth lines of text. If we make ourselves a little poetical we can become Turanian enough in our order: "Sailing were we," "Him loved not I," "Lovest not thou?" "So brave a man was he," and so forth. We may get our postpositions, too, "hereby," "wherewith," "homewards," &c. Indeed, Englishmen have great helps towards the study of Turkish when they choose to turn them to account.

For the task of compiling the second edition Dr. Wells has been chosen by Mr. Quaritch, with the sanction of Mr. Redhouse, and for this he can have few competitors. He was the first and sole Turkish prizeman of King's College, and he has actively kept up the practice of the language. In Constantinople he spent some time as Professor of English in the Imperial Naval College at Halki, and he was private secretary to Sir Arnold Kemball in the late Russo-Turkish war. It may be an encouragement to English ladies to know that Lady Kemball is a proficient Turkish scholar.

The volume before us is a recast of the smaller work of Redhouse—English-Turkish and Turkish-English. Dr. Wells claims that he has added many words, which we presume refer to those taken from Redhouse's large 'English and Turkish Dictionary.' Through such a work it is impossible to go at length, but we have tested both portions in several places, and can recognize the care and labour which Dr. Wells has bestowed. This is the more necessary as the English pronunciation is figured according to Mr. Redhouse's rendering, and this to make it useful is necessarily complicated. The work is a very valuable contribution to the materials of English and American students, and will be thankfully received in India.

Dr. Wells's grammar will be found a very useful addition to our resources. While it gives us the materials of the best authorities, it furnishes, as the author promises, much new matter. It is a very copious work, and will be most valuable for study and reference. Dr. Wells has had great advantages for such a task, and he has turned them well to account. He has introduced exercises which will be welcome to many, and he claims as a speciality to have given illustrations from Turkish works, which will be a step towards the study of the literature. It is of some importance that while providing for the acquisition of the language as a written language, he has not neglected what is essential for conversation. We should have been glad if the philology of the language had been further dealt with in relation to its position in general philology. We doubt whether nominative, genitive, dative, and accusative are suitable in such a language as Turkish for displaying declension. We think, too, that forms of English could have been applied more freely to exhibit the Turkish forms. The alliterative adjectives or words in Turkish (p. 20) are not so peculiar as Dr. Wells thinks, for he will find enough in Mr. Wheatley's little dictionary for English, to say nothing of other languages. We believe we are safe in saying that the complicated spelling of this book has been carefully supervised by Dr. Wells, and we have only met in our inspection with one literal error which has escaped the author, and that is on the last page but one.

The Lincoln Pocket Guide: being a Short Account of the Churches and Antiquities of the County. By Sir C. H. J. Anderson, Bart. (Stanford.)

LINCOLNSHIRE has been neglected by tourists. The glorious minster of the Blessed Virgin at Lincoln and half a dozen of the great Fen churches have become objects of pilgrimage, but beside these the wandering public know nothing of the second of the English counties except that which they have received with unhesitating faith from writers of the eighteenth century. It is still to the outer world a land of mere and heath, where there is nothing to see and little to do except catch wild fowl and patiently endure the ague. It still causes a smile of incredulity when a Lincolnshire man ventures to affirm that as for the Fens, they are all gone—drained away; that the great works of recent days have made them a mere name, which is useful as perpetuating a fact of past history, but is absolutely misleading as a description of the present. As to the great heath which extended for miles to the south of Lincoln, and over which the inland lighthouse known as Dunston Pillar dominated, it has long been cut up into square enclosures, and now produces some of the finest barley and wheat grown in England. The tall, square tower holds aloft a flame no longer, but is surmounted by a statue of George III., during whose reign the changes took place. The fact is that, so far from Lincolnshire being a desolate land, the passion for enclosure has gone so far that there is hardly a bit of wild land left in the shire. The bustard has long been extinct, though it wandered here in large flocks little more than a century ago; the bittern, of which we have heard old sportsmen say that it was in their young days so common that it was no unusual thing to bag three or four in a single afternoon, is now all but unknown; the heron is becoming scarce; and even the magpie, which twenty years ago was so common as to be a constant source of annoyance to the shepherd and the housewife, is now rarely seen. So very far, indeed, has the march of improvement gone, that not a few of the wiser and more thoughtful people of the county are meditating, not how to bring still more soil into cultivation, but by what means they are to restrain lords of manors and "land-jobbers" from appropriating the few patches of common that are left. They think that those simple people who love nature and take a delight in birds, insects, and wild plants are worthy of some little consideration.

Sir Charles Anderson's book will, we believe, be of great service not only to strangers, but also to Lincolnshire people themselves. The ordinary guide-book tells of little except what is to be seen. Sir Charles Anderson, who knows every inch of the shire, has much to say of the associations of places, and many racy anecdotes to tell. Thus, though the book is small, it really contains more that is interesting and instructive than most volumes of double its bulk. What we require in a guide-book to any part of our own country is not an elaborate description of a few well-known objects, but instruction where to find those lesser things which are of interest to thoughtful people. Lincolnshire—the north as well as the south—abounds with curious churches, very few of which have ever been figured, or even described, by a competent hand. We hope Sir Charles's book may have the effect of turning the steps of some wandering antiquary in that direction who will have sufficient energy and zeal to give us a good account of them. Sir Charles seems to have visited nearly every one, and gives a few words concerning each, just sufficient to let the traveller know that there is something worth seeing, and of what nature that something is. For this we are grateful. All that is wanted in a book really meant for the coat-pocket is a hint as to where to look and what will be found. He does not confine himself to notices of churches, or, indeed, to buildings of any kind, but gives us a few words about nearly every earth-work in the county, and wells, stones, and trees, when there is anything memorable about them, are not left unnoticed. Under "Brampton" we are told a strange, weird tale of an ash tree, which seems to carry us far back into the time when the

Fraxinus in sylvia pulcherrima

was the abode of beings who were objects of awe or devotion. It seems that at this place in 1640, when men's minds were uneasy with those fierce political and religious questionings that so soon after burst forth into civil war, an ash tree was heard to utter strange groans, and that an adventurous person who climbed up into its branches fell down in a fainting fit, and declared when he came to himself again that he had heard voices, and that Brampton had need to pray. The Earl of Lincoln (Theophilus Clinton), it is affirmed, had one of the branches cut off, and then the voice was still more distinctly heard, but the language in which it spoke could not be understood.

We have heard it stated that there is not in Lincolnshire a single monolith or other stone which there is reason to believe has ever been an object of reverence. Sir Charles Anderson directs attention to an object which, although in great part natural, must be classed with stones like the Devil's Arrows at Burrowbridge and the great standing stone in Radston churchyard. At Sawcliff, in the parish of Roxby, Sir Charles says there is "a fragment of rock a few feet above the ground called Sunken Church; tradition says it was part of the wall of a church which was swallowed up with the congregation, and that on the anniversary of that day, if you go early in the morning, you will hear the bells ringing.As there are no other rocks in this locality it was probably selected for heathen rites, which gave a weird character to the place."

This stone is certainly a part of the un-moved natural rock, a long block of Oolite, but looked at from some points of view it is strangely like the head of a huge serpent. It is not unlikely that its present form may be in some degree the result of art. People are yet terrified to go near it at night, and in very recent days—probably, indeed, at the present time—it has been visited for magical purposes by persons who have thought themselves bewitched or have wished to cast a spell on others.

Sir Charles Anderson evidently takes much interest in the Lincolnshire dialect. He gives a few specimens of it which are very entertaining. We have also two verses of the song which village lads sing when they inflict the punishment known here and throughout the north of England as "riding the stang." There is also a long and instructive list of places in Lincolnshire and the Scandinavian parts of Yorkshire with the kindred names which are to be found in Norway and Denmark. We believe Sir Charles is in error in the derivation which he gives for the sister towns or villages of Winterton and Winterringham in the north of the county. He thinks they were so named from having been "the winter quarters of the Danes." This, though the opinion of Abraham de la Pryme and others of our elder antiquaries, is, to say the least of it, very doubtful. Kemble suggests that Winterringham in Lincolnshire and Winterringham in Yorkshire took their name from the Wintingas.

Bombay Gazetteer.—Vols. V. and VI. Cutch, Cambay, and other Bombay Districts. (Bombay, Government Press; London, Trübner & Co.)

THE series of works forming the results of the statistical survey of India has been reinforced by two more volumes (the fifth and sixth), devoted to accounts of Cutch, Palanpur, Mahi and Rewa Kantha, Cambay and the Surat States, most of which combine to form part of the now obsolete province of Gujarat, in the northern part of the Bombay Presidency. The Bombay volumes are among the best of the series of these valuable administrative handbooks, and we are glad to see that the present ones, which appear to be mainly the work of Mr. James M. Campbell, B.O.S., are up to the level of their predecessors. The first named, Cutch, is a district of considerable historic interest. It was visited by Alexander; it formed part of Menander's kingdom from the Jamna to Saurashtra about 150 years later; and on the overthrow of the Græco-Bactrian kingdom, in 120 B.C., the Scythians, known to the Indians as Saka or Min, passing south, established themselves in Cutch and other parts of Northern Gujarat. Ptolemy knew the Gulf of Cutch as Kanthi, and the author of the 'Periplus' speaks of the country as yielding in abundance corn, rice, sesamum, butter, and cotton. Hven Thsang, that ubiquitous Chinese pilgrim, described it under the name of Otien-po-chi-lo; and the Arabs settled in it in the ninth century. The earlier notices of Cutch are thus frequent. In later times the province was chiefly noted for the brisk commerce it kept up with the Persian Gulf, Zanzibar, the east coast of Africa, the Mekran coast, and the whole of India as far as Ceylon, the exports being mainly cottons, silks, alum, and gai, and the imports, bullion from Mokha, ivory, rhinoceros horns and hides from East Africa, dates, cocoa-nuts, grain of all kinds, and timber from the Malabar and Konkan coasts. With the Somali Arabs commercial intercourse necessitated many precautions, such as for each trader to consign himself to a Somali, who became his security for life and property, this step being absolutely essential on account of the thievish and murderous practices of the natives. Nevertheless large profits were secured by the Cutch traders, and in these and other voyages their sailors laid the foundation of a great reputation for seamanship, of which Sir Alexander Burnes spoke with admiration in 1835. Cutch has also been long noted for the superior design and workmanship of its gold and silver ware, and endeavours have been made to foster this interesting native industry by the establishment of a school of design. The state is now under a native ruler called the Rao; but he is only fifteen years of age, and the actual administration is consequently vested in the hands of a regency under the presidency of the Political Agent. One of the chief difficulties with which Government has had to combat in Cutch has been the odious practice of female infanticide. Happily the measures taken to suppress this have been very successful, so that the 1877 census revealed the gratifying fact that the females were to the males in the proportion of 1 to 1.07. The other states treated in the same volume are Palanpur and Mahi Kantha, but these do not attain the importance of Cutch. Proceeding further to the south-east, we come to a group of sixty-one small states, collectively termed the Rewa Kantha Political Agency, and grouped about the lower course of the Mahi and Nerbudda rivers. The country here is fairly diversified as far as physical aspect is concerned, and being mostly hilly and well watered, with a large proportion of unsettled, semi-savage tribes, such as Bhils and Kolis, who are accustomed to live on fruits, roots, and wild vegetables, it has never been entirely wasted by famine. This group of states, together with Cambay and the Surat States, combine to make up the sixth volume of the 'Bombay Gazetteer.' Cambay is a gently waving alluvial plain between the Mahi and Sabarmati rivers, and until railways made travelling easy was a favourite resort for invalids from the fevers and heat of inland Gujarat. As late as the end of last century it was noticeable as being one of the few places in India, and indeed in the whole world, where lions and tigers were found, so to speak, cheek by jowl. Sir Charles Malet, when Resident in 1781, killed a lion about twenty miles north of the town of Cambay. The country people called it the camel tiger (untia edgh). It was about the same colour as a camel, of course without spots or stripes, not high, but powerful and massive, and with a head and foreparts of wonderful size and strength. Cambay assumed some commercial importance in the tenth century, and at the close of the thirteenth it had risen to be one of the chief ports of India, and formed a great mart for the export of indigo, cotton, and, as Marco Polo tells us, hides and manufactured leather, besides numerous other products. The Mussulman rulers of Gujarat actively encouraged its trade, and in the fifteenth century organized four expeditions for the suppression of piracy in the Arabian Sea. Shortly after the beginning of the sixteenth century the control of the sea trade passed into the hands of the Portuguese, and our information of the Cambay trade is greatly amplified from that date, but it is doubtful whether the trade was ever again so great as it was during the reign of Mahmud Begada (1459-1513). The portion of the volume which is here devoted to an enumeration and description of the various products which were exported from, or imported into, Cambay will be found highly interesting, and reflects much credit on the compiler. Towards the close of the sixteenth century the head of the Cambay Gulf began to silt up, and later on the establishment of the Dutch and English factories at Surat brought about the decline of the Cambay trade, which, since the opening of the Bombay and Ahmedabad Railway (1863), has still further decreased, and assumed a purely local character. One famous product of Cambay still survives to this day in the Cambay stones, chiefly agates and carnelians, which are found in a small sandstone hill near the Nerbudda, perhaps to be identified with Ptolemy's agate mountain. The stones are exceedingly diversified in appearance, and some are of great beauty. They are worked up into armlets, dress ornaments, seals, necklaces, and rings for the Chinese and Arab markets, while those destined for Europe are manufactured into paper weights, alabs for boxes and tables, cups and saucers, and nicknacks of various descriptions. The trade is said to support about six hundred families of skilled workmen and from five to six hundred unskilled labourers. In each branch of the craft the heads of the factories form a distinct guild, but the trade funds (like some nearer home) seem to be applied to no other purpose than that of entertaining the members.

The two volumes before us may be taken as very fair specimens of the statistical accounts of Indian districts which are being issued from time to time. It is a pity that measures could not have been taken to ensure the simultaneous issue of such useful handbooks. At present the Indian statistical accounts or gazetteers, as they appear to be indifferently called, have been dragging on the process of coming into birth for a score or so of years. Two censuses will have come and gone, and yet, owing to the difficulty of getting the different provinces and presidencies of India to work with one consent, the series will be still incomplete. The statistical value of the publications must be much diminished by their being published at such irregular and distant intervals. Still, we are bound to confess that, taken individually, many of them give us a complete and faithful picture of the results of British rule in India, such as very few works have yet conveyed.

Curiosities of the Search-Room. By the Author of 'Flemish Interiors.' (Chapman & Hall.)

THE art of compilation is not easy, and it is impossible to avoid sins both of omission and commission in dealing with a field so wide as that of 'Curiosities of the Search-Room.' The collection of remarkable wills by the author of 'Flemish Interiors' shows a great amount of energy, if not of patience. A large number of authorities have been consulted, some of which required more verification before the second-hand results were given as facts to the public; a wide range of time has been covered, beginning with the will of Sennacherib, discovered at Konyunjik, and descending to the Bagot will case in 1880, of which the only fact recorded is that it ended in a compromise; and a great number of documents have been dealt with, some of extreme interest, others of the most commonplace description. Though much zeal has been expended in reference, it would seem that the book has been hurriedly thrown together, or we should not find a detailed account of the Search-Room at Somerset House, given in a note to p. 15, repeated in the text of p. 23, nor space occupied by such information as this:—

"If he desire.....to examine either an original will or its copy, he will, after fulfilling the prescribed formalities.....and waiting a considerable time, have it brought to him in this room, into which he will have been previously ushered." Hardly more original are the author's abstract reflections:—

"Every age, as well as every nation, has its local colour, and with regard to such entirely personal compositions as wills, we might say every individual also," &c.

Having broken away from the inevitable exordium, and launched upon the career of stringing documents together, the writer becomes much more amusing. Among those which, with a modern scorn of Greek, she calls "excentric" wills, that of Jehan Connaxa holds a conspicuous place. The story has served for the plot of a comedy by Etienne. Connaxa, a leading burgher of Antwerp, who had married his two daughters to noblemen of that city, was induced by his children, like a second Lear, to divest himself of his fortune in their favour. Experiencing the treatment which was to be expected from Goneril and Regan, he bethought himself of a fortunate device. Inviting his sons-in-law to a banquet, he took the occasion to be publicly importuned for the loan of a thousand crowns, which he had borrowed from the ostensible suppliant. A great change of feeling takes place among his sordid relations on the request being satisfied, and thenceforth he lives at free quarters till the day of his death. At the last moment his anxious relatives "beg him to declare his last wishes and to make a codicil. He replies that that has already been done, and requests them to bring out of his room his strong box with three locks; the weight is enormous, and the expectant heirs feel convinced that their inheritance will shortly be doubled. Connaxa requests them to send for the prior of the Jacobins of Antwerp; and appointing him his testamentary executor, he hands him one of the keys of the box, and to each of the sons-in-law one of the remaining two, desiring that it may not be opened until forty days after his obsequies."

He then ensures that his funeral shall be duly performed, and directs certain handsome legacies to churches to be paid by his children forthwith. When the box is opened it is discovered to be full of old iron, lead, and flints.

"In the midst of these lay conspicuous a clumsy cudgel, and round it was rolled a parchment, which proved to be Connaxa's will. It was briefly written in these words. 'Ego Joannes Connaxa tale condo testamentum, ut qui sui curâ relicta alternis curam susceperit mactetur hac clava.'"

An ardent politician in 1798 makes the following characteristic dispositions:—

"The last will of John Redman, citizen of the world, of Upminster in Essex.....Tylahurst Lodge Farm I devise to the eldest son of my second cousin, Mr. Benjamin Branfill, on condition that he, the eldest son, takes the name of Redman, or to his second or third son if the others decline it. It is hereby enjoined to the Branfills to keep the owner's apartment and land in hand, to be a check to shuffling, sharping tenants, who are much disposed to impoverish the land.....Holding my executors in such esteem, I desire them to pay all the legacies without the wicked swindling and base imposition of stamps that smell of blood and carnage. To Mr. French, of Harper Street,.....a set of Tom Paine's 'Rights of Man,' bound with common sense, with the answers intended by the longheads of the law, fatheads of the Church, and wiseheads of an insolent, usurping aristocracy.....To that valuable friend of his country in the worst of times, Charles Fox, member for Westminster, five hundred guineas. To each of the daughters of Horne Tooke, five hundred pounds."

This wise and moderate person adds a codicil providing for the consumption of his wine on the premises at a succession of banquets by his executors.

Another politician in 1879, a Baptist minister, directs

"the payment of all my just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, as soon as conveniently may be after my departure to heaven; but, as this is to be my final public document, I shall here record my detestation of all State establishments of religion, believing them to be anti-Scriptural and soul-ruining.....I thirst to see the Church brought down, the Church by man set up, for millions are by it led on to drink a bitter cup."

Many testators have given minute directions as to the disposal of their remains. The nurture of British oaks and American elms has been the laudable care of some patriots; the advancement of surgical science was the aim of Bentham, of Miss Martineau, and of the celebrated Dr. Messinger Monsey, whose name, by the way, is in this book misspelled; John Reed, the gas-lighter of a Philadelphia theatre, bequeathed his skull to the house, to be used as Yorick's skull in 'Hamlet'; while his compatriot, Mr. Sanborne, like another Ziska, directed two drumheads to be made of his skin, on which 'Yankee Doodle' might be beat on Bunker's Hill on every 17th of June.

The Horatian proclivities of another American testator have been recorded in Mr. Tegg's 'Wills of Their Own,' where may be also found the dispositions of Mr. Darby or Durley, who cut his wife off with a shilling because she picked his pocket of sixty guineas, and of the jovial Capt. Martinett, who bequeathed his debts to the Governor of Bengal.

The collection of vindictive wills is one of the most curious. That of Philip, fifth Earl of Pembroke, is too long to quote in extenso, but all its provisions are worth reading. Among other things, he agrees with that class of testators who are exclusive after death; and whereas many pious persons desire to be buried in the church porch, that men's feet may go over them, he says:—

"Above all, put not my body beneath the church porch, for I am, after all, a man of birth, and I would not that I should be interred there where Colonel Pride was born."

He goes on:—

"Item: I give my two best saddle horses to the Earl of Denbigh, whose legs methinks must soon begin to fail him. As regardeth my other horses, I bequeath them to Lord Fairfax, that when Cromwell and his council take away his commission he may still have some horses to command.....Item: I give nothing to my Lord Says, and I do make him this legacy willingly, because I know that he will faithfully distribute it unto the poor.....Item: I give to the Lieut.-General Cromwell one of my words, the which he must want, seeing that he hath never kept any of his own."

Henry VII.'s will is characteristically economical. He desires that "our executors have a special respect, in our funeral, to the laud and praising of God, the health of our soul, and somewhat to our dignity royal, but avoiding damnable pomp and outrageous superfluities."

With a "touching compliment," in contrast to the arbitrary jealousy exhibited by many testators, we may close our list of extracts. Says Mr. Granville Harcourt:—

"The unspeakable interest with which I constantly regard Lady Waldegrave's future fate induces me to advise her earnestly to unite herself again with some one who may deserve to enjoy the blessing of her society during the many years of her probable survival of my life."

Such are a very few of the curious and interesting documents collected by the compiler's research. Of the merits of the book as a whole there will be different opinions. The faculty of wonder, which we are told is the origin of knowledge, is perhaps unduly sensitive in the writer. Certainly an immense mass of commonplace, almost of rubbish, overlies what is worth preserving.

The chapter on "Disputed Wills," mostly of recent date, is prolix and dull in the extreme. On the other hand, that on "Wills of Remarkable Persons," though much might have been omitted, contains valuable relics of a great number of illustrious personages. At any rate, the author has taken much pains to be interesting, and, in spite of some errors of judgment and perplexing cross divisions of her subject, has fairly succeeded.

NOVELS OF THE WEEK.

The Wellfields. By Jennie Fothergill. 3 vols. (Bentley & Son.)

Love and Life. By C. M. Yonge. 2 vols. (Macmillan & Co.)

The Tcherkess and his Victim. (Hodges.)

Monseil Digby. By W. Marshall. 3 vols. (Remington & Co.)

Charlie. By Mrs. Woodward. 3 vols. (S. Tinsley & Co.)

In 'The Wellfields,' as in her former books, the author of 'The First Violin' has mainly devoted her powers to the delineation of the sentimental part of a love story. This alone is enough to ensure popularity for her novel. But it deserves popularity on other grounds as well. It is the best of her three books in point of completeness of construction, and the character of Jerome Wellfield, who is the principal man, though he can hardly be called the hero, is more finished and more consistent than any she has yet attempted. The author's success in her description of German life has naturally led her to lay the scene once more for a great part in Germany. The other part is laid in the north-east corner of Lancashire. There is less music in this book than in the author's previous works, and here it is used somewhat as an evil influence. Miss Fothergill has turned her attention more to painting, and with this she does not seem to be equally familiar. Possibly the difficulty is greater in using the incidents of a painter's life.

The feverish emotions roused by music are easier to work with. But, whether intentionally or not, there is a certain artistic fitness in the contrast between the love of the man who won the heroine by thrilling her artist-nature with music and the more peaceful and enduring love of the painter-spirit of the other. It is amusing to watch the growth of the author's mind, but she must be warned of the extreme danger there is in being led to give the rein to her new ideas. She seems to be running the risk of descending to the great fault which women often commit in their novels—losing sight of the characters and story, and going off into something which is very like sermonizing. Two places may be mentioned where Miss Fothergill makes this mistake, one where she drifts into reflections upon Roman Catholic ritual, and the other where she delivers a short lecture upon what it is now fashionable to call Agnosticism. As in her other books, there is here some want of vigour in the climax of the story. To a writer who has a very considerable gift of language, who writes brilliantly as well as easily, it is no doubt a great difficulty to know how to end. Miss Fothergill does not give sufficient study to this very important task. It is obvious that she has the power; her natural talent is unquestionable; she has only to be convinced of the necessity to bestow as much labour upon the climax of her plots as upon their commencement and unfolding.

The artifice of filling in the general outlines of some old myth with a story of recent times has evidently a strong attraction about it. Miss Thackeray has done it repeatedly, borrowing, one may suppose, the notion from her father, who was fond of suggesting parallels between the situation of his characters and that of the heroes and heroines of nursery tales. Miss Yonge followed some years ago with 'My Young Alcides,' the difference between the two ladies being that one goes to romantic, the other to classical sources—Countess d'Aulnoy and Lemprière. There must, no doubt, be some satisfaction for an ingenious mind in the process of inventing details and names to round off the work and make the new story suggest, without too forcibly resembling, the old at every turn. This was done very cleverly in 'My Young Alcides,' but the story was a little injured artistically by the too great prominence which moral teaching was allowed to assume. In 'Love and Life' this is better managed. The heroine, like a virtuously brought up young lady of her period—the first half of the last century—attends, of course, to her religious duties, and derives comfort therefrom in her troubles; but the author is too careful of historical proprieties to make her as "churchy" as her great-granddaughter might be, and, from the point of view of the secular reader, this is an advantage. Miss Yonge's intimate acquaintance with the minutiae of history enables her to arrange the accessories of her picture correctly, while she has wisely not attempted a tour de force of style after the manner of 'Edmond.' The scene in Lady Belamour's boudoir might be, and to some extent is, taken bodily from Hogarth. All this time we have not said what ancient myth is here retold "in eighteenth century costume."

Readers of no more ancient literature than Mr. Morris's poems will find out for themselves before they have read very far. They will probably agree that—with the exception, perhaps, of a slight stretch of probability in the catastrophe, which, however, could hardly have been avoided if the new story was to follow the lines of the old—the adventures of Aurelia Delavia and Sir Amyas Belamour reproduce very prettily those of their mythical prototypes.

'The Tcherkess and his Victim' is a book which would not readily fall into its place in a classification of the vast mass of printed matter which may be called the literature of the Eastern Question. It combines fiction with fact, sober judgment with perilous assumption, eager advocacy with here and there a grain of merely personal predilection. Its variety, indeed, is one of its charms. It will attract and give pleasure to many a reader who would have felt himself unequal to the effort of dealing with a new and not original disquisition on the state of affairs in Constantinople; whilst a large number of those who take up the book prepared to find a connected story in it will not be dismayed to see that they are expected to imbibe a certain amount of instruction together with their entertainment. The particular Tcherkess whom we meet in these pages is a Circassian chief, and his victim is a young Greek girl whom he had got into his possession, and whom he hoped to turn to profit in the market. A friend of the narrator, an honest American of quixotic disposition, is taken to see this slave by a dwarf who is anxious to get her out of the hands of her master, and the passion which he at once conceives for her is thenceforth a most powerful incentive to the efforts which he makes to secure her liberation. At the beginning of the book, our author, who describes himself as "A Resident of the last Three Years," asks us to accept his "sketches of the moral, social, and political aspects of life" in Constantinople as realistic, not ideal. To some extent we can do so; but the remarkable adventures of Jonathan Wildman, his hairbreadth escapes and his heroic achievements, his chance discovery of the girl's father, his rescue of her, and their eventual marriage are, on the face of them, more fictitious than real. This, indeed, is not denied by the writer. What he wishes us to understand is that he has drawn both scenery and character, both centre and background, from the life. There is plenty of internal evidence to support the statement, and all who know anything of Oriental manners and customs, of the social life or even the modern history of the East, will be disposed to admit his claim. There are plenty of female slaves in Constantinople, plenty of Circassian and other slave-dealers, plenty of philanthropic and adventurous ghiaours, though perhaps there is not much violent rescuing of the oppressed or condign punishment of the oppressor. The reader who honestly desires to have the opinion of an eye-witness on the actual condition of the Turkish capital has not far to seek for his gratification. Occasionally, indeed, the writer introduces this weightier matter with a clumsy abruptness more calculated to repel than to attract. There is a certain Mr. Draper who plays "Moral" throughout, and very didactic he is when it comes to his turn to speak. Thus, for example, we have the author and his friends collected in their favourite summer resort at Prinkipo; and this is how their conversation opens:—

"What a pity!" I sighed.

"What's a pity?" asked Wildman, eagerly. "Come, friend Summer, out with it. No secrets between comrades in arms, you know."

"I was thinking, said I, 'of this glorious panorama of smiling sea, with its splendid harbours, fertile plains, and distant mountains, spread out around us, and contrasting the state of the country that is with what might be.'"

"The country is certainly beautiful," said Mr. Draper, "and naturally one of the richest on the face of the earth; but such is the degradation, want of energy and want of skill of its inhabitants, that it is practically one of the poorest and most wretched....."

And then Mr. Draper talks away, and his friends listen to him, and the bits of instruction come in. It is not all so bald as the passage in the midst of which our quotation is arrested; but unfortunately there is too much baldness to entitle 'The Tcherkess and his Victim' to a very high rank amongst books of its class. The author's views are, in the main, sound and sensible; he recognises the good points as well as the bad points in the Turkish character; he perceives the elements of progressive civilisation which distinguish the Greek race in particular. But it can hardly be said that he sees all this with sufficient freshness, or puts it with sufficient force, to make his advocacy exceptionally strong. Nevertheless 'The Tcherkess and his Victim' is an interesting book.

Though Mr. Marshall calls the moon Luna on his first page, without any special inducement to be poetical in Latin, and though other pages later on bear marks of juvenility, both in thought and in expression, his story is a straightforward narrative of English country life in a manufacturing district during the second decade of the present century. The elements of the plot are by no means original—the misery of the overworked, overtaxed, underfed artisans, their prejudices against the new machinery, their hostility to their employers, their stolid ignorance and vague aspirations, their violence and defeats, the contrast between mere noisy agitators and liberal-minded, well-bred sympathisers with the poor; a love story, an attack on a mill, a fire, the perplexity of good people, the heroism of a few; and, in the last chapter or so, a comfortable settlement of affairs, which is added as due rather to the reader of the story than to any regard for probability. All this has been done many times before, and has been done very well, so that Mr. Marshall could hardly have hoped to eclipse his predecessors in point of interest or fidelity to the facts. The narrative is circumstantial, and it is, at any rate, fair to presume that such occurrences as are here described actually took place, or might have taken place, at the time indicated. But there is nothing to show that this novel is in any special manner based upon recorded facts, though at least a portion is historical, as where the rough "spouter of sedition" is represented as telling his fellow workmen that "Bonny" had escaped from St. Helena, that he would soon be in England, that he would "take the land and redivide it," that he would give them real liberty, and bring back the good old times. This was to be heard commonly enough at the beginning of the century. Although Mr. Marshall is not very fresh in his matter or manner, there is not a little in 'Monseil Digby' which may be placed to his credit. His fiction, though not of the highest class, is pure and pathetic. Many a little touch of description or reference shows that he has studied the circumstances of the time, not merely in its externals, but also for the purpose of comprehending its ideas and motives, its domestic records, its popular levels of intelligence and aspiration. Much of the central narrative of 'Monseil Digby' is calculated to arrest the reader's attention, and to make him grateful to the author for a careful, fairly accurate, and, on the whole, unprejudiced sketch of a condition of things which will never cease to have a painful interest for Englishmen.

'Charlie' is a book which sadly tries the reader's patience. It is in the form of an autobiography, and at the outset the writer says that the mystery of his birth is "one of those deep, dark problems which will never be solved on this side of the grave," a statement which is then amplified in a sentence which extends beyond the length of a whole page. But this very mystery is perpetually being nearly cleared up, and at one point it is seen that the writer had the means of solving it at his command. All seems to depend upon the secrecy with which the name of a man who left the writer a legacy of 30,000*l.* is withheld from him by a firm of solicitors. Nothing would have been easier than to make the discovery at Somerset House. One other person seems to have been in some measure in the secret, but he is made inaccessible by being sent to the south of France. Mrs. Woodward made a great mistake, of which a study of Mr. Wilkie Collins's books would convince her, in dealing in this way with a mystery. Passing to other matters, the writer of the autobiography is a most wearisome person. He is, in fact, a model prig. At the age of eleven or twelve he lectures the woman who has played the part of mother to him upon the impropriety of making a speedy second marriage with the solemnity of a Hamlet and with much more piety. But the prig in infancy is even less detestable than the prig in love. There is no more sensible remark in the book than that of the old clergyman who tells him that he is a fool. It must not be supposed that there is any harm in Mrs. Woodward's book beyond what there may be in the loving delineation of a prig. The book is very well intentioned, but the matter of it is hardly fitted for a novel which is supposed to be designed for grown-up people.

TRAVELS IN SPAIN.

Viajes de Extranjeros por España y Portugal en los Siglos XV., XVI., y XVII. Colección de Javier Liske, Rector y Catedrático de Historia en la Universidad de Lemberg. Traducidos y Anotados por J. R. (Madrid, Casa Editorial de Medina.)

THE most interesting of the four accounts of Spain which appear in this volume is by a Pole, Nicolaus de Popielow, who came to Spain and Portugal in 1484. Any description of Spain of so early a date is of value, and although Popielow's narrative is not to be compared to the racy account of the Peninsula given by the Bohemian knight Rossmittel in 1465, collectors of early travels in Spain will welcome this little volume, which, notwithstanding its careless translation and poor references and notes, still contains local details and descriptions which are of value in helping the student to understand life in Spain during the fifteenth century.

Popielow was born at Breslau about the middle of the fifteenth century. He entered the military service of the Emperor of Germany, Frederic III., in 1473. Soon after, wishing to see foreign countries, he begged the emperor to give him credentials for various courts, and in July, 1483, he left Vienna for England, Portugal, Spain, and France. He passed by Bavaria, Heidelberg, Coblenz, Bonn, Cologne, Valenciennes, and Malines. During the carnival at Antwerp he distinguished himself in a tournament by performing wonderful feats with his lance. From Antwerp he went to England, where he was well received by Richard III. On the 5th of June, 1484, he sailed for Spain; he arrived at Santiago de Compostella on the 24th of July, and travelled in Spain and Portugal until the beginning of the following year, returning to Breslau in 1486. Shortly after he decided to go to the Holy Land, and died on his way to Alexandria. The exact date of his death is unknown.

His travels are written in German. The original MS. has not been found, but a copy exists in the Library of St. Elizabeth at Breslau; it was published for the first time in 1806 in a local newspaper, Schlesien Rheinisch und Jett. We gather from the translator's obscure preface that these travels have been collected by Dr. Liske, who before publishing the volume lent it to be translated into Spanish. It is much to be regretted that the old German text has not been printed side by side with the translation.

Popielow's narrative begins with his arrival at Santiago de Compostella. He visited the famous Celtic sanctuary of Nuestra Señora de la Barca, "which is shaped like a stone ship, with sail and mast. The mast is higher than three men, and so broad that three men can hardly compass it; notwithstanding, I and my companions were able to move it with one hand, which surely is a great miracle."

After describing the relics he saw at the cathedral of Santiago, he went by Pontevedra and Oporto to Lisbon. He landed after a terrible storm, and he tells us the town is as large as Cologne or London. He found a lodging outside the town at a shoemaker's, and sent for the king's cook, a native of the Low Countries, hoping to obtain an audience of the king, John II. (1435-1495). "My servant told the cook that his Imperial Majesty had sent me with letters to the king, and begged him to find me a lodging." The Court officials turned him out of his shoemaker's quarters, and the king's buffoon, a native of Brabant, took him to a stallium, a house where travellers paid for their board and lodgings. Popielow complained of this to the cook, and was taken by him into rooms which at midnight were invaded by "loose women and thieves, who cried out, 'Who are these robbers who are sleeping in our beds? They would have despatched me,' says Popielow, 'but we pacified them, and they ended by lying on our beds, and playing cards all night with us.'"

On the following morning one of Popielow's servants had a tussle with an old woman while frying fish; he battered her about the head with the frying-pan, broke her nose, and naturally enough was carried off to prison. Popielow tried in vain to get him out, and was unsuccessful until he saw the king, who received him very graciously, making him happy by placing him by his side at table. Portuguese servants were sent to talk to him and find out what he had come to Portugal for. They did not make a good impression on the Pole, for he says "they are rough, ill-mannered, and fools, and consider themselves supremely wise, like Englishmen, who admit no world to be equal to their own; they are, however, more moderate than the English at their meals, and not so cruel, though ill-favoured, ugly, and black. The women are handsome, though more like men than women; they wear their dress so open in front that their breasts can be seen. They are loaded with heavy petticoats, which make them look like a 'martingale,' and are sensual, stupid, and most avaricious." Popielovs describes the well known expedition of the Portuguese to the coast of Africa, and the castles and fortresses he saw there.

He complains of the manner in which he was stared at by the Portuguese, even in the king's presence. He tells us that the king, like a wise man, only eats of five dishes at his table, and drinks water from a well. "Six boys sit under his table, two standing on each side of him to drive away the flies with silk fans. The king never uses a knife when alone, but tears his food with his teeth." The habit of kissing the king's hand seemed to him singular; he says he had never seen it at any other court.

On leaving Lisbon the king gave him two fine Moorish slaves who had just landed from Barbary. The Moors (Moriscos) occupied part of the town of Lisbon. "Their houses are built of clay, and whitewashed; they cover their heads with white woollen handkerchiefs, and when they ride out they put on a large broad-brimmed hat. They are frugal in their habits, and ride splendid horses with short stirrups and gold or silver saddles."

Popielovs sailed from Lisbon, and landed near San Lúcar de Barrameda. Passing by Seville, he went to the province of Granada, and saw King Ferdinand the Catholic laying siege to the town of Setenil. "Eight days after my arrival he received me; I presented my credentials, and he allowed me to accompany him to Seville. I visited the great Cardinal Mendoza, and talked with him on various subjects, especially on that of my two slaves, who had been seized at the Custom House and carried off to prison. They were kept there for three weeks. Verily I hoped to find more rectitude among the Spaniards, but after all my trouble, though my slaves had been baptized, I was obliged to pay three ducats to obtain their release."

He found the cathedral of Seville larger than the one of Cologne, and was present on the 24th of December, 1484, at a procession to commemorate the taking of Seville by the Christians under Ferdinand (el Santo). The king and queen walked in the procession, preceded by the sword which had been used by St. Ferdinand himself in the conquest. It still exists at the cathedral. Popielovs describes it as short, badly made, dirty, and old-fashioned. "I remarked that King Ferdinand was Queen Isabel's vassal, for she walked at his right, and Cardinal Mendoza at his left. Verily the nobles fear the queen more than the king. He does nothing but comply with the queen's orders; indeed, he cannot even, I am told, send off a despatch without her permission. She reads all he writes, and tears up what she does not approve of, even in his presence; and everything which is arranged between the queen and the cardinal must be carried out. They tell me she protects the Jews. I myself have observed that she has more confidence in converted Jews than in the Christians. She allows them to manage her property, and they are her principal councillors."

Popielovs was much stared at in Seville for going to the cathedral in full armour. "They asked me all sorts of absurd questions—indeed, I never met with more ignorant people. If one of them has been in Rome he imagines that he has seen the whole world; the clergy, with rare exceptions, know no Latin." He tells us that Granada was inhabited by 60,000 men, and that 1,000 arquebusers could be drawn from one street alone. For that reason, he says, the town can only be taken by hunger. Granada was conquered in 1492, eight years afterwards. At Cordova he saw the Mosque, "an immense church with five hundred columns and no doors. It was built by Moors or Pagans; more than three hundred shields hang there, and several helmets of Germans, Bohemians, and Poles."

Our traveller continued his journey to Valencia by Jaen and Murcia. The Governor at Valencia gave him a mule with fine gay trappings. He rode along the streets, and was presented to the ladies. "They obliged me to take them into my arms and kiss them. Although verily I have never derived pleasure from kissing women, I could not deprive them of it, for in sooth they were very handsome." It is interesting that we should find mention of the Hispano-Moresque lustrated wares at so early a date. He says: "At Manises, Muel, Ateas, Gerant, and Paterna fine pottery is made, blue and gold coloured, which is exported into all Christian countries." He found the kingdoms of Aragon and Valencia largely inhabited by Moors; the Jews in order to save their lives and fortunes had adopted the Christian faith, but among a hundred there was hardly one who practised with sincerity; they followed their religion in secret, and if found out were burned most miserably.

The second description of Spain is taken from a collection of twenty-seven folio volumes in Latin made in 1600 by Stanislaus Gorski. These volumes had been forgotten until Count Titus Dzialynski edited eight of them at Posen, in 1852-60, with the following title, 'Acta Tomiciana, Epistolae, Legationes, Responsae, Actiones res geste Serenissimi Principis Sigismundi, eius Nominis Primi, Regis Poloniae, &c.'

Among the interesting despatches they contain is the correspondence of Joannes Dantiscus, who was sent as Polish envoy to Spain during the reign of the Emperor Charles V., from 1516 to 1532. Dantiscus appears to have been a man of good parts and an excellent poet. He accompanied his sovereign to the Congress of Vienna. Dr. Liske, who gives none of the original texts, tells us in the abstract which he has made from these volumes, and which is translated into Spanish, that Dantiscus describes in a most lively style Spanish manners of the time, and gives numerous details concerning the emperor's private life. He seems to have known all the celebrities of his time, and a letter exists from Cortés reminding Dantiscus of their feast together at Madrid. Dantiscus also gives curious details of the Inquisition, and mentions meeting Martin Luther, who, he says, was "demoniacum simillimum regi Danie [Christian, King of Denmark] in moribus et aspectu." His account of the battle of Pavia is entertaining, as are likewise the details of the arrival in Madrid of Francis I., the king's illness, and the arrival of the Princess of Alençon. The MS. volumes of these documents, which exist in the Leipzig Library, contain much information of interest about Germany, France, and England.

The third description of Spain is from a diary in German, 'Tagebuch des Erich Lassota von Steblau. Halle, Verlag von G. E. Barthel,' edited by Dr. Reinholt Schottia, 1866. It is impossible to discover from this translation where the original MS. is. Lassota von Steblau came to Spain in 1580, with the German legion under Capt. Kripp; he remained in Spain for four years, and took part in the invasion of Portugal during the reign of Philip II. His diary gives a faithful account of the events which took place during his stay; the descriptions which he gives us of the famous Spanish sanctuaries are graphic and entertaining. The details of the military movements of the foreign soldiers, their rations, and other details will be read with interest by those who occupy themselves with military matters in the sixteenth century.

The fourth narrative is by James Sobieski, who travelled in Spain in 1611. It was first published in Polish in 1833, at Posen, by Count Eduard Raczyński. His description of Spain is not so full of details of social life as that of Popielovs, but it adds one more item to what we know from the accounts of other travellers, is more generally accessible in Spanish than in Polish, and will therefore be acceptable to collectors of early Spanish travel.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

MR. THOMAS NEWBERRY has accomplished a very laborious task now that he has finished The Englishman's Bible (Eyre & Spottiswoode). The editor's object has been to show the reader of the authorized version wherein it is inaccurate or wanting in precision. The book is designed for persons who are ignorant of Hebrew and Greek as well as for others. Attention is called to the defects of the authorized version by means of a number of signs, letters, and notes. It must be said that these are so numerous as to make the text very unsightly and difficult to read. Nor are the signs intelligible without considerable study of the elaborate explanation in the twenty introductory pages. At the same time it must be acknowledged that Mr. Newberry's work must have required extraordinary perseverance.

We have before us a copy of Herr Julius Pelschold's Bibliographia Dantes (Dresden, Schönfeld), one of those minutely laborious compilations to which Dante and Shakespeare alone (unless we may now add Shelley) seem to have the power of urging their devotees. It professes—and we have no doubt that its profession comes near to performance—to give the title and chief particulars of every book, pamphlet, article, or picture in any way relating to Dante that has been published from 1865 to the beginning of the current year. In some cases the connexion with the poet is of the very slightest. Thus a pamphlet on the necessity of a "classico-national" school in Italy gets a place in the list because its first title is 'Dante nel Secolo Decimonono'; while another work, 'On the Syntax and Style of the Predecessors of Dante,' would seem to have little more right to be here than Southey's 'Doctor' in a medical library. The majority, however, really have some bearing upon the study of Dante; and it gives some notion of the extent to which he is studied when we find that the 'Indices suorum et artificum' (of which there are three) contain upwards of 1,000 names. Deducting those whose writings have merely been reprinted in the given period, it may be reckoned that once a week for the last fifteen years some one or other has favoured the world with his views in regard to some point or points in the writings or life of Dante.

We have received the first number of the Revue de l'Ecole d'Alger, which, according to the prospectus, will contain articles only by the professors of the newly created school of higher studies in Algiers. It is to be hoped that the following fasciculi will contain sounder articles than that on the 'Ablative D in Latin' and more original ones than that on the 'Imitatio Christi.' We should have imagined that there were monthly and quarterly magazines enough in French on all branches of learning in which important articles could find room. If every school is to have its own periodical the result can only be that such papers will have a very short existence. It is really impossible for any specialist to read all the numerous reviews and programmes in order to find out amongst the hundreds of them the few which contain anything of importance.

Messrs. WHITTAKER & Co. send us A Dictionary of Daily Blunders, containing a collection of mistakes often made in speaking and writing. It is not possible to speak with certainty of the merits of a dictionary until one has constantly used it, but, so far as we can discover from a brief perusal of the handy little volume, the author's work has been very well done.

THE latest addition to the "Familiar Quotations" series of books published by Messrs.

Whittaker & Co. is a reprint of Rejected Addresses.

We have on our table Memoir of the Rev. Charles A. Chastel de Boiville, by T. Constable (Nisbet).—A Pleasure Trip to India, by M. E. Corbet (Allen & Co.).—Who are the Scotch? by J. Bonwick (Bogus).—Introductory History of England, by W. M. Lupton (Longmans).—Shakespeare's Hamlet, edited by J. M. D. Meiklejohn (Chambers).—The Practical Working of the Gelatine Emulsion Process, by Capt. W. de W. Abney (Piper & Carter).—Stock-keeping for Amateurs, by W. H. Ablett ('The Bazaar' Office).—Cucumber Culture for Amateurs, by W. J. May ('The Bazaar' Office).—Bulbs and Bulb Culture, Part III., by D. T. Fish ('The Bazaar' Office).—The Sportsman's Handbook to Practical Collecting and Preserving Traps, by R. Ward (The Author, 166, Piccadilly).—Practical Boat Sailing for Amateurs, by G. C. Davies ('The Bazaar' Office).—Observations on the Construction of Healthy Dwellings, by D. Galton (Oxford, Clarendon Press).—Report of the Transactions of the Sanitary Institute of Great Britain, Vol. I., by H. C. Burdett and F. de Chamont (Marsh & Co.).—Report upon Certain Epidemic Outbreaks of Enteric Fever in April, 1880 (Glasgow, Anderson).—Counsels to a Young Wife, by G. Black (Ward & Lock).—The Irish Crisis: being a Narrative of the Measures for the Relief of the Great Irish Famine of 1846-7, by Sir C. Trevelyan, Bart., K.C.B. (Macmillan).—The English Visitor's Guide to the Brussels Exhibition, 1880, by R. H. Mason (Stanford).—Guide to Kelso (Kelso, Ruthford).—Kings of Kdamera, by J. C. Dutt (Trübner).—Ally Sloper's Sentimental Journey in Search of Aldgate Pump, by C. H. Ross ('Judy' Office).—Loss in Cyprus, by M. Chorlton (Moxon & Co.).—The Rescue of Child-Soul, by Rev. W. F. Crafts (Sunday School Union).—The Concealed Sparrow of Newmuck, by A. P. F. (Remington).—The Waif, by F. Coppée (Kerby & Eudean).—Miscellaneous Poems, by C. K. T. (Moxon & Co.).—The Romance of the Youth of Arthur, by J. S. Stuart-Glenne (Moxon & Co.).—An Eastern Afterglow, by W. S. Wood (Bell).—Malakakilla and the North Pacific Mission, by E. S. (Seelye).—Some Hints for School Life, by the Rev. J. Percival (Livingstone).—Encyclopædie der Naturwissenschaften, Parts X. and XI., by Prof. Dr. G. Jäger (Breslau, Trowend).—The Lusiad of Camoens, by R. F. Duff (Lisbon, Lewtas).—Etudes Politiques de l'Histoire Romaine, Vol. I., by P. Devaux (Trübner). Among New Editions we have The Rhine, by K. Baedeker (Dulan).—Practical General Continental Guide (Trübner).—Practical Guide for France, Belgium, Holland, and the Rhine (Trübner).—The Parliamentary Poll-Book of all Elections, by F. H. M'Calmont (Stanford).—Tales and Legends in Verse, by A. Buckler (Griffith & Farran).—A Familiar History of Birds, by the late E. Stanley (Longmans).—and The Bee-Keeper's Manual, by the late H. Taylor (Groombridge). Also the following Pamphlets: The Profession of an "Architect" (Hodder & Stoughton).—On the Educational Treatment of Incurably Deaf Children, by W. B. Dalby (Churchill).—The Popular Dod, Part II., edited by Tommy (Bennett Brothers).—Foreign and Home Trade Compared, by J. Wood (Wilson).—The Regeneration of Roumania, by K. Wolaki (Kerby & Eudean).—and National Industrial Insurance and Employer's Liability, by G. Howell (P. S. King).

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

THEOLOGY.

- Almg's (Rev. J.) Manual of Universal Church History, Vol. 3, 8vo, 7/6 cl.
 Lins's (Rev. J. J.) Sermons preached at St. David's College, Lampeter, 8vo, 4/1 cl.
 Thornely's (T.) Ethical and Social Aspects of Habitual Communion to a Priest, 8vo, 4/6 cl.
 Meglow's (M. M.) History of Procedure in England from the Norman Conquest to the Norman Period, 1086-1204, 8vo, 1/4 cl.

Fine Art.

Green's (Rev. S. G.) Pictures from the German Fatherland, drawn with Pen and Pencil, Imp. 8vo, 8/1 cl.

Poetry and the Drama.

Kennell, a Dramatic Poem, by Two Brothers, 12mo, 8/1 cl.
 Paton's (A. F.) The Mammot Shakespeare, Vol. 1, 8vo, 1/4 cl.

Musical.

Watson's (J. L.) Manual of Music, 8vo, 2/1 cl.

Geography and Travel.

Bruce's (Mrs.) Voyage in the Sunbeam, adapted for School and Class Reading, 12mo, 2/1 cl.
 Northcote's Guide to, by an Old Inhabitant, 8vo, 4/1 cl.
 Knight's (E. F.) Album, a Narrative of Recent Travel, 1/4 cl.

Philology.

Aristophanes, The Acharnians, with Introduction, 8vo, by W. W. Merry, 12mo, 2/1 cl.
 Collins's (T.) Unseen Papers in Latin Prose and Verse, with Examination Questions, 12mo, 2/6 cl.
 Macmillan's Progressive French Reader, 1, First Year, by G. E. Pannick, 12mo, 2/6 cl.
 Moir's (J.) Continuous Latin Prose Exercises, 12mo, 3/6 cl.
 Shakespeare's King Richard the Third, edited by W. A. Wright, 12mo, 3/6 cl.

Science.

Angell's (H.) Practical Plane Geometry and Projection for Science Classes, 8vo, Vol. 1, Text, 8vo, 3/6; Vol. 2, Plates, 8vo, 5/1 cl.
 Gannon's (A.) Text-Book of the Physiological Chemistry of the Animal Body, Vol. 1, 8vo, 1/4 cl.
 Lawson's (W.) Outline of Physiology, complete, 2/6 cl.

General Literature.

Albarg's (A.) Published Stories from the Zoo, 8vo, 2/6 cl.
 Bourne's (C. E.) The Fisherman of Elvies, or Djabah's Voyage to Kithan, 8vo, 2/6 cl.
 Brown's (J.) Leaves from a Hunting Journal, fol. 7/1 bds.
 Dunning's (W. T.) Ordnance Sketch Book, being Traits of Old Orkney Life, 8vo, 3/6 cl.
 Farrer's (J. A.) Crimes and Punishments, 8vo, 4/1 cl.
 France's (M. J.) Beatrice Melton's Discipline, 12mo, 4/1 cl.
 Gibbon's (C.) Queen of the Meadow, 8vo, 3/6 cl.
 Henderson's (W.) My Life as an Angler, cheaper ed., 7/6 cl.
 Meade's (L. T.) A Dweller in Tenise, 8vo, 2/6 cl.
 Ouphant's (Mrs.) He that Will Not when He May, 3 vols, 3/6 cl.
 Saintsbury's (G.) Primer of French Literature, 8vo, 2/1 cl.
 Smith's (A. B.) St. Martin's Summer, 3 vols, 8vo, 3/6 cl.
 Stray Leaves from the Road-side, Illustrating Country Life, by J. T. B., 12mo, 3/6 cl.
 Welton's (J. A.) The Obelisk and Freemasonry according to the Discoveries of Holsen and Gorrings, 8vo, 10/6 cl.

FOREIGN.

Theology.

Krichenbauer (A.) Theologie u. Astronomie, 12mo.
 Kasse's (A.) Die Klagen der J. Jerusalem u. der Prediger d. Salomon, Text and Notes, 8vo.

Law.

Esmarch (E.) Römische Rechtsgeschichte, Part 2 and 3, 2. Aufl. (J. F. v.), Die Geschichte der Quellen u. Literatur d. römischen Rechts, Vol. 2, Part 2, 36m, 20.

Fine Art.

Krumpholtz (K.) Das Vegetabile Ornament, Part 4, 10m.
Monuments de l'Art Antique, edited by Olivier Rayet, Part 1, 20r.

Philology.

Minor (J. U.) Beuer (A.): Studien zur Goethe-Philologie, 8m.
 Ugonowski (E.) Studien auf dem Gebiete der Rethorischen Sprache, 8m, 50.
 Palander (E. W.) Uebentext der neueren Rethorischen Literatur, 8m.

Science.

Worplinsky (J.) Lehrbuch der Differential- u. Integral-Rechnung, 8m.

NEWCASTLE FREE LIBRARY.

Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Sept. 12, 1880.

AFTER an intestine contest of some severity, which has lasted not less than ten years, the burgesses of this ancient town to-day witnessed with every manifestation of joy the opening of a free public library. The difficulties which the Library Committee had to overcome before they accomplished their purpose were of no ordinary kind. The first rampart of opposition that had to be forced was the great unwillingness of a large mass of ratepayers to be taxed for the purpose of providing the community with such frivolous things as books. The second difficulty to be surmounted was the acquisition of a site for the new edifice that would have to be raised to contain the library when formed. This obstacle was overcome after some negotiation in a manner well worthy of notice and imitation, by the voluntary immolation of an institution that had done good work in its day, but was now ready for nirvana. The Mechanics' Institution, which performed this act of self-sacrifice, was founded in 1825, and upon its committee and among its lecturers were men who, like Stephenson and Armstrong, attained to world-wide fame, and others, like Doubleday and Mackenzie, who acquired renown perhaps more brilliant if more circumscribed. The peaceful arrangement thus made involved the acceptance by the Corporation of the responsibility of continuing certain art and science classes in connexion with the Library. So much the better, and from many of the speeches I heard to-day it may be gathered that an art gallery and a museum will follow. For this purpose, however, more space will be necessary, and for the enlargement of the site of the new building near the Mechanics' Institute it was needful to make another sacrifice, most grievous to all antiquarian souls in this home of antiquaries. The Carliol Tower, otherwise known as the Weavers' Tower, part of the old fortifications of the town, must come down, and down it came mid the tears and execrations of many a Dryadust. Not much harm was really done, for it was found to consist of nothing but rubble and to have been built upon the unblest foundation of sand. Moreover, there remain in other parts of the town more ancient and interesting relics of these defences raised against the warlike Scots.

The ceremonies of to-day began by the opening of a well-arranged lending library in the old Mechanics' Institution. Dr. Newton, Chairman of the Library Committee, assisted by Mr. Cowen, the eloquent M.P. for Newcastle, by the young Earl of Durham, and others, gave great effect to this proceeding. Then followed the laying of the foundation stone by Mrs. Newton on the site of "Carliol," in view of some thousand spectators. So austere are the demands of civic freedom in this town that the ceremony was often interrupted by the passage of vans and omnibuses along the street occupied by the crowd. A luncheon at the Assembly Rooms was more or less enlivened by speeches from Mr. Cowen and other local notabilities. The French and American ambassadors, who were expected, did not attend. The evening meeting at the Town Hall consisted of at least two thousand people, who were delighted with a finished oration by Prof. Leone Levi, and by several happy touches of Mr. Cowen, who was in the chair, and whose popularity here was testified to by the almost frantic applause whenever he spoke or was spoken of. From all I hear he fully deserves the enthusiastic love of his fellow townsmen. Mr. Haggerston, the librarian of the new library, has issued an excellent catalogue of the lending library, indexing not only the titles of books on the shelves, but in many useful ways the contents of the books, reviews, and magazines. I cordially echo the congratulations offered on the signal success of this day of inauguration and the wishes pronounced by acclamation for the uninterrupted success of the new library.

R. H.

JEREMIAH RICH'S SHORTHAND.

Stretford, near Manchester, Sept. 7, 1880.

THE explanation of the similarity of Rich's shorthand characters and those of Cartwright may arise from the circumstance that both persons arranged the scheme in common, and that upon the death of the latter, at a time when it was customary for nearly every person to take notes of sermons, Rich carried on the work of teaching it. But the fact was that the poverty of invention amongst the shorthand authors between the time of Willis and Mason gave a striking uniformity in the several alphabets. The system, e.g., used by Peppys has always been considered as the method of Rich; whereas it was, as I have pointed out in a paper on the cipher of Peppys's diary, the modification called Shelton's. Rich's alphabet, however, may be claimed for a writer earlier than Cartwright. Some years ago Mr. Thompson Cooper, F.S.A., the author of 'Parliamentary Shorthand' (1858), which was based in a great measure on the lines of Rich, called my attention to a system which, in 1632, went under the name of Arkuden's. This "inventor" was a graduate of Cambridge. His alphabet varies very slightly from that of Rich; it is said to be "approved of in Cambridge to be the best yet invented," and the method was "not yet printed or common." My shorthand collections contain notes of Cartwright's very rare 'Semigraphy,' dated 1642, taken from the British Museum copy (1043, b. 14), where it is certainly stated, in the words of a pretty common formula, that the work was invented and composed for the benefit of others by William Cartwright, and that it "is now set forth by his nephew, Jeremiah Rich, immediate next to the author deceased." Rich's method had an extraordinary career, and came under the commendation of John Locke. It had many titles. 'Semigraphy,' or 'Art's Variety,' appeared in 1664, when "the author and teacher" was dwelling in Mill Lane, St. Olave's, Southwark. He subsequently called it 'The World's Rarity,' and gave his residence in Swithin's Lane. There was an edition of this issue before 1680, when it was advertised in Winstanley's 'England's Worthies.' His tiny volume of the Psalms in metre was published in 1688, and was sold at his house, the Golden Ball, in Swithin Lane, near London Stone. The companion volume, the New Testament, appeared about the same time, with the names of many of his patrons. In 1669 his system appeared as 'The Pen's Dexterity.' The method was also issued on a sheet. About 1700 an edition was published by John Marshall, dedicated to the Hon. Lady Mary Rich, and in the same year T. Milbourn offered a rival edition, called 'The Pen's Dexterity Completed, or Mr. Rich's shorthand now perfectly taught, which in his lifetime was never done by anything made public in print, because it would have hindered his practice.' Other editions were: sixth, 1713; another, 1716; fifteenth edition, 1750; eighteenth, 1764; nineteenth, 1775. Rich's editors, &c., were Addy, Botley, Swinger, Doddridge, &c. Most of these details are from copies in my own hands.

JOHN E. BAILEY.

NOTES FROM NAPLES.

Sept. 4, 1880.

THE life and works of Edward Fusco, collected by his widow, are now in the press, under the title of 'Della Vita e delle Opere di Edoardo Fusco.' Professor of Anthropology in the University of Naples, as also of Pedagogia, his work entitled 'Il Progresso Educativo' gained him much praise not only in Italy, but in other countries. At the age of twenty-four he left Naples as a volunteer to engage in the struggle for the liberty of his native land. On the downfall of the Bourbons he returned in 1860. During his exile he visited Corfu, Athens, and Constantinople, finally establishing himself in London. Whilst in England he occupied himself as a tutor, and in that capacity was engaged at Eton and at King's College, for the pupils of which he wrote two courses of literature in English, one of which was published, after his death in 1876, in Macmillan's Magazine, accompanied by a brief notice of his life by Mr. Matthew Arnold. In London he enjoyed the friendship of Panzani, Carlo Pepoli, and Sir James Lacaita, whilst he was in correspondence with the most illustrious Liberals of Italy. On his return to Naples he edited the Nazione, was appointed Inspector of Public Works, and finally Inspector-General of Public Instruction, an office for which he was eminently qualified. Together with Settembrini and Imbriani he did good work, which was, unfortunately for his country, interrupted by his premature death. His widow, with affectionate reverence for his memory, now gives his works to the public; but that on which his reputation is most firmly established is his course of lectures on anthropology and pedagogia, delivered in the University of Naples between 1866 and 1873.

H. W.

THE INTERNATIONAL LITERARY CONGRESS.

Lisbon, Sept. 10, 1880.

PAPERS will be read, according to the published accounts, at the sessions of the Literary Congress as follows:—An historical epitome of the influence exercised by the various foreign literatures, ancient and modern, upon the different epochs of national literatures.—Translation from a literary point of view; its fidelity; are there translations correctly and conscientiously executed of the great foreign works?—The existing relations between translators and publishers, and the authors of foreign books; what is the custom with respect to requests for authorization and remuneration? state of opinion among the public, the press, and the Parliament; statistics and biography.—Study of the legislation of various nations with regard to the right of translation, and also with regard to diplomatic conventions.

The Secretary-General, M. Jules Lermine, who is shortly expected here, will distribute letters of invitation on his arrival. M. L.

MISS CHESAR.

Mrs. JANE AGNES CHESAR, who died at Brussels on the 3rd inst., rendered, in her comparatively short life of about forty-five years, too much good service to educational reform for her name to be at once forgotten. A native of Aberdeen, where she made excellent use of the schooling there provided for girls as well as boys, she came to London at the age of sixteen, and at once found congenial occupation as a teacher on the staff of the Home and Colonial School Society in the Gray's Inn Road. Her connexion with that useful institution lasted for nearly fifteen years, and was only amicably severed when she found herself called upon to devote all her time to more important educational work outside. Miss Chesar was almost the first to make teaching a good, dignified, and fairly well-paid profession for women. During several years she conducted classes in special subjects at the North London Collegiate School for Girls, which, under Miss Buss's management, has assumed the proportions of a great public school, and at other large ladies' schools in which really good teaching was required. She also gave private lessons, sometimes, we believe, to youths as well as to girls, and her skill in teaching, and the repute it brought her, enabled her to obtain for her work as good remuneration as she would have received had she been a man, and thus to set an example by which other duly qualified women teachers have profited.

In the work of the London School Board Miss Chesar took a lively interest from the first. In 1873, on Mrs. Garrett Anderson's retirement from her seat on the Board as one of the members for Marylebone, she was elected to succeed her. In that capacity Miss Chesar laboured with such zeal and intelligence as won the admiration of all her colleagues and disarmed the opposition of those critics who considered the office too "public" a one for a woman to hold with propriety. The three years during which she was on the School Board were especially the years in which the details of Board school management had to be decided upon; and, while making girls' schools and the governesses her special charge, her long experience and sturdy common sense enabled her to be of great service in directing all the practical affairs of the Board. She applied herself so energetically to these affairs, indeed, that the strain, added to the burden of her own profession as a teacher, was more than she could bear. Her health broke down, and was only partly restored by a winter passed in Algiers. Her doctors, therefore, forbade her seeking re-election in 1876, although her popularity with her constituents was such that there would have been little need for her to undertake the severest labours of a contest.

Since 1876 Miss Chesar had lived in partial retirement, though still taking a keen interest in all matters concerning education and the social position of women. She was for many years a contributor to the Queen. As one illustration of the intelligent interest always taken by her in women's welfare, it may be mentioned that she started a swimming club for female teachers in London. She also founded a ladies' debating society, in which some of the younger ladies, who have since become prominent as School Board members and in other ways, took their first lessons in oratory. The promoters of the Somerville Club for Women, which is now in process of formation, were expecting much from her promised participation in their bold enterprise when the painful news of her death arrived. She had gone to Brussels to take part in the Educational Congress lately held there, but was prostrated by a recurrence of the ailments that had long afflicted her. Her death, it is considered, was hastened by the shock she received on hearing of the sudden death of her friend Prof. Hodgson a few days before.

Literary Gossip.

WE hear that a Civil List pension of 80*l.* a year has been granted to the sister of Keats, Madame Llanos of Madrid, upon the advice of Mr. Gladstone and at the suggestion of Lord Houghton. The biographer of Keats had obtained from Lord Beaconsfield a donation from the Royal Bounty Fund for Madame Llanos, but had very properly refused to rest content with anything less than the annual pension which his efforts have now secured.

THE statement which has been made to the effect that Mr. Tennyson would write for, and Mr. Bentley publish, Miss Helen Mathers's (Mrs. Henry A. Reeves's) proposed new magazine was unauthorized, and is incorrect.

THE Fortnightly Review for October will contain a critical article by Mr. Swinburne, called 'A Century of English Poetry,' and the Gentleman's Magazine will contain an article by him upon a discovery in connexion with Dryden.

'THE CRY OF THE CLERK,' which appeared in last week's Punch, and which has been prominently noticed by the press, is written by Mr. Clement Scott. It is in the same vein as Hood's 'Song of the Shirt,' which appeared originally in the same periodical.

MESSRS. J. & R. MAXWELL have in the press a new novel by Miss Braddon, entitled 'Just as I Am.' It may be expected at the end of the present month, when will also appear 'The Scarsdale Pearage,' by Mr. F. Talbot.

A NEW novel, illustrative of modern English life and manners, by Mr. George MacDonald, entitled 'Mary Marston,' is to be published in the Manchester Weekly Times. The first instalment will appear on October 2nd.

WE understand that Mr. R. L. Stevenson will contribute a comic poem in the Scottish vernacular to an early number of Fraser.

AN Edinburgh Correspondent writes:—

"It may be of interest to your readers to learn that the Directors of the Edinburgh Philosophical Institution have recently given orders for 'Ouida's' novels to be withdrawn from circulation." A large number of her novels lie on the shelves. No such order has been given regarding the magazines in which some of her short stories first appeared.

WE understand that of The Boys' Newspaper, published by Messrs. Cassell, Petter, Galpin & Co. on Wednesday, one hundred thousand copies were required on the day of publication.

Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL have in hand a work on South America by Mr. A. Gallego, who has lately returned from a complete tour of that continent. It treats especially of Peru and Chili, the region of the River Plate, Paraguay, and Brazil, and contains descriptions of the railway route across the Andes, and of the inland districts of the Argentine Republic and of Chili.

A new volume by Mr. R. W. Dale, of Birmingham, 'The Evangelical Revival and other Sermons,' will be published immediately by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.

Messrs. VIRTUE & Co. announce a new illustrated work, called 'Picturesque Palestine, Sinai, and Egypt.' It is to be edited by Col. Wilson, Consul-General in Asia Minor, and formerly Engineer to the Palestine Exploration Society. Canon Tristram, Prof. Palmer, Miss M. E. Rogers, Col. Warren, Lieut. Conder, Dr. Scharf, Dr. Jessop, Mr. E. T. Rogers, the Rev. F. W. Holland, and Col. Wilson are the chief contributors. The work will be issued in forty parts.

Messrs. TRÜBNER & Co. write, under date of September 15th, as follows:—

"A librarian has called our attention to a statement made by the reviewer of Hall's 'Second Arctic Expedition,' viz., that it was issued 'for free distribution to the great libraries,' &c. We have in our possession a letter from Prof. Nourie, in which he states that not a copy was so disposed of, although the 'First Expedition' was pretty freely distributed."

MR. WILLIAM PATERSON, of Edinburgh, has in preparation, to be published by subscription at twelve guineas, an important heraldic work, entitled 'Scottish Arms: a Collection of Armorial Bearings, A.D. 1370-1678, Reproduced in Fac-simile from Contemporary Manuscripts.' Mr. R. R. Stodart, Lyon Clerk Depute, will contribute copious genealogical and heraldic notices.

DR. VAUGHAN, the Dean of Llandaff, has been appointed one of the vice-presidents of the Gymnadorion Society, in the room of the late Mr. Sergeant Parry.

DR. CHARLES MACKAY is about to issue a work on 'Obscure Words and Phrases in Shakspeare and the Elizabethan Dramatists,' which he undertakes to explain for the first time from the Celtic sources of the English language and the vernacular idioms of the English in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. "The Celtic," says Dr. Mackay, in a brief exposition of the subject and object of his publication, "though Dr. Samuel Johnson and others, who spoke without knowledge, were of a contrary opinion, was not wholly superseded by the Saxon, erroneously called the Anglo-Saxon, but remained to a very considerable extent in use among the labouring classes and the unlettered population until long after the time of Shakspeare, and exists to the present day in many slang words and the language of the vulgar." Convinced that there exists "a Saxon prejudice against the Celtic languages and their dialects," the author has resolved, in this instance, to be his own publisher, and "to issue his work directly to the admirers of the poet and to such students of philology as are ready to receive the truth whenever it may come, and however much it may run counter to preconceived opinions."

A LARGE folio volume, containing the original drawings by John Carter for the plates of his well-known work entitled 'The Ancient Architecture of England,' published in 1795, has lately been purchased for the Manuscript Department of the British Museum.

THE Earl of Northbrook, the new President of the Birmingham and Midland Institute, will deliver his inaugural address in the Town Hall on the 29th of October. The first list of lectures is a very attractive one. Mrs. Mark Pattison, wife of the Rector of Lincoln College, will lecture upon 'The Relations between Art and State created in France by the Policy of Richelieu'; the Rev. J. G. Wood will discourse upon natural history; Mr. Edmund Gosse on English poetry; and Prof. Knight on Spinoza; the rest of the course being occupied by interesting scientific subjects.

THE forthcoming number of the Journal of the British Archaeological Association will contain among others the following articles: 'Charters relating to the Government of Great Yarmouth,' by C. G. Teniswood; 'The Ancient Coins of Norwich,' by H. W. Henfrey; 'Antiquarian Losses in Coventry during a Century and a Half,' by W. G. Fretton, F.S.A.; and 'Roman Inscribed Stones at Rockwood, near Llandaff,' by the Rev. Prebendary H. M. Scarth.

A new work, entitled 'The Consolations of the Christian Seasons,' by the Rev. George Edward Jelf, M.A., Canon Residentiary of Rochester, will shortly be published by Mr. Walter Smith. Canon Jelf is the author of 'Secret Trials of the Christian Life.'

THE Philobiblion, an American bibliographical and literary journal, which ceased to appear seventeen years ago, is to be resuscitated. The first number of the new series will be published early in October. Messrs. Trübner & Co. will be the London publishers. The same firm send us an announcement of a new bi-monthly magazine, called Education, which will be published at Boston, U.S.

M. PAUL MEYER, Professor in the Collège de France, Paris, is paying visits to our great libraries in order to finish the extracts from MSS. for his book on the Alexander legend in the Romance literature.

MM. E. PLOX & Cie. announce a great variety of almanacs for 1881, to be ready on the 20th inst. at the Dépôt Central des Almanachs in Paris.

SCIENCE

Medical Education and Practice in all Parts of the World. By Herbert Junius Hardwicke, M.D. (Churchill.)

THIS work is a valuable manual, of interest not only to medical men, but also to the literary public, who evince at the present day so much enthusiasm in studying the intellectual condition of foreign nations, chiefly, no doubt, from magazine articles. Medical legislation is, as experience amply proves, one of the latest developments of civilization. Still, the association of medicine with learning is so intimate that the healing art is generally taken in hand at universities, even in many imperfectly civilized nations. Although medical education is often in such cases very inefficient, it has gained a local habitation whence it may develop and improve if the nation itself improves. Let us, for instance, glean from Dr. Hardwicke's book facts as to the condition of medicine in some of the Spanish-American republics. In Honduras and Nicaragua no university exists. Guatemala and San Salvador can each boast of such an institution. The natives of all these countries, so pleasant to live out of, are characterized by "indolence, gross immorality, and an utter absence of all principle." Let circumstances make these four republics prosperous, let their inhabitants take to mending fractures of the Decalogue, then it is clear that Guatemala and San Salvador will still remain relatively superior to Honduras and Nicaragua, where universities will have to be formed. In the two former countries the colleges are already in existence, and a better state of public opinion will make their improvement a labour of love.

In many of the Spanish-American republics there is perfect free trade in medicine, and the enterprising young English doctor may settle in any village under the shade of Chimborazo without having to pass an examination in Spanish; but in Ecuador "it is no uncommon occurrence for a doctor and his patient to be found engaged in a free fight, resulting from the patient's refusal to pay the doctor's bill." Turning from Quito in disgust, the young doctor may make a fortune in the Argentine Republic very quickly, as the rich citizens "invariably employ the latest arrival from a European, and especially a British or French, school"; he will, however, run a great risk of being plucked by the university dons, and thus prevented from practising on other Dons, as the former are jealous of the British "on account of the success usually attending their practice."

The native medical faculties among the older Asiatic nationalities teach various systems of uninteresting rubbish, described at considerable length by Dr. Hardwicke, but the British student would hardly care to change even the bastard Greek and Latin terms of his own school for the long, monotonous Sanscrit technicalities of Vedic medicine. The Chinese system is as grave nonsense as some part of Gulliver's travels; the Burmese doctrines are positively jocular. They teach that sickness occurring on Sunday is caused by the "earth dât," or element of our constitution, being in excess; on Monday it is another "dât" that is at fault, and so on. A certain type of modern antiquary must feel delight in detecting a Burmese origin for the inhabitants of the British Isles, through the popular saying a few years back, "Never eat tripe on a Friday"; and the favourite "Twas on a Monday morning" of old North-country songs must, after all this, associate itself in the minds of many with some mysterious anthropological relation between the Young Pretender and King Theebaw. We must not, however, laugh at the Orientals, for when they turn to Western theories and practice they pass their examinations with great credit, and Drs. Chunder Roy, Takaki, and others have put to shame many a British student at Hunter's fane in Lincoln's Inn Fields within the last ten years.

Let us turn to civilized countries where medical teachers keep step with "the march of intellect." In England, though free trade in medicine does not exist, there is free trade in medical schools so far as those already in existence are concerned, although a new school can only be started with difficulty. The competition among London hospitals is probably productive of more good than harm. An average young Englishman can pick up an indefinite amount of knowledge in any of them. The multiplicity of universities and licensing boards is the greatest evil in British and Irish medicine. In all the chief nations of the Continent degrees and licences are uniform, and even where two state boards exist the licence is granted on similar terms. In this country

"there are nineteen different licensing bodies, each granting several qualifications, the requirements for which are not in two cases alike, and which, together, make the number of diplomas for legal practice amount to fifty-five; so that there may be fifty-five medical practitioners in one town, not two of whom are similarly qualified."

Hence when we feel ill in a strange town and send for the doctor, we cannot tell without a directory whether he cures the sick by right of a degree from one of our old universities, where "good form" is, most rightly, held as precious as learning; or from our metropolitan faculty, where the degree implies sheer hard work; or from the northern colleges, where superintendence of the undergraduate and his direct clinical teaching is carried on with great zeal. If the strange medical man has a diploma, he has as much right to amputate a limb, on the strength of a licence which involves no examination in surgery, as if he held the fellowship of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, which requires, after six years' work, a thorough practical and scientific knowledge of surgery. They order these matters better in France and Germany. Still, the evil is not so great as it seems; the highest diploma is no talisman, and common sense, skill, and kindness are not incompatible with a poor degree. Moreover, any doctor worth consulting will be found to possess one or two well-known qualifications, which it is the "correct thing" for him to obtain, and which imply that he has really studied his profession. As for the "conjoint scheme," that is a thing of the future.

Space forbids us to enter into details concerning European schools. We have still much to learn from Paris, Berlin, and Vienna, yet it is undeniable that the general social and intellectual position of the medical profession is as high in these islands as abroad, where technical education is in many respects better. It is by the young doctor, who finds the profession overstocked in his own country, that Dr. Hardwicke's manual will be found particularly valuable. It will save him trouble in the choice of an adopted country, and afford him information which deans of foreign faculties may have good reasons to withhold when he writes to them for particulars. To use an old form of expression, if one Englishman makes a fortune in the south of France, or is saved from getting shot by a patient in Bolivia, through the perusal of this manual, Dr. Hardwicke will not have written in vain.

The Science of Voice Production and Voice Preservation: for the Use of Speakers and Singers. By Gordon Holmes. (Chatto & Windus.)

The Mechanism of the Human Voice. By Emil Behnke, Lecturer on Vocal Physiology at the Tonic Sol-fa College. (Curwen & Sons.)

DR. HOLMES'S manual is an abridgment of his interesting 'Vocal Physiology and Hygiene,' recently reviewed in our columns. The latter work was professedly intended for the musical rather than the medical public, but it included chapters on the history of vocal culture and on acoustic questions omitted in this handbook. Here we find a little about the anatomy of the larynx, a great deal on the physiology of the vocal organs, and still more on the hygiene of the voice—a judicious distribution of information, since teaching anatomy to an unscientific pupil is a well-nigh hopeless task. Vocal physiology is a subject in which the accomplished musician is at least as well versed as the physician, whilst a singer's health cannot fail to interest a singer. We regret that the short sketch of musical art among the ancients has been entirely omitted in this abridgment. The recommendation to wear flannel is most judicious, for, as Dr. Holmes most wisely observes, the singer is more exposed to changes from the atmosphere of hot rooms to the cold air out of doors than the average citizen; and dramatic vocalists, who are obliged to wear light or heavy clothing on the stage, irrespective of the exigencies of temperature, are particularly liable to general or local effects of chill in consequence. Speakers are strongly dissuaded from the habit of sipping cold water during a speech, and warm milk or mucilaginous drinks are recommended in their place. The amusing quotation from an Austrian journal on the different drinks which have been popular among great singers shows how purely empirical are the principles of vocal hygiene as understood by vocalists. We shudder when we find that one lady takes beer, coffee, and a bottle of champagne between the different acts of an opera; and when we hear of quantities of bonbons, mead, porter, sugared water, or Bordeaux mixed with champagne, consumed for the benefit of a professional voice, we feel uncertain whether to wonder more how good voices are ever preserved beyond a season, or how fair operatic performers can retain their complexions and their other charms for so many years. We trust that the ladies who take such nasty mixtures as are above described will give them up and study Dr. Holmes's manual, else, justifying a most plausible theory of that author, they may meet an untimely end, like charming, porter-drinking Mahبران.

Herr Behnke has followed the example of Dr. Holmes and Mr. Lennox Browne in discussing simultaneously and in a popular manner the biological and the artistic aspect of the subject forming the title of his work, but, unlike the two latter writers, he does not enter into medical details, and his little manual is interesting, compared with those previously published, as being written by a musician and not by a medical man. Hence we are not surprised to find purely musical questions discussed here with great ability. The author has not been very successful in popularizing the hard names of the structures found in the larynx. Any vocalist really interested in the scientific study of the organ of voice will readily learn such names as larynx, thyroid, cricoid, and arytenoid cartilage, &c., and the terms "voice-box," "shield," and "ring" may be the cause to him of great confusion if he refers to other works or to diagrams where the former and more scientific synonyms are employed. "Back ring-pyramidal muscle" is almost as hard a mouthful as "cricothyroid muscle"; but we admit that Herr Behnke has had to face a difficult question never yet satisfactorily arranged by any authority. The essential object of his manual is well maintained. He deduces the somewhat mysterious term "register" as "a series of tones which are produced by the same mechanism." There are three registers in the human voice: the "thick," expressing the vibration of the entire thickness of the vocal ligaments (i.e., cords) during the lowest series of tones, secondly, the "thin," the vocal ligaments vibrating only with their thin inner edges; and lastly the "small register," where a portion of the glottis is firmly closed, only a small part of the vocal ligaments vibrating, which occurs during the highest series of tones. Mr. Curwen was the first to employ these terms. Herr Behnke believes that a register may be carried down without fatigue to the voice, though its volume then becomes weak compared with the corresponding lower register. On the other hand, he strongly condemns the extending upwards of a lower register, since this must involve visible straining and fatigue of the organ of voice. The straining of the vocal ligaments is "visible," of course, by means of the laryngoscope. The practice of extending voices upwards and cultivating "made tones" is most disastrous to the voice, though popular among teachers ignorant of the subject with which Herr Behnke endeavours to make them conversant.

ORIENTAL MAPS

MR. STANFORD has sent us two new maps of the seat of war in Afghanistan. The first of these includes the whole of Afghanistan to the south of Herat and Kabul, with an inset map of the country around Kandahar on an enlarged scale. It is in a large measure based upon recent surveys, and will prove most useful for following the operations of the British forces. The other map, on a smaller scale, is a transfer from the well-known Library Map of Asia, and extends from the Indian Ocean in the south to Russian Turkistan in the north. The routes followed by the British forces have been inserted upon it, and an enlarged map of the country between Girsikh and Chaman is added.

We have received from Herr L. Ravenstein his Map of the West Tyrol and Engadine Alps (Frankfurt-on-Main, Ravenstein), containing the Bernina, Silvretta, Ortler, and Oetzthal groups, with the most westerly portion of the Dolomites; or, to put it rather more precisely, the rectangle having Innsbruck, Predazzo, Chiavenna, and Feldkirch for the chief places in the neighbourhood of its corners. The map is on a scale of 1:250,000, or almost exactly 3·83 miles to the inch, and thus slightly larger than that of the Alpine Club map of Switzerland. In point of clearness and accuracy it appears to us quite equal to this latter. The "contour" system has been adopted, the lines being drawn at every 250 metres of additional height; but a very useful modification has been introduced by the tinting, in degrees of tone corresponding to the height, of the spaces between each pair of lines. The elevation, actual and comparative, of the ground is thus seen at a glance, while the obscurity resulting from the ordinary method of shading by lines (as employed, for instance, in the otherwise excellent Austrian Ordnance Map) is avoided. We notice, as a trifling error, that the route marked from Trafoi to the summit of the Ortler is the old one (more direct, but said to be dangerous), which, since the erection of the "Payer-Hütte" on the ridge of the mountain, has fallen into disuse. It is not, however, very probable that any traveller will attempt to ascend the Ortler with no other guide than a small scale map, however excellent; so this oversight need not count for much.

The Annual Report, by Commander A. D. Taylor, late I.N., on the Marine Surveys of the Indian Coast for the year ended September 30th, 1879, has been issued. The surveys accomplished were those of Jyghur, Washiati river, Chaul and the coast northward in the direction of Bombay, Tutikorin, and part of the Paumotu Pass. The first three were the work of Lieut.

Jarrad, R.N., and the last two were executed by Mr. M. Chapman, late I.N., who subsequently fell a victim to climatic influences, which appear to be very deleterious to the officers engaged on this trying work. The surveys completed are not numerous, but it is anticipated that several extensive and important ones will be taken up when the steamer now being built is completed. Commander Taylor made a tour of British India for the purpose of inspecting the best sites for erecting tide-gauges for the determination of the exact tide-levels at various points round the coast of India. Some ornithological specimens (numbering 900 in all) were collected by Dr. Armstrong in the vicinity of Vizadurg and Ratnagiri, and deposited in the India Museum at Calcutta. The same officer also made an examination of some of the invertebrates of the N. Konkan, but much fuller researches will be made in this and other branches of natural history if a physical exploration of the Indian coasts and seas is conducted, as proposed by the Asiatic Society of Bengal, on board the new surveying steamer. We understand the appliances for this work have all been purchased by Government, at a cost of nearly 1,000*l.*, and the steamer is the only thing wanting to start the operations, which will be looked forward to with interest by scientific men as a necessary complement to the work of the Challenger. The most important work of the Marine Survey Department certainly consists of the valuable charts, sailing directions, and information for mariners respecting the navigation of Indian waters, and these the authorities take the most praiseworthy pains to disperse far and wide. The new surveys of harbours and river mouths, which are undergoing constant physical changes, the position of buoys, lights, dangers to navigation, are all made known with an accuracy which speaks very highly for the surveyors, and proves of great value to the shipping in Eastern seas.

M. Hüber has succeeded in reaching the oasis El Jof, in Northern Arabia. When last heard of he was preparing to cross the dreaded desert of Nefud, which "eats up travellers," on his way to Hail, in the Gebel Shammar. There he proposed to remain about three months, after which it is his intention to continue his journey in the direction of Yemen.

The budget of the German African Association for the year 1880-1 has been published. 1,600*l.* have been granted to Rohlf and Stecker, who are already in Abyssinia, and propose to penetrate through Kafa to the Victoria Nyansa. Major Schoeler and his companions, now on the road to the Tanganyika, are to receive 800*l.* Dr. Pogge and Lieut. Wisemann, who are about to proceed to the residence of the Muata Yamvo, where a permanent station is to be founded, have been voted 1,200*l.*; and R. E. Wegel, who has returned to the Bahr, is to receive a subsidy of 250*l.*

The Club Africano di Napoli has published the project of an expedition to Assab Bay, in the Red Sea, submitted to it by Signori Careri and Licata on the 15th of July last. These gentlemen propose that the Club, of which they are members, should engage in the pearl fishery of the Red Sea, and found a fishing station in the bay, which has recently been taken possession of by the Italian Government. From other sources we learn that the Italians, under the leadership of Signor Sapeeto, have established friendly relations with the natives, and carry on a profitable trade.

ASTRONOMICAL NOTES.

The planet Jupiter being at its perihelion on the 25th inst. (about midnight), when it will be also within a few days of opposition to the sun (which takes place on the morning of October 7th), is now making one of its nearest approaches to the earth. Although its orbit is somewhat more eccentric than that of our planet, the difference between the perihelion and aphelion distances compared with either is not very great, but it may interest some to see the actual numbers. Jupiter's greatest and least distances from the sun are respectively 5.4525 and 4.9531 in terms of the earth's mean distance. Taking the latter at 93,000,000 miles, these will be about 507,000,000 and 461,000,000; and the latter minimum distance from the sun will, of course, imply a distance from us, when the planet is in opposition at the same time, of about 368,000,000 miles. On the other hand, if Jupiter is in aphelion when in conjunction with the sun, his actual distance from us will reach 600,000,000 miles. The proportion of these numbers is nearly as three to five.

Jupiter and Saturn are still the only planets visible in the evening; the former rising in the neighbourhood of London about a quarter of an hour before, and the latter about as much after, seven o'clock, so that both are up all night. Jupiter is in the constellation Pegasus, Saturn on the boundary of Pisces and Aries.

Faye's comet has, since it was redetected by Mr. Common at Ealing on the 2nd of last month (as already mentioned in the Athenæum), been observed by several astronomers: by Herr Tempel, at the Arcetri Observatory, Florence, on the 25th of August; by Dr. Dunker, at Lund, on the 30th; by Dr. Pechüle, at Copenhagen, on the 1st inst.; and by Herr von Konkoly, at O Gyalla, Hungary, on the 6th. All these confirm the accuracy of Dr. Axel Möller's elements. Probably when the present moonlight nights have ceased the comet will be more easily observable (although always a faint object), as it continues to approach the earth until the 3rd of next month. At the last appearance, in the autumn of 1873, it was, we believe, observed only by M. Stéphan, at Marseilles, and by Dr. C. H. F. Peters (so well known for the great number of his planetary discoveries), at Clinton, N.Y., who obtained observations of it on the night of the 23rd of December. Its orbit is the least eccentric of all known cometary orbits, and whilst at no time going very far beyond the orbit of Jupiter, it never comes within that of Mars.

Mr. Lewis Swift has sent to the Astronomische Nachrichten, No. 2334, a detailed account of his discovery of a comet, of which no more has been heard, at Rochester, New York, on the 11th of August, as already reported from cablegram. He relates that he observed that night a nebulous object, elongated in the direction of the sun, and very near a small known bright nebula, with whose position he was familiar. He at once suspected that it was a comet, but the sky was only clear for about half an hour, and he could not observe it long enough to notice any motion. For several nights afterwards the sky was cloudy, but on August 16th a partial break occurred, and early on the following morning it was quite clear; the nebula and the small stars in the neighbourhood were well seen, but the comet by disappearing had proved its character. Upon this he announced his discovery, hoping that it might be searched for and found, but the latter at any rate does not appear to have been the case, and even search would have been difficult after so long an interval of time. When seen on August 11th the comet's place was R.A. 11° 28' N.P.D. 22°. "It was faint," says Mr. Swift, "but not very faint."

SOCIETIES.

ENTOMOLOGICAL.—Sept. 1.—H. T. Stainton, Esq., V.P., in the chair.—Miss E. A. Smith, Assistant State Entomologist of Illinois, was elected a Foreign Member.—Mr. J. J. Weir exhibited specimens of Odonestus polatoris and Smurintus populi, which possessed the peculiarities of both sexes.—Sir E. Saunders exhibited six winged examples of the Stylopidæus genus Hylectrus, and also various other Hymenoptera, and contributed remarks thereon.—Miss E. A. Ormerod exhibited some galls found on Tanacetum vulgare, which she described at length.—Mr. T. E. Billups exhibited a female specimen of Polyblastus Walsbergi, an ichneumon not previously recorded in Britain.—Mr. E. Boescher exhibited living specimens of the two varieties of the larva of Smurintus ocellatus, and contributed a note thereon.—Mr. Meldola exhibited some specimens of Comptosia bilineata, a large number of which had been found by Mr. English near Epping, attached firmly to the leaves of the "tan tree" (Lycium barbarum) by the abdomen, in which position they had died, possibly from the effects of fungoid disease.—Mr. A. H. Swinton communicated a 'Note on Lecidea Italica,' an Italian fire-fly.

SCIENCE Gossip.

We understand that the Museum of Practical Geology is in future to be illumined by electricity, and that arrangements are being made for its introduction immediately after the recess.

THE Aristotelian Society has determined to take during the coming season a bird's-eye view of modern philosophy as represented by its leading thinkers. Each member of the Society has undertaken to devote his attention to one philosopher and to furnish the Society with an account of his author drawn from the philosopher's own works. In this way, and with the assistance of Mr. Lewes's 'History of Philosophy' as a text-book, the members hope to qualify themselves for the profitable discussion, in future sessions, of the problems of the day. The President, Mr. Shadworth H. Hodgson, will give the introductory address, and the Vice-President will close the session with a discussion of Herbert Spencer and Auguste Comte.

THE winter session of the Charterhouse Science and Art School and Literary Institute will, under the continued presidency of the Rev. J. Rodgers (Vice-Chairman of the London School Board), commence on Saturday, the 25th inst.

THE Journal of the Scottish Meteorological Society, No. 60 to 63, is before us. 'The Diurnal Periods of Thunderstorms in Scotland,' by Mr. Alexander Buchan, brings out several remarkable points. Amongst others, it appears that during twenty-three years thunder occurred at Sandwick on 135 hours, at Aberdeen on 227 hours, at East Linton on 230 hours, while at Iceland during the past fourteen years thunder has been heard only on 23 hours. Mr. Buchan also contributes a valuable paper on 'The Tay Bridge Storm.' Dr. David Christison has two papers on the meteorology and storms of Uruguay and Buenos Ayres. There are other important communications and the usual meteorological tables.

THE Indian Government have taken energetic steps to institute tidal observations at some of their principal ports, and the results will be published in the form of tide-tables. The observations are reduced by Mr. E. Roberts, of the Nautical Almanac Office, by the system of harmonic analysis, which has been adopted for the reductions carried out under the auspices of the British Association. The number of ports for which tables for 1881 will be forthcoming is seven, viz., Aden, Kurrachee, Bombay, Carwar, Beypore, Paumben, and Vizagapatam. We understand that some preliminary tables have been already checked on the spot in India, and have been found to be remarkably accurate. The number of ports will be increased to about twelve in 1882, and eventually to twenty-two, the full number for which it is contemplated to issue tide-tables. It is very gratifying to find the Indian Government taking such useful measures on behalf of shipping interests and navigators in general, and we hope it may serve as a stimulus to our own Admiralty, which might, perhaps, with advantage display more enterprise in its hydrographical labours.

M. A. ISOSTRAFFI, in the Neues Jahrbuch für Mineralogie, describes a peculiar variety of coal found near Lake Onega in Russia. It is much richer in carbon than ordinary anthracite, containing, when free from water, 98.11 per cent. The pure varieties show a strong metallic lustre, which is not destroyed by a dull red heat. Its hardness varies from 3.5 to 4, and its density sky, which comprises lovely soft, gold-illuminated clouds of white set in a profound and sun-saturated firmament of blue. The foliage has, as is frequently the case in Claude's pictures, blackened considerably, and thus it has lost a very great deal of attraction for us; most of the half-shadows have shared the same fate; so that the picture looks at once dark and crude to an unusual extent, and requires careful study before its merits are fairly appreciated. By Guido is a 'St. Peter,' or rather a capital study of an old bearded man in a blue garment, and looking upwards to our right in strongly contrasted light and shadow. The handling of the flesh is more like that which prevailed with Salvator than with Rembrandt, being heavy of touch with a full and somewhat rough impasto. At any rate, the forms have been treated with considerable academic mastery and uncommon skill in "blocking out" the masses of all kinds. The motive of the design, in which the expression of the face is to be included, has more of Salvator's rough sincerity than of Guido's "airs" and graces. Another Guido, or work of his school, is a glowing and unusually fine version of the well-known 'Death of Cleopatra,' the design of which is famous by means of a first-rate engraving, and represents the queen looking up with affected agony, which, by the way, implies a fatal misreading of the subject, while she applies the asp to her very exuberant and wholly un-Oriental naked bust. It is a life-size figure, and, in the manner of the painter, of extremely animated and telling invention. The great popularity of this work is attested by the numerous versions of and copies from it which are in existence, as well as by the wide diffusion of the engraving in question and other prints from the same subject. A characteristic example of the Bolognese School, not at its highest pitch, is Annibale Carracci's half-length, life-size figure of a young man in a brown robe, looking upwards with an expression of enthusiasm on his face, which is in profile to our left, the hands are clasped. There is much energy in the look, but the inspiration of the whole is of the insincere order which marked the decline of art into academism. Technically speaking, the execution of this work is fine, massive, and rich in treatment, impasto, and tone: it has darkened very considerably. By Guercino, or of his school, is a fine version of the well-known 'Cumæan Sibyl,' a life-size, half- or three-quarters length figure seated at a table, with a pen and books, holding a scroll in her right hand, the left hand being on her hip, while she looks up in a rapturous way and with an intense action of the figure turns to our left. It is a true example of Guercino's style and mode of feeling; his characteristic view of art is happily rendered in this excellent instance of academical attainment. The pose, though energetic, is rather demonstrative; the drawing and foreshortening of the features are not irreproachable; the modelling of the flesh is extremely soft and fine; the olive-brown tints of the flesh are of first-rate quality in respect to the shadows and the pale golden lights; the luminosity of both lights and shadows is enjoyable. The sibyl wears a pale olive-brown turban; a scarf of the same colour, differing in depth of tone, is about her neck; her dress is maroon. A mantle of black and gold brocade lying over her knees gives sumptuousness, if not grandeur, to this by no means ignoble work.

By P. Veronese is 'The Wise Men's Offering,' a capital Venetian reading of the subject, showing the Virgin enthroned with the Child on her knee, slightly removed from the front, and in the middle of the composition. This group is raised, in the stately spectacular manner of the school in question, on a somewhat lofty platform or perron before a ruined building; the last element is the well-known type of that older dispensation which was supposed to have been superseded by the coming of Christ, the bringer of the newer dispensation. The Virgin appears in royal state as a queen, and is attended by numerous dignified and romantic personages. In a grandiose and effective manner one of the Magi kneels before the majestically graceful mother, and, with his hands crossed on his breast, bows to her. The myrrh-bearer stands behind his kneeling comrade, and holds his gift in a goblet. The negro monarch is on the other side. The foreground contains numerous larger figures of men, an elephant, horses, mules, and camels loaded with offerings, the act of giving being the real theme of the sumptuous composition, to represent its splendid and somewhat ostentatious aspect the object of the painter, who cared little for the intrinsic nature of the story. This wealth of gifts comprises Venetian coffers, carpets, arms, hangings, horses, dogs, and other treasures of the painter's period, all magnificently displayed and profuse in number, as of a royal donation to a crowned head of equal rank. The figures are in active and spontaneous motion. Some of the horses themselves are gifts, some of the men are slaves offered to the Queen of Heaven as custodians of the superb steeds they lead to her feet. The horses are champing their bits eagerly, stamping heavily on the ground, and shifting uneasily from side to side with all that confusing expression of energy which distinguishes the masterpieces of Veronese, for one of which this beautiful and very valuable painting may have been made, by way of "sketch" or unfinished study, by the master's own hands or those of a most accomplished assistant. We incline to think this example is autographic, not in any sense a reproduction or "version" of a larger work. The brilliancy and purity of the tones and tints declare for our view of the picture's great merits, and add greatly to its charms. It is characteristic of Veronese and his splendid school that some of the male attendants are removing huge golden vessels, the great weight of which is made obvious by the straining actions of the bearers, from the backs of the gigantic mules they have conducted hither as parts of the spectacle. A naked trumpeter is mounted on a camel, sounds his instrument, and demonstratively waves a banner on high. In the whole painting is a prodigious display of energy, sumptuously, and tumultuous movements; all the parts are magnificent in gorgeous colours; gold, tissues, and jewellery scintillate in the sunlight about the Virgin's throne; all parts are harmonised with profound skill.

We cannot do better than place here Domenichino's picture of St. Peter seated in a rocky niche, and with joined hands praying fervently, or rather passionately, after the Crucifixion, in the just breaking light of dawn, which falls on him from above, and makes distinct the pain-worn features of the man, the keys at his girdle, and the book at his feet. His robes are of blue and yellow, the favourite tints of Domenichino; Jerusalem is in the distance. This example has so much of Zampieri's energy of conception, his strenuous grasp of a novel incident, and of an untried occasion for vigorous expression of a pathetic order, that it is difficult not to see in these elements the mind of a fine master who was born too late. The defect of the picture is in the common but not ignoble features of the face of the saint to whom the keys of both worlds had been committed. Here the inspiration of Domenichino failed him, as well it might, for this was the testing point of his studies, the climax (an anti-climax it is) of his efforts. The high and somewhat mechanical, very smooth surface and finish of the painter are to be observed here. An extremely good and bold little picture by Rosa di Tivoli shows that master at his best in representing a capital composition of goats and sheep, the background of which has some of the qualities of a Cuyt. A very satisfactory anonymous whole-length, life-size portrait in armour, supposed to represent a Duke of Mantua, ought not to escape admiration from visitors.

With a fine and richly coloured Canaletto, showing Venice, our notes on Italian pictures in this collection are exhausted. It is an interesting and complete specimen of one of those painters whose fame has suffered not less by his own avidity for gain than by the incompetence of those who fished on purchasers their own productions. The view shows the front of the church of SS. John and Paul, with Verrocchio's statue of Bartolomeo Colleoni facing us, its white pedestal by Leopardi affording the focus for the illumination of the entire picture, which is enriched with deep-toned but clear shadows of an afternoon effect, sloping from our left at about 45° from the summit of the buildings. The ruddy facade and the white dome of the church rise behind in sumptuous apposition to the turquoise blue of the sky, in which islets of white vapour are driven by the wind. As a picture this specimen is exceptionally pure, refined, and brilliant. In these qualities it equals the best Guardi that we know. The clearness of its shadows and the breadth of its illumination distinguish this 'Venice' among those innumerable less fortunate views, for which the demand in England was apparently inexhaustible and taxed the manufacturing powers of Canaletto to the utmost.

We shall conveniently reserve notices of the German and Low Country pictures at Nostel, and in the first instance describe those examples of other schools which are noteworthy in Mr. Winn's collection. How good a landscape painter B. Barker of Bath was is made apparent to those who observe attentively his signed picture of a view comprising a bridge in the middle distance. A cart crosses this bridge; the gables of a cottage are in sunny light, and in the exact centre of the composition. The clearness of illumination, richness of colour, softness and breadth of the effect of this work are so valuable that it is at first hard to believe it is not due to Gainsborough, whose "juicy" mode of rendering these qualities is obvious here. Barker's signature attests the authorship, and suggests the probability that not a few of his productions may do duty for those of the greater landscape painter. Barker's characteristic dryness and defective characure, which generally give a prosaic aspect to his pictures, are absent in this instance. Another picture by this artist is inferior to the above, but possesses so many good qualities that we must not omit to name it. It is 'A Rocky Landscape' enriched with many fine oak trees. Here the painter's thin and rather poor technique occurs, but the whole is nearly as good as a tolerable Crome. By Gainsborough himself is a first-rate sketch, or large study for a more important painting, representing a woman, with the help of a man, clambering into a cart by means of one of its wheels; other persons, including a young mother and her baby, are already seated in the vehicle. The tail of the cart is turned towards us; a man stands at the horses' heads. Sheep are grouped in the foreground. All these figures are relieved on a mass of dark foliage, and the latter is in its turn relieved on a bright warm sky, which is now of a rich, delicate bluish green, as, probably, it was originally intended to be. Brilliant white clouds illuminate the sky. This painting has darkened; it has been at some time overladen with varnish. A picture painted by Gainsborough and De Louthborough in the manner of G. Poussin is an extremely interesting production. Such a work is at Nostel, and represents a gloomy effect of storm coming on at evening over a rocky view and a rough river in the middle distance.

In more respects than those to which "Peter Pindar" referred, the pictures of Angelica Kauffmann are "non-descript." At Mr. Winn's house are many capital specimens of her "gentle skill," as well as several more which we owe to Signor Zucchi, A.R.A., the lady's husband. The examples of the former category were painted for the owner of Noctel, the contemporary of these artists and one of Angelica's warmest patrons and most frequent employers. She stayed at this place for, we believe, a considerable time, and was much admired and very warmly respected. It is needless to give accounts of works which have no marked characteristics except a uniform weakness, gracefulness, and elegant sufficiency. Refined as they are, they exhibit the antithesis to that fine and masculine Greek model to which, under the inspiration of a pseudo-classic "revival," they owed much of their popularity. "Delicacies" rather than delicate, they had not strength to live in this rough world. The student knows that the true originators of Angelica's "boarding school" art were the classic modellers and gem-cutters who, including Flaxman, worked for Josiah Wedgwood, and gave to that able man of business a reputation as an artist to which he had not a shadow of a claim. The productions of Zucchi are so completely forgotten that it may interest some of our readers to know they are mostly architectural "compositions" combining the subjects of Pannini with the style of Zuccarelli, and, on the whole, are thoroughly respectable, but in no way admirable.

By Stark (!) we noticed a fine upright 'Sea Port,' being a composition in the manner of Vernet, with a dash of Claude in its style and sentiment. Ships, large and small, are ably grouped at a quay, with architectural accessories and buildings of a more common sort, including a statue on a lofty column, arcades, domes, &c., all seen under a richly toned sunlit sky of great purity and brilliancy. By R. Wilson is 'A Classical Landscape,' comprising foliage of a romantic character and a mechanical distance, the whole shown in a very beautiful illumination of that glowing yet clear order in which this painter delighted so much that its production became more or less mechanical with him. Another Wilson is one of the best versions of the often-repeated 'Niobe' subject with which we are acquainted. As in other cases, this work shows how diligently the author had studied Gaspar Poussin, to one of whose most magnificent masterpieces, the 'Polyphemus,' it owes not a little of its inspiration as well as some of its features. The family of Niobe are grouped on the banks of the river which divides the landscape, near a cascade. Apollo and Diana are in the clouds as usual. The sky is of magnificent quality and impressive character. A huge arch-like break in the cumuli gives a view of the blue firmament; the rock-like sides of the arched vapours have been studied with extreme care and great mastery, and modelled with much learning. The deities ride, so to say, on the lower range of paler vapour; this gives a spectacular character to the design, but it is not without grandeur.

There are two portraits here, the works of Hogarth, and both signalized in biographies of the painter. That of Horatio Walpole's charming and audacious friend and neighbour, the famous actress Kitty Clive, is a half-length, life-size figure, of the dimensions and general character which Kneller's "Kit Kat" series had made fashionable and frequent, and shows the lady in a white dress, cut low over the very full and somewhat luxurious bust. A strip of lace is round the neck, the ends of which she holds up, as if to call attention to the action; her cap, a rather dainty affair, is trimmed with brown silk. The face is nearly in full view; the eyes are turned towards the front, but they do not look at the spectator. As usual with Hogarth's portraits, this example is full of character and expression, and its verisimilitude is unquestionable. It is, nevertheless, but a process reading of a face which, to judge by the records of the owner's life, must have been extraordinarily piquant, humorous, and vivacious. The other portrait by Hogarth in this gallery is that of Lady Thornhill; like the above, it is a half-length, life-size figure on a "Kit Kat" canvas. The figure is in three-quarters view to our left; she wears a brown dress, a widow's coil or cap, and looks very thin, wan, and old, so that it is not impossible this work was executed not long before the kindly mother-in-law of Hogarth died and left her much-loved protégé to the care of his wife. Apart from the coldness of the flesh and the prevailing blackness of the half tones, this is the richer and better painted picture of the two Hogarth's before us now. We believe these paintings were sold with Mrs. Hogarth's effects long after the deaths of her mother and Mrs. Clive. Mr. Winn possesses in the London house of his family another Hogarth, being "A Scene from 'The Tempest,'" which we have not seen.

Our next notice of this series will be devoted to the German, Spanish, and Low Country paintings of the Noctel Priory collection, including works by Rembrandt, Teniers, J. Ruysdael, Wouwermans, Verboom, W. Van de Velde, F. and W. Mieris, C. Jonson, Van Dyck, Elzheimer, Murillo, the great Holbein, so called, Steenwyck, Netscher, Van Harp, Van der Helst, Berchem, P. Noef, Karel du Jardin, Sir J. De Medina, J. Brueghel, J. Van Kessel, De Heem, Le Nain, J. and A. Cuyp, Brauer, and A. Van Ostade.

MYCENÆ.

St. Mair, Ventnor.

PROF. SAYCE has addressed a letter to the St. Petersburg Herald, in which he impugns the deductions of Prof. Stephani and Herr Schulze in regard to the discoveries at Mycenæ. As I have adopted similar inferences with regard to the Mycenæ find, will you kindly allow me to make a few remarks on his arguments?

It appears from Prof. Sayce's letter that the basis of Herr Schulze's theory is the first appearance of the representation of the butterfly about the middle of the third century B.C. in Grecian art. Prof. Sayce admits this late appearance, and writes "that in Greek art of the historic period the representation of the butterfly does not occur till shortly before the Christian era." He then draws the strange conclusion, because it does not occur in Greek art until shortly before the Christian era the events of Western Europe must refer it to a prehistoric period. Of this, however, he can adduce no proofs, but must wait until excavations are made in Lydia. We must, therefore, wait for his proofs.

Prof. Sayce agrees with Herr Schulze in stating that the objects found in the tombs do not belong to one and the same style and stage of development, that the antiquities here discovered belonged to men whose art passed through different phases of development. The phases to which they point, according to Prof. Sayce, are the Babylonian, the Lydo-Hittite, the Assyro-Phœnician, and the Phœnic-Greek period. Unfortunately for his argument, there are no traces of any of those periods found in the tombs at Mycenæ. Dr. Schliemann writes, p. xlvii, "No trace of Assyrian art was found at Mycenæ." The gold ornaments present all the characteristics of a Celtic style of ornamentation, as Mr. Murray, an eminent archaeologist of Western Europe, writes, "Nowhere in Greece, as far as I know, has any pattern of this type been discovered, and, indeed, its whole character may be said to be as entirely contrary to the Greek spirit of design as it is consistent with that of the ancient races of the north of Europe." The bull's head, as Mr. Murray writes, is a work of highly advanced art, entirely out of place among the other objects from these tombs; the gold ring bears the unmistakable stamp, in its coarse imitation of an Assyrian cylinder, of a very late and rude period. A writer in the Times, evidently an eminent student of Western Europe, has pronounced the ring to be either a gross forgery or a late Asiatic production. Further, no gold finger rings are of a prehistoric date. According to Leasing, the fashion of wearing finger rings was not introduced into Greece until the time of the Peloponnesian war, about 431 B.C. Assyrian signets were always cylinders of stone.

As to the masks, the objects found in the tombs being, as Prof. Stephani and I also had previously suggested, plunder from other countries, they may have been taken from some tombs either in Scythia or some other countries, and buried with the Northern barbarians who were interred at Mycenæ. Mr. Murray remarks, "The eyes of these masks are suggestive of later times." The burial of the bodies found at Mycenæ evidently took place at one and the same time. How is it, then, that the objects found in the tombs belong to such different periods? If they are considered as plunder the explanation is intelligible.

Prof. Sayce brings an indictment of astonishing and prodigious ignorance against Herr Schulze for his lucubrations in regard to the intagli found at Mycenæ. But if Prof. Sayce "would only devote some study to the lentoid gems from the islands of the Ægean," he would be convinced that the lentoid gems bear the genuine characteristics of a rude and archaic period, and have nothing in common with the intagli in the rings found at Mycenæ. To any one who has the slightest acquaintance with the different phases of art they present every appearance of a late and debased period of art. Such sprawling horses, with their feet in the air, as we see on the intaglio p. 334 of Schliemann's volume never occur in archaic art.

The ornamentation which is usually connected with early Greek art, such as the zigzag, the fret, the meander, the archaic cross (which Schliemann, in his "unbounded enthusiasm," connects with the swastika), appears nowhere on the gold objects, while, on the other hand, the style of ornament generally attributed to a Celtic or Northern origin presents itself in the triquetra and the spiral.

Prof. Sayce makes a further mistake in connecting the articles of pottery found in the soil with the objects discovered in the tombs. Now, it is well known that the pottery mostly came from the soil of Mycenæ, not from the tombs, and there is no connexion or resemblance between the ornamentation on the pottery and on the gold ornaments found in the tombs. The former is genuine archaic Greek, the latter Celtic or Northern.

Will Prof. Sayce or some of the infallible eminent savants of Western Europe explain how the representations of pointed arches and of a row of semi-circular arches on high pilasters of square-cut stones, and much resembling a Roman aqueduct, as on the gold cups (pp. 292, 313), are found to occur in prehistoric times?

Further, the swords of "uncommon length" cannot be Greek of prehistoric times. The swords used in Greece in early times were short, as we can see by the painted vases. Long swords were first introduced by the Celts. Mr. Murray remarks that the form of the scabbard, containing a sword, worn by the figure on the bas-relief No. 140, seems to him not only out of keeping with the notion of an early age, but suggestive of the barbarous weapon of some recent nation of the north of Europe.

Prof. Sayce, in putting forward the absence of iron as a strong proof of the early date of these tombs, ought to recollect that the objects placed in the tombs with the bodies were only those of the highest value, of gold, of silver, and of crystal. Objects of iron, being of little or no value, would consequently find no place in the tombs. Objects of iron were, however, found at Mycenæ. Dr. Schliemann mentions, p. 75, some curious iron keys, which are undoubtedly of a Roman period.

To conclude: when it is proved that "swords of uncommon length" are Greek of prehistoric times; that a body "forcibly squeezed" into a tomb and placed over a layer of pebbles is a Greek mode of interment of an early age; that a Celtic style of ornamentation was used in prehistoric times in Greece; that pointed arches and semi-circular arches on high pilasters of square-cut stone were known in the same early times, then only will I believe in Dr. Schliemann's incubations.

HOBBAK M. WASSAHOFF.

Art Society.

Our readers will be glad to hear that Mr. Reid has been occupied in arranging, in the King's Library, British Museum, a large selection of topographical illustrations, views of streets, buildings, and the like, of London, parts of the great Crace Collection of such works which the Trustees of the Museum were fortunate enough to secure at a very moderate price. We recorded the purchase at the proper time. The whole collection cannot be exhibited, for want of space, although extra screens have been placed in every nook and corner of the King's Library. This magnificent addition to the Department of Prints and Drawings cannot be over-valued. The public will soon be able to study the selections with unusual facilities.

On the 25th inst. Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. will publish the first number of 'Decoration in Painting, Sculpture, Architecture, and Art Manufactures,' containing a number of illustrations of modern decorative figure-painting, artistic pottery, domestic stained glass, furniture, interior decoration, costume studies, and ornament, ancient and modern.

The Bargate at Southampton is in immediate danger of being restored. A Correspondent writes thus:—"Your readiness in allowing more than one appeal in your columns in the past for the protection of the Bargate in Southampton, crossing its principal street, must be my apology for again asking your powerful voice in the same cause. The latest form of attack on this picturesque and tolerably well-preserved structure is a proposal, adopted by the town council, to 'restore' the effigies of two legendary giants of the town, Bevis and Ascupart, which about two centuries ago, it is thought, were painted on wood and fixed to the buttresses flanking the central acute pointed and deeply moulded arch crossing our High Street, of the northern front of the gate, which is in stone, and of Edwardian work casing the original Norman structure. With them it is proposed to decorate 'in proper heraldic colours' a series of elegant panels above the arch, alternately square and oblong, each bearing a shield painted with the coat of arms of some nabob connected with the borough within the last two hundred years. As these decorations now are, toned down by age and nearly as black as the stonework of the gate itself, they offend none; but it is ominous to find the borough surveyor recommending, and the town council adopting the suggestion, that the whole work of filling up the joints in the stonework or paintings, which are to be then 'skilfully and artistically worked up,' with a correct heraldic delineation of the shields, and the cleansing and painting of two leaden lions just flanking the buttresses, shall be undertaken at a cost of between 30*l.* and 40*l.*, and that his official has been assisted in arriving at his conclusions in the matter by a firm of house decorators carrying on business in the town. If the gate were as hideous as some I know, probably it would be scarcely worth the trouble of protesting against its being handed thus mercifully over to the house decorators; but as it is really a picturesque object, and of considerable archaeological interest, pray use your efforts to rest the threatened vandalism, which will surely be commenced before your next issue, to the unusual alacrity be displayed in the work of decoration."

A CORRESPONDENT of the Manchester Guardian expresses regret that the autumn exhibition of pictures, now open at the Royal Institution, Manchester, does not pay its way, whilst the reverse is the case with the Liverpool autumn exhibition, the directors of which always have a balance on the right side. It is suggested that matters might be altered in Manchester by keeping the exhibition open till six o'clock, instead of closing it at five, by charging sixpence admission on Saturdays, and by admitting girls and boys from seven to fourteen years of age at half price.

THE Panjab Government has published a very interesting list of its contributions to the Melbourne Exhibition. It has been prepared by Mr. J. L. Kipling, the Curator of the Lahore Central Museum, whose descriptive notes are of great practical value. Of the white and blue Delhi pottery he says:—"It is really a porcelain tendre, and resembles very closely old Persian ware. It is probable, indeed, that the manufacture was imitated from Persia. The paste or body is pounded felspar, found in a range of hills at some distance, held together, for the purpose of working, with a mucilage of gum. Everything must be made in a mould, as the material has not the plasticity of ordinary clay. The finer kind is vitreous and semi-transparent, like other soft porcelains. The coarser sorts are identical in texture with the tiles used for the external covering of mosques, &c., at Agra, Delhi, and Lahore [Kashi work, also a Persian imitation]. The only colours now used in its decoration are a blue from cobalt and a turquoise from copper." There are a few samples of this Delhi quasi-porcelain in the India Museum at South Kensington, the texture of which is identical with that of much of the pottery of ancient Egypt. Although made by Mohammedans, it is often decorated with the figures of the Hindu pantheon; and it is a remarkable fact that in many parts of India the manufacture of the clay idols used in the daily worship of the Hindus is monopolized by the Mohammedans.

We are glad to hear that a strong committee is being formed, under the immediate patronage of Lord Ripon, for the purpose of holding local exhibitions at Lahore, and elsewhere in Northern India, of objects of pure native art. In the Bombay Presidency also Sir James Fergusson has been giving the encouragement of his presence and appreciation to a most interesting exhibition of the art industries of the Mahratta country, held at Poona. The Native Society, which has for some time existed at Surat, for the purpose of encouraging the indigenous manufactures of India, has published a volume of poems in support of its objects. We are sorry to hear that a good deal of impertinent political animosity against English manufactures has been imported into the proper matter of the book; but these are all signs of the gratifying revival of native art which has sprung up in India since the Paris Exhibition of 1878.

THE inauguration of the statue of Thiers at Saint-Germain is to take place to-morrow (Sunday). Among others, MM. Jules Simon and Mignet will make speeches. M. Léon Say is unable to attend, and his address will be read by M. Legouvé.

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

OF the generally very effective rendering of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' in the cathedral on Wednesday evening, the 8th inst., not much need be said. The soprano and contralto solo parts were allotted to Miss Anna Williams and Madame Patey; the tenor music was divided between Mr. Maas and Mr. Edward Lloyd; while the part of St. Paul was sung by Mr. Santley. The choruses were excellently sung. Mr. C. H. Lloyd has proved himself possessed of many of the chief requisites of a good conductor. His heat is clear and decided, he has his forces well in hand, is evidently perfectly acquainted with the scores he has to conduct, and possesses, moreover, the precious qualification of enthusiasm. Unfortunately an excess either of this quality or of anxiety leads him too often unduly to hurry the music. This was especially noticeable in portions of Mozart's 'Requiem' on the Wednesday morning; but several movements of 'St. Paul'—for example, the choruses, "Lord, thou alone art God," and "Happy and blest are they"—lost much in effect from the same cause. We mention this in no carping spirit. It is really remarkable that with so few opportunities Mr. Lloyd should conduct as well as he does; he shows real fitness for his post; and it is the truest kindness to him to point out the one shortcoming noticeable in his efforts. Let him overcome this tendency, and hold himself somewhat more under control, and he will become a conductor of whom Gloucester may well be proud.

The programme of the Thursday morning was, from a purely musical point of view, the most interesting of the entire festival. It commenced with Leonardo Leo's 'Dixit Dominus' for double chorus, solo voices, and orchestra. The work, written early in the last century, is a very fine example of the older school of Italian church music. The original manuscript is in the Fitzwilliam Library at Cambridge, and the work was produced last December in that town at a concert of the University Musical Society, under the direction of Mr. C. Villiers Stanford. The solo music is cast in what is now a somewhat antiquated mould, but the magnificent choruses are worthy to compare with those of Handel. The opening movement, founded upon the eighth Gregorian tone, the masterly fugue, "Tu es sacerdos in æternum," and the concluding "Gloria Patri" have lost nothing of their freshness by the one hundred and fifty years that have passed over them. The treatment of the orchestra is remarkable for variety of effect, considering that the work was written when instrumentation was still in its infancy. The performance was one of the best of the many good ones given during the week; the solo parts were given by Madame Albani, Miss Anna Williams, Miss Wakefield, Mr. Maas, and Mr. F. King. The 'Dixit Dominus' was followed by Palestrina's 'Stabat Mater' for unaccompanied double choir with a double quartet of soloists. This work was sung in Richard Wagner's arrangement. Wagner has added numerous marks of expression, and has indicated the passages for solos, semi-chorus, and full chorus, besides occasionally adding accidentals where they appeared to be needed. As we have not the work by us in its original form for comparison, we cannot say with exactness how much is due to the editor. Doubtless some additional marks of expression would be needed to fit such a work for public performance, because in the sixteenth century, when the music was written, it was the custom to leave all such matters to the directors of the music and the executants. We are inclined, nevertheless, to think that the 'Stabat Mater' has been somewhat over-edited, and that some of the refinements of expression introduced are more modern in character than is altogether in keeping with the music. However this may be, there can be no question that the work worthily represents the old reformer of ecclesiastical music. With all its severe simplicity, with many progressions which sound even harsh to our unaccustomed ears, there are a pathos and dignity in the music which must appeal to every susceptible ear. The difficult and unfamiliar work was exceedingly well rendered both by chorus and soloists, and produced an unmistakable effect, though as the performance took place in the cathedral no demonstrations of applause were permitted.

Mr. Henry Holmes's sacred cantata 'Christmas Day' concluded the first part of the programme. The words are taken from Keble's 'Christian Year,' but in his attempt to cast them in a quasi-dramatic form Mr. Holmes has scarcely been happy. It is difficult to see what is gained, for instance, by giving the lines beginning,

Yet stay before thou dare
To join that festal throng, to an "Oracle," or by repeating the lines, But when they heard the sign where Christ should be, &c., as a "chorus of the multitude, taught of the Oracle." Again, such a stage direction (if the expression may be allowed) as the following is, in our opinion, simply nonsense:—

"The company would fain depart, but are held spell-bound. There is mystery around. Nature herself seems rapt. Adown the vale the shepherd pipes. Anon the Titan spirits of old arise, come to claim as theirs the Christ. A pilgrims' chant reaches the ear."

It would, we cannot but think, have been much more judicious had Mr. Holmes simply set the didactic and reflective words of the poet as the latter left them. With regard to the music, it may perhaps be best described as perfectly harmless. It contains little that is striking, nothing that is really new, and at the same time nothing that is offensive. The part-writing is of the simplest description; there is no attempt at contrapuntal elaboration, and in its general style the cantata is much more secular than sacred. The best number is an unaccompanied chorus, "Thou on the bosom laid," which is decidedly pleasing. The composer conducted his work, the solo parts in which were well sung by Miss Anna Williams and Mr. E. Lloyd.

The second part of Thursday morning's performance was devoted to Beethoven's 'Missa Solennis' in D. This stupendous work is so rarely heard that its production at Gloucester would of itself be sufficient to give no ordinary importance to the festival. Owing partly to the abstruse character of much of the music, and even more, probably, to the enormous difficulties which it presents to the executants, it is upwards of nine years since this mass has been heard in London. Yet it is not too much to call it the greatest work of the greatest of composers. Of its importance Beethoven himself was well aware, for in a letter to Ries he speaks of it as "mein grösstes und gelungenstes Werk." Written during the latter part of his life, it belongs to what is generally termed his "third period"—that to which we owe the Choral Symphony, the last five quartets, and the last pianoforte sonatas. We miss here, excepting in a few movements such as the "Kyrie" and "Benedictus," that plastic clearness so conspicuous in his earlier mass (in C); Beethoven has withdrawn altogether from the world, and is absorbed in his own religious contemplations. The inscription "Mit Andacht," which he has prefixed to the "Kyrie," might well serve as a motto for the whole work, for the devotional element predominates throughout. There is nothing in the whole range of music more touching than such movements as the "Christe eleison," the "Qui tollis," the "Crucifixus," and the "Agnus Dei," while the opening of the "Gloria," the "Cum Sancto Spiritu," and the "Credo" are unsurpassed for grandeur and majesty. But no description will convey the least idea of this wonderful music to those who do not know it, while to those who do any analysis is superfluous. It will always be matter for regret that here, as in the Choral Symphony, and to an even greater extent, Beethoven should have disregarded the capabilities of the human voice. The demands which he makes upon his singers, both soloists and chorus, are absolutely cruel in the constant strain upon the extreme parts of their register. This is undoubtedly one of the chief reasons why the mass is so seldom performed. It would be too much to say that the chorus singing at Gloucester was perfect; the delicacy and refinement required by many parts of the music would only be possible after much more rehearsal than was attainable under existing conditions. But as regards accuracy little or nothing was left to desire, and the very trying high notes with which the score abounds were attacked with a vigour and an energy which deserve much commendation. The solo parts received full justice from Madame Albani, Madame Patay, and Messrs. E. Lloyd and Santley, while the orchestra, excepting a few important slips on the part of one of the wind instruments, was very satisfactory. Mr. Lloyd conducted the work with great care and judgment, and a very large proportion of the success of the performance is undoubtedly due to his efforts.

The remainder of the festival may be very briefly dismissed. A second miscellaneous concert was given in the Shire Hall on the Thursday evening, the most important number of which was Schumann's Symphony in B flat. At the same concert Mr. Sutton, a pupil of M. Sainton at the Royal Academy of Music, produced a very favourable impression by his excellent rendering of a Ballade and Polonaise by Vieuxtemps. On the Friday morning the 'Messiah' was given in the cathedral, and on the same evening there was a special service in the nave, at which the chief musical feature was an Evening Service ("Magnificat" and "Nunc Dimittis") written for the occasion by Mr. C. H. Lloyd, a most interesting work, which proves that the conductor of the festival possesses considerable talent as a composer. The meeting now ended may be justly considered as, from a musical point of view, one of the most successful of the festivals of the Three Choirs.

Musical Society.

A REPORT, for which we are happy to state there is no foundation, has been widely circulated to the effect that Dr. Hans von Bülow had lost the use of his right hand in consequence of an attack of paralysis.

Le Ménestrel states that Madame Lemmens-Sharrington has been nominated professor of singing at the Brussels Conservatoire.

A MARBLE tablet, with an appropriate inscription, has been recently affixed to the house in which Handel was born, No. 4, Grocer Schlämm, Halle.

Two versions of 'Mefistofele' will be produced almost simultaneously in America. Madame Gerster, Signor Campanini, and Signor Nannetti will sustain the chief parts in Mr. Mapleson's season, and Madame Marie Rose, Mr. Byron, and Mr. George Conly in the English rendering under the management of Messrs. Strakosch and Hens.

A TRIAL of the electric light in combination with gas has been made at La Scala, Milan, with it is said, excellent effect.

It is said that the first novelty to be produced at the new opera-house in Berlin will be Rubinstein's 'Newo.'

THE Borough of Hackney Choral Association has just issued its prospectus for the approaching season. The principal works announced for performance are Mendelssohn's 'Lobgesang,' 95th Psalm, and finale to 'Loreley,' Schumann's 'Hymn to Night,' Hofmann's 'Melusine,' Goets's 137th Psalm, Schubert's 'Song of the Spirits over the Waters,' and the first two parts of Haydn's 'Seasons.' The concerts will be given, as usual, in the Shoreditch Town Hall.

M. MASSENET is now engaged on a new opera, founded on Dumas's romance 'Don Juan de Marana.'

THE death is announced of M. Prosper Pascal, a composer of some operettas which failed to gain the approval of the Parisian public. In his literary and journalistic labours M. Pascal was more successful. He was the author of the French versions of Mozart's 'Die Entführung' and 'Titus.'

DRAMA

LYCEUM THEATRE.—SOLE LESSEE AND MANAGER, MR. HENRY IRVING.—This and every evening, at 8.30, will be presented the Legendary Drama of 'THE QUEENIAN BROTHERS.' LOUIS and FABIEN DU FRANCIS. Mr. IRVING. Proceed at 7.30 by a new and original Comedy, entitled 'MY GINGER.' Box Office open 10 to 5, under the direction of Mr. Keast, of whom seats may be booked by letter or telegram.—LYCEUM.

La Comédie-Française d Londres (1871-1879). Journal inédit de Edmond Got—Journal de Francisque Sarcey. Publiée, avec une Introduction, par Georges d'Heylli. (Paris, Ollendorff.)

THE modest and useful writer who signs himself Georges d'Heylli may be said, with M. Francisque Sarcey, to form the historiographical staff of the Comédie Française. He is the biographer and critic, in his monographs on Regnier, Arnould-Plessy, and Bressant, of some of its most famous artists. In a contribution to the series of "Foyers et Couliasses" he has treated of its ups and downs and shifts and changes, from the time of its constitution under La Grange to the accession of M. Emile Perrin. Then in his 'Journal Intime de la Comédie Française' he has printed a record of all that was done upon its stage between 1852 and 1871. Now it is his to tell of Molière's heirs as strollers, and to narrate the circumstances of the provincial round they made in 1868, and of their several ventures across the Channel in 1871 and 1879.

In the matter of strolling the Comédie Française has never held in honour the example of its founders. Molière strolled the provinces of the south and west for years ere he returned to Paris to try his fortunes, on off days with the Italians, on the stage of the Petit-Bourbon; and the artists who accompanied him—the delightful De Brie, the adventurous Bérard, the brilliant Duparc, and the rest of them—were strollers all, and strollers of the most vagabondish habit. The respectable La Grange, too, ere he stood for the first time by Molière's side at the Château de Chilly, had been as determined a stroller as Brécourt himself, and to him, after his illustrious chief, are due the establishment and endowment as a royal house of the Comédie Française. Assuredly, therefore, it is not for lack of precedent that the actors of this most famous playhouse addict themselves so little to the practice of strolling, and refuse to budge as a company except at the nod of emperors or the instances of carpenters and upholsterers. They are in the service of France; their society has survived a monarchy, several republics, and a couple of empires; and it is beneath them to remove from Paris. Abroad the company is to be seen but in fractions: in the person of a rebellious associate, like Mlle. Madeleine Brohan or Madame Arnould-Plessey; or as incarnate in some histrionic prodigy of the type of Mlle. Bernhardt; or as represented officially, so to speak, by such rare and accomplished artists as M. Got and M. Coquelin. Even of this, as recent events have shown, it is not held advisable that there should be too much. The company is a fixed and steady constellation, and for stars that would wander there is no place within its system. As for getting the whole Comédie away from the Rue de Richelieu, that is a real Star Chamber matter. The question is one to be debated by ministers, argued out by anxious legists, criticized in opposition prints, made the subject of letters from indignant patriots, and wrangled over by deputies in want of a grievance. Hence it is that, of the three rounds made outside the walls of Paris by Molière's heirs and successors, two were made on the advice of the contractor for repairs; twice the actors were enfranchised by the operation of a white-wash brush! The third adventure was brought about by the action of the Commune. It was more partial in aim and apparently less splendid in its results than either of the others; but it is in fact the one that most redounds to the credit of those who were engaged in it, and the one on which historians of the Comédie Française will take most pleasure in enlarging.

The company's first and third removals were ordinary provincial and foreign tours. The pretext was the same for both of them. The theatre stood in need of repairs, and it was deemed advisable to utilize the opportunity thus afforded. The earlier was made in 1868. The artists engaged in it, some seventeen in all, were MM. Got, Delaunay, Maubant, Lafontaine, Garraud, Talbot, Barré, Coquelin, Masset, and Coquelin cadet; with Mlles. Favart, Guyon, Lafontaine, Royer, and Dinah-Félix. The only places visited were Dijon, Lyons, Toulon, Nice, and Marseilles. Twenty-three performances were given, with a repertory of eighteen plays or fragments of plays, the most popular of which appear to have been 'Le Misanthrope,' 'Les Fourberies de Scapin,' and the 'Paul Forestier' of Émile Augier. The gross receipts were 72,390 francs 55 centimes, which yielded a net profit of 33,494 francs 79 centimes for division among the company. The third removal, that of last year, was a business of far greater difficulty and importance than the first. The circumstances are still fresh in everybody's memory, and it is unnecessary to recall them. M. d'Heylli, however, has printed a full profit-and-loss account of the trip, and some of his information is well worth quoting. There were thirty-six performances at 6,000 francs, and six at 4,000 francs; 1,685 francs came in as "diverses recettes"; 2,000 francs were produced by a sale of scenery and decorations; so that the total received amounted to upwards of 243,685 francs. The expenses are estimated at a sum of 127,788 francs. They include a tax of 7½ per cent. on the gross receipts for authors' rights and the wages, on a scale of exceptional liberality, of the actors and actresses. The lady associates got 60 francs a day, the gentlemen only 50 francs; the lady pensionnaires had 35 francs a day, their male comrades 30 francs. As, in addition to their salaries, the members of the company had a net profit of 115,897 francs to share at the close of the campaign, their journey from a pecuniary, not less than from an artistic, point of view, must be held to have been splendidly successful. This is not, we should add, the opinion of M. Sarcey. That gentleman inclines to believe that the English entrepreneurs made heaps of money by the transaction, and often shared as much as 800*l.* a night. Evidently he thinks, though he does not actually affirm, that the company were ill paid. "La Comédie Française," he says, "a les mains nettes de cet argent-là." And he goes on to add, with the digne and happy assurance in error common to all Frenchmen writing about England and things English, "C'est le succès moral qui a été considérable. Si fatigants qu'ait pu être cette campagne pour nos comédiens, ils ont été payés de leurs peines, puisqu'ils ont pu raviver chez cette grande nation anglaise, et le respect du nom de Molière, et le goût de notre littérature dramatique,"—a reflection that appears to be as far wide of the truth as any with which we have the honour to be acquainted. For the rest, it must be owned that M. Sarcey's journal appears to have far less of interest and importance as an historical document than as a mirror of its distinguished author's mind. Its tone is paternal and wondering, its sentiments are mostly noble, its humour is judicious and careful, its originality is often striking. It is pleasant to note that M. Sarcey no longer holds that an English dramatic critic is the paid servant of a syndicate of lessees and managers. He is still, however, a kind of latter-day edition, as it were, of "the most capricious poet, honest Ovid, among the Goths." The sense and point of certain remarks upon his pet company of players and their pieces fill him with rapture and surprise; he considers these evidences of civilization with the pleased, perplexed, astonished smile of Gulliver among the Lilliputians; he seems to have read his Times much as George III. is reported to have examined the dumplings. In connexion with Augier's 'Philiberte' he reports the confidences of an English friend who, "avec son fort accent britannique," did thus declare himself:—"Je crois qu'à Paris vous avez un mot de slang pour caractériser ces sortes de pièces: vous dites que c'est crévant. Nous disons, nous, Tiring, qui est plus poli." After this frank expression of opinion M. Sarcey's surprise that there should be such a thing in England as dramatic criticism seems, it must be confessed, a very natural emotion. Perhaps, however, the author of this criticism upon 'Philiberte' is identical with the ingenious person who explained the prodigious success of 'L'Étourdi' by the perennial popularity of 'Sir Martin Mar-all'—a piece with which the English public is so perfectly familiar, it appears, that 'L'Étourdi' came to it as an old and valued friend; in which case it seems probable that M. Sarcey fell into the hands of wicked men, who did not scruple to amuse themselves à lui terrer des carottes, exactly as though he had been no more than an ordinary intelligent foreigner. It should be added that M. Sarcey, these potentialities to the contrary, is very kindly disposed towards us, and has gone so far as to create for us, in a certain "Lord Chamberlain," an entirely new and original English peer; also, that he is nearly always amusing, and now and then almost instructive.

As regards the history of the Comédie Française under the Commune, it forms by far the most interesting portion of the volume. At the end of the war the famous theatre was in a state that verged upon bankruptcy; matters were so bad, indeed, that the question of winding up the company had actually been put and discussed. At this juncture M. Got—the hero of the adventure from first to last—suggested an expedition to London. The proposition was adopted forthwith, and, after a preliminary journey to the English capital with Bressant, the eminent comedian led over the Channel a company including MM. Delaunay, Talbot, Coquelin, Febvre, Barré, and Garraud, and Mlles. Favart, Jouassain, Provost-Ponsin, and Marie Royer. There were many difficulties to contend with; but M. Got is an obstinate Breton—he loves hard work and obstacles; and, thanks in great measure to his tact, judgment, resolution, and enterprise, the campaign was completely successful. Thirty-four plays were produced, fourteen of them from the old repertory; and the profits of the expedition amounted to upwards of 112,528 francs, which was enough to discharge the common debt and to leave a margin of 17,000 francs. The modest and practical little diary in which M. Got records his achievement should take rank in interest and importance, among documents relative to the history of the famous theatre whose salvation is told in it, with La Grange's 'Registre' itself. How great and urgent was the need of the Comédie Française at this period will be understood from the fact that in the May of 1871 the theatre, with a monthly liability of not much less than 40,000 francs, could command no more than some 12,000 francs in the world. It is evident, indeed, that histrionic and dramatic art were ill appreciated under the Commune. Between the 28th of March and the 31st of May some fifty-one performances were given at the Comédie, the gross receipts at which amounted to only 13,532 francs. The most lucrative of these performances was that of 'Le Duc Job,' on the 30th of March, at which the receipts were 719 francs; the least was that of the 20th of May, when 'Phèdre,' 'Le Legs,' and 'Les Projets de Ma Tante' were played to a house of 54 francs. In this connexion it is worthy of note that once before, in 1831, 'Le Legs,' this time in company with the 'Tartufe,' had been played to a house of 68 francs only; the piece has thus the doubtful honour of having been presented to two of the smallest audiences ever gathered together within the Comédie Française.

Grammatical Society.

THE revival this night of 'The Corsican Brothers' at the Lyceum retrieves the week from absolute sterility, and may be said to mark the commencement of the autumnal season.

THE début of M. Leloir at the Comédie Française in the rôle of Harpagon has been but moderately successful. Complaints are beginning to be heard that M. Perrin is not happy in his selection of pensionnaires.

THE entertainment to be given at the reopening of the Gymnase Dramatique will consist, according to the Revue et Gazette des Théâtres, of a revival of 'L'Innocente,' a comédiette of Chéri-Montigny, in which Mdlle. Noirty will make her début, and of 'La Papillonne' of M. Victorien Sardou, and the first performance of 'Nina la Tueuse,' a one-act comedy in verse, the author of which is not named. A prologue is to be spoken by Madame Pasca.

'L'ARBRE DE NOÛL' is the title of a new fleurie, by MM. Mortier, Leterrier, and Vanloo, in rehearsal at the Porte Saint Martin.

'La Roussotte,' a new comedy of MM. Meilhac and Halévy, is to be produced at the Variétés in the course of the present season.

MISCELLANEA

The Pound of Flesh.—With reference to Mr. Moncreux Conway's treatment of this subject in its aspect as a tradition from early times (Nineteenth Century for May), I have lately come across an Indian story which gives a remarkable parallel. Lieut. R. Carnac Temple has kindly sent me from India a translation of some 'Tales told in the Deccan.' They are a 'literal translation of the 'Hikāyat Latifah' of Muhammad Abd-ul-aziz of Madras, in the Dakhani Dialect,' and this seems to be a direct copy of the 'Hikāyat-i-Latif,' to be found in Gladwin's 'Persian Moonshes,' an educational work published in 1801. But from what source Mr. Gladwin gathered his collection of stories, Lieut. Temple, in his introduction, says he has not been able to find out. They appear to me to be of native origin, but at all events it is worth while drawing your readers' attention to (or perhaps the New Shakspeare Society would like to note) the following story, No. 9 in the collection. I transcribe it exactly as it stands:—'A man made a bet with another about a game, and said, 'If I do not win the game you may cut from my body a seer (i.e. 2 lbs.) of flesh.' When he did not win the game the winner wished to close the bet, but the man would not agree to it. They both went before the judge. The judge said to the winner, 'Pardon him the bet,' but he would not agree to do it. The judge, being very angry, said, 'Cut away, but if you cut more or less than a seer (2 lbs.) I will punish you.' The winner, being helpless, forgave him the bet.'

G. L. GOMME.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—G. F.—C. B.—E. D.—received.
L. G.—No address.
No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW LIST.

The New Volume of the "Tauchnitz Series" of German Authors is entitled,

BRIGITTA: a Tale.

By BERTHOLD AUERBACH,
Author of 'On the Heights,' &c.

Translated by CLARA BELL.

Cloth, 18mo. price 2s.

Now ready, crown 8vo. cloth extra, 12s. 6d.

ALBANIA:

A NARRATIVE OF RECENT TRAVEL.

By E. F. KNIGHT, Barrister-at-Law.

With several Illustrations.

PRACTICAL BLOWPIPE ASSAYING.

By GEORGE ATTWOOD, F.G.S. Assoc. Inst. C.E.
F.C.S. Mem. Am. Inst. M.E., &c.

With 74 Woodcut Illustrations. Price 12s. 6d.

[Just ready.]

NEW NOVEL, NOW READY,

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'GINK'S BABY,'

LISA LENA.

By EDWARD JENKINS.

In 2 vols. crown 8vo. 12s.

A SAILOR'S SWEETHEART.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL,

Author of 'The Wreck of the Grosvenor,' 'John Holdsworth,' 'Chief Mate,' &c.

In 3 vols.

* * In consequence of arrangements for simultaneous publication in England and America, Mr. Russell's New Novel will not be issued until October 1.

Now ready, in wrapper, Part VI. price 1s. 6d.

MR. WILLIAM BLACK'S SUNRISE: a Story of These Times.

FORTY YEARS' RECOLLECTIONS:

Literary and Political. By THOMAS FROST, Author of 'The Social History of the European Revolution,' &c. Crown 8vo. cloth extra, price 10s. 6d.

Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 1s. 6d. each Volume.

FOREIGN COUNTRIES and BRITISH COLONIES. Edited by F. & PULLING, M.A.

The New Volumes now ready in this Series are—
PERU. By Clements K. Markham, M.A. C.B. With Map and Illustrations.

AUSTRIA. By D. Kay, F.R.G.S. With Map and Illustrations.

GREECE. By L. Benguet, B.A. With Maps and Illustrations.

THE WEST INDIES. By C. H. Eden, F.R.G.S. With Map and Illustrations.

Now ready, demy 8vo. 450 pages. cloth extra, price 5s. 6d.

NAVIES OF THE WORLD: giving Concise Descriptions of the Plans, Armament, and Armour of the Naval Vessels of Twenty of the Principal Nations, together with the latest Developments in Ordnance, Torpedoes, and Naval Architecture, and a Concise Summary of the Principal Naval Battles of the last Twenty Years, 1860 to 1880. By Lieut. EDWARD W. VERT, U.S.N. With more than 400 Plans, Sketches, &c., and a Complete Index.

Now ready, crown 8vo. cloth extra, price 10s. 6d.

EVERY-DAY ENGLISH. By Richard

GRANT WHITE. It treats of Speech Writing, Grammar, Words and Phrases, pointing out the Errors which abound in our common use of English, and by its happy combination of learning and humour, makes a book which all intelligent persons can read with equal profit and enjoyment.

Now ready, small post 8vo. cloth extra, price 3s. 6d.

MOUNTAIN and PRAIRIE: a Journey from Victoria to Winnipeg, and Peace River Pass. By the Rev DANIEL M. GORDON, B.D., Ottawa. With Maps and Illustrations.

Now ready, demy 8vo. cloth extra, price 10s.

The AUSTRALIAN ABROAD.

Sketches from the Main Routes round the World. Second Series—Ceylon, India and Egypt. By JAMES HINGSTON. With many fine Illustrations. Uniform with the First Series.

BEATRICE MELTON'S DISCIPLINE.

By MAUD JEANNE FRANC. Author of 'Marian,' 'Minnie's Mission,' &c. Small 8vo. cloth gilt, price 6s.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE & RIVINGTON,
Crown Buildings, 188, Fleet-street, E.C.

Standard Educational Works

PUBLISHED BY

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS.

GEOGRAPHICAL TEXT-BOOKS. By the Rev ALBEX. MACKAY, LL.D. F.R.G.S.

MANUAL of MODERN GEOGRAPHY.
Mathematical, Physical, and Political; on a New Plan. 8th Thousand, Revised. Pp. 300, 7s. 6d.

ELEMENTS of MODERN GEOGRAPHY.
4th Thousand, Revised. Pp. 300, 7s.

OUTLINES of MODERN GEOGRAPHY.
12th Thousand, Revised. Pp. 112, 1s.

THE INTERMEDIATE GEOGRAPHY.
Intended as an Intermediate Book between the Author's 'Outlines of Geography' and 'Elements of Geography.' Sixth Edition, Revised. Pp. 224, 2s.

FIRST STEPS in GEOGRAPHY. 69th
Thousand, Revised. Pp. 36, sewed, 4d.; in cloth, 6d.

GEOGRAPHY of the BRITISH EMPIRE.

GEOLOGY and PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY.
By DAVID PAGE, LL.D. F.R.S.E. F.G.S., &c.

INTRODUCTORY TEXT-BOOK of GEOLOGY With Illustrations and Chemical Index.
Eleventh Edition. 1s. 6d.

ADVANCED TEXT-BOOK of GEO-LOGY: Descriptive and Industrial. With Engravings and Glossary of Scientific Terms. Sixth Edition, Revised and Enlarged. 7s. 6d.

THE CRUST of the EARTH: a Handy
Outline of Geology. Sixth Edition. 1s.

INTRODUCTORY TEXT-BOOK of PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY With Sketch-Maps and Illustrations. Ninth Edition. 2s. 6d.

ADVANCED TEXT-BOOK of PHYSI-CAL GEOGRAPHY. With Engravings. Second Edition. 6s.

ELEMENTS of PHYSIOGRAPHY and PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY With express reference to the Instructions recently issued by the Science and Art Department. By the Rev ALBEX. MACKAY, LL.D. With numerous Illustrations. 12th Thousand. Pp. 150, 1s. 6d.

ENGLISH LITERATURE.

ENGLISH PROSE COMPOSITION: a
Practical Manual for Use in Schools. By JAMES CURRIE.
M.A. 2nd Thousand. 1s. 6d.

AN ETYMOLOGICAL AND PRONOUNCING
DICTIONARY of the ENGLISH LAN-GUAGE Including a very Copious Selection of Scientific, Technical, and other Terms and Phrases. Designed for Use in Schools and Colleges. By the Rev JAMES STURMOUTH.
The Pronunciation carefully revised by the Rev F. H. PHILLIP.
M.A. Fifth Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Pp. 300, 7s. 6d.

THE SCHOOL ETYMOLOGICAL DIC-
TIONARY and WORD BOOK. By the same. Pp. 200, 2s.

THE HANDY SCHOOL DICTIONARY.
For Use in Elementary Schools, and as a pocket Reference Dictionary. By the same. Pp. 200, 6d.

ARITHMETIC, &c.

PRIMER of GEOMETRY: an Easy
Introduction to the Propositions of Euclid. By FRANCIS CUTHBERTSON, M.A. LL.D. Third Edition. 1s. 6d.

TREATISE on ARITHMETIC. With numerous Exercises for Teaching in Classes. By JAMES WATSON. Fcap. 1s.

THE THEORY of ARITHMETIC. By DAVID MURN F.R.S.E. Mathematical Master, Royal High School of Edinburgh. 8vo. pp. 204, 3s.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

GRIFFITH & FARRAN'S

NEW BOOKS FOR THE AUTUMN AND WINTER SEASON, 1880.

C. B. BERRY.

The OTHER SIDE: How It Struck Us. Being Sketches of a Winter Visit to the United States and Canada. By C. B. BERRY. Demy 8vo. cloth, 2s. [Shortly.]

Miss E. S. HARTSHORNE.

DESIGNS for CHURCH EMBROIDERY and CREWEL WORK, from Old Examples: a Set of Upwards of Sixty Patterns. Collected and Arranged by Miss E. S. HARTSHORNE. 15 Sheets demy, 3 Sheets Text, in handsome cloth case, 5s. [Just out.]

OLIVE THORNE MILLER.

NIMPO'S TROUBLES. By OLIVE THORNE MILLER, Author of 'Little Folks in Feather and Fur.' Illustrated by Mary Hallock and Sol. Eytinge. Cloth, 3s. 6d. [Shortly.]

JOANNA H. MATTHEWS.

BELLE'S PINK BOOTS. By JOANNA H. MATTHEWS, Author of the 'Bessie Books.' With 16 Coloured Illustrations by Ida Waugh. Cloth elegant, 9s. [Preparing.]

J. R. BLAKISTON, M.A.

GLIMPSES of ENGLAND: a Geographical Reading Book for Children. By J. R. BLAKISTON, M.A., Author of 'Glimpses of the Globe,' &c. Fcap. 8vo. paper boards, 9d. [Just out.]

The two books, 'Glimpses of the Globe' and 'Glimpses of England,' cover the whole of the knowledge required to secure a CLASS GRANT for Geography in Standards II. and III.

They will be shortly followed by 'GLIMPSES of the BRITISH EMPIRE,' which is intended as a Supplementary Reading Book for use in the Upper Standards.

E. C. PHILLIPS.

TROPICAL READING BOOKS. Intended for Use in West Indies and elsewhere. Written at the request of the Right Rev. Bishop Courtenay, late Bishop of Kingston, Jamaica. By E. C. PHILLIPS. Profusely illustrated, paper boards, with attractive wrapper. Book I. 2d. Book II. 1s. Book III. 1s. [Just out.]

J. L. SHADWELL.

HEROES of HISTORY and LEGEND. Translated by JOHN LANCELOT SHADWELL, from the German 'Charakterbilder aus Geschichte und Sage,' by A. W. GRUBE. Crown 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d. [Shortly.]

NEW SERIES OF FOURPENNY AND SIXPENNY BOOKS.

OUR BOYS' LITTLE LIBRARY: Pictures and Reading for Little Folk. A Series of Twelve elegant little Volumes in paper boards, with attractive Covers in Chromo-lithography, each 4d.; cloth extra, 6d. Every page is illustrated.

The Twelve Volumes in a Box, with fancy lid, paper boards, 4s.; cloth, 6s.

They are especially suited for Sunday School Prizes and Rewards.

Captain W. A. ANDREWS and Dr. MACAULAY.

A DARING VOYAGE ACROSS the ATLANTIC, by Two Americans, the Brothers ANDREWS, in a small Boat, The Nautilus. The Log of the Voyage by Captain WILLIAM A. ANDREWS, with Introduction and Notes by Dr. MACAULAY. Editor of the Boy's Own Paper. Crown 8vo. with Illustrations, cloth, 2s. 6d. [Just out.]

DEACONESSES in the CHURCH of ENGLAND: a Short Essay on the Order as Existing in the Primitive Church, and on their Present Position and Work. Revised by the Very Rev. the DEAN of CHESTER. With a Prefatory Note by His Grace the ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY. Post 8vo. cloth, 1s. 6d. [Just out.]

MUDGE and her CHICKS: a Story of Children's Home Doings. By a BROTHER and SISTER. Cloth elegant, with 16 Illustrations, 2s. 6d. [Shortly.]

Mrs. MINNIE DOUGLAS.

TWO ROSE TREES: the Adventures of Twin Sisters. By Mrs. MINNIE DOUGLAS. With 16 Illustrations, cloth elegant, 2s. 6d. [Just out.]

E. C. PHILLIPS.

HILDA and her DOLL. By E. C. PHILLIPS, Author of 'The Orphans,' 'Bunchy,' &c. With 14 Illustrations, cloth elegant, 2s. 6d. [Preparing.]

C. E. BOWEN.

The HOUSE on the BRIDGE; and other Tales. By C. E. BOWEN, Author of 'Among the Brigands,' &c. Crown 8vo. with 13 Illustrations by A. H. Collins, cloth, 2s. 6d. [Shortly.]

NEW NINEPENNY SERIES.

The TINY NATURAL HISTORY SERIES of STORY BOOKS about ANIMALS for LITTLE READERS. A Series of Twelve Volumes, all profusely illustrated by the best Artists, elegantly bound in paper boards, with Covers in Chromo-lithography, each 9d. The Twelve Volumes in Cardboard Box with Picture Top, price 9s.

Especially adapted for Sunday School Prizes and Rewards. In one way or another the Books either impart knowledge about animals or inculcate the desirableness of treating them with kindness.

NEW SERIES OF FOURPENNY AND SIXPENNY BOOKS.

OUR GIRLS' LITTLE LIBRARY: Pictures and Reading for Little Folk. A Series of Twelve elegant little Volumes in paper boards, with attractive Covers in Chromo-lithography, each 4d.; cloth extra, each 6d. Every page is illustrated.

The above Twelve Volumes in Box, with fancy lid, paper boards, 4s.; cloth, 6s.

They are especially suited for Sunday School Prizes and Rewards.

A NEW SERIES OF EIGHTEENPENNY BOOKS, UNIFORM IN SIZE, STYLE, AND PRICE.

Attractively bound in cloth, printed in red and gold, and Illustrated by eminent Artists.

FATHER TIME'S STORY BOOK for the LITTLE ONES. By Kathleen Knox.

A CHILD'S INFLUENCE. By Miss Lockyer.

LUCY'S CAMPAIGN. By M. and C. Lee.

ADVENTURES in FANTI-LAND. By Mrs. R. Lee.

HAPPY HOLIDAYS. By Emma Davenport.

ALWAYS HAPPY. By A Mother.

FROM PEASANT to PRINCE; or, the Life of Alexander Menschikoff. By Mrs. Pitzker.

MY GRANDMOTHER'S BUDGET. By Mrs. Broderip.

CONSTANCE and NELLIE. By Emma Davenport.

The HEROIC WIFE. By W. H. G. Kingston.

CORNER COTTAGE and its INMATES. By Frances Osborne.

GRANNY'S WONDERFUL CHAIR. By B. F. Browne.

A NEW SERIES OF SHILLING BOOKS, UNIFORM IN SIZE, STYLE, AND PRICE.

Attractively bound in cloth, printed in silver and gold, and Illustrated by eminent Artists.

GRANDMAMMA'S RELICS. By HARRY at SCHOOL. By E. C. E. Bowen. Marryat Norris.

HOLIDAY TALES. By Florence WILFORD. JULIA MATTLAND. By M. and E. Kirby.

ALICE and BEATRICE. By GRANDMAMMA. HOLIDAYS AMONG the MOUNTAINS. By M. Betham-Edwards.

The CHILDREN'S PICNIC. By E. Marryat Norris. CHRISTIAN ELLIOTT. By L. N. Comyn.

AMONG the BRIGANDS; and other Tales of Adventure. By C. E. Bowen. THE DISCONTENTED CHILDREN. By M. and E. Kirby.

WRECKED, NOT LOST. By PAUL HOWARD'S CAPTIVITY. By E. Marryat Norris.

GRIFFITH & FARRAN, WEST CORNER OF ST. PAUL'S CHURCHYARD, LONDON.

THE TOURIST'S COMPANION FOR THE ROAD, RAIL, OR RIVER.
Sold by all Booksellers, 3 vols. cloth gilt, 10s. 6d.

ABBEYS, CASTLES, AND ANCIENT HALLS OF ENGLAND AND WALES: their Legendary Lore and Popular History—South Midland North. By JOHN TYNES Author of Curiousities of London, and ALBERT DICKINSON. With Novel Engravings. Each volume complete in itself, or sold separately, each 3s. 6d.
Frederick Warne & Co. Bedford-street, Strand.

ABBEYS, CASTLES, AND ANCIENT HALLS OF ENGLAND AND WALES:—Contents of Vol. I. (South). London and Wales, Essex, Kent, Sussex, Hampshire, Dorset, Devonshire, Cornwall, Channel Islands, Guernsey, Jersey. Price 3s. 6d.; post free, 4s.
Frederick Warne & Co. Bedford-street, Strand.

ABBEYS, CASTLES, AND ANCIENT HALLS OF ENGLAND AND WALES:—Contents of Vol. II. (Midland). With the Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, Bedfordshire, Suffolk, Norfolk, Huntingdon, Cambridgeshire, Northamptonshire, Rutlandshire, Leicestershire, Warwickshire, Oxfordshire, Gloucestershire, Monmouthshire, Hereford, Worcestershire, Staffordshire, Shropshire. 3s. 6d.; post free, 4s.
Frederick Warne & Co. Bedford-street, Strand.

ABBEYS, CASTLES, AND ANCIENT HALLS OF ENGLAND AND WALES:—Contents of Vol. III. (North). Yorkshire, Nottinghamshire, Derbyshire, Lancashire, Cheshire, Yorkshire, Durham, Cumberland, Westmorland, Merioneth, Northumberland, &c. 3s. 6d.; post free, 4s.
Frederick Warne & Co. Bedford-street, Strand.

NOTES ON SOME DISPUTED POINTS IN INDIAN FINANCE AND TAXATION By H. CUNNINGHAM, M.A., a Judge of the High Court of Calcutta, and Member of the Finance Commission.
London: W. H. Allen & Co. 12, Waterloo-place.

IN GIPSY TENTS.
Just ready, crown 8vo. cloth, price 7s. 6d.
FRANCIS HINDS GLOOME.
Author of "Gipsies" in the Encyclopedia Britannica, &c.
With Illustrations.
Edinburgh: William P. Nimmo & Co.; and at all Libraries and Book-shops.

EXTRAORDINARY ADVENTURES OF A REPORTER. Giving Twenty Years' experience on the Press, showing the Means and Surest Method of becoming an Efficient and Rapid Photographic Short-hand Writer and containing valuable Hints on all Branches of Reporting. Amusing and interesting to Members of the Press, and invaluable to Young Photographers and Typists in the Art of Reporting. Written and compiled by FRANK J. LOCK, Author of "The Reporter's Companion," "How to become an Expert Artist," "Marian's Reader" (25,000), &c.
25, Market-street, Leicester.

ROUND ABOUT A GREAT ESTATE.
By RICHARD JEFFREY.
A story of "The Gainsborough at Home," "Wild Life in a Southern County," "The Amateur Pouchard," &c.
Crown 8vo. 2s.

"As fresh, as picturesque, and as daintily written as 'The Gainsborough at Home.' A very pleasant volume."—Globe.
"The work of one who is an intelligent and observant lover of nature and of country life. We have read his book with pleasure, and recommended it to others."—Queen.
London: Smith, Elder & Co. 12, Waterloo-place.

OLIVER CONSTABLE. Miller and Baker.
By SARAH TITTLER.
Author of "Oliver's Journey," "Scottish Fire," &c.
3 vols. post 8vo.
"An exceedingly interesting tale. We regard it as one of the best works of the gifted authoress."—Cont. Journal.
"Miss Tittler writes exceedingly well. Her novel does not very great credit, and merits a well-earned success."—John Bull.
London: Smith, Elder & Co. 12, Waterloo-place.

TRUBNER & CO.'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

CHEAP EDITION OF MR. ARNOLD'S POPULAR FORM ON BUDDHA AND BUDDHISM.
THE LIGHT OF ASIA; or, the Great Renunciation. Before the Life and Teaching of Gautama, Prince of India and Founder of Buddhism. By EDWIN ARNOLD, C.S.I., Officer of the order of the White Elephant of Siam. Crown 8vo. Illustrations, paper boards, or limp parchment, 1s. 6d.

LINGUISTIC AND ORIENTAL ESSAYS. Written from the year 1840 to 1879. By ROBERT NERDAM CUNT late Member of Her Majesty's Indian Civil Service. Hon. Sec. to Asiatic Society, and Author of "The Modern Languages of the East Indies." Post 8vo. cloth, 15s.

MIRACLE PLAYS AND SACRED DRAMAS. an Historical Survey. By Dr. KARL HASE. Translated from the German by A. HAYDON and Edited by the Rev. W. JACKSON FELLOW of Exeter College, Oxford. Post 8vo. cloth, 9s.

THE BIRDS OF CORNWALL and the SCILLY ISLANDS. By the late EDWARD HEARLEIGH RODD. Edited, with an Introduction, Appendix, and Brief Memoir of the Author, by JAMES E. HANTING F.R.S. Foss 8vo. with Portrait and Map, cloth, 14s.

RECOLLECTIONS OF TRAVEL IN NEW ZEALAND AND AUSTRALIA. By JAMES COUTH CRAWFORD, late Member of the Legislative Council of New Zealand, Resident Magistrate, Wellington, &c. 8vo. with Maps and Illustrations, cloth, 16s.

POLITICAL ECONOMY for the PEOPLE. By JOHN LAURENCE SHADWELL, Author of "A System of Political Economy." Crown 8vo. limp cloth, 1s. 6d.

EVOLUTION and INVOLUTION. By GEORGE THOMSON, Author of "The World of Being," &c. Crown 8vo. cloth, 5s.

ACROSS the ZODIAC: the Story of a Wrecked Record. Recaptured. Translated and Edited by PERCY QUERQUEN, Author of "The Devil's Advocate." 2 vols. crown 8vo. cloth, 21s.
London: T. Fisher & Co. Ludgate-hill.

The Third Edition, price Eighteenpence.
ELEMENTA LATINA: or, Latin Lessons for Beginners. By W. H. MORRIS.
London: Longmans & Co.

HOW TO READ THE GREEK TESTAMENT.
The Seventh Edition price 3s. 6d.—H.E.T., price 2s.
GREEK LESSONS, showing how Useful and how Easy it is for every one to Learn Greek. By W. H. MORRIS.
London: Longmans & Co.

PROF. HEER'S 'PRIMEVAL WORLD OF SWITZERLAND,' with Geological Map and 600 Illustrations. Edited by JAMES HEYWOOD, M.A., F.R.S. 16 2 vols. 8vo. price 15s.
London: Longmans & Co.

Now ready (Sept. 1880), printed on sheet of extra Drawing Paper 34 in. by 21 in. and Coloured by hand, price 12s. 6d. To be had also folded in a cloth Case and coloured price 13s., or Mounted on linen and stretched upon a Roller for suspension, price 15s.

NEW MAP OF SOUTH AFRICA. Containing Cape Colony, Orange Free State, Transvaal, Zululand, Natal, Transvaal, Orange Free State, Zululand, Natal, and other Territories. Compiled from the best available Colonial and Imperial Information, and from the Official Map recently compiled by the Survey-General, Cape Town. Engraved by T. R. JOHNSON, F.R.S. & Co., Geographers to the Queen.
London: Longmans & Co.

FOURTH EDITION, WITH AN APPENDIX.
Just published, 8vo. cloth, 10s.

FIRST PRINCIPLES. By HERBERT SPENCER.
Fifth Thousand. With an Appendix dealing with Criticism (which may be had separately, price 6d.).
Williams & Norgate, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London, and 25, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

TALES FROM 'BLACKWOOD.' New Series.
Containing 30 Tales of absorbing interest. In 24 Shilling Parts, each complete in itself, or elegantly bound in 12 heavy volumes, extra cloth 8s.
"The most engaging and instructive of travelling companions."—Times.
"Hanging from grave to gay from mythic to absurd, the stories are for all readers of books and for every order of taste."—Illustrated.
"If you want to be idle, and not to be idle too long,—not to enter on a novel,—we hardly know a better way of attaining your end than to take up one of these twelve volumes."—Spectator.
Wholesale Messrs. Blackwood & Sons, Edinburgh and London; and all Book-shops.

COLLINS'S ADVANCED SCIENCE SERIES.
NEW VOLUMES AND NEW EDITIONS.

Just published,
PRACTICAL PLANE GEOMETRY AND PROJECTION.
For Science Classes, Schools, and Colleges.
Adapted to the requirements of the Royal School of Mines, the Royal Military Academy, Cooper's Hill Engineering College, and the Science and Art Department.
By HENRY ANGEL.
Lecturer at the Blacklock Literary and Scientific Institution. An.
In Two Volumes. Vol. I Text, 2s. 6d.; Vol. II Plates, 1s.

MAGNETISM AND ELECTRICITY.
By FRÉDÉRIC GUTHRIE,
Professor of Physics, Royal School of Mines.
With 250 Illustrations. New and Revised Edition. 12th Thousand.
Post 8vo. cloth, 3s. 6d.
Williams Collins, Sons & Co. Limited, Bedford-place, London, E.C.; and all Book-shops.

PRINCIPAL DAWSON'S POPULAR GEOLOGICAL WORKS.
"Since Hugh Miller no geologist has possessed so graphic a pen as Dr. Dawson."—Literary Churchman.

Just published, with 44 Illustrations, 7s. 6d.

FOSSIL MEN and their MODERN REPRESENTATIVES. An Attempt to Illustrate the Character and Condition of Prehistoric Man in Europe by those of the American Race. By J. W. DAWSON, LL.D. F.R.S. F.G.S.

"A keen observer of the habits of the red man, and a diligent student of American antiquities, he is able by analogical reasoning to throw light upon the probable condition of prehistoric man in Europe, and upon the nature of the relics which he has bequeathed to us."—Illustrated.

THE STORY OF THE EARTH and MAN. Sixth Edition, 20 Illustrations, 7s. 6d.
"A very able and interesting sketch of geological science."—Spectator.

THE ORIGIN OF THE WORLD. According to Revelation and Science. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

LIFE'S DAWN ON EARTH. Being the History of the oldest known Fossil Reptile and their Relations to Geological Time and to the Development of the Animal Kingdom. Second Thousand, numerous Illustrations, 7s. 6d.
London: Hender & Roughton, 27, Paternoster-row.

LOSS OF TIME IS LOSS OF MONEY.

ACCIDENTS CAUSE LOSS OF TIME, and may be provided against by a Policy of the RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY. The Oldest and Largest Annuity Assurance Company. Right Hon. Lord KINNARD, Chairman.
Subscribed Capital 1,000,000. Matured Premiums. Funds allowed to insure of Five Years' standing. A fixed sum in case of Death by Accident and a Weekly Allowance in the event of Injury.
ONE MILLION and a HALF has been paid as COMPENSATION. Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Station, the Lower Arcade, or 64, Cornhill, London. WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

THE ANGLO-EGYPTIAN BANKING COMPANY Limited, having branches at Alexandria, Cairo, and Ismailia, is prepared to transact every description of General Banking Business with these Places.
O. F.O.A. Secretary
London, 27, Clements-lane, E.C.

THE WYNAD PERSEVERANCE ESTATE and GOLD MINING COMPANY, Limited.
CAPITAL 80,000.
IN 80,000 SHARES OF 10 EACH.
Of which 25,000 Shares are taken by the Vendor, and the Balance of 55,000 Shares is now offered for Subscription at par.
Payment as follows:—2s. 6d. on Application, 2s. 6d. on Allotment, 15s. 2 Months after Allotment.

DIRECTORS.
H. PALMER STONE, Esq., J.P. Chairman of the South-West Wynnad Estate and Gold Mining Company, Limited.
ARTHUR HALL, Esq., } Directors of the South-West
S. HUGHES NEWITT, Esq., } Wynnad Estate and Gold
ROBERT JAMES LAING, Esq., } Mining Company, Limited.
(With power to add to their number.)

BANKERS.
In London: THE IMPERIAL BANK, Limited, No. 4, Lombard-street, E.C.
In India: THE AGRA BANK, Limited, Agra, Madras.

SOLICITORS.
Messrs. NEWMAN, STRATTON, & HILLIARD, 13 and 14, Cornhill, E.C.

ADVISORS.
To be nominated by the Shareholders.
BROKERS.
Messrs. FIELDING & SON, 4, Cornhill-court, E.C.

SECRETARY.
W. H. THOMPSON, Esq.
OFFICES.
1, QUEEN VICTORIA-STREET, LONDON, E.C.

This Company is formed to acquire, cultivate, and develop the Perseverance Estate in the South-East Wynnad, in the Madras Presidency, India, which closely adjoins the Properties belonging to the South-East Wynnad Estate and Gold Mining Company Limited and is surrounded by well-known Estates such as the "Alpha," "Hamulus," "Adipal," "Hansdale," &c. which in Dr. Huxley's Report, are most favourably spoken of as certain or Gold Quizzes.
The following is the telegraphic summary of the Preliminary Report of Mr. Oliver Pender, the Consulting Engineer to the South-East Wynnad Estate and Gold Mining Company, Limited, under date 14th of June, 1880:—
"This Estate indicates great mineral resources. Gold found several points. Three rich reefs. One splendid, perhaps finest in Wynnad, extensive Native workings. Great mineral facilities. Water, timber, abundant.
Full Prospectuses and Forms of Application for Shares can be obtained at the Offices of the Company, or from the Bankers or Brokers."

FORM OF APPLICATION FOR SHARES.
Gentlemen, Having paid to your Bankers, the Imperial Bank, Limited, Lombard-street, E.C., the sum of £.... being the Deposit upon Application for.... Shares, I hereby request you to allot me that number and I agree to take the same, or any less number, and to pay up the balance in accordance with the terms of the Prospectus, dated 11th of September 1880, and I agree to be bound by the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the Company, and request you to register me as a Member of the Company.
Name.....
Address.....
Profession or Occupation.....
Date.....
(Used signed).....

PHOENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD-STREET
and CHANCERY CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1782.
Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.
Insurance effected in all parts of the World.
Wm. J. BLOOMFIELD, Secretary.

SUN FIRE OFFICE.
Thameside-street, E.C. Chancery Cross, S.W.
Oxford-street (corner of Vere-street), W.
Established 1710.
Risks and Foreign Insurance effected.
Sum insured in 1879, £28,422,461.
FRANCIS H. BELTON, Secretary.

SUN LIFE OFFICE, LONDON.
Established 1810.
CHIEF OFFICE—40, Thameside-street.
BRANCH OFFICE—40, Chancery Cross.
And at Oxford-street, corner of Vere-street.
Life Assurances of all descriptions.
Specially Low Rates for Young Lives, and for Non-Participating Policies.
Prompt Settlement of Claims.
A new and greatly simplified form of Proposal, also the Society's newly-compiled Prospectus, will be forwarded on application.
J. O. PRINGLE, Actuary.

EAGLE INSURANCE COMPANY,
70, FLEET-MALL.
Accumulated Funds .. £1,043,142
Also a Subscribed Capital of more than .. £1,500,000
Reports, Prospectuses, and Forms may be had at the Office, or from any of the Company's Agents, post free from the Company to declare the 15th Anniversary of the Company's formation.
GEORGE HUMPHREYS, Actuary and Secretary.

THE LIVERPOOL and LONDON and GLOBE INSURANCE COMPANY.
1, Dale-street, Liverpool; Cornhill and Chancery Cross, London.

FIRE—LIFE—ANNUITY.
The Report and Accounts for 1879 showed the net Income for that Year .. £1,181,405
The Capital (paid up) .. 243,000
The General Reserve and Fire & Re-insurance Fund .. 1,350,000
The Balance of Profit and Loss Account after paying Dividend .. 87,000
The Life and Annuity Fund .. 80,100
The last Actuarial Valuation showed that the New Life Insurance Class had been very successful, enabling the Company to declare the 15th Anniversary Bonus of 35 per cent. per annum on the Policies effected in that class during the quinquennium.
All descriptions of Fire Insurance effected upon favourable terms.
FIRE RENEWAL PREMIUMS falling DUE at MICHAELMAS should be paid within fifteen days thereafter.

NOTICE.—MARKS, DURLACHER BROS.
305, OXFORD-STREET, W.
ANTIQUE WORKS OF ART and general Objects of Decoration. The authenticity of every Object guaranteed.

BOUDOIR and LIBRARY BOOKCASES (Open).
All sizes. Designs "Tudor," "Gothic," "Gilt," "Lombard" and "Chippendale" styles. Dimensions and Gold 5 feet by 3 feet 6 inches. Mahogany, or Oak. Cash if satisfactory. Illustrated Price Catalogue. H. WEAVERHEAD, High-road, Ley, E.S.

MISS AMELIA B. EDWARDS'S NEW NOVEL.

SECOND EDITION, at all the Libraries, in 3 vols.

LORD BRACKENBURY.

By AMELIA B. EDWARDS,

Author of 'Barbara's History,' 'Debenham's Vow,' &c.

HURST & BLACKETT, Publishers, 15, Great Marlborough-street.

MR. LONGFELLOW'S NEW VOLUME OF POEMS.

Now ready, in fcap. 8vo, paper cover, price 1s.

ULTIMA THULE.

By HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW.

(COPYRIGHT.)

GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS, Broadway, Ludgate-hill.

Now ready, demy 8vo, cloth, price 18s.

A GUIDE TO THE STUDY OF BOOK-PLATES

(EX-LIBRIS).

With 16 Plates in Fac-simile.

By Hon. J. LEICESTER WARREN, M.A.

JOHN PEARSON, 46, Pall Mall, London.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY was established in 1842, in order to meet the growing demand of the age for a Higher Class of Books than could then be readily obtained on moderate terms from the ordinary Circulating Libraries. Great care has always been taken, in the selection of Books, to study the wishes of Subscribers, and to make the Library not only "select," but comprehensive.

More than ONE MILLION VOLUMES have been added since 1874.

Additional Copies of all the best New Works continue to be added as the demand increases; and arrangements are made with the leading Publishers for an ample supply of all forthcoming Books of general interest as they appear. The Terms of Subscription are the lowest on which it is possible to furnish a constant succession of the Best and Newest Books.

FIRST-CLASS SUBSCRIPTION, ONE GUINEA PER ANNUM.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTION, TWO GUINEAS per Annum and upwards, according to the number of Volumes required.

Revised Lists of Works recently added, and Catalogues of Surplus Copies withdrawn for Sale at greatly reduced prices, are now ready, and will be forwarded postage free on application.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (LIMITED), NEW OXFORD-STREET.

CITY OFFICE:—2, KING-STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

READERS of FICTION, BIOGRAPHY, HISTORY, TRAVEL,

FRENCH and GERMAN LITERATURE, and Works of every Class, are INVITED to INSPECT the CLUB PREMISES and the CIRCULATING LIBRARY (which contains a large Selection of Vocal and Instrumental Music) of the GROSVENOR GALLERY LIBRARY, NEW BOND-STREET, where Subscribers' Names are entered daily.

The following are a few of the advantages offered by the GROSVENOR GALLERY LIBRARY:—1st. The Books asked for are at once supplied. 2nd. Two Volumes of the Newest Books for 1 Guinea a year. 3rd. Three Volumes of the Newest Books for 1½ Guinea a year. 4th. Four Volumes of the Newest Books delivered free for 2 Guinea a year. 5th. Six Volumes of the Newest Books, together with the Use of the Club, for 3 Guinea a year.—N.B. Specially advantageous terms are quoted to Country Subscribers. All information promptly supplied on application to Mr. CHARLES ALLEN, GROSVENOR GALLERY LIBRARY (LIMITED), NEW BOND-STREET, W.

EPPS'S
CHOCOLATE ESSENCE.

Product of a special refining process. It is Chocolate devoided of its over-richness and substantiality. Sugarless, and, when made, of the consistence of Coffee. An Afternoon Chocolate. Each packet is labelled

JAMES EPPS & CO.
Homoeopathic Chemists, London.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S

STEEL PENS.

Sold by all Stationers throughout the World.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT ON

NORRIS'S MINE SYSTEM.

The Original, Best, and most Liberal.

Cash Prices.

No extra charge for time given.

Illustrated Patent Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post free.
F. MOEDER, 245, 246, 250, Tottenham Court-road; and 15, 20, and 25, Marwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above Premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious Warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites, from 25 to 40 Guineas.

Drawing-room Suits, from 15 to 40 Guineas.

Dining-room Suits, from 15 to 40 Guineas.

And all other Goods in great variety.

F. MOEDER, 245, 246, 250, Tottenham Court-road; and 15, 20, and 25, Marwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

KNIVES, FORKS, and SPOONS.

THE PERFECT SUBSTITUTE for SILVER.

The REAL NICKEL SILVER, when arranged SILVER-PLATED, cannot be distinguished from silver.

With ordinary usage this quality will wear 10 years.

Best Quality, strongly Plated.

	Fiddle or Silver	Band or Throat	King's or Shell
Table Forks	2 s. 6 d.	2 s. 6 d.	2 s. 6 d.
Table Spoons	1 s. 6 d.	1 s. 6 d.	1 s. 6 d.
Desert Forks	1 s. 6 d.	1 s. 6 d.	1 s. 6 d.
Desert Spoons	1 s. 6 d.	1 s. 6 d.	1 s. 6 d.
Ten Spoons	1 s. 6 d.	1 s. 6 d.	1 s. 6 d.

A SECOND QUALITY of Fiddle Pattern Table Spoons or Forks, 2s. per dozen. Desert, 1s. Ten Spoons, 1s.

CUTLERY WARRANTED.

Handled, Screwed or Riveted.
Master of the Finest Steel.

	Table Knives	Desert Knives	Carvers
24 in. Ivory Handles, per doz.	12 s. 6 d.	12 s. 6 d.	12 s. 6 d.
do. do.	12 s. 6 d.	12 s. 6 d.	12 s. 6 d.
do. to balance, do.	12 s. 6 d.	12 s. 6 d.	12 s. 6 d.
do. do.	12 s. 6 d.	12 s. 6 d.	12 s. 6 d.
do. do.	12 s. 6 d.	12 s. 6 d.	12 s. 6 d.
do. large	12 s. 6 d.	12 s. 6 d.	12 s. 6 d.
do. African	12 s. 6 d.	12 s. 6 d.	12 s. 6 d.
do. Silver Handles	12 s. 6 d.	12 s. 6 d.	12 s. 6 d.

CARRIAGE PAID to any Railway Station.

Samples at above rates post free.

WILLIAM S. BURTON, General Furnishing

Ironmonger, 20, Oxford-street, W., &c.
Catalogue, containing 500 Illustrations, post free.

ALLEN'S SOLID LEATHER PORTMANTEAUS.

ALLEN'S VICTORIA DRAWING BAG.

ALLEN'S STRONG IRON HARKETS.

ALLEN'S (REGISTERED) ALBERT WRAP-UP BOX.

ALLEN'S NEW CATALOGUE of 600 Articles for Commercial Travelling, post free.
27, West Strand, London.

APOLLINARIS WATER.

"Liquor d'arsenic Apollinaire."—Brewer, Beck & Co., Ltd.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1870.

ANNUAL SALE, 500,000.

APOLLINARIS COMPANY, Limited, 19, Regent-street, London, E.W.

M. R. G. H. JONES,

SURGEON DENTIST,

21, GREAT RUSSELL-STREET, LONDON

(Opposite the British Museum).

Will be glad to forward his Pamphlet on Painless Dentistry, free, enclosed by post, which explains the most unique system of the adjustment of Artificial Teeth without pain.

Consultation free, from 10 to 2.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved the Pure Magnesia as the best remedy for ACTIVITY of the STOMACH, HEART, LIVER, HEAD, ACHE GOUT and INDIGESTION, and as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitution, Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

OLD DR. JACOB TOWNSEND'S SARSAPILLA.

HILLA—The best Autumnal Medicine for the Blood, Scrofulous Disorders, Gout, and all Skin Diseases. In bottles, 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. of all Chemists. (Child Dose, 1/3 Pint-stroke, E.C.)

DEAN, STEEL & Co.

"I HAVE witnessed some striking cures of Bronchitis and Croup Cases by Dr. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS.—(Signed) J. Ash M.P.S., Holloway-road, Birmingham. Dr. LOCOCK'S WAFERS instantly relieve and rapidly cure Asthma, Consumption, Whooping Cough, Croup, Shortness of Breath, Phlegm, Pain in the Chest, Rheumatism, and many pulmonary—Sold at 1s. 1/2, and 2s. 6d. per box.

THROAT IRRITATION.—Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use

EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.

Glycerine, in these agreeable confections, being in proximity to the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of speaking, becomes actively healing. Sold only in boxes, 7s. 6d. and 1s. 1/2, labelled "James Epps & Co., Homoeopathic Chemists, London."

A letter received.—"Gentlemen,—It may perhaps interest you to know that, after an unusual trial, I have found your Glycerine Jujubes of considerable benefit; with or without medical treatment (in about all forms of throat disease) they soothe and clear the voice. In no case have they done any harm. Yours faithfully Gordon Holmes, L.R.C.S.E., Senior Physician to the Municipal Throat and Ear Infirmary."

MESSRS. CASSELL, PETTER, GALPIN & CO.'S FORTHCOMING VOLUMES FOR THE SEASON 1880-1.

YOUNG IRELAND: a Fragment of Irish History. By the Hon.

Sir CHARLES GAVAN DUFFY, K.O.M.G. Demy 8vo. cloth, 18s.

A HISTORY of MODERN EUROPE. Vol. I. By C. A. Fyffe,

M.A., Fellow of University College, Oxford. About 500 pages, demy 8vo. 12s.

The BRITISH ARMY. Vol. III.

By Sir SIBBALD SCOTT, Bart. Demy 8vo. cloth, 21s.

The ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTION-

ARY Vol. II. A New and Original Work of Reference to all the Words in the English Language, with a full Account of their Origin, Meaning, Pronunciation, and Use. By ROBERT HUNTER, M.A. F.G.S., Memb. Bibl. Archæol. Society, &c. Assisted in special departments by Eminent Authorities. Extra crown 4to. 10s. 6d.

ENGLISH LITERATURE, DICTIO-

ARY of. By W. DAVENPORT ADAMS. Cheap Edition. 10s. 6d.

PHRASE and FABLE, DICTIONARY of By the Rev. Dr. BREWER. New and Cheap Edition, with the addition of a concise Bibliography of English Literature. 8s. 6d.

The PRAISE of BOOKS, as Said and

Sung by English Authors. By J. A. LANGFORD, LL.D. F.R.H.S. 2s. 6d.

EUROPEAN FERNS: their Form,

Habit, and Culture. By JAMES BRITTEN, F.L.S. With 30 Fac-simile Coloured Plates, painted from Nature by D. Blair, F.L.S. Demy 4to. cloth gilt, 21s.

FAMILIAR GARDEN FLOWERS.

First Series. By SHIRLEY HIBBERD, with 40 Coloured Plates by F. R. Hulme, F.L.S. F.S.A. 12s. 6d.

FAMILIAR WILD FLOWERS.

Second Series. By F. R. HULME, F.L.S. F.S.A. Containing 40 Full-Page Coloured Plates. 12s. 6d.

FIGURE PAINTING in WATER

COLOURS. With 16 Coloured Plates from designs by Blanche Macarthur, Medalist, Royal Academy, and Jennie Moore, Medalist, Royal Academy, with Instructions by the Artists. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

SCIENCE for ALL. Yearly Volume for 1880. With about 350 Illustrations and Diagrams, 9s.

The COUNTRIES of the WORLD.

Vols. IV. and V. By ROBERT BROWN, F.R.G.S. Illustrated. 7s. 6d. each.

GREAT INDUSTRIES of GREAT BRITAIN. Complete in 2 vols. With about 400 Illustrations. 7s. 6d. each.

OUR OWN COUNTRY.

Vol. II. With upwards of 500 Original Illustrations, and Steel Frontispiece. 7s. 6d.

The INTERNATIONAL PORTRAIT

GALLERY. Vol. II. With 30 Portraits in Colours, and Biographies from authentic sources. Demy 4to. 11s. 6d.

NEW NATURAL HISTORY.

Edited by Professor F. MARTIN DUNCAN, M.B. F.R.S. Vol. IV. Illustrated throughout, 9s.

WILD WHITE CATTLE of GREAT BRITAIN, The. By the late Rev. JOHN STOREY, M.A. Illustrated. Cheap Edition. 7s. 6d.

The A B C POULTRY-BOOK.

By Mrs. M. A. WILSON. 1s.

ETIQUETTE of GOOD SOCIETY.

Being an Entirely New and Revised Edition of 'The Manners of Modern Society.' Boards, 1s., cloth, 1s. 6d.

The QUIVER VOLUME for 1880.

With about 250 Original Contributions by Eminent Divines and Popular Authors, and about 150 Full-Page Illustrations. Extra royal 8vo. cloth, 7s. 6d.

CASSELL'S FAMILY MAGAZINE

for 1880. With Three complete Serial Stories, numerous short Complete Stories, Original Music, Household and Domestic Essays, &c., together with about 300 Original Illustrations and Coloured Frontispiece. Extra crown 4to. cloth, 9s.

The MAGAZINE of ART. Yearly

Volume for 1880. With about 300 Illustrations by the first Artists of the day, and Etching for Frontispiece. Handsomely bound in cloth gilt, gilt edges, 10s. 6d.

N.B.—The price of Vols. I. and II. has been raised from 7s. 6d. to 10s. 6d. each.

"LITTLE FOLKS" CHRISTMAS

VOLUME. Vol. XII. with Coloured Frontispiece and nearly 300 Pictures. Coloured boards, 2s. 6d.; cloth gilt, 4s.

HEROES of BRITAIN in PEACE and

WAR. By EDWIN HODDER. With about 300 Original Illustrations. 2 vols. 7s. 6d. each.

The SEA: its Stirring Story of Adventure, Peril, and Heroism. By F. WHYMPER. Complete in 4 vols. containing upwards of 400 Original Illustrations. 7s. 6d. each.

WHAT GIRLS CAN DO.

A Book for Mothers and Daughters. By PHILLIS BROWNE, Author of 'A Year's Cookery,' &c. 5s.

THE GIRLS' LIBRARY

A New Series of Volumes specially suitable for Girls' Reading.

HEROINES of the MISSION FIELD.

Being Biographical Sketches of Female Missionaries who have laboured in Various Lands among the Heathen. By Mrs. EMMA RAYMOND PITMAN. Illustrated throughout. Patent morocco, 5s.

JANE AUSTEN and HER WORKS.

By SARAH TYLER. With Steel Portrait and Steel Title. Patent morocco, 5s.

BETTER THAN GOOD.

A Story for Girls. With four Full-Page Illustrations. By ANNIE E. RIDLEY. Patent morocco, 5s.

THE "QUIVER" SERIES OF STANDARD TALES FOR FAMILY READING.

All Illustrated and bound in cloth gilt. Each, 3s. 6d.

DEEPDALE VICARAGE,

By the Author of 'The Half Sisters,' &c.

In DUTY BOUND.

By the Author of 'Deepdale Vicarage,' &c.

THE HALF SISTERS.

By the Author of 'Mark Warren,' &c.

PEGGY OGLIVIE'S INHERITANCE.

By ISA CRAIG-KNOX.

THE FAMILY HONOUR.

By Mrs. C. L. BALFOUR.

ESTHER WEST.

By ISA CRAIG-KNOX. New Edition.

WORKING TO WIN.

By MAGGIE SYMINGTON. New Edition.

NEW CHILDREN'S BOOKS.

NEW SERIES OF HALF-CROWN STORY BOOKS.

By Popular Authors and Illustrators. Cloth gilt, 2s. 6d. each.

Little Empress Joan.

By MADELINE BONAVIA HUNT. Illustrated.

Adventures of Working Men.

By G. MANVILLE FENN. Illustrated.

Friends I Have Made.

By G. MANVILLE FENN. Illustrated.

Golden Days.

By FRANK HERRING. New Edition.

Notable Shipwrecks.

Tales of Disaster and Heroism at Sea. By UNCLE MARY. Illustrated. New Edition.

The Wonders of Common Things.

By ANNIE CARRY. Illustrated.

TWO NEW VOLUMES OF THE "COZY CORNER" SERIES. Illustrated throughout. Cloth gilt, gilt edges, 2s. 6d. each.

Little Chimes for All Times.

Dot's Story Book.

NEW FIFTEEN SHILLING STORY BOOKS. By Popular Authors. All illustrated throughout, and containing Stories for Young People. Crown 8vo. handsomely bound in cloth gilt, 2s. 6d. each.

Through Peril to Fortune.

Aunt Tabitha's Waifs.

In Mischief Again.

Two Fourpenny Bits.

Poor Nelly.

Tom Heriot.

Maid Marjory.

THE FAN SERIES OF NEW FIFTEEN SHILLING STORY BOOKS. By Popular Authors. All illustrated throughout, and containing Stories for Young People, published at 1s. 6d. each.

Faith's Father.

By Land and Sea.

The Young Berringtons.

Tom Morris's Error.

Jeff and Left.

Worth More than Gold.

Through Flood—Through Fire.

The Chip Boy; and Other Stories.

The Girl with the Golden Locks.

Roses from Thorns.

Raggles, Baggles, and the Emperor.

Stories of the Olden Time.

Dick's Hero; and Other Stories.

THE SWALLOW SERIES OF NEW SHILLING STORY BOOKS. By Popular Authors. All illustrated, and containing interesting Stories for Young People. Extra fcap 8vo. cloth gilt, 1s. 6d. each.

Over the Rocky Mountains.

The Ferryman of Brill; and Other

STORIES.

Harry Maxwell; and Other Stories.

Magic Mirror, The.

The Cost of Revenge.

Clever Frank.

A Banished Monarch.

FIM TRUMBLES "LITTLE

MOTHER." By C. L. MATEAU. With 16 Illustrations by Giacometti. Fcap. 4to. 5s.

FAMILIAR FRIENDS.

By OLIVER PITCH. Illustrated throughout. 100 pages, crown 8vo.

cloth gilt, 5s.

The WONDERLAND of WORK.

Bring the How and Why of many interesting Things to be found therein. By C. L. MATEAU. With numerous Original Illustrations.

1s. 6d.

The FAVOURITE ALBUM of FUN and FANCY. Illustrated throughout by Ernest Orient. Crown 8vo.

cloth, 3s. 6d.

PICTURES to PAINT.

With numerous Original Coloured Plates by Kate Greenaway, M. R.

Edwards, &c. with accompanying Outline Engravings intended for Water-Colour Painting. Extra fcap. 4to. in Coloured Wrapper, 1s.; or cloth gilt, 2s.

The OLD FAIRY TALES.

With Original Illustrations. New Edition. Coloured Boards, 2s.;

cloth, 1s. 6d.

On September 27 will be published, Part I., price 2s. 6d.

EGYPT: DESCRIPTIVE, HISTORICAL, and PICTURESQUE. By Prof. G. EBERS. Translated by CLARA BELL, with Notes by SAMUEL BIRCH, LL.D. D.C.L. F.S.A., Keeper of Oriental Antiquities, British Museum; and Illustrated with the Original Magnificent Illustrations, about Eight Hundred in number. To be completed in about Thirty-five Parts.

* * * Prospectuses at all Booksellers, or post from CASSELL, PETTER, GALPIN & CO. Ludgate-hill, London.

Editorial Communications should be addressed to "The Editor"—Advertisements and Business Letters to "The Publisher"—at the Office, 20, Wellington-street, Strand, London, W.C.

Printed by R. J. FRANKS, Athenæum Press, Tenab's-court, Chancery-lane, E.C.; and Published by JOHN FRANKS, at No. 20, Wellington-street, Strand, W.C.

Agents: for Scotland, Messrs. Bell & Brodrie, and Mr. John Macmillan, Edinburgh; for Ireland, Mr. John Robertson, Dublin.—Saturday, September 19, 1880.

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1880.

For terms and particulars apply Dept Cottage, Aston Green, Tarnham
Green

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, 82, OXFORD-STREET LONDON, W. Beg to call attention to their system of producing BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS In PERMANENT PHOTOGRAPHY by means of SAWYER COLLOTYPE PROCESS.

It possesses the following ADVANTAGES:—
FIRST—For small Editions of 500 to 1,000 it is cheaper than any known method, as the cost of the original plates is small.
SECOND—Being Photographic it presents an absolute faithful copy of the object and need not be reprinted, such a picture as the reader recognises as a true representation.
THIRD—The illustrations are printed direct on the page of the book, avoiding the disagreeable coating incident to all mounted photographs.

MAGNIFICENT WORKS have already been executed in this line—

PALEOGEOGRAPHICAL—The Codex Alexandrinus, The Utrecht Psalter, The Yearly Particulars of the Pansophical Society, Milton's Common-Place Book, &c.

NUMISMATICAL—The Catalogue of Coins and Medals from the Treasury of the British Museum, Mr. B. V. Head's Catalogue of Syracusan, the Illustrations to the Numismatic Chronicle, &c.

BOOKS OF TRAVEL—China and its People, by J. Thomson, F.R.S., a magnificent work, illustrated with over 500 large photographs, The Voyage of the Challenger, by Sir Wyville Thompson, and many smaller works.

TOPOGRAPHICAL—Bathons of Ancient Liverpool, Old Manchester, and many others.

CIVIL ENGINEERING—Les Travaux publics de France, executed under the direction of a Department of the State published by J. Moitteux, Rue des Beaux-Arts, Paris. This magnificent work gained the gold medal at the Paris Exposition 1878.

ARCHITECTURAL—The Roof Sculptures of Norwich Cathedral, with a History of the Cathedral by the Very Rev. the Dean of Norwich. A vast number of works in other departments, large and small, have been illustrated by the Autotype Process of Book Illustration, which may be noted. The SCOTT and HUNT DRAWINGS, by Mr. Ruskin, THE KENNICART OF JAPAN, Audley and Howell, both French and English Editions, THE TAPESTRY of BAYEUX, French and English Editions, &c.

COST—As a specimen of cost, it may be stated that 1/2d. illustrations to a 200 p. volume for an Edition of 1,000 would cost less than 10d. per copy.
Price List and Specimen sent upon application.

IN THE AUTOTYPE GALLERY will be found a noble COLLECTION of FACSIMILES of the OLD MASTERS, including the most celebrated Works of the Old Masters, Correggio, Titian, Leonardo da Vinci, &c. selected from the principal Galleries of Europe. Fine examples of the Modern school including Pugetta, R.A., Meissonier, De Verel, Bonnat, Harpigny, &c. By this process the reproduction of Pictures, Drawings, and Original Works of Art are so perfect as to make it difficult in some cases to distinguish the Copy from the Original Work. The Facsimiles are produced in permanent pigments, which are of the same kind as those used in the Original. Black, Brown, Red, &c. are all available. Colours Artists can have their Pictures reproduced without the expense and delay of engraving, and with the minimum of risk. Sizes of Plates from 10 inches to 40 inches. A visit to the Autotype Gallery will prove how ready the walls of homes can be adorned with artistic masterpieces at little cost. Pictures and Photographs Mounted and Framed. Pictures carefully Cleaned and Restored.
Send for the AUTOTYPE COMPANY'S New Catalogue, price 6d. gratis to purchasers.
W. S. BIRD, General Manager.
W. S. BIRD, Director of Works.

THE MULTIPLEX COPYING PROCESS

gives Forty Copies of Circulars, Music Drawings, Plans, &c. This Process has been adopted by Her Majesty's Government, who have paid the inventor, Mr. Charles Fellows, for the privilege of using it throughout all their Departments. No tedious washing of plates, all eliminates. Negative available for years. Full particulars post free.
CHARLES FELLOWS, 10, Tottenham-road, Wolverhampton.

RARE ETCHINGS, ENGRAVINGS, and DRAWINGS

by the most celebrated OLD MASTERS, may be obtained at GEORGE LLOYD'S OLD PRINT SHOP, 41, BUNHILL-LANE, London. A CATALOGUE sent on receipt of two penny postage-stamp.
Established above Fifty Years.

W. P. COLLINS'S MICROSCOPICAL BOOK

A LIST, New and Second-Hand, free by post. Full Discount prices. KEITH'S BRITISH INDIAN FLORA, PHILIPPS'S FLORA, RALPH'S DENDROLOGY, and other Rare Books, now in Stock. — W. P. COLLINS, Great Portland-street, Oxford-street, London.

Sales by Auction

Photographic Apparatus.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will SELL by AUCTION, at his Great Rooms, 37, King-street, Covent-garden, on FRIDAY, October 1, at half-past 12 o'clock precisely, PHOTOGRAPHIC APPARATUS consisting of Cameras and Lenses by good makers. Bataillon, Prunier, Freres, Hinde, &c. Microscopes, Telescopes, Spectacles, &c. about 40 lots of Zoological and other Books, and Miscellaneous Property.
On view the day prior after two o'clock and morning of Sale, and Catalogue had.

Rare and Valuable Books.

SALE by AUCTION at LISBON.

M. CASIMIRO CANDIDO da CUNHA, of LISBON will SELL by AUCTION, on NOVEMBER 14, a Valuable COLLECTION of BOOKS, mostly in Portuguese, comprising Andorra Chronica do Busto, 1618—Atta de João de Barros 1522—História do Brasil 1701. Very Rare and Valuable Editions of Livramento, &c. Catalogue may be had at Mr. L. P. CHARLES, 147, Holborn Viaduct, or Messrs. ALLEN & CO., 18, Fleet-street, London, who also receive Commissions for the Sale.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, for OCTOBER, will be published on SATURDAY, October 10th.—ADVERTISEMENTS intended for insertion cannot be received by the Publishers later than MONDAY, October 12th.
London: Longmans & Co. 25, Paternoster-row, E.C.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW.—ADVERTISEMENTS for insertion in the forthcoming Number of the above Periodical must be forwarded to the Publisher by the 15th, and 15th by the 15th of OCTOBER.
John Murray, Albemarle-street.

THE ARCHITECT a Weekly Art-Journal, of NOVEMBER 25, contains Designs for the New Municipal Buildings, Glasgow and View of the Riverport Bank, also Articles on the Progress of Internal Affairs in France—The Origin of the Paris Art-School—Sanitary Works in France—The Glasgow Competition—Reviews and Correspondence &c.—Price 6d., by post, 7d. To be had of all Booksellers, and at the Office, 178, Strand, London, W.C.

THE MODERN REVIEW.

Price Half-a-Crown.

Contents of No. LII for OCTOBER.

1. CRITICAL METHOD. II. By Professor Keynes.
2. THINGS NEW AND OLD IN ITALY. By Mrs. William Grey.
3. NATURE AND LAW. By William B. Carpenter, C.B. M.D. F.R.S.
4. FACTS AND FANCIES ABOUT FAUST. I. The Poem and the Poet. By H. Schütz Wilson.
5. THE RELIGIOUS DRAMA. By William Hunt.
6. PHILOSOPHICAL NECESSITY. A Defence. By Constantine Plumptre.
7. ENGLAND'S OPIUM DEALINGS. By the Editor.
8. GILBERT WAKEFIELD. By Mrs. Herbert Martin.
9. NOTES AND NOTICES. By Charles Hargrave, R. Lane Poole, Edward Clodd, &c.

Published for the Proprietors by James Clarke & Co. London, John Heywood Manchester; and may be had by order of all Booksellers.

A NEW STORY, by HELEN JENN, J.D., entitled THE PORTRAIT of a LADY commences in the OCTOBER Number of MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE, No. 252, for OCTOBER, price 1s.

1. THE PORTRAIT of a LADY. By Henry James, Jun. Chaps. 1-5.
2. A TURKISH HISTORIAN of a WAR with RUSSIA. By Eugene Schuyler, Consul-General of the United States in Constantinople.
3. HER THAT WILL NOT WHEN HE MAY. By Mrs. Oliphant. Chaps. 3-4.
4. CLANDESTINE, BRITISH and ENGLISH. By Edward A. Freeman, D.C.L. LL.D.
5. THE STORY of TYER. By Mrs. Macquoid. (Continued.)

Macmillan & Co. London.

Ready Sept. 27, price 7d.

CASELL'S FAMILY MAGAZINE, for OCTOBER, containing—

- THE PRETTIEST ROAD IN ENGLAND.
- STUDYING THE WEATHER.
- TIN NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND. A Song for the People.
- MADGE'S HERO. Short Story.
- EVERY HOUSE IS OWN MUSEUM.
- PAINTING ON SATIN and SILK.
- OUR FOUNDATION SCHOOLS. Bristol, Birmingham, and Reading.
- SOMEbody'S COMING TO MEET ME. With Music.
- GARDENING IN OCTOBER.
- THE ART of WOOD WEAVING.
- BY THE SEA. A Poem.
- THE THROAT. Its Trials and Troubles.
- THE HOME of the FUTURE. Being the Prize Essay on House Management.
- WHAT TO WEAR. By Our Paris Correspondent.
- THE WEATHER. (Continued.)
- ROBACH WILSON: a Story of Search in Strange Places.
- NOW VICKERSCHROFF was REDEMPT.

PRELIMINARY ANNOUNCEMENT of a NEW and ENLARGED EDITION.

THE MAGAZINE of ART.—The Proprietors of the MAGAZINE of ART have much pleasure in announcing that its success is so continuous and gratifying as to justify them in developing the Magazine into the form which, from the commencement, they had hoped might ultimately result. They therefore beg to announce that with the Part published Oct. 25, not only will the number of pages be still further extended, but the size of the page will be also considerably enlarged, and the general character of the Magazine so far improved as to more than justify it. It is believed—the increased price (One shilling) at which it will be published.

Ready Sept. 27th, price 7d.

THE MAGAZINE of ART, for OCTOBER, containing—

- THE DYING COPERNICUS. By E. Black Leighton. Frontispiece.
- ART in the STREETS. By Percy Fitzgerald. With Five Sketches.
- ON THE ART of ILLUSTRATING as ORIGINALLY FRAMED. By Albert William Smith. With Three Engravings.
- OUR LIVING ARTISTS: Jan. Leno Gervase. With Portrait and Engravings.
- ART in the NETHERLANDS. II. With Portrait of Adriaen Van Ravesteyn.
- TAPESTRY PAINTING.
- TAPESTRY in the TYROL. By C. Weeks. With Five Illustrations.
- THE GIANTS at the GATES. III. By Leader Scott.
- THEIR ONLY HARVEST. By Colin Hunter.
- INDIAN METAL WORK. By J. R. Royle. With Five Engravings.
- PICTURES of the YEAR. With Six Sketches and Engravings.

Cassell, Painter, Galigny & Co. Ludgate-hill, London.

New ready, price 2s.

JOURNAL of the ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.

Vol. XLIX. Edited by H. W. BATES F.R.S., Assistant-Secretary.

1. ITINERARIES of the SECOND KHELVIL EXPEDITION. Memoir explaining the New Map of India made by the Egyptian Staff Officers. By Capt. R. F. Burton. With Map.
2. A VISIT to LISBA and PELAGORA. By Capt. R. F. Burton.
3. AN ACCOUNT of the COUNTRY TRAVELLED by the SECOND COLON of the TAI-CHUANG FIELD FORCE in the SPRING of 1879. By Lieut. M. C. Temple, Bengal Staff Corps, lately attached to the 1st Goorkha Light Infantry. With Map.
4. THE MODIFICATIONS of the EXTERNAL ASPECTS of ORGANOIC NATURAL HISTORY produced by MAN'S INTERFERENCE. By Prof. Geo. Rostk. F.R.S.
5. NOTES upon some ASTRONOMICAL OBSERVATIONS made in KORDOFAN and DARFUR. By Major H. G. Prout. With Map.
6. ZENO'S FRIGLANDIA in ICELAND, and not the FERDIE. An Answer to Admiral Irwin. By R. H. Major, F.R.S., &c.
7. APPROXIMATE DETERMINATION of POSITIONS in SOUTH-WESTERN CHINA. By E. Colborne Habber.

Fellows are requested to apply for their Copies at the Office of the Society, 1, Tavistock-hill, Burlington-gardens, W.
John Murray, Albemarle-street, W.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE, for OCTOBER, 1880.

No. DCCXXXI price 2s. 6d.

- De WORTLE'S SCHOOL. Part VI.
- THE ENCHANTED BRIDLE.
- RUE-LIFE in QUEENSLAND. Continuation.—Trying the Digging.—Prospecting.—The Bowser-Mint's Mint.—Explains Matters in General.—The End.
- THE ROOF of the WORLD.
- LOIS a Sketch.
- LIFE and DEATH of a Slave.
- SOCIETY and the SALONS BEFORE THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.
- THE BATTLE of BATTLE. In Five Volumes.

William Macmillan & Co. Edinburgh and London.

On September 25 (One Shilling), No. 250.

THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE, for OCTOBER.

With Illustrations by George Du Maurier and W. Small.

- WASHINGTON-SQUARE. By Henry James, Jr. (With an Illustration.) Chaps. 25-28.
- NOTES on WATER-COLOUR ART. I. The Early Masters. By Harry Quilter.
- COUNTRY PARSONS.
- THE PAVILION on the LINKS. (Part II.) Chap. 5. Told of an interview between Northmore, your Mother and myself. 6. T. L. of my Introduction to the Tall Man. 7. Told how a Ward was carried through the Pavilion Wind. 8. Told the Last of the Tall Man. 9. Told how Northmore carried out his Threat.
- THE HOMES of TOWN POOR. By the Rev. Harry James.
- FALLING IN LOVE.
- TO A FRIEND RECENTLY LOST. By George Meredith.
- WHITE WINGS: a Yachting Romance. (With an Illustration.) Chap. 47. After the Gale.—48. "A Good time for the Last."—49. Adieu! London: Smith, Elder & Co. 15, Waterloo-place.

SCRIBNER'S ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE, for OCTOBER, containing Twenty distinct Articles and Sixty High-class Illustrations. Price One Shilling.

Fredrick Warne & Co. Bedford-street, Strand.

ONE SHILLING MONTHLY. SCRIBNER'S ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE.

1. PORPOISE-SHOOTING. Charles C. Ward.
2. THE GRANDINIALES. II. George W. Cable.
3. AMONG THE REEDS. Maurice F. Egan.
4. JEAN FRANÇOIS MILLET, Painter and Painter. H. Alfred.
5. THE NEW SCOT. Sydney Lanier.
6. A GROUP of POETS.
7. BRANTYOWN. H. C. Sumner.
8. MISS STOFFORD'S SPECIALTY. Philip Bourke Marston.
9. PETER the GREAT. Eugene Schuyler.
10. AFTER REWARDS. (Continued.)
11. TO BOLT or NOT TO BOLT? Washington Graham.
12. "THERE is a NATURAL BODY." O. E. D.
13. ONE HUNDRED MILES in a MAMMOTH CAVE. H. C. Henry.
14. SEA-SIDE LAWN PLANTING. Samuel Parsons, Jun.
15. A FREE LENDING LIBRARY for NEW YORK. Theodore H. Reed.
16. TOPICS of the TIME.
17. COMMUNICATIONS.
18. HOME and SOCIETY.
19. CULTURE and PROGRESS.
20. THE WORLD'S WORK.
21. BRICK-MAKING.

Scrivenor & Co. give notice that they have purchased the right of publishing this Magazine in America and England, of the forthcoming List of Miller, by Alfred Knapp.

Fredrick Warne & Co. Bedford-street, Strand.

New ready, price 6d. (post free 6d.) the THIRD Monthly Part of

THE HOUSE DECORATOR and SCHOOL of DESIGN

300 Illustrations. The best Practical Journal published. London: Cecil Brooks & Co. Catherine-street, Strand.

MUNICIPAL BUILDINGS, PERTH.—See the BUILDER (2d.) by post, 4d.; for View and Plan. View of National Museum, Washington. Also in 1879 at Chester House. Drawings as a Specialty with many Illustrations—Cradle of Romanesque Architecture. Works in the Colonial Modern New York Trade Union Congress. Exhibition Sanitary Appliances, Exeter, &c.—46, Catherine-street, and all Newsagents.

Published Monthly, price 1s. in crown 2s. handsomely printed on hand-made paper, with rough edges, and occasionally illustrated.
No. X. is now ready.

THE ANTIQUARY: a Magazine devoted to the Study of the Past.

Edited by EDWARD WALFORD, F.R.S.

- Old Glasgow. Part II. (With Illustration). Our Colonies under the Mary Marchant. The Victoria Memorial of Gothic Architecture. Part I. By J. H. Parker. C. B. — Alessandro Three Hundred Years Ago. — Notions. By William Nicholson. M.D. — Book-binding. By J. H. Whistler. (With Illustration). St. Olaf and the Overthrow of Northern Paganism. Part II. By William Turner. The Treatise of Freshwater. (With Illustration). — The Mist. The Cromwell Family. Reviews. Donnelly Studies. Somerset—A History of the Castle. Mansions and Masters of Western Russia. Views of Ancient Buildings in the Parish of Bath—Stonehouse. Plans, Descriptions, and Theories. — Pictures of Antiquarian Fiction.—The Antiquary's Note-Book.—Antiquarian News.—Correspondence.—The Antiquary's Ex-Change, &c.

London: Elliot Stock 27, Paternoster-row.

Just published.

ETERNITY: What Does the Bible Say of It? A Concordance of Texts on the Subject. The object of the book is simply to bring into a small compass all the information needed for a careful personal study of this great question. Crown 8vo. cloth, 3s. 6d.

"No Bible student's library should lack this valuable manual."
"A new and valuable contribution to Biblical Literature."—Bookman.
S. Rogers & Sons, 15, Paternoster-row, London.

STANDARD TEXT-BOOKS.

MR. CRUTTWELL'S CLASSICAL WORKS.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo. cloth, 2s. 6d.

1. A HISTORY OF ROMAN LITERATURE,

From the Earliest Period to the Times of the Antonines. By C. T. CRUTTWELL, M.A., Fellow of Merton College, Oxford, Head Master of Malvern College.

"Nothing at all equal to it has hitherto been published in England."
 "A most serviceable—indeed indispensable—guide for the student."
 The 'general reader' will be both charmed and instructed."
Saturday Review.

COMPARATIVE VOLUME.

2. SPECIMENS OF ROMAN LITERATURE,

From the Earliest Period to the Times of the Antonines.

Part I. ROMAN THOUGHT—Religion, Philosophy and Science, Art and Letters.

Part II. ROMAN STYLE—Descriptive, Rhetorical, and Humorous Passages.

With Synopses and Indices complete.

Edited by C. T. CRUTTWELL, M.A., Merton College, Oxford; and FRANK BANTON, M.A., some time Scholar of Jesus College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d.

"A work with a standing-ground of its own... Not only useful, but necessary, for many classes of readers... The sound judgment exercised in arranging the plan and in the selection of the Passages calls for hearty commendation."
Saturday Review.

PROFESSOR RAMSAY'S CLASSICAL WORKS.

In crown 8vo. cloth.

1. A MANUAL OF ROMAN ANTIQUITIES:

Law, Constitution, Army and Navy, Public and Social Life, Agriculture, Religion, &c. For the Use of Advanced Students. By WILLIAM RAMSAY, M.A., Trinity College, Cambridge, late Professor of Humanity in the University of Glasgow. With Map, numerous Engravings, and very copious Index. Eleventh Edition. 8s. 6d.

2. An ELEMENTARY MANUAL OF ROMAN ANTIQUITIES.

Adapted for Junior Classes. With numerous Illustrations. Seventh Edition. 4s.

3. A MANUAL OF LATIN PROSODY.

Illustrated by Copious Examples and Critical Remarks. Sixth Edition. 3s.

DR. ARYON'S VIRGIL.

VIRGILII OPERA. Edited by A. HAMILTON BRYCE, D.C.L., LL.D., Senior Classical Moderator in the University of Dublin. Text from HEYNE and WAGNER. English Notes, Original and Selected, from the leading German and English Commentators. Dislocations from the Antiquæ. Thirteenth Edition. In 1 vol. fcap. 8vo. cloth, 5s.; or in Three Parts:—

Part I. BUCOLICS and GEORGICS. 2s. 6d.

Part II. The ÆNEID. Books I.—VI. 2s. 6d.

Part III. The ÆNEID. Books VII.—XII. 2s. 6d.

"Contains the pith of what has been written by the best scholars on the subject."
Athenæum.

Uniform with the above.

HORATII OPERA. Edited by JOSEPH CURRIE, formerly Head Classical Master in Okeover Academy.

Text from ORSELLIUS. English Notes, Original and Selected, from the best Commentators. Illustrations from the Antiquæ. In 1 vol. fcap. 8vo. cloth, 5s.; or in Two Parts:—

Part I. CARMINA. 2s.

Part II. SATIRÆ and EPISTOLÆ. 2s.

"The notes are excellent and clear."
Quarterly Journal of Education.

MENTAL SCIENCE.—S. T. COLERIDGE'S

ESSAY ON METHOD. AND WHATELY'S TREATISE ON LOGIC AND RHETORIC. Crown 8vo. cloth, 5s. Tenth Edition. (Revised. Metaphysical.) Or, the Treatise separately, Methos, 2s.; Logic, 2s.; Rhetoric, 2s. 6d.

The VOCABULARY OF PHILOSOPHY:

Mental, Moral, and Metaphysical. With Quotations and References for the Use of Students. By WILLIAM FLEMING D.D. late Prof. of Moral Philosophy in the University of Glasgow. Revised and Edited by HENRY CALDERWOOD, LL.D., Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Edinburgh. Crown 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d. Third Edition.

SENIOR'S (NASSAU WILLIAM, M.A., late

Prof. of Political Economy at the University of Oxford) TREATISE ON POLITICAL ECONOMY. Crown 8vo. cloth, 4s. Sixth Edition.

CRAIK'S HISTORY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE

and of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE from the NORMAN CONQUEST. With numerous Extracts and Specimens. By GEORGE LILLIE CRAIK, LL.D. late Professor of History and English Literature, Queen's College, Belfast. In 2 vols. royal 8vo. cloth, 12s.

CRAIK'S MANUAL OF ENGLISH LITERATURE

For the Use of Colleges, Schools, and those preparing for Competitive Examinations. By GEORGE LILLIE CRAIK, LL.D. Crown 8vo. cloth, 7s. 6d. English Edition.

BELL'S THOMSON'S SEASONS. School

Edition. With an Introduction and Notes by BOWEN BELL. Editor of the Annotated Series of British Poets. Fcap. 8vo. cloth, 1s. 6d. Third Edition.

DORSEY'S SPELLING BY DICTATION.—

PROGRESSIVE EXERCISES IN ENGLISH ORTHOGRAPHY, for Schools and Civil Service Examinations. By the Rev. A. D. DORSEY, R.D. Chancellor's English Medalist. Same cloth, 1s. Fifteenth Thousand.

CHARLES GRIFFIN & Co. 10, Stationers' Hall-court, London.

E V E R Y D A Y.

"Is tantamount to."—Full Mail Gazette.
 "Is it, throughout, a touch of nature, and a catholic taste for what is good?"—Pan.
 "Pleasant, and by no means dull."—Court Journal.

Cloth, 2s.; boards, 1s. 6d.

Remington, 7, Abchurch-lane, Strand.

HAYET'S FRENCH AND GERMAN BOOKS.

Used in Schools throughout the British Empire, United States of America, and Colleges in France and Germany.

FIRST FRENCH BOOK. 1s. 6d.

FRENCH CLASS BOOK. Part I. 1s. 6d.

FRENCH CLASS BOOK. Part II. 1s. 6d.—KEY to both Parts. 6s. 6d.

FRENCH STUDIES: Conversations, Extracts, &c. 3s. 6d.

FRENCH COMPOSITION. 2s. 6d.

—KEY to Do, &c.

Any one of the Four Books may be ordered separately, applying to M. Hayet, Institut Anglo-Français, Rue de Longchamp, Paris.

London: Simpkin, Marshall & Co. 4, Stationers' Hall-court.

PRINCIPAL DAWSON'S POPULAR GEOLOGICAL WORKS.

"Since Hugh Miller no geologist has possessed so graphic a pen as Dr. Dawson."—Literary Churchman.

I.

FOSSIL MEN and their MODERN REPRESENTATIVES. An Attempt to Illustrate the Character and Condition of Prehistoric Men in Europe by those of the American Races. By J. W. DAWSON, LL.D., F.R.S., F.G.S.

"A keen observer of the habits of the red man, and a diligent student of American antiquities, he is able by analogical reasoning to throw light upon the probable condition of prehistoric man in Europe, and upon the nature of the relics which he has bequeathed to us."
Athenæum.

II.

THE STORY OF THE EARTH AND MAN. Sixth Edition, 30 Illustrations, 7s. 6d.

"A very able and interesting sketch of geological science."
Academy.

III.

THE ORIGIN OF THE WORLD. According to Revelation and Science. Crown 8vo. 1s. 6d.

IV.

LIFE'S DAWN ON EARTH. Being the History of the oldest-known Fossil Reptalia, and their Relations to Geological Time and to the Development of the Animal Kingdom. Second Thousand, numerous Illustrations, 1s. 6d.

London: Hodder & Stoughton, 37, Paternoster-row.

THE TREATYSE OF FYSSHYNGE WYTH AN ANGLE.

DAME JULIANA BERNERS.

The Subscription List for this Work will CLOSE on October 1st, 1880; after this date the published price will be 18s. Intending Subscribers are requested to forward their Names and Addresses to the Publisher by this date.

London: ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster-row, E.C.

The New Volume of Mr. KINGLAKE'S HISTORY of the INVASION of the CRIMEA, Vol. VI., "The WINTER TROUBLES," will be Published on Wednesday, 13th October.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

NEW CHILDREN'S TOY BOOK.

THE TWO BEARS;
Or, THE BEARS AND THE BEES.

Illustrated by CHARLES A. DOYLE, with Borders and Devices Illustrative of the Story by WILLIAM S. BLACK. Printed in Colours, 4to. price 1s. (Immediately.)

Recently published, 4to. price 1s.

HOW THREE LITTLE PIGS WENT TO MARKET.
THE THREE LITTLE NAUGHTY BOYS.
SQUIRE FOX WENT OUT IN A HUNGRY FLIGHT.

GEORGE WATERSTON & SONS, London and Edinburgh: and all Booksellers.

Price to Subscribers, 2s. 6d.; Non-Subscribers, 4s. 6d.

EXTRAORDINARY ADVENTURES of a REPORTER. Giving Twenty Years' experience on the Press, showing the Easiest and Surest Method of becoming an Efficient and Rapid Photographic shorthand Writer, and containing valuable Hints on all Branches of Reporting. Amusing and interesting to Members of the Press, and invaluable to Young Photographers and Typists in the Art of Reporting. Written and published by FRANCIS J. LOCK, Author of 'The Efficiency of the Reporter,' 'How to become an Expert Shorthand Writer,' 'Martini's Reader' (30,000), &c.
30s. Market-street, Leicester.

NOTES AND QUERIES. (SIXTH SERIES.)

This Day's Number contains:—

NOTES:—Shakespearean—Surveys in former Parliaments—Regina's 'Pleasures of Memory'—The Epistle in Macbeth—The True Briton—Pronunciation of 'Brier'—Signboard by David Cox—Lines by Lord Haverham—Samuel's 'Christian Religion in Scotland'—Marriage Customs in Cheshire—Fruitful—'Hiver'—Paralel Passages—Every Man Jack of a—A Traitor's Veteran—Big Ven Winkie, &c.—Cyprus Productions—The 'Whipped'—Liverpool Epitaphs.

QUERIES:—'Eikon Basilike' Devoce—'Memento Convention'—'Le Jeu de France'—Flaubert—Ancient Scottish Measures—Curious Engravings—Sympathetic Powder—Thomas Dale's Poems—Obscure Expressions—German Folk-lore—Esperanto—Aparanth—Crimson—Jiv W. Wilson—St. Augustine's Manual—Devotion to the lower Belts—Beating—A Scotch Game—English Cocksnakes—'Put-shack'—'Dip-o-the-Kit'—Authors of Quotations Wanted.

REPLIES:—Etymology of Bedford—Renton Family—Richard III.—'Ginger'—'Aynsley Field'—John's Head—Derbyshire's Ode to God—Altham Title—'God speed'—'An old song'—Lord Byron and Isaac Greenacre—Books published by Subscription—Book-plates of Lord Kinnaird, &c.—'Think that day lost'—'Modern Church Architecture'—Garry Words—John Oels of Northampton—'To speak in rousing'—'Up to snuff'—'Hastings of Wilmsley'—'Perfidious'—'Reading in'—Francis Groom—Keel-hauling—Churchyard Yew—'Catawampus'—John Marshall, Bishop of Landaff—Inkstands of Famous Writers—Looking at Young Lambie—Dress Colours—Spiritualism—Second Sight—Benjamin Franklin—Bishops of Dunkeld—Quasius—Scarborough—Book-binding with Wire—Wahs Motto—Growth—'Slow'—'New, look handy'—'Cole-ridge's Nam de Guerre'—Inn Signs.

NOTES ON BOOKS:—Jebb's 'Modern Greece'—Written and Holman's 'Dictionary of English Place-Names'—'Specimens of English Dialects'.

Notices to Correspondents, &c.

Published by John Francis, 20, Wellington-street, Strand, W.C.

ALL the YEAR ROUND.—Conducted by Charles Dickens.—For all the Year Round should be sent before the 15th of each Month to

ADAMS & FRANCIS, 20, Fleet-street, E.C.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.—

Advertisements for the Fortnightly Review should be sent to

ADAMS & FRANCIS, 20, Fleet-street, E.C.

MIDLAND RAILWAY OFFICIAL TIME-

TABLES.—Advertisements should be sent before the 22nd of each Month to

ADAMS & FRANCIS, 20, Fleet-street, E.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

THE NEW SEASON.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY was established in 1842, in order to meet the growing demand of the age for a Higher Class of Books than could then be readily obtained on moderate terms from the ordinary Circulating Libraries.

From its commencement the original purpose of the Library has been kept steadily in view. The best Books of every shade of opinion, on all subjects of general interest, have been taken in large numbers—Hundreds, and in some instances Thousands, of Copies of the Leading Works of every Season having been placed in circulation on the day of publication.

The prosperity of the Library is, in great measure, due to the co-operation of those Subscribers who chiefly require Books of sterling interest and merit. In the selection of Books great care has always been taken to study their wishes, and to make the Library not only 'Select,' but comprehensive.

Additional Copies of all the best New Works in History, Biography, Religion, Philosophy, Travel and Adventure, and the Higher Class of Fiction continue to be added as the demand increases; and arrangements are made with the leading Publishers for an ample supply of the principal Works already announced for the New Season, and of all other Forthcoming Books of general interest as they appear.

FIRST-CLASS SUBSCRIPTION, ONE GUINEA PER ANNUM,

For a Constant Succession of the Newest Books.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY, TWO GUINEAS PER ANNUM,

For the Free Delivery of Books in every part of London.

TERMS FOR SUBSCRIBERS RESIDING IN THE COUNTRY.

CLASS A.

For all Books in the Library, without reserve.

	Six Months.		Twelve Months.			Six Months.		Twelve Months.
	£	s	£	s		£	s	£	s
Eight Volumes ...	1	16	0	3	Fifteen Volumes ...	3	0	5	0

And Three Volumes for every Additional Guinea per Annum.

CLASS B.

For Books not specially reserved for Class A. Subscribers.

	Six Months.		Twelve Months.			Six Months.		Twelve Months.
	£	s	£	s		£	s	£	s
Twelve Volumes ...	1	16	0	3	Twenty-five Volumes ...	3	0	5	0

And Five Volumes for every Additional Guinea per Annum.

Book Societies and Literary Institutions supplied on Liberal Terms.

Revised Lists of Works recently added to the Library, and Catalogues of Surplus Copies withdrawn for Sale at greatly reduced prices, are now ready, and will be forwarded, post free, on application.

. All the Books in Circulation and on Sale at MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY may also be obtained, with the least possible delay, by all Subscribers to

MUDIE'S LIBRARY, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

And (by order) from all Booksellers in connexion with the Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (LIMITED), NEW OXFORD-STREET.

CITY OFFICE—2, KING-STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

GROSVENOR GALLERY LIBRARY,

NEW BOND-STREET,

AVAILABLE FOR BOTH LADIES AND GENTLEMEN.

Comprises an ENGLISH and FOREIGN CIRCULATING LIBRARY, provided with all the BEST and NEWEST LITERATURE, a LIBRARY of VOCAL and INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC, a REFERENCE LIBRARY, READING, WRITING, and NEWS ROOMS, supplied with the Daily and Weekly Journals, LADIES' DRAWING-ROOM, DINING and LUNCHEON ROOMS, SMOKING-ROOM, and all the appliances and comforts of a FIRST-CLASS CLUB.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

CLASS.	TOWN.				HALF YEAR.			ONE YEAR.
					£.	s.	d.	£.	s.	d.
A—TWO VOLUMES	0	12	0	1	1	0
B—THREE VOLUMES	0	18	0	1	11	6
C—FOUR VOLUMES	1	4	0	2	2	0
D—SIX VOLUMES	1	16	0	3	3	0
E—EIGHT VOLUMES	2	8	0	4	4	0

And Two Volumes for each additional Guinea per annum. Sets of Books are divided to meet the convenience of Subscribers.

Subscribers C, D and E are entitled to free delivery once in every week in London and Suburbs. Subscribers D and E are also entitled to all the Club privileges, including the use of the Reference Library, the Reading and Writing Rooms, Ladies' Drawing-Room, &c.

Subscribers D and E, upon a further payment of Two Guineas per annum, are entitled to introduce One Friend into the Rooms set apart for Members.

CLUBS AND LITERARY INSTITUTIONS.

CLASS.								ONE YEAR.
								£.	s.	d.
F—TWELVE VOLUMES	4	4	0
G—TWENTY VOLUMES	6	6	0

And Ten Volumes for each additional Three Guineas.

CLASS.	COUNTRY.				HALF YEAR.			ONE YEAR.
					£.	s.	d.	£.	s.	d.
H—FIVE VOLUMES	1	4	0	2	2	0
I—NINE VOLUMES	1	16	0	3	3	0
K—TWELVE VOLUMES	2	8	0	4	4	0
L—FIFTEEN VOLUMES	3	0	0	5	5	0
M—EIGHTEEN VOLUMES	3	12	0	6	6	0

Subscription N to Club privileges only, as described above, Two Guineas per annum.

Subscribers I and K may, if they signify their desire at time of Subscription, enjoy the same Club privileges as Subscribers D and E, but in such event the limit as to number of Volumes will be the same in each case, i.e., six and eight Volumes respectively.

Subscribers L and M are entitled to the Club privileges for themselves and for one additional member of the family.

Boxes for the Conveyance of Books to Country Subscribers are provided by the Library free of charge.

All the Books in the Library, both English and Foreign, are available for Subscribers without distinction as to amounts of subscription, and Subscribers, at their option, may have Volumes of Music instead of Books.

THE FOREIGN CIRCULATING LIBRARY.

In addition to the usual advantages offered by Circulating Libraries, attention is paid to the Foreign Library, which consists of over 5,000 Volumes, and which is kept supplied with all New Works of importance. Subscribers have the option of taking the whole or part of their subscription in Foreign Books.

THE REFERENCE LIBRARY.

The formation of a Permanent Library of Selected and Standard Works has been commenced, and liberal additions will be made from time to time with the growth of the undertaking.

THE READING AND WRITING ROOMS.

Especial care is taken to render this feature of the Library attractive by a regular supply of all the best Periodicals and Reviews. These are always available, and particular attention is paid to the Department of Foreign Periodical Literature.

The Reading-Rooms are open, at present, from 9 A.M. until 10 P.M. on week days, and from 6 P.M. until 10 P.M. on Sundays.

THE MUSIC LIBRARY.

Subscribers of every class have the option of taking either the whole or part of their subscription in music—instrumental and vocal.

THE DINING-ROOMS.

The Dining Rooms are open for the supply of luncheons, afternoon teas, and dinners, and Members of the Library will also be able to make arrangements for dinners to private parties.

THE TELEPHONE.

Subscribers are now in telephonic communication with the centres at Westminster and in the City.

Subscribers are requested to communicate with Mr. CHARLES ALLEN, the Librarian, in case of any difficulty in obtaining the Books required.

SCHOOL-BOOKS PUBLISHED BY LONGMANS & CO.

TEXT-BOOKS OF SCIENCE AND HISTORY.

TEXT-BOOKS OF SCIENCE, Mechanical and

Physical, adapted for the use of Artisans and of Students in Public and Science Schools. Edited by C. W. MERRIFIELD, F.R.S. Small 8vo. with Woodcuts, &c.

- ABNEY'S PHOTOGRAPHY. 3s. 6d.
 ANDERSON'S STRENGTH OF MATERIALS. 2s. 6d.
 ARMSTRONG'S ORGANIC CHEMISTRY. 3s. 6d.
 BALL'S ASTRONOMY. 6s.
 BARRY'S RAILWAY APPLIANCES. 3s. 6d.
 BLOXAM'S METALS. 2s. 6d.
 GOODEVE'S MECHANICS. 3s. 6d.
 GOODEVE'S MECHANISM. 3s. 6d.
 GORE'S ELECTRO-METALLURGY. 6s.
 GRIFFIN'S ALGEBRA and TRIGONOMETRY. 3s. 6d.
 JENKIN'S ELECTRICITY and MAGNETISM. 3s. 6d.
 MAXWELL'S THEORY OF HEAT. 3s. 6d.
 MERRIFIELD'S TECHNICAL ARITHMETIC. 3s. 6d.
 MILLER'S INORGANIC CHEMISTRY. 3s. 6d.
 PREECE and BIVEWRIGHT'S TELEGRAPHY. 3s. 6d.
 RUTLEY'S STUDY OF ROCKS. 4s. 6d.
 SHELLEY'S WORKSHOP APPLIANCES. 3s. 6d.
 THOMÉ'S STRUCTURAL and PHYSIOLOGICAL BOTANY. 6s.
 THORPE'S QUANTITATIVE ANALYSIS. 4s. 6d.
 THORPE and MUIR'S QUALITATIVE ANALYSIS. 3s. 6d.
 TILDEN'S SYSTEMATIC CHEMISTRY. 3s. 6d.
 UNWIN'S MACHINE DESIGN. 3s. 6d.
 WATSON'S PLANE and SOLID GEOMETRY. 3s. 6d.

EPOCHS OF ENGLISH HISTORY. Edited by the Rev. MANDELL CREIGHTON, M.A.

- BROWNING'S MODERN ENGLAND, 1620-1874. 9d.
 CORDERY'S STRUGGLE AGAINST ABSOLUTE MONARCHY, 1603-1688. 9d.
 CREIGHTON'S (Mrs.) ENGLAND A CONTINENTAL POWER, 1066-1216. 9d.
 CREIGHTON'S (Rev. M.) TUDORS and the REFORMATION, 1485-1603. 9d.
 ROWLEY'S RISE OF THE PEOPLE, 1215-1485. 9d.
 ROWLEY'S SETTLEMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION, 1688-1778. 9d.
 TANCOCK'S ENGLAND during the AMERICAN and EUROPEAN WARS, 1778-1820. 9d.
 YORK POWELL'S EARLY ENGLAND to the CONQUEST. 1s.

EPOCHS OF ENGLISH HISTORY, as above, complete in 1 vol. with 23 Maps, 5s.

CREIGHTON'S SHILLING HISTORY OF ENGLAND. Fcap. 8vo. 1s.

EPOCHS OF MODERN HISTORY. Edited by C. C. COLBECK, M.A.

- CHURCH'S BEGINNING OF THE MIDDLE AGES. 2s. 6d.
 COX'S CRUSADES. 2s. 6d.
 CREIGHTON'S AGE OF ELIZABETH. 2s. 6d.
 GAIRDNER'S HOUSES OF LANCASTER and YORK. 2s. 6d.
 GARDINER'S PURITAN REVOLUTION. 2s. 6d.
 GARDINER'S THIRTY YEARS WAR. 2s. 6d.
 HALE'S FALL OF THE STUARTS. 2s. 6d.
 JOHNSON'S NORMANS in EUROPE. 2s. 6d.
 LUDLOW'S WAR OF AMERICAN INDEPENDENCE. 2s. 6d.
 MORRIS'S AGE OF ANNE. 2s. 6d.
 SEEBORN'S PROTESTANT REVOLUTION. 2s. 6d.
 STUBBS'S EARLY PLANTAGENETS. 2s. 6d.
 WARBURTON'S EDWARD III. 2s. 6d.

Nearly ready.

LONGMAN'S FREDERICK the GREAT and the SEVEN YEARS' WAR.

EPOCHS OF ANCIENT HISTORY. Edited by the Rev. Sir G. W. COX, Bart. M.A., and by C. SANKEY, M.A.

- BESLEY'S GRACCHI, MARIUS, and SULLA. 2s. 6d.
 CAPES'S AGE OF the ANTONINES. 2s. 6d.
 CAPES'S EARLY ROMAN EMPIRE. 2s. 6d.
 COX'S ATHENIAN EMPIRE. 3s. 6d.
 COX'S GREEKS and PERSIANS. 3s. 6d.
 CUMTEISS'S MACEDONIAN EMPIRE. 2s. 6d.
 HINE'S ROME to its CAPTURE by the GAULS. 2s. 6d.
 MERVILLE'S ROMAN TRIUMVIRATES. 2s. 6d.
 SANKEY'S SPARTAN and THEBAN SUPREMACIES. 2s. 6d.

CLASSICAL

The PUBLIC SCHOOL LATIN GRAMMAR, for the Use of Schools, Colleges, and private Students. By B. H. KENNEDY, D.D., &c. Canon of Ely. Fifth Edition. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

The CHILD'S LATIN ACCIDENCE, extracted from Canon Kennedy's Child's Latin Primer, containing all that is necessary to lead Boys up to the Public School Latin Primer. 12mo. 1s.

The PUBLIC SCHOOL LATIN PRIMER. Edited with the sanction of the Head Masters of the Nine Public Schools included in H.M. Commission. 12mo. 2s. 6d.

SUBSIDIA PRIMARIA, STEPS to LATIN; Easy Companion-Books to the Public School Latin Primers for Beginners. By B. H. KENNEDY, D.D. Part I. Accidence and Simple Construction, 2s. 6d. Part II. Syntax, 3s. 6d. The KEY to Parts I. and II. 5s.

SUBSIDIA PRIMARIA, Part III. Manual of the Rules of Construction in the Latin Compound Sentence; being a Supplement to the Public School Latin Primer. By B. H. KENNEDY, D.D. 12mo. 1s.

PALÆSTRA LATINA; or, Second Latin Reading Book, adapted to the Public School Latin Primer. By B. H. KENNEDY, D.D. 12mo. 5s.

WHITE and RIDDLE'S COPIOUS LATIN-ENGLISH DICTIONARY, founded on the larger Dictionary of Freund. Seventh Edition, complete in One Volume, 4to. 91s.

WHITE'S COLLEGE LATIN-ENGLISH DICTIONARY, abridged for the Use of University Students. Fourth and Cheaper Edition. Royal 8vo. 12s.

WHITE'S JUNIOR STUDENT'S LATIN-ENGLISH DICTIONARY, for the Use of Schools. Square 12mo. 7s. 6d.

WHITE'S NEW ENGLISH-LATIN DICTIONARY, for the Use of Schools. Square 12mo. 5s. 6d.

WHITE'S JUNIOR STUDENT'S COMPLETE LATIN-ENGLISH and ENGLISH LATIN DICTIONARY. Square 12mo. 15s.

WHITE'S LATIN-ENGLISH DICTIONARY, for the Use of Middle-Class Schools. Square fcap. 8vo. price 3s.

WHITE'S GRAMMAR-SCHOOL LATIN TEXTS.

- CÆSAR, GALLIC WAR. Books I. and II., V. and VI. 1s.
 CÆSAR, GALLIC WAR. Books III. and IV. 9d. each.
 CICERO, CATO MAJOR, and LÆLIUS. 1s. 6d. each.
 EUTROPIUS, ROMAN HISTORY. Books I. and II. 1s. Books III. and IV. 1s.
 HORACE, ODES. Books I., II. and IV. 1s. each.
 HORACE, ODES. Book III. 1s. 6d.
 NEPOS, MILTIADES, CIMON, PAUSANIAS, ARISTIDES. 9d.
 OVID, SELECTIONS from EPISTLES and FASTI. 1s.
 OVID, SELECT MYTHS from METAMORPHOSES. 9d.
 PHÆDRUS, SELECT EASY FABLES. 9d.
 PHÆDRUS, FABLES. Books I. and II. 1s.
 SALLUST, BELLUM CATILINARIUM. 1s. 6d.
 VIRGIL, GEORGICS. Book IV. 1s.
 VIRGIL, ÆNEID. Books I. to VI. 1s. each, and Book X. 1s. 6d.
 LIVY. Books XXII. and XXIII. Latin Text, with English Notes and Vocabulary. 12mo. 2s. 6d. each Book.

A NEW ELEMENTARY GREEK GRAMMAR, intended as a Companion to the Public School Latin Primer. By the Rev. E. ST. JOHN PARRY, M.A. 12mo. 3s. 6d.

WHITE'S GRAMMAR-SCHOOL GREEK TEXTS.

- ÆSOP (FABLES) and PALÆPHATUS (MYTHS). 32mo. 1s.
 HOMER'S ILLIAD. Book I. 1s.
 HOMER'S ODYSSEY. Book I. 1s.
 LUCIAN, SELECT DIALOGUES. 1s.
 XENOPHON, ANABASIS. Books I., III., IV. and V. 1s. 6d. each; Book II. 1s.
 ST. MATTHEW'S and ST. LUKE'S GOSPELS. 2s. 6d. each.
 ST. MARK'S and ST. JOHN'S GOSPELS. 1s. 6d. each.
 The ACTS of the APOSTLES. 2s. 6d.
 ST. PAUL'S EPISTLE to the ROMANS. 1s. 6d.
 The FOUR GOSPELS in GREEK, with Greek-English Lexicon. Square 32mo. 5s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

On September 25th, price One Shilling,
THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.
No. 339, for OCTOBER, 1880.

Contents.
ADAM AND EVE. Chaps. 10, 31, 32.
ULSINGER TRAUER.
ORANGE SAUCE.
ROMNEY.
A LITTLE BOHEMIAN. Part II. By Mrs. G. W. Godfrey.
A LOVE SONG.
MATTHEW GREGORY LEWIS.
THE REV. FATHER GAUCHER'S ELIXIR.
SANCHO PANZA.
THE REBEL OF THE FAMILY. By Mrs. Lydia Liston.
Chaps. 24, 25, 30.

* Cases for binding the Volumes of "TEMPLE BAR" can be obtained at all Booksellers', price 1s. each.

BY MORTIMER COLLINS.
THOUGHTS in MY GARDEN. By MORTIMER COLLINS. Edited by EDMUND YATES. With Notes by the Editor and Mrs. MORTIMER COLLINS. 2 vols. crown 8vo. 3s.

"Whether by mistake or from design the best of Mr. Mortimer Collins's works has been reserved for final publication. Indeed, nothing given so full or so fair an idea of his genius and talent as the essays, notes, and poems now presented to the world under the title of 'Thoughts in my Garden.'"—St. James's Gazette.

CHARLES DICKENS'S CONTRIBUTIONS TO
'BENTLEY'S MISCELLANY.'
The MUDFOG PAPERS and OTHERS. By CHARLES DICKENS, Author of 'The Pickwick Papers.' Now First Reprinted from Bentley's Miscellany. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.

POPULAR NOVELS, AT ALL LIBRARIES

NEW WORK BY MRS. HENRY WOOD.
JOHNNY LUDLOW.

SECOND SERIES.
By Mrs. HENRY WOOD,
Author of 'East Lynne,' &c.
3 vols. crown 8vo.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE
FIRST VIOLIN.'
The WELLFIELDS. By Jessie POTTERGILL, Author of 'Probation' and 'The First Violin.' 3 vols. crown 8vo.
"This is the best of the author's three books in point of completeness of construction and the character of Jerome Wellfield is more finished and more consistent than any she has yet attempted."—Athenæum.

TRANSLATED BY MRS. TYRRELL.
LIZZIE of the MILL. From the Original, by Mrs. CHRISTINA TYRRELL, Translator of 'No Surrender,' &c. 2 vols. crown 8vo.

At all Booksellers',
THE INGOLDSBY LEGENDS.
The ANNOTATED EDITION. A Library Edition, with a History of each Legend and other Notes. The Illustrations by Cruikshank and Leach. 3 vols. 8vo. 24s.
The ILLUSTRATED EDITION. In crown 4to, with 65 Illustrations by Cruikshank, Leach, and Tenniel.
The CARMINE EDITION. In crown 8vo, with Carmine Border, and 6 Illustrations by Cruikshank and Leach, gilt edges, 10s. 6d.
The EDINBURGH EDITION. In large type, crown 8vo, with 23 Illustrations by Cruikshank, Tenniel, Leach, and Dr. Maurier. Specially re-engraved for this Edition by George Pearson. Price 6s.
The POPULAR EDITION. In crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
The VICTORIA (POCKET) EDITION. Red edges.

At all Booksellers',
FRANCATELLI'S COOKERY.
The MODERN COOK. Containing 1,500 Recipes and 60 Illustrations. In 8vo. price 14s.
The COOK'S GUIDE. Containing 1,000 Recipes and 40 Illustrations. In small 8vo. price 5s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington-street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

HURST & BLACKETT'S NEW WORKS.

MONSIEUR GUIZOT in PRIVATE
LIFE (1791-1874). By his Daughter, MADAME DE WITT. Translated by Mrs. SIMPSON. 1 vol. 8vo. 15s.

"This book was well worth translating. Mrs. Simpson has written excellent English, while preserving the spirit of the French."—Times.
"Madame de Witt has done justice to her father's memory in an admirable record of his life. Mrs. Simpson's translation of this singularly interesting book is in accuracy and grace worthy of the original and of the subject."—Saturday Review.
"This work is replete with interesting reminiscences, and the reading public may be congratulated on having a literary treat provided for them."—Globe.
"Mrs. Simpson's translation is in every respect admirable. The book gives a curious picture of French life."—Economist.

TALES of OUR GREAT FAMILIES.
SECOND SERIES. By EDWARD WALFORD, M.A. 3 vols. 7s.

"The social rank of the persons whose lives and characters are delineated in this work, and the laboured romance of the stories it embodies, will ensure it a widespread popularity."—Economist.

THE VILLAGE OF PALACES; OR, CHRONICLES of CHESHAM. By the Rev. A. G. L'ESTRANGE. 2 vols. crown 8vo. 12s.

CHEAP EDITION of YOUNG Mrs. JARDINE. By the AUTHOR of 'JOHN HALIFAX.' Forming the New Volume of HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY. 4s. bound and illustrated.

"There is much tenderness and good feeling in this book. It is pleasant and wholesome."—Athenæum.

THE NEW NOVELS.

ROY and VIOLA. By Mrs. Forrester, Author of 'Viva,' 'Mignon,' &c. 2 vols.

ST. MARTIN'S SUMMER. By SHERIDAN SMITH, Author of 'His Last State,' &c. 2 vols.

LORD BRACKENBURY. By AMELIA B. EDWARDS, Author of 'Barbara's History,' &c. Second Edition. 3 vols.

"A thoroughly romantic story, with a clever plot. Some of the scenes are effective and powerfully written. It is above the average standard of modern fiction."—Morning Post.
"A capital plot, and excellent writing are the features of 'Lord Brackenbury.' Miss Edwards is as skillful in delineating character as she is in devising a plot. The story flows on with an easy current, which is refreshing and pleasant."—Scotsman.

THE TENTH EARL. By John BERTWICK HAWWOOD, Author of 'Lady Flavia,' &c. 3 vols.

"The Tenth Earl' has plot and substance, incident and vitality."
"This novel will amply repay perusal."—Post.
"The Tenth Earl' is very amusing reading."—John Bull.

A VERY OPAL. By C. L. Pirkis.

"A novel of considerable merit. There is a minuteness of observation and at times a kind of quiet humor which reminds one of Jane Austen."—Athenæum.

"A thoroughly amusing novel. The characters are sketched with a firm hand, and the plot is ingenious and well worked out."—Sunday Times.

FORESTALLED. By M. BETHAM-EDWARDS, Author of 'Kerry,' 'Bridges,' 'Holidays in Eastern France,' &c. 3 vols.

"Those who can appreciate a quiet, original, interesting, and carefully written story will welcome 'Forestalled' with satisfaction."—Spectator.

WOOLERS and WINNERS. By Mrs. G. LYNNES BANKS, Author of 'The Manchester Man.' 3 vols.

STRICTLY TIED UP. 3 vols. [Just ready.]

BOOKS FOR THE COUNTRY.

Each work complete in 1 vol. price 5s. (any of which can be had separately, cleanly printed and bound, and illustrated by Sir J. GILBERT MILLAIS, HUNT, LEACH, POYNTER, FOSTER, TENNIEL, SANDYS, & RUGGLES, CAMBRIDGE, &c.)

HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY

OF GREAT EDITIONS OF POPULAR MODERN WORKS.

Sam Slick's Nature and Human Nature.	Barbara's History. By Amelia B. Edwards.
John Halifax, Gentleman.	Life of Irving. By Mrs. Oliphant.
The Cross and the Crown. By Eliot Warburton.	Christian's Mistake. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Nashville. By Miss Kavanagh.	Alce Forbes. By George Mac Donald, LL.D.
A Woman's Thoughts about a Woman. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'	Agnes. By Mrs. Oliphant.
Adam Osbourne. By Mrs. Oliphant.	A Noble Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Leith Hunt. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'	Dixon's New America.
A Life for a Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'	Robert Parsonage. By George Mac Donald, LL.D.
Leith Hunt. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'	The Woman's Kingdom. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Manly and her Bridemaids.	Annals of an English Life. By G. W. Fennell, D.C.
Sam Slick's Old Judge.	David Rightabout. By George Mac Donald, LL.D.
Leith Hunt's Family Romance.	A Brave Lady. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
The Laird of Norwich. By Mrs. Oliphant.	Hannah. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
The Englishwoman in Italy. Nothing New. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'	Sam Slick's Americans at Home.
Frederic's Life of Jeanne d'Albret.	The United Word. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
The Valley of a Hundred Firs.	A Rose in June. By Mrs. Oliphant.
Barbara's History of the Forum.	My Little Lady. By R. Frances Porter.
Adèle. By Miss Kavanagh.	Phoebe Junior. By Mrs. Oliphant.
Studies from Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'	Life of Marie Antoinette. By Professor C. D. Yonge.
Grasshopper's Money.	Mr. Gilbey. By George Mac Donald, LL.D.
Jefferson's Book about Doctors.	Sam Slick's American Humour.
Mistress and Maid. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'	Young Mrs. Jardine. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Lee Kitchin. By Victor Hugo.
St. Olave's.
Lost and Saved. By the Hon. Mrs. Norton.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

NEW NOVELS.

Now ready, at all the Libraries.

HE THAT WILL NOT WHEN HE MAY.

By Mrs. OLIPHANT.

3 vols. crown 8vo. 31s. 6d.

WHITE WINGS:

A Yachting Romance.

By WILLIAM BLACK.

2 vols. crown 8vo. 31s. 6d.

"We must own to being astonished into new admiration at the versatility Mr. Black has shown on this occasion, within the range he has so frequently explored. There is a personal freshness in his art of description, which exhibits itself in the endless variety of his combinations, and in that respect he seems to have learned his lessons from the nature he so passionately loves. Epithets must necessarily be often repeated for the English language is limited, but as an artist does all his painting from a dozen or so of tints of colour, so Mr. Black can translate his vocabulary into an infinity of tints and tones. Nor do we know any living novelist who has more completely the gift of weakening the bodily senses through the medium of printer's ink."—Times.

LOVE AND LIFE:

An Old Story in Eighteenth-Century Costume.

By CHARLOTTE M. YONGE.

2 vols. crown 8vo. 12s.

THE REBECCA RIOTER:

A Story of Killay Life.

By E. A. DILLWYN.

2 vols. crown 8vo. 31s.

THE LADY RESIDENT.

By HAMILTON PAGE.

3 vols. crown 8vo. 31s. 6d.

This day, in demy 8vo. with Illustrations, 10s.

ETIENNE DOLET: the Martyr of the Renaissance. A Biography, with a Bibliographical Appendix, containing a Descriptive Catalogue of the Books Written, Edited or Printed by Dolet. By RICHARD COPELY CHRISTIE, M.A., Lincoln College, Oxford, Chancellor of the Diocese of Manchester.

A TEXT-BOOK of PHYSIOLOGICAL

CHEMISTRY OF THE ANIMAL BODY, including an Account of the Chemical Changes occurring in Disease. By ARTHUR GARROD, M.D., Professor of Physiology in the Owens College, Manchester. Vol. I, with Illustrations, 8vo. 14s.

HISTORY of PROCEDURE in ENG-

LAND, from the NORMAN CONQUEST. The NORMAN PERIOD, 1066-1204. By M. M. BIGLOW, Ph.D., Harvard University. 12mo. 8vo. 10s.

PHYSIOGRAPHY: an Introduction to the Study of Nature. With Coloured Plates and Woodcuts. By Professor HUXLEY, F.R.S. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.

MACMILLAN'S PROGRESSIVE

FRENCH READERS. I. FIRST YEAR, containing Tables Historical Extracts, Letters, Dialogues, Fables, Ballads, Nursery Lines, &c. With two vocabularies. By G. EDGERS FARNAL, Author of 'Macmillan's French and German Course,' &c. 12mo. 3s. 6d.

HABITUAL CONFESSION: its

Ritual and Social Aspect. By THOMAS THORNTON BAILEY, M.A. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

S. T. COLERIDGE'S POETICAL

and DRAMATIC WORKS. Founded on the Author's latest edition, of 1844, with many additional Pieces now first included, and with a Collection of various Readings. 4 vols. 8vo. 31s. 6d.

FRANCIS DEÁK: Hungarian

Statesman. A Memoir. By FLORENCE ARNOLD FORSTER. With Preface by the Right Hon. M. E. SMITH, M.P. &c. with Portrait, 12s. 6d.

"Never did a statesman wield such power who was neither an orator nor a martyr. Never was a career so triumphant in which reverence for law was not for moment sacrificed to the temptations of expediency."—Times.

MACMILLAN'S SIX-SHILLING

NOVELS. New Volumes.

VIDA: STUDY of a GIRL. By Amy DUNSMUIR. Crown 8vo.

[This day]

MACMILLAN & Co. London.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1880.

CONTENTS.

McCarthy's History of Our Own Times, Vols. III. and IV.	389
Forbes on Ancient Rome	394
India Past and Present	395
Sir C. Du Cane's Version of the Odyssey	396
The Cave Temples of India	398
Novels of the Week.	399
Library Table—List of New Books	400
An Unpublished Letter from Paris during the Reformation, Winterton in Lincolnshire	401
Literary Gossip	401
Science—Rodd's Ruins of Cornwall; Archaeological Notes, Gossip	402-403
Five Aired—The Private Collections of England; Gossip	403-407
Music—Wagner on Beethoven; Gossip	408-409
Drama—The Week; Gossip	409-410
Miscellaneous	410

LITERATURE

A History of Our Own Times, from the Accession of Queen Victoria to the General Election of 1880. By Justin McCarthy, M.P. In Four Volumes. Vols. III. and IV. (Chatto & Windus.)

MR. MCCARTHY says in the preface to his fourth volume that the first and second have had such a success as he never allowed himself to expect, and that success appears to have had a better effect upon him than can always be counted upon in the case of popular writers. Without being any the less readable, this latter half of his work is more dignified and thorough than the previous one. Finding his book accepted as an important historical work, Mr. McCarthy has honestly endeavoured to prove himself a good historian as well as a brilliant novelist and leader-writer, and perhaps that laudable ambition has been further helped by the discovery that since his earlier volumes were written he has also come to be regarded by many as a statesman. At any rate, whatever the causes, the new volumes show a marked improvement on the old ones, good as those were; and the improvement is all the more notable because the difficulties of the historian are naturally increased the nearer he gets to his own day. It is easier to speak satisfactorily of Sir Robert Peel and the Anti-Corn Law agitation, or of Lord Palmerston and the Crimean War, than of Mr. Gladstone and his Irish reforms, or of Lord Beaconsfield and the Berlin Congress. Mr. McCarthy's work is inevitably more of a review than a history, and he does not attempt to conceal the fact that he is a partisan rather than a judge. Yet the work is one that Tories can read with almost as much pleasure as Radicals, and in which there is no obtrusion of the author's opinions on Home Rule.

It is hardly a fault that Mr. McCarthy's treatment of foreign affairs is generally somewhat out of proportion to the attention he pays to home concerns. His main object being, very properly, to write a readable book, and one attractive enough to tempt the patrons of the circulating libraries to make some study of contemporary history, he, of course, finds more dramatic material in such subjects as the Sepoy Mutiny, which with its consequences occupies several of the earlier chapters in the third volume, than in the joggling progress of domestic politics twenty years ago. In speaking of things that happened out of England, however, he is always careful to show especially their connexion with the progress of public opinion and the ramifications of political activity at home. In the chapters about the Indian Mutiny, for instance, he makes it his chief business to identify the misfortunes that then befell us with the misgovernment of India, for which the people at home were responsible, and thus to point a moral, or many morals, that his readers ought to take to heart. If his narrative is superficial, and needs to be corrected by the fuller memoirs that other authors have produced, and if his judgments are not always as searching and impartial as they might be, the general effect of the narratives and judgments is to give a clear and correct notion of the matters described, and a yet clearer and more correct notion of the political issues involved. This is as it should be, and it is the same with nearly all the other parts of Mr. McCarthy's work. He takes us from the suppression of the Indian Mutiny, and with it of the old East India Company, through a string of great and small events,—the turmoil caused by the Orsini affair, the cession of the Ionian Islands, the discussion and settlement of the French commercial treaty, the American civil war, the Jamaica riots, and so forth,—but always with the purpose of helping us to apprehend the lessons taught by these events.

Nor can he be charged with paying too little heed on the whole to strictly domestic affairs. Some of the social movements of the past and present generations are sketched over in a way that is hardly explicable, unless we are to assume that Mr. McCarthy considers he has done enough towards illustrating these phases of history in his novels; but when social questions have political bearings he deals with them pretty fully. One of his most interesting chapters is that in which he traces the growth of trades unions, the progress of law and public opinion with regard to them, and the development of useful working-class organizations to which they have led. Young readers will find it hard to believe that the following paragraph accurately describes a state of things existing less than twenty years ago:

"Public opinion and legislation were in complete agreement as to the rights of Trades-unions. For many years the whole body of English public opinion outside the working-class itself was entirely against the principle of the unions. It is, perhaps, not possible to recall to mind any question open to controversy in which public opinion was ever in our time so nearly unanimous as it was on the subject of trades-organizations. It was an axiom among all the employing and capitalist classes that trades-organizations were as much to be condemned in point of morality as they were absurd in the sight of political economy. Country squires, who had only just been converted from the public profession of protectionist principles, and who still in their secret intelligences failed to see that they were wrong; the whole tone of whose thinking was still, when left to itself, entirely protectionist, and who, the moment they ceased to keep a strict guard on their tongues, would talk protection as naturally as they talked English—such men were lost in wonder or consumed by anger at the working-man's infatuated notions on the subject of political economy. All the leading newspapers were constantly writing against the Trades-unions at one time; not writing merely as a Liberal paper writes against some Tory measure, but as men condemn a monstrous heresy. A comfortable social theory began to spring up, that all the respectable and well-conducted workmen were opposed to the unions, and all the ne'er-do-wells were on their side and in their ranks. The paid officers of the unions were described as mere cunning parasites, living on the sap and strength of the organization. The spokesmen of the unions were set down invariably as selfish and audacious demagogues, who incited their ignorant victims on to ruin in order that they themselves might live in comfort and revel in popular applause."

Another paragraph from the same chapter will show the nature of the mild philosophizing in which Mr. McCarthy occasionally indulges:—

"The Government cannot be charged of late years with any want of active interest in the business of life among the poor. Its protecting, directing hand is almost everywhere. Sometimes the help thus given is judicious and valuable. For example, the Post Office Savings Banks have become most popular institutions, and no one can doubt that they have tended to develop habits of prudence and economy among the poorer classes all over the country. One of the most curious phenomena of these later times is the reaction that has apparently taken place towards that system of paternal government which Macaulay detested, and which not long ago the Manchester School seemed in good hopes of being able to supersede by the virtue of individual action, private enterprise, voluntary benevolence. We shall still have to describe some much more remarkable illustrations of this reaction than any that have yet been given. Keeping for the present to trades-organizations, we would direct attention to the fact that, whereas in old days the Government said, 'You shall do nothing to help yourselves without our control; and we will do nothing for you but to prosecute you as often as possible,' the tendency now is to say, 'You may do everything you like for yourselves, but you must allow us to enter into a benevolent rivalry with you and insist upon doing all we can for you in our way at the same time.' Whatever the defects or the possible dangers of such a principle, if pushed too far, it is at least not likely to engender artisan conspiracy, to give excuse for secret association, to help men like Broadhead into the position of leaders and despots, to furnish weak minds with an excuse for following the instigations of the fire-raiser and the assassin. All that law has done lately to remove restriction from the 'organization of labour,' if we may once more employ that pompous but expressive phrase, has been well done. We must not hasten to anticipate ill from the almost equally rapid movement of the tendency to help labour in doing labour's own proper work."

Another and kindred subject that Mr. McCarthy handles with great skill is the agricultural labourers' movement. It is not every one who can write a paragraph eight pages long of which the reader will be constrained to follow every line; but Mr. McCarthy has achieved this literary triumph in the paragraph in which he sums up the history of the movement from its inception until the formation of the Labourers' Union. There is an inartistic art in some of these clumsy paragraphs of which Mr. McCarthy appears to be proud.

Mr. McCarthy, as we have said, makes no profession of being impartial. He deserves all the more commendation, therefore, for the temperate way in which he discusses, or rather expounds without discussing, Irish questions. In one chapter he traces the progress of the Fenian movement; in others he sets forth in detail the causes and the methods of Mr. Gladstone's memorable scheme of legislation; and in another he sketches the origin and growth of Home Rule. But no one can quarrel with the terms in which he apologizes for or justifies opinions with which only a few of his readers are likely to sympathize.

Bringing down his political review to the date of Mr. Gladstone's accession to office, when, as he says, "a new chapter of English history opened," Mr. McCarthy devotes a long concluding chapter to a survey of the literature of the past twenty years. This is more interesting as a candid statement of the writer's views concerning his contemporaries and rivals than valuable on its own account. There is not much instruction to be expected from a single paragraph, even though it runs to five pages, which disposes of Mr. Swinburne, Mr. Morris, Mr. Dante Rossetti, Miss Christina Rossetti, Mr. Robert Buchanan, and George Eliot (in so far as she, "a woman of genius who is not a poet," made "clever attempts to write poetry"), and winds up by connecting all these with "the pre-Raphaelite school, as a certain group of poets and painters came to be fantastically designated." Mr. McCarthy clearly knows very little about "the pre-Raphaelite school," but there is some common sense as well as humour in his mockery of it:—

"Pre-Raphaelitism was in the beginning a vigorous protest in favour of truth in nature and art, of open eyes and faithful observation in artistic critics, students, and every one else, as against conventionalities and pretences and unrealities of all kinds. Mr. Ruskin was the prophet of the new school. Mr. Dante Rossetti, Mr. Holman Hunt, Mr. Madox Brown, and Mr. Millais were its practical expounders in art. A great controversy sprang up, and England divided itself into two schools. No impartial person can deny that Mr. Ruskin and the pre-Raphaelites did great good, and that much of their influence and example was decidedly healthy. But pre-Raphaelitism became a very different thing in later years, when it professed to invade all arts, and to establish itself in all the decorative business of life, from the ornamentation of a cathedral to the fringe of a dress. Lately it has become a mere affectation, an artistic whim. It has got mixed up with æstheticism, neo-paganism, and other such fantasies. The typical pre-Raphaelite of the school's later development is, however, a figure not unworthy of description. The typical pre-Raphaelite believed Mr. Dante Rossetti and Mr. Burne Jones to be the greatest artists of the ancient or modern world. If any spoke to him of contemporary English poetry, he assumed that there was only question of Mr. Rossetti, Mr. Swinburne, or Mr. Morris. In modern French literature he admired Victor Hugo, Baudelaire, and one or two others newer to song, and of whom the outer world had yet heard little. Among the writers of older France he was chiefly concerned about François Villon. He was an enthusiastic admirer of the paintings of the late Henri Regnault. Probably he spoke of France as 'our France.' He was angry with the Germans for having vexed our France. He professed faith in the philosophy of Schopenhauer and the music of Wagner, and he was greatly touched by Chopin. He gave himself out as familiar with the Greek poets, and was wild in his admiration of Sappho. He made for himself a sort of religion out of wall-paper, old teapots, and fans. He thought to order, and yet above all things piqued himself on his originality. He and his comrades received their opinions as Charlemagne's converts did their Christianity, in platoons. He became quite a distinct figure in the literary history of our time, and he positively called into existence a whole school of satirists in fiction, verse, and drawing to make fun of his follies, whimsicalities, and affectations."

Mr. McCarthy is kinder to contemporary novelists, but George Eliot is the only one he really praises.

Ancient Rome and its Connexion with the Christian Religion. By the Rev. H. Formby. (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

WITH the importance of the general scope of this book, which is to trace the providential connexion of ancient Rome with the Christian religion, every reader will naturally be impressed, and will be ready to acknowledge that few subjects could be more historically interesting. At the same time, the perplexing difficulties which arise in the treatment of so complicated a subject will at once be apparent. To pick out from the whole fabric of superstition which enveloped the ancient Roman world those points in which the working of a higher supernatural power can be clearly discerned involves a degree of knowledge and judgment not commonly met with. While we, therefore, welcome the production of a work treating of so grand and noble a subject as that which Mr. Formby has laid before us, we cannot but expect to find many parts of his work in which we must object to the tone that he has adopted, and also many historical statements or assumptions in which we feel him to be mistaken. We see throughout that we have the views of the ecclesiastic rather than those of the historical student laid before us, and that the line between superstition and living religion is not always observed.

M. Renan's Hibbert Lectures have doubtless been seen by many of our readers. They give a sketch of the views of a French philosopher on the question how far Christianity is a creation of Rome. In Mr. Formby's book we have, on the other hand, the views of an attached member of the Roman Church on ancient Rome as a precursor sent by Divine Providence to prepare the world for Christianity. In the first three chapters the regal period of Roman history is compared in its obscure origin but cosmopolitan policy to the planting of Christianity in the corners of Jerusalem, and the world-wide doctrines taught by the founder. It must, however, be confessed that the Roman regal policy is enlarged and magnified by our author into proportions which the student of Roman history will scarcely recognize. The credit of having upheld a policy which would unite all the different sections of Italian inhabitants under one free and great social centre is assigned to Romulus and the other kings of early Rome. It seems to us that Mr. Formby has in this point exaggerated our possible knowledge of the early history of Rome; and though many historical students will join with him in rejecting Niebuhr's reconstruction of the history of the primeval settlements in Latium, yet they will naturally think that he has gone too far in the opposite direction of defining the policy of regal Rome. There can be little doubt, however, that the strength of Rome was established in a great measure by her power of confederating and adopting the surrounding tribes and nations, and making herself their centre. But this later cosmopolitan policy can hardly be extended back so far as to include the asylum of Romulus or the acts of Ancus or Severus. Such an extension seems contrary to all our ideas of historical truth. Mr. Formby assumes that we have a more complete knowledge of the character of the legendary asylum than can be fairly deduced from the poetical statements of Roman writers.

"How did it come to pass," he asks, "that Romulus was able to cement together the heterogeneous multitudes from different nations who flocked to his asylum, and by what system of discipline did he come to have the power to form out of them the very strongest military and political unity of which history possesses any record?"

Romulus here certainly has credit given to him for a political foresight and ability which even the rhetorical imaginations of such writers as Livy and even Florus have not assigned to him. And here we must remark upon the erroneous authority given to Florus by our author, who speaks of Anneus Florus as the author of an epitome of the history of the city, "which appears to have served, so early as the reign of Augustus Cæsar, as a school or college class-book for Roman youth, and to have been deservedly popular." Now it seems quite certain from the proemium of the epitome of Florus that he did not live before the time of Trajan or that of Hadrian. This is, therefore, a serious chronological blunder; to which it must be added, that to place a writer of panegyric effusions, such as those of Florus, in the Augustan age, betrays a grave ignorance of Roman literature. In quoting Florus as a Roman historian, Mr. Formby should at least have allowed that the language of the epitome is timid and declamatory, and that, in fact, we cannot even ascertain the author's name with certainty. We cannot here omit to notice a want of scholarship also in the quotation (p. 26) from Tacitus, Ann. xiii. 58, where Mr. Formby translates donesc reviresceret "until it shall send forth green leaves," the meaning really being, according to the Tacitean use of donesc, "until it did send forth green leaves again." His translation of the words prodigii loco habitum est, in the same passage, seems to us also to be erroneous. The error in the quotation from Tacitus on p. 23, where we find the seventh book of the 'Annals' referred to, is probably typographical.

Mr. Formby proceeds, after his exaggerated statement of the cosmopolitan policy of Romulus, to speak of the Roman republican era. The struggle between Rome and Carthage and the civil wars of the later republic are the principal parts of Roman history dwelt upon here, and the author, in our opinion, insists too strongly upon the excellence of the constitution said to have been founded by Servius, and fails to notice the very gradual stages by which Roman supremacy and military power were established. He here seems to us to fall into the very same mistaken view against which he warns the historian of the present time when he says that Christian Rome must not be separated from military and dominant Rome. Modern writers of Roman history, among whom Dean Merivale may be especially mentioned, have certainly combined their view of Roman life with the influences which philosophy and religion exerted upon it, and have not separated Christian Rome by too definite a line from military and imperial Rome.

Passing on to imperial Rome, Mr. Formby calls attention to the mistaken view which is often adopted by historians in measuring the state of the Roman world too much by the depravity of the emperors. He says, "We are apt to identify the political Roman world with the personal aberrations and excesses of the particular Cæsars to an extent in which the power of the imagination far outruns the truth of history." But in his following pages the picture which Tacitus and Seneca give of the fearful state of society in Rome is brought forward, and Mr. Formby points the contrast between the Christian mission and the floods of vice which desolated Rome. We cannot help observing that here we expected to find more mention of St. Paul, whose Epistle to the Romans seems to us to be thrown into the background. This was perhaps necessary in order to give the prominence which a writer of Mr. Formby's opinions would desire to St. Peter as the first head and origin of Christianity in Rome. But the superexaltation of St. Peter in face of the historical evidence which remains as to St. Paul's influence at Rome appears to us to be one of the defects of this part of the work.

The book is beautifully printed and largely illustrated. Some of the illustrations are apparently quite new, and are striking. Three or four large plates of coins, representations of the Roman cumbria, and numerous engravings of the busts in the Capitoline Museum, are among the ornaments of the book. We cannot, however, close our eyes to some serious errors in the views and engravings. One of the most prominent of these is in the representation of the Roman Forum given at p. 157, where the arch of Titus is placed on the opposite side of the Forum to the temple of Castor and Pollux, and the temple of Jupiter Feretrius on the Capitol occupies the site on which that of Juno Moneta should stand. We must also call the author's attention to the following errors in the maps. In the small map of Rome on p. 23 M. Velia and the Esquiline Hill are marked as if they stood at the end of the Circus Maximus, where the Cælian Hill really stands; and on p. 36 the positions of the Subura and the Curia Hostilia are incorrectly marked.

Canina's restorations are unhesitatingly introduced without the caution which should have guarded the reader against the prolific imagination of that great Roman antiquary. The temple of Janus as delineated on p. 116, when compared with the representation of the same temple given on the coin of Nero which is shown on p. 156, makes us look for some justification of these audacious restorations. But no such justification is given, and we are left in this case, as also in many other points of archaeology, to accept the statement laid before us without attempting to investigate its truth. So, also, by assuming (p. 279) without question that St. Peter, at the end of his First Epistle, alluded to Rome under the name of Babylon, Mr. Formby clearly indicates that he does not intend to admit any doubt as to the right interpretation of the name Babylon in that passage; and he even goes so far as to say that St. Peter, in comparing Rome to Babylon, seems to intimate the future greatness of Rome as the early centre of Christianity, forgetting that Babylon fell without any lasting political effect upon the nations of the ancient world, and that if St. Peter were really comparing Rome to Babylon, he would not be intimating a future greatness, but a complete loss of national influence.

Mr. Formby dwells greatly upon the nobler aspects of Roman character and literature, and the higher life of ancient Rome, and quotes Pliny the younger in contrast to Suetonius and Tacitus. He says (p. 254):—

"Last we might be carried away with the idea that because professional satirists such as Juvenal, and matter-of-fact annalists like Suetonius and Tacitus, have been able, and with a truth no one will question, to make a very shocking display of the bad and degraded side of the Roman world, therefore the Christian religion could meet with nothing in Roman society that was homogeneous to itself, and that its condition was nothing but that of a standing incessant protest and resistance, not tempered with the discovery of anything savouring of the virtuous and gentle character of human life—we may have recourse to a witness whose testimony is contained in the correspondence with his friends, which has been preserved and has come down to us. This writer is Pliny the younger; and though he cannot be said actually to belong to the particular period of the interval of time which now occupies us, having been born in A.D. 62, he was from his earliest years familiar with all the traditions and memories of this time, and the Rome with which he was personally acquainted was doubtless very slightly different from the Rome of the period that was known personally to St. Paul."

The tone of society in which Pliny moved was certainly high and noble, standing out in great contrast to the coarse and voluptuous habits of most of the imperial Romans, and we are glad to see especial attention drawn to it.

It will be seen from what we have noticed that Mr. Formby's book will not satisfy the eye of the scholar or of the historical student, and we regret this the more because we can sympathise with the main object of his work in tracing the Divine government of the world. But neither the advancement of the Christian religion in general nor that of the Roman view of Christianity in particular will be promoted by the unscholarly assumptions and prejudiced views of history which too evidently show themselves in this work.

India Past and Present. By Shoochee Chunder Dutt. (Chatto & Windus.)

'INDIA PAST AND PRESENT' is not a history, but a description of the country at three different periods, which may be called the Hindu, Mohammedan, and English eras. The earlier chapters can hardly be accepted as a perfectly true picture of its condition anterior to and during the Mohammedan domination, on account of the scanty records that exist and the national prejudice of a Hindu to a foreign rule that has passed away; but the picture of India as it is will be read with interest as the Indian, or rather Hindu, view of the effects of our rule.

We conquered India, we may say, less than a century ago, and we hold it primarily for our own advantage; but the very freedom and liberality, or toleration of independence, of our own institutions has tended to make the improvement of the intellectual condition of those we held in subjection certain, and our growing difficulty, the intellectual activity and consequent independence in the subject race, is the result.

The best chapter in the book is that on "Young Bengal." The author is not complimentary to his countrymen in other parts of the volume, as is instanced by the following:—

"Change the scene. In a rather obscure part of the house, just behind the dildan, is a fine long room, where you will see another company, composed of some ten or fifteen young men, with the chillum and the pan before them, and some bottles in the background, where perhaps you cannot see them. They are all students, either of the Medical or the Presidency College, or of both, and are certainly a very intelligent and genial-looking set, carrying on their conversation in an unrestrained, smart, and interesting manner. They have also had lessons on the tubla, and can sing with great spirit. Do you think the party an agreeable one? It seems so. But let the stranger move out, and the bottles will move forward, and they will have a hell to themselves before they part."

In the chapter under the above heading, however, the author considers the progress of his countrymen—and justly so considers it—as satisfactory, and makes some suggestions worthy of their notice and of ours. To them he says:—

"The adoption of English clothing and habits is not in every case well suited to the country, and all close imitations are necessarily ridiculous. In fact, the imitations have been already much too close, not simply in the matter of boots and trousers, but also as regards the use of brandy and beer.... Young Bengal, in his go-ahead zeal, has often forgotten that what is cordial to the English constitution is poison to that of the Hindu.... With the education of young Bengal there ought to be allied some share of that spirit of enterprise which characterizes the Paras, who not only follows the English lead in letters, but also in the occupations of every-day life. Many spheres of usefulness remain yet unoccupied, and most of them carry independence with them. All the trades are open for adoption; artists are in great demand in all the cities of India; farming on scientific principles is nowhere understood at present, and promises a very remunerative occupation. The questions will occur of themselves to those in search of useful employment, Why not be the plodding, industrious, and frugal tradesman? Why not introduce the use of improved implements in husbandry? Why not rear cattle for human consumption?..... Great literary attainments will not be required in most of the lines of life we have indicated; what will be mainly required are habits of usefulness, industry, and frugality. The youths of Bengal have learnt English literature well; they must now acquire the excellent habits of the English workman, that fit him for almost every sphere of life."

On the other hand, the author reminds us that "it is English education that has made them what they are. It has, of course, encouraged many hopes. Why was ambition awakened if it was not to be satisfied? It was the Englishman that encouraged the Hindu to better his condition, and held out the promise of bettering his status. The Hindu has vindicated the teaching he received; does it befit the Englishman now to turn round and call him names because he has become what the Englishman wished him to become?

We must not forget in reading the foregoing that the difficulty of the present situation, to which we have referred above, is to a great extent of our own making. We have done in India what many people contend we are doing in England: we have established a system of higher education, gratuitous in all but name, which unfits its recipients for any employment they can naturally hope to obtain. The result anywhere would be discontent, while in a conquered race it becomes disaffection.

One point strongly brought out in the present work is the imperfection of pure democracy as a form of government. We have lately had from an abler pen a most picturesque description of the village communities of India, coupled with a strong opinion that in that organization lay the secret of Indian art, and that in their revival lay all hope for the future. The present author equally extols their merits, the almost complete freedom from interference on the part of the sovereign—in other words, the central government—the autonomy, in fact, of districts and small communities. Decentralization, however, to a dangerous degree was the consequence. The ties of national life were loosened, the people were happy for a limited period, and the Mohammedan domination was the result.

We would point out to Mr. Shooashee Chunder Dutt that terms such as "threw it overboard," "odorous in comparison," "Billingsgate," and like expressions, many instances of which will be found scattered through the book, are not classical English. It is unfortunate that when criticizing his countrymen, and stating that "the best specimens of the class are undoubtedly to be found among those only who have cultivated it [English] well," he should have adopted such a style.

The Odyssey of Homer. Books I.-XII.
Translated into English Verse by Sir Charles Du Cane, K.C.M.G. (Blackwood & Sons.)

THE 'Odyssey' has been translated some six times in the course of the last two years, and an American scholar is at work on a new prose version. It seems a pity that one or other of the translators has not preferred to do the 'Iliad' into prose. The English reader who, with Sainte-Beuve and Mr. Matthew Arnold, distrusts metrical versions is obliged to fall back upon the diverting rendering in Mr. Bohn's series. It is perhaps too late for Sir Charles Du Cane to earn the gratitude of English readers of the 'Iliad,' now that he has committed himself to a version of the first twelve books of the 'Odyssey' in "ballad metre." The objections to that metre, which is not suited to a long distance of ground, Sir Charles perfectly appreciates. But there are objections to all possible English measures, and in the ballad metre he thinks simplicity may be combined with rapidity of movement. To ourselves the movement of his verse seems neither very rapid nor very Homeric; nor are Sir Charles's equivalents for Homeric terms always very exact. He is much more accurate than General Schomburgk, but less spirited than the rather erratic though lively Avia. Perhaps the first eleven lines represent as well as any that we could select the weaknesses of the rendering:—

Muse! of that hero versatile indite to me the song, Doomed, when he sacred Troy had sacked, to wander far and long.

Who saw the towns of many men, much knowledge did obtain

Aeant their ways, and with much woe was heart-wring on the main,
Seeking his own life to preserve, his friends' return to gain.

E'en so he rescued not his friends, though eagerly he strove,

For them their own infatuate deeds to direful ending drove.

Fools, who the sun-god's sacred beaves dared madly to devour,

Doomed by his anger ne'er to see of glad return the hour.

Sing, goddess, child of mighty Jove, of these events,
I pray.

And from what starting-point thou wilt begin with me the lay.

Here "indite" is an odd translation of ἔπεισε, and might lead the English reader to suppose that Homer referred to the art of writing. "Much knowledge did obtain aeneant their ways" is a very clumsy version of πολλὰν μάλα δόξα ἔπεισε φίλῃς ἐνὶ πατρίδι. The inverted expression "of glad return the hour" is an example of a struggle after rhyme which is quite in the ballad manner, but distressing enough in a translation of Homer. In the last line the force of the καὶ in ἐνὶ καὶ φίλῃς is neglected. It would be easy to go on criticizing passage after passage with this minuteness, but the labour would be vain. Sir Charles Du Cane is not inaccurate, nor does he interpolate (as Avia does), but he takes the bloom and beauty off the poetry of Homer when, for example, after two lines rhyming in "bent" and "extent," he instantly uses the rhymes "strength" and "length." An accomplished versifier would shun such a jingle.

We may mention a few points in which we differ from Sir Charles's rendering. Book i. line 160, νῆπρου is rendered "without cost," the suitors "without cost another's wealth devour," where the meaning seems to be that they devour what they will never be called on to make atonement for. In the next line but one ἐν ἡπείρῳ is rendered "on yonder continent," instead of "on the mainland." There is nothing in Homer to show that Telemachus is speaking of any particular "continent." In line 184 Pallas says she is taking iron to Temesa to exchange for copper. Sir Charles Du Cane makes these steel and brass respectively, for which we think there is little warrant in any sound theory of Homeric metals. In line 277 we differ from Sir Charles's view of ἔβρα πολλὰ δὲ μάλα δόξα ἔπεισε φίλῃς ἐνὶ πατρίδι, which he renders

Many a gift arrayed,
Such as is meet for daughter dear a father should be paid.

We imagine that some of the gifts were returned with the daughter, a custom which prevails among some backward races in various parts of the world. But this is open to dispute. In the second book Penelope is made to say about Laertes that it would be a shame were he Shroudless within his grave to lie like pauper at the last.

There were no "paupers" in Ithaca any more than there were parochial beadles. The term is a shock to the reader's taste. Here is a painful inversion:—

Nor be it less thy care
Of meal, of man the marrow, store in thick skins to prepare.

Nor is this much better:—

And thine equipment to provide shall to the Greeks be care.

Whilst I was child in age needs an "a" before "child" to make it
English.

Such are the blemishes in Sir Charles Du Cane's 'Odyssey.' A little more experience in "making easy rhymes with difficulty" is needed by the translator. To compensate for what may seem hypercriticism we quote a fine and fluent passage about the cavern of Calypso:—

A mighty fire burnt on the hearth, and wafted odour sweet

Of sandal-wood and cedar-log far from her lone retreat,

And from within the cave's recess her voice melodious rang,

As with gold shuttle at her web the goddess wrought and sang.

In full luxuriance round her cave arose a leafy wood,
Where alder, mixed with cypress sweet, and lofty poplar stood,

Beneath whose shelter long-winged birds flock nightly to their rest,—

Falcon and owl, and chattering crow, that haunts the sea's broad breast.

And climbing o'er the hollow cave, a vine its tendrils flung,

In the full bloom of vigorous growth, with purple clusters hung.

Four fountains with their crystal spray nigh to each other gleamed,

And branching off with gentle rill, on separate courses streamed.

Whilst all around the nymph's abode fair grassy meads lay spread,

With tufts of violet soft and sweet, and parsley carpeted.

E'en an immortal, if his way should thitherward be bent,

Might stand and gaze upon the scene in joy and wonderment.

Here Sir Charles's work is seen at its best, and its best is very good. To our ear his metre is against him, but, with such exceptions as we have noted, he manages it skilfully. By the way, his difficulty about the distance of Pharo from the coast of Egypt (iv. 352) will disappear when Αἰγύπτος is rendered "the river Ægyptus," Homer's name for the Nile. Parallel passages from many poets, English, Greek, Italian, Latin, are given in foot-notes. These notes distract the attention, and lead us from Homer's seas and stormy shores into pleasant gardens of Virgil or Spenser. There are two bad misprints in the quotation from Mr. Swinburne (p. 73). Complete success in Homeric translation is, perhaps, impossible. Sir Charles Du Cane's version is at least faithful and tolerably fluent.

The Cave Temples of India. By James Ferguson, D.C.L., F.R.S., and James Burgess. (Printed and published by order of H.M. Secretary of State for India.)

THIS work presents the first connected account of all the rock-cut temples of India, and it gives a strictly scientific account of them, with carefully measured plans and drawings, arranged as nearly as practicable in their chronological sequence, the previous accounts of them belonging more or less to the category of picturesque literary descriptions. The work is the long protracted result of a recommendation made to the Court of Directors by the Royal Asiatic Society, at the instance of Mr. James Fergusson himself, on the occasion of his reading his well-known paper on 'The Rock-cut Temples of India,' so far back as 1843. It was consequent on this representation that the Bombay Cave Temple Commission was appointed in 1848, for the purpose of exploring and reporting on the antiquarian remains of the Western Presidency, which is the chief seat of the rock-cut shrines of India. The Commission consisted of the Rev. Dr. John Wilson, F.R.S., as President; the Rev. Dr. Stevenson, Vice-President; C. J. Erskine, C.S.; Capt. Lynch, I.N.; James Harkness, LL.D.; Venayek Gangadhar Shastri; and Dr. Henry James Carter, F.R.S., the distinguished naturalist of Western India, as Secretary. The first memoir on the subject of their researches was prepared by Dr. Wilson in 1850, and a second in 1852. The Commission also at once employed Lieut. Bird, and after him Vishnu Shastri Bapat, to take facsimiles of the inscriptions from the caves, in which work the latter was engaged until his death in 1860, after which in 1861 the Commission was dissolved. It had, however, stirred up intelligent and energetic officers in different parts of Western India to explore the antiquities of their districts, among whom were Sir Bartle Frere, Dr. Eljah Impey, Meadows Taylor, Dr. Bradley, Sir Walter Elliot, Dr. E. W. West, and his brother, Mr. Arthur A. West. At its instigation also the Madras Government appointed Capt. Robert Gill to copy the celebrated fresco paintings in the Buddhist caves at Ajanta. In the course of eight or ten years he succeeded in sending home no less than thirty full-size copies of them, but, unfortunately, twenty-five of them were lent to the Crystal Palace, where they were destroyed in the ruinous conflagration of 1866. In 1873 Mr. Griffiths, the accomplished Principal of the Bombay School of Art, was instructed to prepare fresh copies of these ancient frescoes, and has since that date sent home a considerable number of them, which, again unfortunately, have been divided between the South Kensington and British Museums, instead of being taken over wholly by one or other of them, as was intended when the Secretary of State for India transferred the India Museum art collections to the Science and Art Department, and its antiquarian collections to the Trustees of the British Museum. In the meanwhile, and once more at the suggestion of Mr. Fergusson, the Secretary of State for India proposed in 1870 to the Government of India the appointment of a regular official survey of the architectural remains, and particularly of the cave temples, of Western India; and in 1873, thanks principally to the intelligent interest shown in the matter by the Hon. J. Gibbs, Mr. Burgess was appointed to this onerous and responsible duty. He had already published a work on the 'Rock-cut Temples of Elephanta' and another on the 'Temple of Satruvaya,' the celebrated Jaina place of pilgrimage near Palitana, in Kathiawad (Kattyawar); and in the seven years since his appointment as Surveyor and Reporter he has accumulated, in the three handsome volumes of Reports on the Archaeological Survey of Western India published by the Government of Bombay, the mass of original and positive information regarding the most ancient architectural remains of Southern and Western India which made it possible for Mr. Fergusson to undertake the present elaborate and exhaustive monograph. Such is the history of the modern scientific exploration of the profoundly interesting and instructive early Buddhist and Brahmanical rock-cut temples of India.

The cave temples of Western India were visited by the earliest travellers from Europe. Linschoten mentions the cave of Elephanta in 1579, and it was afterwards visited and described by Fryer, Hamilton, Anquetil du Perron, Lord Valentia, Niebuhr, and others; Linschoten, Boon, Anquetil, and Salt describe Salsette, and Thavenot and Anquetil the caves of Elura (Ellora). Between 1796 and 1809 the Daniells published their six famous folio volumes of coloured engravings of the principal architectural monuments of India, including a complete series of views of the caves of Elephanta and Salsette, and of the rock-cut temples of Elura, the latter drawn by Mr. Wales, but engraved by the brothers Daniell with almost photographic accuracy of detail. It was not, however, until Mr. Fergusson read his paper before the Royal Asiatic Society in 1843 that any general description of the rock-cut temples of India, pointing out the characteristic features of their architecture, had been attempted. Nor was it possible to do so before the completion of the first seven volumes of the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal in 1838, in which James Prinsep, aided in his researches by Turnour, Kittoe, Postans, and others, in a series of papers on the inscriptions of Asoka, revolutionized the whole character and meaning of Indian archaeology. The history of Buddha and of early Buddhism, which had before been mythical and vague, now became defined and intelligible and based on recognized facts. The relations also of Brahmanism and Jainism to Buddhism and to each other were now for the first time settled on an easily understood basis, and admitted of a logical superstructure raised on it. It was on the basis thus afforded by the marvellous ingenuity of James Prinsep that Mr. Fergusson was able to begin that laborious and scientific investigation of the architecture and antiquities of India to which he has, with an honourable enthusiasm most rare in the present age, devoted his entire lifetime, and in which he is now being aided, with such marked and fruitful ability, by Mr. James Burgess. Mr. Burgess really began his official work in February, 1874, with the survey of Belgaum, and was at once so fortunate as to discover the famous Badami inscription. It affords a landmark almost as important in relation to Indian architecture as are Sir William Jones's discovery that Chandragupta was only another name for Sandracottus, and James Prinsep's identification of the Pryadiasi of the Buddhist inscriptions with Asoka, in relation to the ancient history of India. There are innumerable Buddhist inscriptions on the Western caves, but none with dates from any well-ascertained era; and none, unfortunately, of all the Brahmanical caves at Elura and elsewhere has an inscription that can be called integral. The consequence, therefore, was that before Mr. Burgess made his discovery the only mode by which their age could be approximately determined was by arranging them in sequence according to our real or empirical knowledge of the history of the period during which they were supposed to have been excavated. At Elura, for instance, as Mr. Fergusson has pointed out, it was assumed that the Buddhist preceded the Brahmanical excavations, and that these were succeeded by the Jaina. Arguing on this basis, it was found that one Chaitya cave there was identical in style with the last four Chaityas at Ajanta, and that cave was placed at the end of the sixth century. The caves next it were supposed to occupy the seventh century, thus leading on to the Rameswara group, about A.D. 700, and the Jaina group would then have occupied the next century. The age of the Kylas or Dravidian group, being exceptional, could only be determined by extraneous evidence, and, from its extreme similarity to the great structural temple at Pattadakal, is attributed by Mr. Fergusson to the eighth century; and from a similar chain of reasoning he dates the Jaina group "about the same age, or a little earlier, say A.D. 650." But the inscription discovered by Mr. Burgess on No. 3 of the Badami caves, near Pattadakal, is in the twelfth year of Mangaleswara, in the five hundredth year of the Saka era—A.D. 79. The date of the cave is, therefore, A.D. 579. It is the only date we have on a cave of any architectural pretension, and so gives us a fixed point in the chronology of the Brahmanical architecture of India. This discovery for the first time, indeed, gives precision to our researches as to the age when the Hindus adopted the practice from the Buddhists of building caves. The other two caves must be assumed, Mr. Fergusson says, to have been formed within the limits of the next century, A.D. 575-700, and the architecture of this group is so nearly identical with that of the Rameswara group at Elura that it can hardly be doubted that they too must have been excavated within the seventh century.

In the next season Mr. Burgess undertook the survey of Kathiawad and Kach (Cutch), copying the whole of the Pryadiasi and Rudradama inscriptions in facsimile impressions, which M. Senart is now using as the basis of his masterly analysis of the edicts of Asoka. Since then he has surveyed the greater part of the Bombay Presidency and the western part of the Nizam's dominion, together with the caves and monolithic temples called ratas (known to Anglo-Indians as the "Seven Pagodas") at Mahabalipur, on the Coromandel coast, near Madras. Mr. Burgess's comparison of the "Seven Pagodas" with the Badami caves led him independently to assign them to the same age as that to which they had been attributed by Mr. Fergusson, namely, A.D. 650-700. By a singular piece of good fortune, one of the great sculptures of cave

No. 3 at Badami is practically identical with one in the Vaishnava cave (No. 25) at Mahaballipur, but with such differences that we are able to say that the Badami sculpture is the more ancient of the two. On the other hand, we have at Elephanta and Elura many examples representing the same subjects of Hindu mythology as are found at Mahaballipur, but with such differences of mythology and execution as indicate with equal certainty, in Mr. Fergusson's opinion, that the southern examples are more ancient than the northern.

The present volume is divided into two parts: Part I. on the Eastern Caves, written by Mr. Fergusson, extending to p. 161, and Part II. on the Western Caves, written by Mr. Burgess, extending to p. 537, where the text of the book ends. Each author submitted his own MS. for the other's correction, and the interpolation of each of them in the other's work as published amounts to about ten per cent. The whole proofs were seen through the press by Mr. Fergusson. In the deliberation, therefore, with which this volume has been written we have the highest guarantee of its technical accuracy and value. Considering how careful its authors have been in preparing the materials for it, it is all the more vexatious that, through the inattention of the printers, any literal errors should have crept into it. Almost on the first page the word "Aryan" is conspicuously printed for Arrian, and there are about fifty other mistakes to be counted in this handsome volume. We notice them because these printers' errors are every day becoming more and more plentiful in English books. They are a most irritating disfigurement, and it is time that English publishers of reputation came to a resolution never to allow them to appear in any of their books, whether cheap or costly. At the end of the volume are ninety-eight pages of plates, most effectively reproduced from the original plans, drawings, and photographs by Mr. William Griggs, of Hanover Street, Peckham. Beside these the book is illustrated by seventy-three vignettes, many of which are taken from Mr. Fergusson's 'History of Indian and Eastern Architecture' and 'Tree and Serpent Worship.'

The Eastern caves are found in Bihar, in Orissa; at Dejwara on the Kistna, on the opposite bank to Amravati; and at Mahaballipur, also in the Madras Presidency. There is also a Brahmanical cave, of the seventh century A.D., at Harchoka, about thirty miles east of Bharhut. These Eastern caves, however, are more valuable for their bearing on the history of architecture than their own merits. The Orissa caves are, indeed, very picturesque in form and rich in sculpture, but as they bear little relation in style to the great caves of Western India, and as their dates cannot be determined with any certainty, they have but an isolated interest. The monolithic temples of Mahaballipur, taken in connexion with the caves of Badami and the Rameswara group at Elura, afford a certain standard for the determination of the relative ages of the caves of Western India, but the highest archaeological interest attaches to the Bihar caves. In the Satapani caves at Rajagriha the first Buddhist convocation was held; and the caves on the Giridharakuta hill, close by, were much frequented by Buddha himself in the sixth century B.C. But all these are natural caves, and there is not a chisel mark on them. The Barabar group have a special importance, for six out of the seven bear inscriptions, in the oldest form of Pali character, identical with that found on the Asoka pillars. Moreover, the inscription on the Sudama cave says it was excavated in the twelfth year of that monarch, i.e., B.C. 252. The inscription on the Gopi or Milkmaid cave is also dated in the reign of Dasaratha, the grandson of Asoka, about B.C. 214. The whole group is comprehended within forty years, and was commenced apparently within eighty years of Alexander's invasion of India. But none of these caves, although artificially constructed, has any architectural character. The only one of the group of any architectural pretensions is the Lomas Rishi cave, which bears no contemporary date or inscription. It is, indeed, only when these Eastern caves are viewed in connexion with those of the West that their real value is perceived; for taken together they show that this peculiar form of building prevailed in India under the Buddhists and Brahmans for upwards of a thousand years, during which they supply the most authentic record of the history of the people of that vast peninsula, and that it was continued under the Jains to the end of another millennium. There are in Western India nearly fifty groups of these caves, situated chiefly in Kathiawad, and throughout the Mahratta country, from Badami and Aihole, on the banks of the Kistna, to the Tapti; and beyond the Nerbudda at Bagh and Kholvi, and Dhamnar and Gwalior in Central India. They reach their greatest development in the caves of Elephanta and Salsette (Kanhari), near Bombay; in the great cave at Karli, near Poona; and in the caves and monolithic temples of Elura and Ajanta, on the north-western borders of the Nizam's dominion. Altogether Mr. Burgess enumerates more than 900 of them, of which 720 are Buddhist, 160 Brahmanical, and 35 Jaina. The Buddhist range in date from the Kathiawad caves, B.C. 250, to the Dhamnar and Kholvi caves, A.D. 700; the Brahmanical from the Badami cave, A.D. 579, to those of Elephanta, the age of which was first accurately determined by Mr. Burgess, A.D. 725-775, and the Kailasa at Elura, A.D. 725-800; and the Jaina from the Jaina Badami caves, A.D. 650, to the Gwalior caves and sculptures, ranging from A.D. 1441 to 1447. The Kanhari, Karli, and Ajanta caves are entirely Buddhist, and the Elephanta Brahmanical, but the marvellous series at Elura present in juxtaposition some of the most magnificent examples of ancient Buddhist, Brahmanical, and Jaina cave architecture to be found in India. The Jainas, Mr. Burgess says, were never true cave excavators. They had a structural style of architecture which was strictly their own, as seen at Mount Abu, at Girnar, and Palitana, but their rock-cut temple architecture was borrowed at second-hand, in a purely imitative form, from the Buddhists and Brahmans, and was soon given up as useless for their purposes.

The illustrations given by Mr. Burgess of the beautiful doorways from Ajanta are models for any artist; but the greatest general interest will be taken in his copies of the cave paintings of Ajanta. Plate xxix. illustrates early paintings at Ajanta, 300 or 400 years older than any hitherto copied. In plate vii. Mr. Burgess gives copies of a number of Buddhist emblems, the wheel, the shield, the trident (trident), found sculptured on the caves at Bhaja. One of these, figure 9, calls for particular notice. No name has ever been given to it, but it is of especial value as proving how much Indian art has been indebted to Assyrian for its decorative details. The emblem is in the form of a square ornament, having a representation of the trident on each side, alternating with a projecting cone form at each corner, all surrounding a face in the centre. It is only necessary to compare this ornament with the Assyrian one illustrated in Owen Jones's 'Grammar of Ornament,' plate xii., figures 1 and 5, and the Greek one in plate xxii., figures 17 and 18, to see that they are essentially identical, and that whatever may be the origin of the Indian trident, a question we cannot now discuss, this mode of combining it with the cone is directly or indirectly derived from the knop and flower pattern of the Assyrian sculptures.

In the fresh cave discovered by Mr. Burgess at Bhaja while the present book was going through the press, the account of which is therefore relegated to its appendix, there is a sculpture, figured in plate xviii., the subject of which Mr. Fergusson and Mr. Burgess agree in identifying with that engraved on the ancient Buddhist brass vessel (lot) discovered by Major Haig in 1857 at Gundlah, in Kulu, where a land-slip exposed the cell in which it had been lying hid for probably above 2,000 years. Its date has been fixed at A.D. 200 to 300. But the Bhaja cave is the oldest in Western India, and the lot, which is now in the India Museum at South Kensington, probably belongs to the second or third century before our era rather than to the third or fourth after it. It is only necessary to compare the subject engraved on it, which is said to be that of Buddha, as Prince Siddhartha, going on some joyous procession, with Mr. Burgess's plate (xviii.), to be convinced of its being the same as that represented in the cave at Bhaja.

It has been impossible to follow Messrs. Fergusson and Burgess through the detailed accounts they give of the different caves of Eastern and Western India. Our object has been simply to indicate the great general as well as special interest of their volume. It is a book which no one can begin to read without being drawn on to read it through to the end, while, as a scientific exposition of the cave-temple architecture of India, it worthily crowns the monumental labours of Mr. Fergusson's life as the Vitruvius of the East. It seems strange indeed, considering all he has accomplished for Indian architecture, that the honour it has brought to the Indian Government, no less than to Mr. Fergusson himself, should never have been properly recognized by those who are responsible for marking the appreciation by the State of such splendid services.

NOVELS OF THE WEEK.

Lord Brackenbury. By Amelia B. Edwards. 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

St. Martin's Summer. By Shirley Smith. 3 vols. (Same publishers.)

The Conjuror's Daughter. By J. W. Sherer, C.S.I. (Allen & Co.)

Arnold Leigh. By Mrs. Digby Lloyd. (Tinsley Brothers.)

Octavia's Lovers. By the Author of 'Lalage.' 3 vols. (S. Tinsley & Co.)

After a Dark Night—the Sun. By C. G. Hamilton. 2 vols. (Same publishers.)

The Verdendorps. By Basil Verdendorp. (Chicago, Charles M. Hertig.)

Tiphaine. Avec une Préface par A. Dumas fils. (Paris, Calmann Lévy; London, Hachette.)

'LORD BRACKENBURY' is a very readable story, though the plot is by no means intricate, and the incidents, with the exception of the elder Brackenbury's disappearance, are of no exciting character. The great charm of the book is the cheerful view of humanity generally taken by the writer. There is a large geniality about the sailor brother, who adopts a seafaring life and vanishes from society, partly to escape from the conventional duties of the peerage, and more with the view of making things clear for his brother Lancelot, whose love for Winifred he has discovered. Lancelot himself is an excellently unselfish fellow, whose tenderness for his brother is only exceeded by the strength of the passion which he so long restrains on his account. The picture of the old house of Langtreys Grange and the heroine feeding her pigeons in the courtyard is well imagined, and introduces us to a lovable maiden in a most artistic manner. Still better suited to the ancient setting of the "curious old house, patterned all over in black and white, with projecting upper stories, and all kinds of jutting gable ends, and ivy-grown chimneys, and quaint casement windows filled with ancient lozenge-paned glass that winked and glittered in the afternoon sunlight," is the white-haired old lady with brilliant black eyes, Miss Langtreys, the last of her race. The triumph she obtains at last over the lawyers who hoped to complete the ruin of her family is too trying to the life that had endured adversity so long, and Miss Langtreys dies in the arms of victory, just letting us see enough of her quality to retain a vivid memory of a typical grand dame of old. Not only in the graphic scene-painting of Old Court, Langtreys Grange, and the Osteria del Capello, but in the descriptions of English and Italian peasants, and the portraiture of such diverse personages as the solemn rascal Prouting, Cutbert's butler, Marrables the old family lawyer, and Mrs. Penfeather the novelist, the author has well conceived the purpose of high class novel-writing, and succeeded in no small measure in attaining it. There is plenty of variety, of cheerful dialogue, and general verve in the book, and nothing either sensational or philosophically dull.

'St. Martin's Summer' is not an ill-told story. There's freshness and variety in it, and some of its characters are very prettily conceived. It would have left a better impression on the reader if it had been more carefully corrected before publication. Though Shirley Smith has arts which will secure attention for this book, its defects of form are inexcusably numerous. There is ease of manner and expression in 'St. Martin's Summer,' both in the descriptions and in the conversations, which enable the reader to go trippingly through the three volumes without any great stumbling or cause of offence. We are introduced to at least four very pleasant young ladies, and at least four worthy men, whose fortunes are told in a natural and lively vein, with much spirit, and abundance of light and frivolous detail. The whole story is, in fact, narrated as a man or woman of the world would be likely to tell it to a group of friends, and the comparison is true even to the prolixity and digression which might be expected from a narrator under such circumstances. The weakest point of the book is the construction of its plot, or rather the insufficient connexion of the several plots which succeed each other between the first page and the last. We begin with an unprincipled youth who breaks his father's heart and plunges his aunt and sister into disgrace. His story, somewhat feebly told, gives way to the courtship of two of the heroine's friends; but they soon get married and disappear, and our interest is demanded for others who come after them. Each romance is good reading in its way, but it is impossible to avoid a feeling of impatience with the author for so constantly hurrying us away from his creations as soon as we have begun to like them. Old friends die, infants grow up and pair themselves off at the altar, so that if it were not for the chequered love story of the heroine herself, 'St. Martin's Summer' would be little better than a series of half-elaborated sketches. Yet enough, perhaps, has been said to show that this book is well worth reading, and that it is in many respects superior to the average of three-volume novels.

'The Conjuror's Daughter,' though by no means a complete or minutely analytic book, bears tokens of being thrown off by a masculine and experienced mind, though it is hardly the work of a very promising novelist. The Dickensian portion of it, the portrait of the hero's unlucky father-in-law, the "Professor Darwin" who "has not the temper for dogs" (i. e., performing poodles), is poor beside its prototype in the 'Old Curiosity Shop.' Like other books of the time, it exceeds in "padding." It is quite unnecessary, for instance, to record the various turns in the staircase of a country rectory of the average kind when nothing in the action of the story depends upon them. Nor are "Bones" and "Beans," the slim and the fat boys of the family, welcome to the reader unless connected with certain characteristic qualities they probably would have shown in real life. On the other hand, there is great pathos in the sketchy figure of Anna, the low-born wife of the pragmatic, pushing youth in the Company's service. The Competition-Wallah, hardly a gentleman, is yet an unapproachable ideal to the simple wife who loves him. How far her faithful "stupidity" may be reckoned above his shallow self-sufficiency is a problem each reader may determine, but it is one of the suggestive questions which give interest to a novel. A more distinctly Indian story is that of 'Myrtle and Nightshade,' and in a familiar sense the author shows more of the verve essential in a novelist. The suicide of Pablo is a miniature from Dickens, and there is much truth to nature as well as literary skill in the notion of the dead heroine's bosom being the receptacle of a portrait, not of her affianced lover, but of her disreputable and disgraced but beloved and tender father.

Arnold Leigh is an infirm curate who is seduced from his allegiance to a charming cousin by the superior attractions of one Eveleen O'Connor, a flirt with an Irish scorn for virile inconstancy. There is but little remarkable in the story, except some strange French and such English as this: "We travelled like two prosaic Britishers ought to." The curate is crushed and the cousin dies, and the only residuum we take with us of the story is an "over-true tale" of Ribbonmen and Irish murder, to be matched any day by facts recorded in the daily papers.

'Octavia's Lovers' shows a good deal of ability in its author. She is obviously clever and well informed, and one finds it pleasant to be in her company, even while acknowledging to oneself that her novel has great defects. The plot is of very weak construction and scarcely holds together at all, and there is no excuse for the introduction of sundry long passages of description of places, such, for instance, as the descriptions of Jersey and of Italy in general, both put into the mouth of one of the characters as part of his conversation. Equally objectionable is the insertion of the text of an extempore prayer offered by the parson at a school treat. Moreover, the writer is much too fond of dragging in quotations with no more apology than "as So-and-so says." But still she is at times—and these are frequent—amusing and lively, and throws off many a happy little bit of criticism on a variety of matters. There is nothing much better in the book than the letter from Switzerland at the beginning of the third volume. It is an excellent bit of letter-writing, natural, easy, and familiar, and without a dull sentence. If the author will only be content not to show the materials out of which her cleverness is made, and will really work at the composition of a plot, she may write a good novel.

'After a Dark Night—the Sun' is the new title of a novel which was originally called 'Clear Shining after Rain.' Under that name it was reviewed in these columns (July 17th, 1880). It was found that this title had been anticipated, and the book has now been reissued with a new cover and title-page.

'The Verdendorps' is an American story of the downright realistic sort, the chapters of which are all concise records of events, vouched and guaranteed by numerous documents, letters, extracts from newspapers, counsel's opinions, legal processes, and examinations in court. Description is rigidly cut down to its narrowest proportions, sentiment is at a discount, analysis of character (with the important exception of self-analysis on the part of the various personages of the story) is wanting; no words are wasted in reaching the gist of the matter in hand; everything gives way to the fixed purpose of getting things told clearly and consecutively, just as they are supposed to have happened in real life. The writer prefixes to his story a declaration to the effect that "Verdendorpe and Verdendorpiani are special creations of their Author; things by the author of the Verdendorpe, of the Verdendorpe affirmed, are affirmed of the Verdendorpe alone." But a separate address "to European readers" is careful to assure us that two Boston printers refused to print the volume through fear of libel suits, so manifestly to their minds was it based on incidents in the career of the Vanderbilts of New York. Perhaps we shall do the author no wrong if we assume that he anticipates a hearing on this ground, if on no other. Apparently he regards public men as fair game for the novelist. "The Concord dotard," "Joseph Cuisinier," "Richard Empiricus," and "the ideal sole-leather American" are masks which he uses less to conceal the real men with whom he deals than to put him at his ease in sneering at their morals or their reputation.

"Tiphaine" is another of those literary mystifications in which M. Dumas fil is fond of indulging. He is not the author of "Tiphaine," he is only the editor; and in the few pages of preface in which he introduces it, he assures his readers that, as the story is absolutely true, no one but himself, the author, and the author's heroine, who is completely unknown to him, will ever know the author's name. Those who expect a tale of wickedness will be bitterly disappointed. The story of "Tiphaine" is mild, sober, harmless, and rather interesting. It sets forth how, years ago, the author met and was civil to a charming little heiress of fourteen; how he went off and forgot her until she asked him to her wedding; how long afterwards, when her husband, in flagrante delicto, had expired under the revolver of an injured husband, she renewed the acquaintance; how, in the course of a drive, she asked him to be her friend, and he, with Stendhal running in his mind, replied by kissing her on the mouth; how she scorned and forgave him, and how he fell in love with her; how he said nothing, and she went away and married some one else; and how, finally, she told him that until the moment of that unlucky Stendhalism of his he had been her ideal of what is honest and noble, and that she had only married another in self-defence. There is no more; and it seems hardly worth while to have been mysterious over so little. "Tiphaine" is beautifully printed on thick paper, and has the widest and fairest margins ever seen. It may be read in half an hour; and then the reader will probably wish he had been better employed.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

THE Reports of two Congresses have been received which are worthy of more notice than the mere record of the fact. The first volume of the Report of the Fourth Oriental Congress, held at Florence in 1878, is full of interesting matter in the French, Italian, and Latin languages. The most remarkable paper is that by Prof. Ascoli, of Milan, on the subject of certain Hebrew inscriptions lately found near Naples, which fill an important gap in the history of that language. The subject is treated fully, and there are valuable lithographic illustrations. There are other papers of value by MM. Lenormant, Maspero, and Naville. There has been, and is still, regrettable delay in publishing this Report, and in fact what we have received is but an instalment. Bis dat, qui cito dat.

Two magnificent quarto volumes represent the work of the French Provincial Congress held at Lyons in 1878. This movement is part of the rebellion of the French provincial towns against the tyranny of Paris. Marseilles led the way, and year by year is followed by the great towns. The Reports are full of most interesting information with regard to the languages and religions of India, China, and Japan. The volumes are beautifully edited, and have the great and rare merit of rendering knowledge on abstruse subjects attractive. There is also a business side to them, as the culture of silk and other Oriental products, arts, and manufactures are discussed. It is fair to add that to one munificent and patriotic citizen, M. Guimet, himself no mean Orientalist, his native city has been indebted for the great success of this Congress, and the erection at his own cost of a magnificent museum. France has little connexion with the extreme East, either by way of dominion or of commerce. We wish that the great towns of England, which have a deep interest in the East, would follow this noble example.

FROM the office of the Leisure Hour we have the Girl's Own Annual, which consists of the first thirty-nine numbers of the Girl's Own Paper neatly bound up so as to form a volume.

BEATRICE AUERBACH's Brigitte has been added to the Tauchnitz collection of German authors. We have received a copy from Messrs. Sampson Low & Co. The story has been translated by Miss Clara Bell.

MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW & Co. have also sent us the English edition of Mr. W. D. Howells's novel The Undiscovered Country, noticed in the Athenæum of August 21st.

THE name of a little book which Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co. send us, How to pass Examinations, is misleading. It is not a manual of the art of being examined, and a more fitting title for it would have been 'How to go in for Examinations.' The object of the book is to show what are the preliminary steps to be taken by persons seeking to enter any of the professions, or to become bank or railway clerks, architects, civil engineers, masters or mistresses in Board schools, or to adopt other callings. There is some preliminary explanation of the mode of entering the universities, becoming a candidate at the University Local Examinations, and other ways of obtaining proof of having received an education. The book is very short, and the information in several instances rather meagre, and it so happens that it is generally where most is given that a reference is added to show where more may be obtained. The author has not carried out what the preface leads one to expect. He says, "The greatest care has been taken to point out the sources from which further authentic official information can easily be obtained." Nothing of the sort is pointed out under the headings "Cooper's Hill," "The Bar," and "Railway Clerkship."

We have on our table The Life of William Ellery Channing, by his Nephew, W. H. Channing (Boston, American Unitarian Association).—A Practical Arithmetic for Elementary Schools, by J. Currie (Laurie).—Questions and Answers on the French Grammar, by V. Laurent (Stanford).—Professional Book-keeping, by W. J. Gordon (Wyman & Sons).—Charlemagne and the Carolingians, by G. Masson (Low).—The Cities and Towns of China, by G. M. H. Playfair (Hongkong, Noronha & Co.).—Scientific Transcendentalism, by D. M. (Williams & Norgate).—A Student's Handbook of Psychology and Ethics, by F. Ryland (Sonnenschein).—Tables for the Analysis of a Simple Salt, by A. Vinter (Longmans).—The Bicycleist's Guide to Machines and Makers, by R. E. Phillips ('The Bazaar' Office).—Modern Thinkers, by Van B. Denalaw (Chicago, Belford Clarke & Co.).—Venus a Woman; Pro-Women: a Man's Thoughts about Men, by Mrs. H. Dobell (Wertheimer).—The Legend by the River Dee (F. L. Malgarini).—The Story of Stella Peel, by H. L. Childs-Pemberton (The Literary Production Committee).—A Sheep in Wolf's Clothing, by E. Jerrold (Nimmo & Bain).—Hours of Loneliness, by A. Coles (Canterbury, J. Gibbs).—Lays and Lyrics, by G. Lancaster (Hull, C. H. Barnwell).—Beethoven, by G. Hein (Aberdeen, Milne).—The Death of Beaulieu, by W. S. (Oxford, J. Vincent).—Spring's Début, by J. J. Sylvester (Printed for Private Circulation).—Poems and Hymns, by J. Sharp (Bell).—The Hibbert Lectures, 1880, by E. Renan (Williams & Norgate).—Eternal Punishment: Lectures, by E. M. Goulburn (Rivingtons).—The Gospel Miracles in their Relation to Christ and Christianity, by W. M. Taylor (Hamilton).—Om Négra Atona, by A. Kook (Lund, Gleerups).—Le Pays et l'Armée, by Le Général Baron Goethals (Trübner).—Les Forces Nationales, by Lieut.-Gen. Baron van der Smizen (Trübner).—Handbuch der Deutschen Alterthumskunde, Part I., by L. Lindenschmit (Brunswick, F. Vieweg & Son).—Un Ambassadeur Libéral, by E. Frey (Trübner).—and Rainha de Portugal, 2 vols., by F. de F. Benevides (Paris, Barral). Among New Editions we have Sunday: its Origin, History, and Present Obligation, by J. A. Hessay (Cassell).—The Old Church Clock, by R. Parkinson (Simpkin).—Church History of Ireland, 2 vols., by S. Malone (Dublin, Gill & Son).—Hydro-Incubation, in Theory and Practice, by T. Christy (Christy & Co.).—and Practical Swiss Guide (Trübner). Also the following Pamphlets: The Land Question, Ireland (Dublin, Irish Land Committee).—Agitation in Ireland, by R. Staples, jun. (Ridgway).—and The Commerce and Prospects of England, by E. G. Man (Ridgway).

LIST OF NEW BOOKS

ENGLISH.

Theology.

Cooper's (T.) The Atonement, and other Discourses, 8/6 cl.
Dexter's (H. M.) The Congregationalism of the Last Three Hundred Years, roy. 8vo. 3/6 cl.
Haverghill's (F. R.) My Bible Study, for the Sundays of the Year, oblong 8vo. 3/6 cl.

Law.

Clark's (E. C.) Analysis of Criminal Liability, cr. 8vo. 1/6 cl.

Poetry.

Goethe's Faust, translated chiefly in Blank Verse by J. A. Bird, cr. 8vo. 13/6 cl.
Hamilton's (E. Lee) Odes, Saints, and Men (Poems), 6/ cl.

History and Biography.

Calendar of State Papers, Domestic Series, Charles I., 1640, edited by W. D. Hamilton, roy. 8vo. 18/ cl.
Christie's (K. C.) Etienne Dolet, the Martyr of the Renaissance, a Biography, 8vo. 18/ cl.
Jennings's (G. H.) Anecdotal History of the British Parliament, from the Earliest Period to the Present Time, 18/ cl.
Victor Emmanuel II., Life of, by G. S. Godkin, cheap edit., cr. 8vo. 6/ cl.

Geography and Travel.

Berry's (O. E.) The Other Side, how it Struck Us, cr. 8vo. 9/ cl.

Philology.

Abbott's Via Latina, a First Latin Book, cr. 8vo. 3/6 cl.
Euripides' Bacchæ, with Critical and Explanatory Notes, &c. by J. E. Sandys, cr. 8vo. 10/6 cl.

Science.

Attwood's (G.) Practical Blowpipe Assaying, cr. 8vo. 12/ cl.
Boiler Maker's Assistant, The, by J. Courtney, Revised and Edited by A. K. Clark, 12mo. 3/ cl. 1p. (Wear's series.)
Darling (W.) and Manney's (A. L.) The Essentials of Anatomy, 8vo. 12/6 cl.
King's (J. W.) The War Ships and Navies of the World, 70/
Spencer's (H.) Descriptive Sociology, No. 7, (July 1/1886).
Stokes's (G. G.) Mathematical and Physical Papers, Vol. 1, 8vo. 15/ cl.
Thurston's (J. C.) Physics, Experimental and Mathematical, cr. 8vo. 7/6 cl.

General Literature.

Beeston's (C.) In Fair Bruges, a Romance of the Present Day, cr. 8vo. 10/6 cl.
Bowen's (C. E.) The House on the Bridge, and other Tales, illustrated, cr. 8vo. 2/6 cl.
Collins's (W.) Jessie's Daughter, cheap edit., cr. 8vo. 3/6 cl.
Cup (The) of Consolation, or Bright Savings for the Sick-tubed by an Invalid, with Introduction by J. E. Macduff, cr. 8vo. 3/6 cl.
Darwin's (A. S.) A Thousand Thoughts from Various Authors, cr. 8vo. 7/6 cl.
Doudney's (M.) Stepping Stones, a Study of our Inner Life, cr. 8vo. 4/ cl.
Dunsmuir's (A.) Vida, Study of a Sick-chamber, 4/ cl.
Ernest Struggles, or Life of a Sick Master, Part 2, 3/6 cl.
Groome's (F. H.) In Gipsy Tents, cr. 8vo. 7/6 cl.

Bawthorne's (J.) Ellice Quentin, and other Stories, 3 vols. 21.
 Kingston's (W. H. G.) Dick Cereley, his Adventures and Misadventures, imp. 16mo. 7/4 cl.
 Massé's (M. Constant de) History of Duelling in all Countries, translated from the French, with Introduction, &c., by Sir L. O'Trigger, cr. 8vo. 2/6 cl.
 Miller's (O. T.) Stimpo's Troubles, cr. 8vo. 3/6 cl.
 Pictorial Treasury of Famous Men and Famous Deeds, 6/ cl.
 The Chase, a Tale of the Southern States, from the French of Jules Verne by A. Burgum, cr. 8vo. 2/6 swd.
 (Modern Foreign Library)
 Tuscan Fairy Tales (taken down from the Mouths of the People), with 16 Illustrations by J. Stanley, 3/4 cl.
 Variorum History of a Black and Tan Terrier, told by Himself, edited by Lady Lamb, cr. 8vo. 3/ cl.
 Wood's (Mrs. R.) Jehany Ladlow, 2nd series, 3 vols. 3/6 cl.

RECENT

Philology.

Fieldner (E.): Eudamianus u. Egotismus, 1m. 80.

History and Biography.

Bidinger (Max): Der Ausgang d. Mediceenischen Hefchen, 6m. 80.
 Cardanus (H.): Konrad v. Hostalen, 1m. 80.
 Haas (M. le Capitaine): Analyse des Principales Campagnes conduites en Europe depuis Louis XIV., 3fr. 50.
 La Polegus et les Habsbourg, 2 fr.

Philology.

Milisch (F.): Ueber die Mundarten u. die Wanderungen
der Zigeuner Europas, Pars 13, 3m.

Science.

Claus (Prof. Carl): Grundzüge der Zoologie, Vol. 1, Part 2, 4m. 30.

General Literature.

Dumas (A. St.): Les Femmes qui tombent et les Femmes qui montent, 2fr.
 Miracles de Notre-dame par Personnage, edited from the MS. by G. Paris and U. Robert, Vol. 14, 10fr.

AN UNPUBLISHED LETTER FROM PARIS DURING THE REFORMATION

Bottenford Manor, Brigg.

THE following unsigned letter has been transcribed into the Register of Bishop Longland, who occupied the see of Lincoln from March 20th, 1521, to May 7th, 1547. I am indebted to the Rev. A. R. Maddison, F.S.A., for the transcript from which my copy is taken. I have been at some pains to find out whether it has ever been printed or whether other copies of it exist in manuscript. I cannot hear of its existence in any other form. It is a curious picture of one of those scenes which we have reason to believe were not uncommon in Paris when the struggle of the Reformation was at its height. As I think it may be of interest to your French readers and others who are students of the history of France, I forward it to you for publication.

EDWARD PRACOCK.

Such news as we have here in Parrys I have sent you as touchinge suche as of late hadde chaunced emonges us. pleassith itt you to be advertised that nott with standinge the severe iustice which of late hadde been executed upon thise antechristes whiche beynd many erronnyouse opynions soo blasphemously oppugne the mooste blessed sacrament of the sulter. Ther was within thise fewe dayes by the stretes of parrys scatord books which was Intitled Parantiphrasyn scilicet a right prouffitable Intrastie concernynge the Sacrament of the sulter. wherein as they say were scarcely soo many sentences as blasphemyes contrary to the said sacrament wherewith the Kyng was highly offended. And forasmuche as he thought that he hadd doon as muche before as in hym was for the extirpacion of this hereyse, and itt litle hadd prouffited, he thought then noo other refuge butt onely of god to whome princypally this matter appertayned. Whereupon the xxj day of this month of January he commaunded a generall procession to be maade by the hole cite and the unyurtie of parrys. In whiche this was thordre. firste the sheryve of saint Genoveffe, whiche is neuer doone without grette and urgent causes accompanied with dyuers parishes with such reliques as they hadd, brought upon xxj mennys backes bare foted and all naked savinge their shirtes to n're Dames with the Cathedrall church, Thabbott and the monkes folowynge bare foted deuoutely seyng and syngynge. And with them came the Jacobyns to the said church where was gathered togidre the thre other ordres with other religious houses and curates of churches with such reliques as euery man hadd taryng their comyng. Thus doon they all ther assemblede with canons and with the Cathedrall quere with other reliques as of saint James, philipp marcell, barbara, Genoueva, & went to saint Germainys nere to the Kyngs palice named the lower. Thidre was brought reliques of the Kyng his chappell manely the holy crosse, the crowne of thorne. To the whiche place the Kyng, the quene, the doiffyn with other his sones and daughters, the prynces and nobles of his courte came from thens and soon returned all in ordre to n're dames before named. first was the Cordelyars in nombre to my Judgement v and in the latter ende of them came the quene on home backe accompanied with twoo of the Kynges daughters and lx or above of ladies, decked all after the frenche fashion in mooste goodlieste wise untill they came directly before the churche where the quene alighted and taryed the comyng of the Kyng in a house provided for hir. after the Cordelyars came the Jacobyns as many in nombre as the other. Consequently the Augustynes, Carmel monkes, religious men, curates of parishes, lycentials and doctours, noo other I will reherse here for the nombre is in maner infynite, with tapers euery man in their hands and suche notable reliques as they hadde.

Hereafter folowed the monkes of saint Genoveffe of the con syde of the stretes, and of saint marcells of the other syde. After them came the sheryves of bothe these saintes con aginst a nother carryng as I declared before. after them came the canons and quere of the Kyngs chappell and Cathedrall churche, and after them came the swetts euery man with his Javelynge in his hande. Then folowed them the gentlemen of the courte and after them came v or vi bishoppes iij Cardinals with other grette men of the courte spirituall, beryng also certayne reliques. after whome came ij of the Kynges sones havyng the iij with them whiche caryed the canopy ouer the Sacrament whiche the bishoppes of parrys bare. The Kyng folowynge ymmedately on fote open hedded, with a torche in his hande havyng the Cardynall loreyne on his left hand, syde by syde, and after hym in that parte the prynces and other nobles of the courte. and on the right hande the prymour presydent of the parliament, whome folowed the comissaires of the same with other of other places of Justice and all those in scarlett, and in the myddest of these twoo straites after the Kinge came lx or above of noble men with torches as he didd. The reason wherfore he putt the parliament on his hande was to signifye that he wolde preserve Justice above any creature lyvinge were he neuer soo noble or ders beloved to hym. Then folowed the mayour of the towne with his officers and aldermen, and after them the Kynges garde, and the garde of the towne, with hawberds in their handes and stavis, and as for the multitude of comyns that were there I cannott nombre, and whenne the Kyng came before the churche the quene beynge caryed betwixt iij men in hir chayre with the Kynges daughters folowed hym into the churche where was a solempne masse songe, semblant as it is upon Corpus Christi daye. What highe solemnyte was doon ther itt was nott possible to entre to see, and as the Kyng passed before the chambre that I stode in the people whiche stode in the stretes laudynge the Kyng, as he was mooste worthieste for this noble acte cryed to hym Sir doe good Justice, whome with lavyng countenance he badde to be content as who wolde saye that they shulde nott neede to feare thatt, and that he shortly after declared, for ymmedately after dyner was hadde oute of the Schetelate his pryson vj condemned persons. The receiver off Mans, a grette man and worth above xl crownes, a Counsaillour's sone of Roan and iij other whiche were burned thre att the halye and thre att the crosseylwaye, and with this Receiver was burned thre grette sackes of bookes of hereyse whiche were founde in his house.

This ye may boldly affyrme for itt is nothings butt truthe with muche more whiche for lacke of leasur I have omittted. Moreover after dyner whiche was in the bishoppe of Parrys house the Kyng declared in an Oracion to his nobles and counsaillours his faithfull mynde towards god Reherseyng his benefites, and the long contynuaunce of his roialme in the true faith of christe, mentyonynge also that as his predecessours were not without good cause called mooste christian prynces soo he trusted to employe his endeavour that his name shall nott decaye or be lost by hym. Exhortynge and requyrynge them all bothe spirituall and temporal euery man for his parte to doo the same, addynge furdre that if he founde any to halte in this poynte he shulde suffre extreme iustice alleginge this text "Si oculus tuus scandalizat te erue et proice eum abste."

Sithe con woman was brent and dyverse other remayne in pryson, some condemned, some like to be shortly, and this present day ar bannysed the realme off frunce about lx persones which ar suspecte of hereyse, their goodes all confiscate to the Kynges use. And also I shall desoure you to pardon me because I didd nott write this nowe fayer for the brynger was in suche Importune haste that I coude nott write itt to my purpose &c.

WINTERSTON IN LINCOLNSHIRE.

Sept. 18, 1880.

WINTERSTON: Winterringham :: Briston: Briningham. These Norfolk villages have always appeared to me to be simply the ton of Brin and the ham of Brining (Brin's son). I know a coachman in the county of the name of Bryn. Substitute Winter for Brin. J. VALRY.

Literary Gossip.

WE hear with very great regret, just as we are going to press, of the death of Miss Jewsbury, which took place at ten o'clock on Thursday morning. In our next number we shall give a notice of the deceased lady, who was for very many years a contributor to these columns.

WE hear that Prof. Sayce intends to go to the East in the course of the next winter for archæological investigations. Amongst other places he will visit Cyprus, Tarsus, and Damascus, where he will examine some private collections.

WE are sorry to learn that Dr. Bühler is going to resign his post in India, in consequence of bad health.

WE have reason to believe that Dr. H. Krebs, Librarian of the Taylorian Institution, Oxford, will be appointed as locum tenens for the vacant teachership of German at that institution for the next term.

WE understand that Prof. John Rhys, of Jesus College, Oxford, will bring out for the Delegates of the Clarendon Press a revised edition of the 'Mabinogion,' with an English translation, a glossary, and a literary introduction.

MESSRS. KEGAN PAUL & Co.'s list of announcements comprises Mr. Frederick Pollock's 'Life and Philosophy of Spinoza,' 'Selections from the Official Writings of Major-General Sir Thomas Munro, Bart., K.C.B.,' edited by Sir Alexander Arbuthnot, and Mr. Duffield's long-promised translation of 'Don Quixote.' Messrs. W. Addis and T. Arnold are engaged upon a 'Catholic Dictionary,' founded on the work of Wetze and Welte, but adapted to English readers. Mr. Hubert Croft has completed his annotated edition of Sir Thomas Elyot's 'The Governour.' Mr. Halford Vaughan has a second volume of 'New Readings and Renderings from Shakespeare's Tragedies' nearly ready. Miss Emily J. Carey has made a translation of Stapfer's 'Shakespeare and Classical Antiquity.' Mr. C. Thornton Forster and Mr. F. H. Blackburne Daniell have prefixed a Life to the 'Letters of Ogier Ghieslin de Busbecq,' so often mentioned by Gibbon under the name Busbequius.

THE same publishers are preparing the following books of travel: 'Polar Reconnaissance,' by Capt. A. H. Markham, giving an account of the discovery of Novaya Zemlya; Mr. Hayes's 'New Colorado and the Santa Fé Trail'; and 'The Genoese Republic,' by Theodore Bent.

In poetry the same publishers will shortly issue a collected edition of sonnets by Charles Tennyson Turner, to which the Poet Laureate has prefixed a memorial poem; Miss Toru Dutt's 'Sheaf Gleaned in French Fields,' which was first printed a few years ago in India; 'Mary Magdalene,' by Mrs. Richard Greenough; 'The Cardinal Archbishop: a Spanish Legend,' by Col. Colomb; 'Records and Musings,' by the late Robert Leighton; and 'Dorothy: a Country Story in Elegiacs.' A disciple of Goethe, under the pseudonym of "Loki," has written a 'New Werther.'

Messrs. Sampson Low & Co. announce the following works in general literature for the coming season: 'The Life of Her Majesty the Queen,' by Mrs. Oliphant; a series entitled 'English Philosophers,' including 'Adam Smith,' by J. Farrer, 'Bacon,' by Prof. Fowler, and 'J. S. Mill,' by Miss Helen Taylor; 'The Story of the Zulu Campaign,' by Major Ashe and the late Capt. the Hon. E. V. Wyatt Edgell; 'Primitive Folk-Moots, or Open-Air Assemblies in Britain,' by Laurence Gomme, F.S.A.; 'The Parliamentary History of the Irish Land Question from 1829 to 1869, and the Origin and Results of the Ulster Custom,' by R. Barry O'Brien; and 'The Chaldean Account of Genesis,' by George Smith, new edition, revised and corrected by Prof. Sayce.

Messrs. Sampson Low & Co. will also publish shortly two books of travels: 'New Guinea: What I Did and What I Saw,' by L. M. D'Alberty, Officer of the Order of the Crown of Italy; and 'Seven Years in South Africa,' by Dr. Emil Holub.

Mr. R. D. BLACKMORE's new story will be entitled 'Christowell: a Dartmoor Tale.' It will be published in Good Words, and commence in January.

We understand that Lieut.-Col. W. F. Butler is collecting his many interesting papers on Afghans, Zulus, Cyprus, &c., into a volume, with an introductory chapter on our colonial policy which is likely to attract considerable attention. The book will shortly be issued by Mr. Isbister.

We hear of another work by the late Mr. Mortimer Collins, entitled 'Attic Salt; or, Epigrammatic Sayings, Healthful, Humorous, and Wise, in Prose and Verse.' This is a collection from the works of Mortimer Collins made by Mr. Frank Kerslake, which will be brought out early in October by Messrs. B. Robson & Co.

Messrs. HANSARD's Monthly List of Parliamentary Papers for August, 1880, contains the titles of 62 Reports and Papers, 32 Bills, and 46 Papers by Command. Under the first head we call attention to the Statement of the Net Revenue and Expenditure of India for 1856-57, and for the years 1867-8 to 1879-80; to the Finance Accounts of the United Kingdom for the Year ending March, 1880; to the Report from the Select Committee on the North British Railway (Tay Bridge) Bill; to the Report from the Select Committee on the London Water Supply; and to the Report of the Select Committee on the Sugar Industries, with Minutes of Evidence. Among the Papers by Command interest attaches to the Statistical Abstract for the United Kingdom in each of the last Fifteen Years, 1865-1879 (27th number); to the General Report to the Board of Trade on the Share and Loan Capital, Traffic in Passengers and Goods, Working Expenditure, and Net Profits of the Railways of the United Kingdom for the Year 1879; and to the Reports of the Assistant Commissioners on Farming in the United States of America and in Canada.

One of the forthcoming volumes of Messrs. Sampson Low & Co.'s series entitled "Foreign Countries" will contain 'Russia,' by Mr. W. R. Morfill, of Oriel College, Oxford.

THE same publishers are preparing the following three-volume novels for publication: 'Mary Marston,' by George Mac Donald; 'Sarah de Berenger,' by Jean Ingelow; 'Black Abbey,' by M. Crommelin; and 'A Plot of the Present Day,' by Kate Hope. They also announce some other works of fiction: 'Jack and Jill: a Village Story,' by Louisa M. Alcott; 'The Heir of Kilfinnan,' a new story by the late W. H. G. Kingston; 'The Tribulations of a Chinaman' and 'The Steam House,' by Jules Verne; and 'Under the Punkah,' by Phil. Robinson.

Messrs. HURST & BLACKETT have in the press a work from the pen of the well-known actor Mr. Edmund Leathes, entitled 'An Actor Abroad,' consisting of gossip, dramatic, narrative, and descriptive, from the author's personal recollections of Australia, New Zealand, the Sandwich Islands, California, and other places. The same firm will publish in October a new novel, entitled 'Strictly Tied Up,' in three volumes.

Mr. A. H. BULLEN is performing very satisfactorily the promise made in January last, and announced in the Athenæum for January 31st, of reprinting the plays of John Day. The first part, containing the 'Parliament of Bees,' appeared three months ago, and the second part, containing the 'Ile of Gula,' has just been published. A third part is, we believe, in active preparation. At present the editor has confined himself in his notes to a revision of the text, and in that direction, in spite of the apparently hopeless corruption of many passages, Mr. Bullen seems determined to do all that could be desired. While preparing the 'Parliament of Bees' for the press he was fortunate enough to find among the Lansdowne MSS. a transcript of the play in an unrevised state, with which he has collated the printed quarto of 1641, and published the variations in his foot-notes. Students of Elizabethan literature have thus an interesting illustration of the changes which sixteenth and seventeenth century plays underwent while passing from the stage to the press. In the 'Ile of Gula' some of the emendations have been suggested by Mr. Fleay and Dr. Brinsley Nicholson, both of whom have placed their notes on the comedy at Mr. Bullen's disposal. We look forward with much interest to the part of the series containing Mr. Bullen's promised essay on John Day and his general notes on the plays. The work is being printed at the Chiswick Press.

Mr. DAVID BOQUE will publish in November a new book by Mr. S. Butler, author of 'Erewhon' and 'Life and Habit,' &c., entitled 'Unconscious Memory.' The work will contain translations from the German of Prof. Ewald Hering, of Prague, and Von Hartmann, with a comparison between the views of instinctive and unconscious actions taken by these two writers respectively.

Among the new books announced for the coming season by Messrs. Marcus Ward & Co. is one by Miss Catharine Drew, 'The Lutanate of St. Jacobi's.' It treats of Germany in the seventeenth century, and the state of music and musical instruments; also of lace making, which was then a staple trade in Germany.

'LEFT to Starve, and No One wants the Blame,' by Mrs. E. A. Germains, is the title of a new story to be published early in October by Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall & Co.

In his forthcoming volume on 'Peasant Life in the West of England,' which will be published early next month by Messrs. Sampson Low & Co., Mr. F. G. Heath will give, under the section heading of "English Peasants of To-day," a considerable amount of information concerning the present condition—moral and intellectual as well as material—of the peasant population of Dorset, Wilts, Somerset, and Devon. Among the subjects especially dealt with will be cottages and sanitation, present money earnings, allotments, dress and food; and there will be chapters on "Poor Farming and Depression," and on "Superstition and Folk-lore."

Messrs. C. Kegan Paul & Co.'s list of new theological works is this:—Vol. II. of Mr. Cheyne's 'The Prophecies of Isaiah'; 'A Commentary on the Book of Job,' with a translation by Samuel Cox; 'The Human Race, and other Sermons,' by the late F. W. Robertson; a new volume of sermons by the Rev. Stopford A. Brooke; 'The Gospel of the Divine Life,' by Thomas Griffith; 'The Three Sevens,' by H. T. Adamson, B.D.; 'A Year's Meditations,' by the author of 'Récit d'une Sœur'; a 'Life of Sister Augustine, Superior of the Sisters of Charity at the St. Johannis Hospital at Bonn'; 'A History of the Holy Eucharist in England related from the Catholic Standpoint,' by the Rev. T. E. Bridgett; in the "Pulpit Commentary" new volumes on the First Book of Samuel and on Genesis; and two works aiming at the reconciliation of science and religion, the one entitled 'The New Truth and the Old Faith,' by a Scientific Layman, and the other, by Mr. William Graham, on 'The Faith and Morals of Science.'

THE same firm will also publish 'Jewish Life in the East,' by S. M. Samuel; a book 'About the Jews since Bible Times,' by Mrs. Magnan; and a 'Hebrew Grammar and Exercise Book,' by Ada S. Ballin and F. L. Ballin.

MESSRS. C. KEGAN PAUL & Co.'s "Education Library" will be commenced, under the editorship of Mr. Philip Magnus, by 'An Introduction to the History of Educational Theories,' by Mr. Oscar Browning, and 'Comenius,' by Prof. Simon Lauris. The "Parchment Library" is to be increased by the addition of a new translation of the 'De Imitatione Christi,' a new edition of Keats's Poems, Prof. Dowden's annotated edition of Shakspeare's Sonnets, and Mr. Mark Pattison's edition of Milton's Sonnets.

THE Corporation of Cardiff, finding the present Free Library inadequate to the wants of the town, have resolved to build a handsome and commodious block, comprising a free library, museum, and art schools, and the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury have been asked to sanction a loan of 10,000*l.* for the new buildings.

The Squire: a Magazine for Country Gentlemen is the title of a new monthly periodical, to be conducted by Mr. Morgan Evans. The first number is announced to appear in November.

THE "Round Table" Annual this year will be entitled 'Four Flirts: their Cards, and how they Played Them,' and will be written by Mr. Ernest Warren.

MESSRS. REMINGTON & Co. will publish, in two volumes, early in October, 'Continental Society and Scenery,' by Helen and Alice Zimmermann. The delineations are taken from the works of twenty-six eminent foreign novelists. Short notices will be added of the lives and writings of the various authors.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. will publish next month, in serial form, 'The Child's Life of Christ.' They also announce 'Old and New Edinburgh,' by James Grant, and a book called 'Young Ireland,' dealing with the times of O'Connell and Smith O'Brien, by the Hon. Sir Charles Gavan Duffy, who was in succession the fellow prisoner of each of them, and has since had a remarkable career in Australia.

MESSRS. HODDER & STOUGHTON are about to publish a series of popular biographies, under the general title of "Men worth Remembering." It is proposed to give the lives of William Wilberforce, Richard Baxter, Philip Doddridge, John Wycliffe, Thomas Chalmers, Henry Martyn, and others. Among the contributors will be the Dean of Salisbury, Dr. Stoughton, Dr. Stanford, Canon Fleming, Dr. Donald Fraser, and Canon Bell. The series will be published in America simultaneously with the English edition by Messrs. A. C. Armstrong & Son.

MESSRS. NEWMAN & Co. have in the press a revised second edition of Mr. Samuel Phillips Day's 'Life and Society in America,' which will be ready early next month. The second series of the work will be issued at the same time.

MESSRS. HAUGHTON & Co. are now publishing a new work entitled 'Ecce Veritas,' by the Rev. Dr. Hitchens, of Eccleston Square Church. The object of the book is to show the relationship between modern scepticism and revealed religion.

WE observe that Mr. Elliot Stock announces the close of the subscription list to his fac-simile of Juliana Berners's 'Treatyse of Fysshynge wyth an Angle' on the last day of this month.

MESSRS. A. & C. BLACK have in the press a biography of the late Principal Candlish by the Rev. Dr. Wilson, with an introduction by Principal Rainy, and a new book by the late Rev. Dr. Raleigh, which will be a companion volume to his 'Quiet Resting-places.'

THE meeting of librarians in Edinburgh, under the auspices of the Library Association, will take place on the 5th, 6th, and 7th of next month. We hear that papers will be read on early printing in Scotland, the law of copyright, the Free Libraries Act, and biographical sketches will be given of distinguished Edinburgh librarians.

THE candidates for the chair of Commercial and Political Economy in the University of Edinburgh, vacant by the death of Prof. Hodgson, include Prof. Leone Levi, Mr. A. J. Wilson (one of the City editors of the Times), Mr. H. Dunning Macleod, and Mr. John Macdonell, author of 'A Survey of Political Economy.'

A BAZAAR in aid of a fund for the erection of a statue of Burns has been opened in Dumfries. It contains an exhibition of upwards of one hundred relics of the poet. The proposed statue has been designed by Mrs. D. O. Hill, of Edinburgh.

THE Monday Shakspeare Club, Glasgow, will begin its work for the session 1880-1 with '2 Henry IV.' on October 11th.

THE work of Dr. W. W. Ireland, of the Scottish National Institution at Iarbert, on 'Idiocy and Imbecility,' published in 1877, has recently been translated into the Russian language by Dr. Tomaschewski, with a preface by Prof. Mierzejewski. At the same time the Medico-Psychological Society of St. Petersburg (Société des Psychiatres) has conferred on Dr. Ireland the diploma of corresponding member of that body.

MESSRS. TRÜBNER & Co. will shortly publish 'Contributions to the History of the Development of the Human Race,' lectures and dissertations by Lazarus Geiger, translated from the second German edition by Dr. David Asher, of Leipzig.

THE Modern Review for October will contain the continuation of Prof. Kuenen's 'Essay on Critical Method,' and Dr. Carpenter supplements his previous paper with a discussion on 'Nature and Law.' Mrs. William Grey contributes an article on the social and religious struggle between the old and the new in modern Italy. The first of Mr. Schutz Wilson's promised studies on 'Faust' also appears in the forthcoming number.

NOT many more than two hundred pages of Dr. Badger's 'English-Arabic Lexicon' remain to be printed. The work will probably be completed by the end of the year. It will be published by Messrs. C. Kegan Paul & Co.

OUR veteran and distinguished Orientalist, Mr. J. W. Redhouse, late Oriental Secretary to the Foreign Office, to whom we referred last week, is about to publish by subscription a metrical translation from the Persian of a portion of a famous work, the Mesnevi poems of Jelâlu'd-din, Er Rumi, of Qonya (Konieh). The book is little known to Europeans, but is venerated in the East next to the Koran in its relation to the mystic sects. We shall be fortunate to have in English, besides the short sketch by Prof. E. H. Palmer, 'The Song of the Reed,' this larger work of Mr. Redhouse, of which Messrs. Trübner will be the publishers.

A COLLECTED edition of all the recent poems of Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes will shortly appear, under the title of 'The Iron Gate.'

THE Russian Jesuits, expelled from their domicile in the Rue de Sèvres by the decree of the 29th of March, have published a translation of an article from the Golos, 'Les Jésuites Russes et le Musée Slave, Paris, 1880,' as a protest against the way in which they have been treated and the breaking up of their interesting Slavonic Museum, which contained many rarities, including the celebrated Ostrog Bible of 1581.

MRS. MARY STUART SMITH, the wife of Prof. Smith, of the University of Virginia, has translated from the German Dunster's 'Life of Goethe,' and the version will be published shortly in Boston.

MR. HENRY LLEWELLYN WILLIAMS writes to us, under date of September 20th, as follows:—

"In a recent issue of Truth remarks were made on the absence of a story of 'The Mysteries of Constantinople,' and, in apparent allusion to a lately published romance, called 'The Mysteries of St. Petersburg,' in English, a French novel under that title was pointed out. To prevent any one, perhaps, travelling over the same ground, it should be known that Messrs. Dicks purchased my 'Mysteries of Constantinople' as far back as the Russo-Turkish war time. As for 'The Mysteries of St. Petersburg,' every line of which has passed under my pen, it has not the slightest relations with any other work in any language."

M. GOLENISCHEFF has returned to St. Petersburg from Egypt and brought with him several objects of the earliest Egyptian period.

SCIENCE

The Birds of Cornwall and the Scilly Islands. By the late Edward Hearle Rodd. Edited by James Edmund Harting. (Trübner & Co.)

THE thanks of all bird lovers, whether scientific or not, are due to both author and editor of this most pleasant book. Readers of the Zoologist and of the natural history column of the Field know the name of Edward Hearle Rodd as that of a most unwearied and learned collector and recorder of new and rare Cornish birds, and many doubtless read with regret of his death in the early part of the present year. In 1864 Mr. Rodd published 'A List of British Birds as a Guide to the Ornithology of Cornwall,' and he issued a second edition of the same in 1869. At intervals from 1840, and annually from 1850, he also contributed summaries of the ornithological news of the county to the Journal of the Royal Institution of Cornwall. At the time of his death he had prepared and revised a few sheets of the present book, in which he intended to combine all his previous ornithological notes. After the death of the author, Mr. Harting, whose name is a sufficient guarantee for the accuracy of his work, undertook to weld the abundant, if somewhat fragmentary, materials into such a history of the birds of Cornwall as Mr. Rodd had intended, and he has certainly carried out his task most admirably. The various notes contributed to the pages of the Zoologist and the Fidd, the 'Lists' of 1864 and 1869, and the annual summaries have been recast and rewritten, and now appear in the body of this book, so that, to quote Mr. Harting's own words, "the author is responsible for the facts, the editor for the mode of expression."

But the editor has done much more than this. He has himself written and added, not only a memoir of Mr. Rodd, which, if it has a fault, has the unusual one of being too brief, but also a most interesting introduction, in which he has collected notices of the birds of Cornwall by various writers from William of Worcester to Mr. Rodd's contemporaries.

As regards the memoir, we need only add that we note with satisfaction that Mr. Rodd has bequeathed his splendid collection to his nephew, Mr. F. R. Rodd, of Trebartha Hall, who, being himself an ornithologist, is likely to carry on the good work begun by his uncle.

As to the introduction, we are not sure that it is not the most interesting part of the book. Among the authors quoted are William of Worcester (1468 or 1478); John Leland (wrote about 1600?); Richard Carew of Antonie (1602), of whose book Mr. Harting says, "In this volume we have apparently the first printed account of the birds of Cornwall furnished by a resident in the county"; Camden, the author of 'Britannia' (1607); Francis Willughby (1678), Walter Moyle (1726), and others. The extracts are interesting not only as showing the changes which have taken place in the avifauna of the county and the new species which have constantly been noted in it, but also, and perhaps chiefly, because they afford a curious picture of the growth of ornithological lore in the country generally. Scientific ornithology is of but very recent origin. Of the writers above mentioned Carew gives a quaint classification of Cornish birds:—

"Of tame birds, Cornwall hath Doves, Geese, Ducks, Peacocks, Ginney ducks, China geese, Barbary hennes, and such like. Of wild, Quails, Raile, Partridge, Fesant, Plover, Snipe, Wood dove, Heath cocke, Powte, &c.....Of Hawkes there are Marlions, Sparhawkes, Hobbies, and somewhere Lannards.....Of singing birds they have Lynnets, Goldfinches, Ruddockes, Canaries birds, Blacke-birds, Thrushes, and divers others.Besides these shooting burgeses of the ocean [i.e. fishes] there are also certaine flying citizens of the ayre.....; of who some serve for food to vs, and some but to feed themselves. Among the first sort, we reckon the Dibchicks (so named of his diuing and littleness), Coots, Sanderlings, Sealarke, Oxen and Kine [i.e. Orbirds or Dunlins], Seapies, Puffins, Fewets, Meawes, Murres, Cressers, Curlewes, Teale, Wigeon, Burranets, Shags, Ducke and Mallard, Gull, Wild-geese, Heron, Crano, and Barnacle.....Sea-fowle not eatable, are Ganets, Osprays. Amongst which Jackedaw (the second slaunders of our cuntrye) shall passe for companie, as frequenting their haunt, though not their diet: I meane not the common Daw, but one peculiar to Cornwall, and there termed a Cornish Chough: his bill is sharpe, long, and rod, his legs of the same colour, his feathers blacke, his condition, when he is kept tame, vngregarious, in filching and hiding of money, and such short ends, somewhat dangerous in carrying stickes of fire."

Carew was, however, apparently not specially a scientific man. But in the work by Walter Moyle there is printed a correspondence between Dr. Tancred Robinson (a well-known traveller and scientific man of his day), Dr. Sherard (the founder of the Oxford professorship of Botany), and Moyle himself. The interest of this correspondence lies in the fact that it shows the efforts of the various scientific writers to determine species then undescribed, but which we now know to be abundant enough. For instance, Dr. Sherard writes of a petrel, in all probability the storm petrel (Procellaria pelagica):—

"Tis, I think, of the Larus kind, not much bigger than a Swallow, all over black, the feet webbed, the Bill a little crooked; but, what to me was remarkable, on the middle of it a hollow Prominence (doubtless with a septum intermedium), instead of Nostrils on each side of the Bill."

In turning from this introduction by Mr. Harting to Mr. Rodd's notes, which form the body of the book, we may point out that many of the most interesting passages in the latter are also curious in this same way, that is, as illustrating the growth of bird-lore. For instance, Mr. Rodd, writing in 1846, says:—

"A valuable addition to our Fauna was made in March, 1845, by the capture of the fire-crested Regulus (Regulus ignicapillus). The specimen under notice.....was shot within half a mile of the town of Penzance.....Two other examples of this interesting and rare species were obtained about the same time.....Previous to the detection of the above specimens, only one instance had been recorded of the occurrence of this species in the kingdom, viz., in the neighbourhood of Cambridge."

And again, writing in 1850, he says:— "Since the year 1846 several examples of the fire-crested Regulus have been observed near Truro." Since then this bird has, as we all know, been found to be by no means very rare.

But it is time to examine Mr. Rodd's part of this book somewhat more closely. Cornwall, owing to its geographical form and its climate, has more to entice birds to enter its limits than perhaps any other district of equal size in the United Kingdom. Every year it is the first land visited and the last quitted by the innumerable birds which, coming from North-western Africa and South-western Europe, spread themselves throughout England during the summer; and in the winter its comparatively warm climate affords shelter to very many other birds, driven by cold and want of food from various parts of these islands. And most of the advantages thus possessed by Cornwall are possessed in a yet greater degree by the little group of Scilly Islands, lying off the south-western coast of that county. It is, therefore, not surprising that, of the 400 birds generally recognized as British, as many as 290 have been observed in Cornwall, and that of these 290 as many as 173 have been seen in the Scilly Islands, small as they are.

An enthusiastic naturalist, with at least some sympathy with sportsmen, living in such a county as Cornwall, and with constant communication with the Scilly Islands, Mr. Rodd naturally took rank as the authority on the birds of that county. He was able not only to add many new birds to the Cornish list, but also to record several as new to Britain. The spotted eagle, lesser grey shrike, red-breasted fly-catcher, and the American stint were among the latter. Yet he was far from being a mere list-maker. For much knowledge of the habits, especially of the migratory habits, of British birds we are indebted to him, and countless facts bearing on this subject are permanently recorded in the present work.

But in reading the book we were chiefly interested in certain remarks on the disappearance of some species once common, and the appearance of others previously rare or unknown. Of this sort is the following note on Montagu's harrier (Circus cinereus) and the hen harrier (C. cyaneus):—

"It is somewhat remarkable, that as one species becomes scarce in a district or county, its place is often supplied by another of its congeners, which from having been rare becomes gradually common. This is the case with Montagu's Harrier, which was at one time very rarely met with in this county, but which is now far commoner than the Hen Harrier, and breeds every year in the Lizard district."

The starlings are said to have changed their habits. In 1873 Mr. Rodd writes:—

"They have been gradually creeping more westward every year during the summer, but they were formerly quite unknown in the western counties, except as winter visitants. I have traced them gradually to Trebartha, to Bodmin, and now to Truro. For some years they have been known at Trebartha as breeding there; first, only a pair or two; but now they are to be seen generally diffused over the lawn and in the large trees all through the spring and summer months."

We have already alluded to Mr. Rodd's observations of the starlings in reviewing Mr. Patterson's 'Birds, Fishes, and Cetacea commonly frequenting Belfast Lough' (Athenæum, September 11th).

The green woodpecker also is said to have been quite unknown in the west of the county till about 1873, since which time it has become comparatively common. A similar fact is noted of at least two other birds, the great Northern diver and the Dartford warbler. Of course in some of these cases, especially in the two last mentioned, the apparent increase in number may be due to the increased attention which has been directed to the birds in recent years; but this can hardly be so in the case of the starling or Montagu's harrier. At any rate, the subject is curious and worthy of attention.

If there is anything that we regret in Mr. Rodd's book, it is that it tells of the slaughter of too many rare birds; but of course the fact that it is in most cases impossible to identify birds with certainty except after killing them affords a strong justification. We will also enter a modest protest against the statement on p. 31 that wrens "make several attempts before completing a perfect nest, apparently for sport and amusement." Of course the words to which we object are those which we have italicized.

At the end of the book are added a few notes on the birds of the Scilly Islands by Mr. F. R. Rodd, the present owner of our author's collection, and a curious list of Cornish names of birds and things connected with birds. The former is likely to make the mouths of wild-fowlers water, and the latter, though fragmentary, is philologically interesting.

ASTRONOMICAL NOTES.

HERR PALISA, of Pola, who apparently finds it easier to discover planets than to invent names for them when discovered, found another small planet, No. 218, on the night of the 4th inst.

The following are the places of Faye's comet for next week, from Prof. Axel Moller's ephemeris, adapted to midnight at Berlin, or about 11 o'clock P.M. at London:—

Date.	R.A.	N.P.D.
	h. m. s.	° ' "
Sept. 26	23 52 18	83 59
" 27	23 51 46	84 10
" 28	23 51 17	84 21
" 29	23 50 51	84 32
" 30	23 50 26	84 45
Oct. 1	23 50 3	84 57
Oct. 2	23 49 38	85 9

Schaberle's comet (b, 1880), discovered last April, is now nearly as favourably situated for observation as it will be, and therefore we also give its places for next week, from M. Bigourdan's ephemeris, adapted to midnight at Paris:—

Date.	R.A.	N.P.D.
	h. m. s.	° ' "
Sept. 26	6 43 2	75 41
" 27	6 40 25	76 1
" 28	6 39 45	76 26
" 29	6 38 39	77 3
" 30	6 37 16	77 28
Oct. 1	6 35 57	78 1
" 2	6 34 38	78 30

As the comet will at no time rise much before midnight, intending observers will have to make a morning watch of it. The brightness is now about the same as at the time of discovery on April 6th, and will slightly increase during the next few weeks. The perihelion passage took place on the 2nd of July.

We have received the Memoirs of the Italian Spectroscopical Society for May, the principal subject of which is Prof. Tacchini's account of his observations of the sun's prominences, spots, and facule at Rome during January, February, and March, digested according to the heliocentric latitudes at which they were seen. Annexed is a description (first published in Astronomische Nachrichten, No. 2309, and here translated from the German into Italian) of a spectro-telescope, contrived by Herr P. Glan, of Berlin, the purpose of which is to enable the observer to survey large portions of the sun's disc at once in homogeneous light.

In the American Journal of Science for this month is a paper by Mr. D. F. Todd, M.A., of the American Naval Almanac Office, containing an interesting 'Preliminary Account of a Speculative and Practical Search for a trans-Neptunian Planet.' It has long been thought that indications are not wanting pointing to the existence of some planet exterior to Neptune, but the theory of even Uranus, and still more that of Neptune, are not yet in a state to furnish much in the nature of probable information as to its approximate place; hence Mr. Todd prefers to call the first part of his investigation rather speculative than theoretic. Nothing daunted, however, by the wideness of the range of place within which he thought this distant hypothetical body might be, he obtained permission of Admiral Rodgers and Prof. Hall to use the great refractor (26 inches in aperture) of the Washington Observatory in searching for thirty nights through a portion of a zone nearly 20° in length, hoping to recognize the object of his affections "by contrast of its disc and light with the appearance of an average star of about the thirteenth magnitude," and on any suspicion in this way carefully reobserving the suspected body. This work was done about two years and a half ago; its conclusions, as far as they went, were negative, but a hope, for some time entertained, of being able to resume it and carry it to a satisfactory conclusion, led Mr. Todd to delay the publication of the paper. But, he remarks, a search of a much more laborious and extended kind will probably have to be made, should any observer in possession of sufficiently powerful telescopic means be inclined to continue it.

The twelfth volume of the Annals of the Astronomical Observatory of Harvard College, at Cambridge, U.S., has just been published, containing the observations made with the meridian circle in the years 1874 and 1875, and including valuable catalogues of the places of 334 primary and 284 secondary stars (618 in all) observed in those years as well as in 1871 and 1872.

Science Society.

We are glad to hear that Mrs. Clifford, the widow of Prof. W. K. Clifford, is to receive a pension from the Civil List in recognition of the contributions to science made by her husband.

MR. ALEXANDER GRAHAM BELL, in a lecture delivered before the American Association for the Advancement of Science, described his remarkable experiments on the production and reproduction of sound by means of light. It is found that nearly all metallic substances emit sounds when a vibratory beam of light falls upon them, the pitch of these sounds depending upon the frequency of the vibratory change in the light. Thus, without a conducting wire as in electric telephony, audible sounds can be conveyed from station to station, wherever we can project a beam of light. The sensibility of the metal selenium to the action of the solar spectrum recommends it as the most favourable substance for use in the "photophone," as the new instrument is called. The instrument may be briefly described as a bright plane mirror of flexible material, against the back of which the speaker's voice is directed. The beam of light reflected from this mirror is thus thrown into vibrations corresponding with those produced on the diaphragm. This beam is received at a distant station upon a parabolic reflector, in the focus of which is placed a sensitive selenium cell, connected in a local circuit with a battery and a telephone. Every vibration of the ray of light acting upon the selenium produces a distinctly audible sound. Articulate speech can be thus reproduced by solar light, the oxyhydrogen light, or by the light of a kerosene lamp. The greatest distance through which conversation has been carried on up to this time is about 800 yards.

SIR JONIAN MASON'S Science College is now advertised to be opened on the 1st of October with a lecture by Prof. Huxley. The classes for students commence on October 3rd.

CAPT. EMDALE, R.E., has been appointed Instructor in the Art of Military Ballooning by the War Office, and an entire company of Royal Engineers has been placed under his command.

THE chemical lectures at Bedford College for Ladies only, in York Place, Portman Square, will begin on the 16th of October. The lecturer is Mr. Thomas Elftott.

PROF. HEINEMANN will deliver a course of ten lectures on 'Political Economy and Commercial Geography' at the Young Men's Christian Association, 31, King William Street, City, commencing on October 7th.

MESSES. C. KEGAN PAUL & Co. will shortly issue several scientific works, namely, a translation of Strecker's Wissenschafts 'Organic Chemistry', by Dr. Hodgkinson and Mr. Greenaway, and some new volumes of the "International Scientific Series," of which Prof. Wurtz's book on 'The Atomic Theory' and Prof. Karl Semper's 'Natural Conditions of Existence as they affect Animal Life,' are ready for publication. These will be followed by the late Prof. Clifford's work on 'The First Principles of the Exact Sciences,' and Prof. E. Morrell's treatise entitled 'Suicide: an Essay in Comparative Moral Statistics.' The essays on 'Physiology for Practical Use,' edited by the late Prof. Hinton, are now to be issued in one volume.

DR. THEEL has arrived in Edinburgh from Gothenburg with two large cases filled with specimens of Holothurids got in the Challenger expedition of 1872. Dr. Theel has sketched all the specimens on plates by hand and numbered each. They are to be lithographed in this country for future assistance. Dr. Theel intends to resume his studies in Edinburgh.

GENERAL ALBERT J. MYER, of the Signal Service of the United States, died in Buffalo on the 24th of August, in the fifty-second year of his age. General Myer, who was commonly known as "Old Probabilities," was for upwards of twenty years the moving spirit of the meteorological service of North America, its extension and excellent organization being mainly due to his unwearying efforts.

DR. ASA GRAY and M. Alphonse de Candolle are, according to the Gardener's Chronicle, expected shortly to visit this country.

MR. E. H. HALL, of Johns Hopkins University, has in the American Journal of Science for September an article of considerable research 'On the New Action of Magnetism on a Permanent Electrical Current.'

PROF. E. B. ANDREWS, of the Geological Survey of Ohio, died on the 21st of August in his sixtieth year. He was the author of a valuable volume on the geology of Ohio, and he contributed various geological memoirs to the publications of the survey of that state.

MR. A. R. C. SELWYN, Director-General of the Geological Survey of Canada, has returned to Montreal after a visit to the north-west districts of the Dominion. Close attention has been given to the mineral productions of this region, and several bore-holes have been made, passing through, at a depth of 275 feet, a coal seam six feet thick, which promises to be of considerable value.

PINE ARTS

DON'T GREAT WORKS. 'CHRIST LEAVING THE PRETORIUM,' 'CHRIST ENTERING JERUSALEM,' and 'THE SHAZEN KEMENT' (the latter just completed, each 25 by 25 feet, with 'Dream of Philip's Wife, Soldiers at the Cross,' 'Night of the Crucifixion,' 'Houses of Churches' at the DORE GALLERY, 25, New Bond Street. Daily, Ten to Six.—Ed.

THE PRIVATE COLLECTIONS OF ENGLAND.

No. LIX.—NOSTEL PRIORY, WAKEFIELD.

HAVING described the Italian and English pictures in Mr. Rowland Winn's collection, we proceed to deal with those which represent the remaining continental schools.

By far the most important and interesting of these works is that very large one (about 12 feet by 8 feet) which is ascribed to Holbein, and is entitled 'Sir Thomas More and his Family.' This picture exhibits eleven life-size figures in the foreground, another smaller one in the background, several animals, much furniture, and many architectural details, the accessory elements of a handsomely furnished apartment, in which are the future Chancellor, Sir Thomas himself, aged about fifty years, and his father, Sir John More, the judge, aged about seventy-six. On our right of the picture are Alice, Lady More, second wife of Sir Thomas, aged fifty-seven; Margaret Roper, eldest daughter of Sir Thomas, aged twenty-two, holding open in her hands Seneca's tragedy of 'Edipus' at the chorus, Act iv.; and Cecilia Heron, third daughter of Sir Thomas, aged twenty. On our left are Mrs. Clement (wife of Dr. John Clement), whose birth-name was Gigs, and Elizabeth Dancy, second daughter of Sir Thomas, with a volume of Seneca's 'Epistles' under her arm. Behind are Anne Crasacre, aged fifteen, and John More, to whom she was betrothed, aged nineteen, son of Sir Thomas, and Henry Pattison, Sir Thomas's jester; next to him, with a roll of paper in his hand, is John Harris, secretary to Sir Thomas, and friend of Mr. Roper, for whom this picture is said to have been painted. In an inner room is a young man reading. The student of the history and character of this highly important picture cannot do better than consult Mr. Wornum's learned, elaborate, and almost exhaustive text, 'Life and Works of H. Holbein,' 1867, p. 231. He admits the probable correctness of the suggestions we offer below.

It is due to Dr. Waagen, who, as we said before, made a careful examination of this picture, to say that on technical grounds, due to the redness of the flesh tints, he gave the period c. 1530 as that of Holbein's practice to which he ascribed this painting. Mr. Winn tells us that "1530" is on the canvas, "but was not discovered till the picture was cleaned by Mr. Holden a few years ago, when, the old varnish and dirt being removed, this date was very distinct, and is so still, although you would not observe it unless your attention had been called to it." Assuming this date to be unchallengeable, it agrees well enough with the ages of the persons represented. It is to the credit of the German critic, who has been most unwarrantably abused on account of his criticisms on Holbein, that the inscription referred to by the present owner of the picture, which escaped our own notice and was unknown in Waagen's time, and the latter's guess at a date coincide closely. It is unfortunate, however, that whereas the critic based his opinion of the painting on technical grounds, i.e., the redness of the flesh tints, he came to the conclusion that "this is nothing more than an early copy" of an original by Holbein, the whereabouts and even the existence of which he did not attempt to demonstrate. It is this discrepancy which we have already ventured to call an absurdity in the expression of Dr. Waagen's opinion, for if he had satisfied himself that the work is "nothing more than an early copy," how could he venture to rely on its technique as a means of establishing the date or period of its execution in the master's career? Dr. Waagen's opinion is given in 'Treasures of Art in Great Britain,' iii. 335, a text which is in a somewhat confused state, and suggests, by the incompleteness of its expressions, that condensation had injuriously affected the account.

When the picture was cleaned, as above stated, that operation was effected with considerable success, and not only was the date in question brought to light, but a portion of the canvas, which, in order doubtless to fit the work to a particular position, had been "turned in," was "turned out" again. This portion comprises the extreme right, and on it is depicted a monkey. It is said that this painting, in what condition we cannot say, was, not long after Holbein's time, in the possession of Andreas Van Loo, and that it was purchased at his death by Mr. Roper, grandson of Sir T. More, of Well Hall, Eltham, the house of that family, whence it passed by marriage to Sir Rowland Winn, grandfather of the present owner, since which transfer it has remained in honourable guardianship at Nostel Priory, of the hall of which house it is the chief and magnificent ornament. This painting was No. 163 in the National Portrait Exhibition of 1866. A drawing by Holbein is in the Beale Museum, and this agrees in respect to the general disposition of the figures with the picture before us. There are differences in some of the details of the drawing and the picture. On this drawing, the authenticity of which is not doubted, the names and ages of the persons represented are inscribed, as quoted above; similar inscriptions are on the picture before us. More sent this drawing, by Holbein's hands, to Erasmus in 1529; it bears inscriptions, attributed to More and Holbein, which, independently of the portraits, have considerable interest. An outline of the drawing was engraved in 1794 by Christian von Mechel. There are other versions of the design, each of which has been said to be the original picture by Holbein. That this distinction can be allowed to a small painting of 'Sir T. More and his Family,' which has more than once been examined, is, we think, on technical grounds, out of the question. Of all the versions, this before us has, in our opinion, the most of Holbein's handwork. We are not prepared to say that either of the other versions shows traces of the master's skill, and, as noticed below, we believe that a considerable part, or rather number of parts, of Mr. Winn's painting is by Holbein; nevertheless, we should not like to assert that any portion, however admirable it may appear to us, is now intact and in the condition in which Holbein left it. With regard to the names and ages of the figures and other memoranda, as written on the drawing at Beale, their appearance is consonant with the painter's practice, as illustrated by very numerous examples among his drawings, with which we do not include his pictures.

Our opinion of Mr. Winn's picture is that it was begun in the house of Sir Thomas More, probably at Chelsea, about 1529; that, owing to what difficulties we cannot say, it was never carried beyond the general drawing in of the design of the figures on the canvas and the final execution of several portions, hereafter named, of the figures, including certain faces and other parts, without anything more of the background than the general disposition of the lines in perspective and the masses. Holbein's noble pictures proper are such masterpieces of composition and—e.g., his magnificent design for the 'Rehearsal'—are so great as works of art, that no one can for a moment doubt his power to make a fine design or "composition" of figures equal to that at Nostel, admirable as that is. The drawing at Beale proves so much as this and leaves no doubt on the point, although the composition before us surpasses that at Beale in most respects of quality, but not more than might be expected to occur when a great artist was set to carry out his original ideas on a larger scale than that of their inception. We know that it was Holbein's practice to make large drawings, i.e., cartoons or portraits in chalk, of his sitters, and either paint on the paper direct, or transfer the outlines to panel or canvas by "pouncing" or tracing. This mode of practice is consonant with our idea of the execution of this painting. Seven such drawings of the More family are at Windsor. We suppose the whole of the figures and faces were drawn on the canvas in a general way and left subject to corrections as the painter proceeded from one to another of these elements, finishing, or intending to finish, each as he proceeded, and we imagine that Holbein actually completed certain portions of the whole from the cartoons which had been previously prepared for the heads, hands, &c., which alone are worthy of him in Mr. Winn's picture. It is true that Van Mander described a canvas, painted in water colours, with life-size, whole-length figures of More and his family, in the possession of A. van Loo. There are questionable elements in this statement which do not, however, affect our suggestion as to the character of this picture.

It is our opinion that Holbein proceeded so far and was interrupted, that the painting remained thus until after his death, and was then carried on by different and very inferior hands in the lines the master had laid down—hands which were incompetent to correct the very obvious disproportions of the original in its rudimentary state, unable to introduce the generalising and systematic light and shade which Holbein intended for his work, or even to transfer to the canvas the animated portraiture and other high qualities of the cartoons which were available for that purpose; still less competent may such hands have been to vivify, as Holbein would have done, the heads, as they may have been sketched in a rudimentary fashion. Our supposition seems to account for numerous inequalities and imperfections of what is, at any rate, a very noble painting. The striking design, the admirable composition, the absence of "effect," the crude chiaroscuro, the keen perception of character displayed in nearly all the heads, the extreme merit of the execution of some of these elements, the great inferiority of many more of the like, are in this, but in no other, manner to be accounted for. We may safely say that no artist but Holbein then living was likely to paint the More family at the date in question, and in any fashion which at all resembles that of the work before us. We now know enough of Ströter, Giulamo da Treviso, and Luke Hornebaud, Holbein's contemporaries in this country, to be able to say, on technical grounds alone, and apart from other considerations of persons, time, and place, that this picture is not due to one of them. All these circumstances point to Holbein as the author of this example.

The chief difficulties presented by the state of the work as now existing are thus got over. These difficulties appear, in the first instance, in the impossibility of supposing that Holbein himself drew, or at least intended to leave as finished, figures of such extreme disproportion as those before us, of which nearly all the heads are much too large for the bodies to which they belong, while the bodies are again too large for the lower limbs of each respectively, and the upper limbs are too large for their lower fellows severally in pairs. It is not, however, to be forgotten that there are pictures by Holbein—noticeably of which category is 'The Two Ambassadors' of Longford Castle, which was lately at the Royal Academy—containing figures of life size like those before us, which are by no means beyond challenge as to the proportions of their limbs, heads, and torsos. No work of Holbein's approaches that in question in regard to these defects, and therefore we are disposed to imagine that he did not complete the drawing of the figures on the canvas. In the second instance, the awkwardness of the actions of some of the women on our extreme left, the "dumplingness" of the figure of Judge More, and the want of animation and intelligence in the expression of many of the heads—of which, however, the personal characters and characteristics have been acutely discriminated the one from the others—are all points in favour of a suggestion such as the above. The completely insane action of the hands of a woman seated on our left is not due to Holbein, whose drawing of hands is always admirable. This defective action is of a different nature altogether from that apparent in the figures of More's daughters, who sit with the elderly woman on our right of the composition. This group of three females is, apart from certain disproportions, in every respect worthy of Holbein, who produced so many noble compositions and grouped figures so admirably in many serious works. The figures to which we refer are thoroughly fine, spontaneous, and self-sustained, because their designs, expressions, and actions are quite in accord the one with the others.

In the third instance, the defective portions, heads and the like, of this great work do not accord with the pathos of the profound and almost solemn expression of the face of More himself, which seems to us a marvellous rendering of insight into human character, reproducing with extreme subtlety the utmost energy of thoughtfulness as marked on a visage where a far-seeing, vigorous soul has, so to say, written itself in every line and feature, and manifested itself in those penetrative yet meditating eyes, those fine, thin lips, and affected the sedate reserve of every lineament. In addition, let us remark that the local colour of the picture is unequal. More's sleeves, his body clothing, the red dress of his father, are, allowing for the injuries of time and meddling hands, extremely luminous and well employed in regard to the chiaroscuro of the picture, but these features are quite out of keeping with others of the same kind which accompany them here. We diamaltogether the dogs and some minor accessories of the work as plainly inferior to all the rest of the painting. In fact, we consider the dogs, as they now appear, to be due to an artist of another and much later school than Holbein's; these creatures are, in short, absurdities.

To sum up our ideas of the execution of the painting—of its design and composition enough has already been said—we think that the great master did little more than design the heads of the women on our left and the subordinate heads on our right. It seems to us that he had not much more than this to do with the figures of the son on one side and the women on the other side of Sir Thomas himself. We surmise that his share is considerable in the heads and certain other parts, as they now exist, of the three women on our right (see above), and most of all in the portraits, heads, and figures of the great Chancellor and his father the judge. We have little doubt that Holbein, with more or less distinctness, drew the whole of the design on the canvas, and proposed abundant revision as he proceeded. Thus, as it seems to us, he left the picture with one head, that of Sir Thomas More, nearly finished, while three other heads had been far advanced in execution, two more heads were less so, and the rest of the work was in outline, or but slightly "carried further" in any portion, and not at all defined in most of the remaining elements. We cannot omit to remark that Holbein's manner of painting would allow such a state of things as we suggest to have occurred in this case. That he finished more than we have named is inconceivable. Probably some contemporary, or nearly contemporary, painter completed the picture, or rather covered the canvas as well as he could, but was not able or did not venture to correct the disproportions of the sketched figures, nor to give to those carnations which were most advanced the intense luminosity of the master's mode. What may be called a small library has been written about this extraordinarily important and much disputed painting. Our observations have been founded on careful comparisons and opportunities granted by Mr. Rowland Winn.

By Teniers we noticed a 'Dance of Boors' in a landscape, with a château on our left. The design has interest because it shows how closely the respective classes of the people were inter-mixed while they disported themselves on such occasions as that here represented; gentlemen and ladies, tradesmen and artificers, labourers, men, women, and children, are all together, and more or less deeply concerned in the clumsy gambols the painter has depicted with characteristic spontaneity. It is an unusually sunny, pure, and warm example of Teniers's best time, very crisp in touch, and neatly finished. In an upper room at Nostel is a large, very remarkable, and extremely quaint picture of the old Dutch school, of the class generally associated with the name of Old Teniers, and representing in numerous detached groups the 'Approach to Calvary,' as comprised in a broken and highly picturesque landscape of a sandy and rocky undulating country. Calvary is a hillock. Christ appears among a numerous crowd of figures, each of which is a carefully discriminated study of character in expression and action and well composed with its neighbours. This is the case in every group, separated as it is throughout the picture, which may therefore not unfairly be styled a panorama of actions and incidents of the category familiar to us in the works of J. Breughel and other members of the school in question here. Christ and his attendants follow a troop of men-at-arms, clad in full armour of the fifteenth century or a little later, who are riding up a rocky pass towards the hill of sacrifice. Christ, having fallen under the weight of the cross, is haled on his way by rough boors and armed foot-soldiers, who handle him in a barbarously quaint fashion. A boy is about to strike him with a stick; the men shout loudly to those who go before them on the way, bidding them wait till the fallen victim shall rise again. Veronica, with her sudarium carefully displayed, kneels close to the Saviour. On our left the Virgin, unheeded by the people, rubs her eyes grotesquely with the knuckles of both hands; a dolorous Magdalene, having the pot of ointment at her side, kneels near the mother of Christ, while the other Mary, her face all red and swollen, sits with folded arms and contemplates the passage of the cross, as if its pangs involved griefs which were past weeping for. A scholar, probably intended for St. John, with a book in his hand and an ink-horn at his girdle, looks at the procession pityingly. The standard borne by the troops displays in black and gold that "grim two-necked Austrian eagle" which doubtless did duty in the mind of the painter for the antique Roman imperial banner. There is a pilgrim in mediæval costume, wearing his cockle, hat, and shoon, and carrying his bottle and staff, a queer anachronism, which does not startle the observer of many oddities in this very curious, highly meritorious, and wonderfully ugly painting. For Jerusalem we have the outskirts of a Dutch or Friesland town, for Jews we have crowds of citizens and boors. There must be more than one version of this rendering of the subject in the old Dutch manner. Not long after our visit to Nostel we saw in Piccadilly a picture, somewhat smaller than that in question, which closely resembled it in many of the incidents represented; the details and the actions of the figures also being very much alike in both cases, the treatment and style the same.

Five-Fit Gossip.

THE works of restoration in the south transept of York Minster, which have been in the charge of Mr. Street during about nine years, are now complete.

THE "Arab Hall," which has been erected from designs by Mr. G. Aitchison in the house of Sir Frederick Leighton at Kensington, and includes many beautiful shafts, sculptures, and mosaic enrichments, with a large collection of Damascus tiles, is now complete, and presents a most superb appearance; it is distinguished by great elegance of taste in the design, colour, and decorations. Our readers will remember Mr. Aitchison's drawings for this work at the last Royal Academy Exhibition. We noticed these drawings in our review of that gathering. We may as well say that, as a matter of course, the "Arab Hall," being part of the P.R.A.'s private house, is not shown to the public on any pretext.

MR. FORD MADOX BROWN has just finished his second mural painting, which is the first in decorative and chronological order of the series intended to decorate the Great Hall of the Town Hall at Manchester. The subject of this work is 'The Romans building a Fort at Mancunian'; we described the design at some length many months ago. We likewise described the design of the second picture of the series, the first to be executed, which represents the baptism of the King of Northumbria. Our readers are in possession of details of the design of the third picture of the same class, to be painted by Mr. Brown in the same Town Hall, the subject of which is the expulsion of the Danes from Manchester. These pictures, being permanent, although produced in a mode equally valuable, are not frescoes proper.

THE fund being raised for the proposed Art Gallery at Birmingham amounts now, we hear, to about 14,000.

THE seventh annual exhibition of works of art in the Pavilion at Brighton is now open.

M. TISSOT is engaged on a very popular work. This is a translation into modern terms of the story of the Prodigal Son. M. Tissot's Prodigal is not at all heroic. His history is told in four compositions. In the first the scene is an old-fashioned room, with charts and maps upon the walls and a great bow window giving on to the Thames. To the right are the Prodigal and his father; they are speaking, and the elder man is handing to the younger a cheque. To the left, displeased and sulky, are the Prodigal's brother and a young lady seated at a table. In the second of the series, which will probably prove the most popular of the four, the scene has shifted to Japan, where, in a teahouse on the water, lighted with crimson lanterns, the Prodigal is watching a bevy of Japanese dancers. In the third, on a London wharf, the Prodigal, in rage, is kneeling before his father. Behind them are the discontented brother and the young lady of the first picture. In the fourth the fattest calf has been killed and is being eaten. The background is a June landscape. To the left, in an arbour commanding the river, the Prodigal and his family are at table.

MESSRS. C. Kegan Paul & Co. have in the press a work by Robert Edis, entitled 'Decoration and Furniture of Town Houses.' It is virtually an amplification of the Cantor Lectures delivered a few months since, and will be illustrated by numerous designs and examples of decoration and furniture. The same publishers will issue immediately the first volume of Woltmann and Woermann's 'History of Painting,' which treats of painting in antiquity and the middle ages. The translation has been prepared under the supervision of Prof. Sidney Colvin, and the illustrations are numerous.

MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW & Co. announce a new edition de luxe of Washington Irving's 'Little Britain,' 'The Spectre Bridegroom,' and 'A Legend of Sleepy Hollow,' with engravings on wood from designs by C. O. Murray; 'A Treatise on Etching,' text and plates by Maxime Lalanne, translated by S. R. Koehler, with notes; two new volumes of Mr. Poynter's series of 'Text-Books of Art Education,' namely, 'German, Flemish, and Dutch Painting,' by H. Wilmot Buxton and E. J. Poynter, R.A., and 'Ancient Sculpture, Egyptian and Greek,' by G. Redford; and the following additions to the series of 'Illustrated Biographies of the Great Artists,' namely, 'Fra Angelico and Masaccio,' by Catherine Mary Phillimore; 'Fra Bartolommeo and Andrea del Sarto,' by Leader Scott; 'Sir David Wilkie,' by J. W. Mollett, M.A.; and 'Gainsborough and Constable,' by G. M. Brock-Arnold.

MESSRS. PILGROW & LEFÈVRE, the well-known art publishers, have dissolved partnership, and the business will in future be carried on by Mr. L. H. Lefèvre alone.

THE French journals announce the death of M. C. Jules Labarte, member of the Academy, and author of several well-known archaeological works, including 'L'Histoire des Arts Industriels au Moyen Age,' &c., and 'La Peinture sur Email,' &c. M. Labarte was in his eighty-fourth year. He succeeded M. C. Texier in the Academy in 1871.

WE have received from the bureaux of the Moniteur des Arts, Rue de Médecin, Paris, the sixth annual volume of the 'Dictionnaire Vêron, Séction des Beaux-Arts,' a stout little tome of 766 pages, which contains, in the alphabetical order of the artists' names, brief descriptions and criticisms of works of art in the last Salon. These comments are somewhat emotional, but they are marked by good feeling and good taste so far as they go. The book will be useful for reference.

THE Builder says that, under the auspices of the Donatello Society of Florence, an exhibition of modern pictures from many countries is now open in the palace of Count Serristori, who generously lent a gallery for the occasion. These works are gathered with the intention of exciting emulation in the minds of the painters of the city, and educating the Florentine public by means of the finest examples of current art.

which can be procured. The greater number of the pictures which have been already hung are French, and include some examples from the last Salon. Pictures by M. Meissonier and others who do not contribute to the Salon are on their way to Florence, as well as some English paintings. A collection of old tapestries and other articles will be opened next month in the Refectory of the Cloisters of Santa Croce, Florence. Another exhibition, comprising instances of art applied to industry, will be added to the above gatherings in the same month.

By an oversight in the use of notes describing pictures belonging to the Earl of Faversham at Duncombe Park (see Athen., "The Private Collections of England," No. LVII, p. 344, col. 1), we included among existing works of art in that gallery Hoppner's portraits of Mr. and Lady C. Duncombe, and two landscapes by Wootton. These examples were burned in the late fire at Duncombe Park. The remaining forty-three paintings we mentioned were saved.

MUSIC

Beethoven. By Richard Wagner. With a Supplement from the Philosophical Works of Arthur Schopenhauer. Translated by Edward Dannreuther. (Reeves.)

FROM Wagner's preface to the present volume, which was published in Germany in 1870, we learn that it was written as the author's contribution to the celebration of the centenary of Beethoven's birth. Its object is stated by Wagner as being "to offer a written exposition of his thoughts on the significance of Beethoven's music." That such a work should not have been sooner translated into English will furnish small cause for surprise to those who know the original. In the first place, it is more a philosophical than a strictly musical treatise, and from its method of dealing with the subject would appeal to only a minority of musicians. Moreover, those who are acquainted with Wagner's writings know that he has a very distinct style, his literary compositions being hardly less individual than his music; and an adequate translation of one of his works into another tongue is a task of no average difficulty. The present book is assuredly one of his hardest to render into English, and there are few among us who would have the requisite time, knowledge, and enthusiasm for the subject to do it full justice. Our first duty, therefore, is warmly to congratulate Mr. Dannreuther on the admirable manner in which he has acquitted himself of his self-imposed labour. His translation is most faithful to the original, while he has not hesitated at times to modify somewhat the merely external form of his author's sentences. The genius of the German language is so different from that of our own that too slavish an adherence to fidelity in details would produce a result which would be clumsy and cumbrous, if not absolutely unreadable. In a few cases where Mr. Dannreuther appears to have felt that the English version failed to give the precise significance of the German, the latter is added at the foot of the page. We can give no higher praise than to say that the book reads more like an original work than a translation.

Wagner commences his book with the remark that it is difficult to give a satisfactory account of the relation a great artist bears towards his nation, and that this difficulty is far greater in the case of a musician than in that of a poet or plastic artist. A poet's ideas will to some extent be modified by the language in which he writes, and the productions of a painter will be influenced by his country and his people. But as music is a universal language, and conveys no picture of any actual objects, the composer cannot be connected with his nation by any analogous means. Wagner says that the entire difference between the poet and the musician depends on the manner of the intuition of the Idea; and this brings him naturally to an exposition of Schopenhauer's theory on the nature of music, as set forth in his great work 'Die Welt als Wille und Vorstellung.' He says (p. 8):—

"Schopenhauer was the first to perceive and point out with philosophical clearness the proper position of music with reference to the other fine arts, inasmuch as he awards to music a nature entirely different from that of poetic or plastic art. He starts from the surprise we all feel that music speaks a language immediately intelligible to each of us without the mediation of intellectual conceptions, in which respect it differs entirely from poetry, the sole materials of which are concepts serving to transmit the idea. According to the philosopher's lucid and convincing definition, the Ideas of the world and its essential phenomena are in a Platonic sense the object of the fine arts in general; whilst the poet brings these Ideas home to our consciousness by the use of national concepts in a manner peculiar to his art. Schopenhauer believes it imperative to recognize in music itself an Idea of the world, since whoever could completely elucidate music, or rather translate it into rational concepts, would at the same time have produced a philosophy explaining the world."

It is almost impossible to condense within the limits of a review the close chain of reasoning which Wagner pursues, in which he carries out and applies the views enunciated in the above extract. We must content ourselves with a brief summary of the conclusions at which he arrives. A short quotation will help us to place ourselves at the author's point of view:—

"We are likely to attain some insight into the essential nature of music as an art by watching the inspired musician's mode of production. Such production must, in many respects, be thoroughly different from that of other artists. In the case of plastic artists we saw that production was preceded by pure perception of objects, free from any influence of the Will, a mode of perception which is to be reproduced in the spectator's mind by the effect of the work brought forth. But no such objects, which with the aid of pure perception may be elevated to the Idea, are ever beheld by a musician, for his music is itself an Idea of the world, wherein the world immediately exhibits its essential nature, while in the plastic arts that nature is exhibited through the mediation of cognition."—P. 19.

In coming to speak of the special development of Beethoven's genius, Wagner correctly describes him as a composer of sonatas, because in by far the greater number of his best works "the outline of the sonata-form was the veil-like tissue through which he gazed into the realm of sounds." Instead of overthrowing the established forms he ennobled them, and gave a deeper significance to their contents:—

"For inasmuch as he again raised music, that had been degraded to a merely diverting art, to the height of its sublime calling, he has led us to understand the nature of that art from which the world explains itself to every consciousness as distinctly as the most profound philosophy could explain it to a thinker well versed in abstract conceptions. And the relation of the great Beethoven to the German nation is based upon this alone."—P. 41.

It is by no means easy to understand what Wagner means by saying, on the very next page, that if Beethoven "had consciously transformed or overthrown the external forms of music he found extant, that would have been acting according to reason." This appears to us to imply the paradox that while the composer "raised the art to the height of its sublime calling," he was still acting contrary to reason. Surely so extraordinary a statement as this requires some proof, or at least some arguments to support it; but Wagner merely makes the statement and passes on, saying:—

"Here again is apparent the peculiarity of the German nature, which is inwardly so richly and deeply endowed that it leaves its impress upon every form, remodels the form from within, and thus escapes the necessity of externally overthrowing it. So Germans are not revolutionaries, but reformers; and thus they are enabled to retain a richer variety of forms for the manifestation of their inner nature than other nations."—P. 43.

The comparison which Wagner makes between the music of Beethoven and that of his immediate predecessors, Mozart and Haydn, is interesting, though it is not surprising to find that the author is disposed, in our opinion, to undervalue the works of the earlier masters. In speaking of the Ninth Symphony, of the importance of which work in relation to our author's art theories our readers will probably be well aware, Wagner appears to give the rein to his imagination, for he speaks much of Beethoven's Idea of the Good Man, and describes the well known subject of the Ode to Joy as "the melody proper to this Good Man." We can imagine how this would have astonished the composer. Many of Wagner's remarks on this symphony are both true and eloquent; how far any of the ideas suggested themselves to Beethoven is another question.

The remarks on the progress made by music through the influence of Beethoven are worth quoting in artemio:—

"If we survey the progress which music has made under Beethoven from an historical point of view, we may briefly describe it as the attainment of a faculty which had previously been denied to it; by virtue of this faculty music, from the confines of æsthetic beauty, strides into the sphere of the Sublime; and in this sphere it has been released from all constraint of traditional or conventional forms, and it completely penetrates and animates these forms with its proper spirit. And this achievement appears evident to every human heart and mind by the character Beethoven has imparted to the chief form of all music, Melody; for melody has now regained the highest natural simplicity, as the source from which it can be renewed and invigorated at any time, and for any requirement, and expanded to the highest, richest variety. And we may group all this under one head, intelligible to every one. Melody, through Beethoven, has become emancipated from the influence of fashion and fluctuating taste, and elevated to an ever valid, purely human type. Beethoven's music will be understood at any time, whilst the music of his predecessors will, for the most part, remain intelligible only through the medium of light thrown upon it by the history of art."—Pp. 71, 72.

Though we certainly demur to the last sentence of this extract, the remainder of the passage is both just and forcibly expressed. Wagner then speaks of the other great advance made by Beethoven—his giving a new significance to vocal music in its relation to purely instrumental. This we find in the Choral Symphony and the great Mass in D, and it leads to the discussion of the general question of the relation of poetry and music to each other. Into this we are unable to enter here, as it is impossible to compress Wagner's arguments within reasonable limits. For them we must refer our readers to the volume itself. The conclusion at which our author arrives will be anticipated by those familiar with his writings. He says that what Shakspeare is to the drama, Beethoven is to music, and that the most perfect work of art would be found in the combining of the sister arts in one. This, as is well known, is what Wagner has attempted in his later works, especially in his 'Tristan und Isolde' and the 'Ring des Nibelungen,' with a very large measure of success; and the present volume, while most interesting as a tribute of one great genius to another, is also significant as being undoubtedly intended, at least in part, as a defence and justification of the art theories of the author.

As an appendix to the volume two translations from Schopenhauer's philosophical works are given, which will prove of considerable assistance to the reader in following Wagner's chain of argument in the first part of the book. The whole work cannot certainly be called light reading, but it will repay the attention of the student who is interested in musical philosophy.

Musical Society.

THE season of Promenade Concerts at Covent Garden which ends to-night has been noteworthy for the persistent efforts of Mr. F. H. Cowen, the conductor, to give genuine musical interest to the nightly programmes, and to avoid every concession to debased and vulgar tastes. By the adoption of this policy Mr. Cowen has shown himself to be an earnest and conscientious musician. He will have a better opportunity of displaying his qualifications as a conductor at the series of concerts he intends to give at St. James's Hall in November and December next; but it is only fair to say that the performances of classical works under his baton at Covent Garden have been of higher excellence latterly than at the commencement of the season.

Messrs. SAMPTON Low & Co. are about to publish a series of biographies of the great musicians. The following volumes of the series, which will be edited by Dr. F. Hueffer, are announced: 'Wagner,' by the editor, and 'Weber,' by Sir Julius Benedict.

Messrs. HORN & SON, of Croydon, have shown us their improved regulating Digitorium. By the simplest possible mechanical contrivance, the depth to which the keys sink under the touch and the force of their resistance can be regulated, the pressure being indicated on a scale. The least resistance is less than that of the keys of an ordinary piano, the greatest more than that of an organ with all the manuals coupled. Besides its use to the player on the pianoforte, harmonium, or organ, the instrument has been tried and found to be of service in cases of paralysis of the fingers. A rest for the wrist can be fitted to the sides of the case, and by exercising the fingers upon the keys the power of stiff joints has been increased. The instrument has been thus used at the National Hospital for the Paralyzed and Epileptic in Queen Square. Messrs. Horn & Son have also invented a new construction of lever for the keys of the pianoforte.

MR. GEORGE RISKLEY's new series of Orchestral Concerts, at the Colston Hall, Bristol, commenced last Monday evening.

THE preliminary announcement has been issued of the forthcoming season of the Brixton Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. William Lemare. Four concerts will be given, of which the dates are not yet fixed, at the Angell Town Institution, and the following works will be performed: Weber's 'Preciosa,' Hiller's 'Song of Victory,' Mendelssohn's 'Loreley,' Handel's 'Samson,' Haydn's 'Creation,' Rossini's 'Stabat Mater,' and Sullivan's 'The Prodigal Son.'

DURING his next concert tour Anton Rubinstein, it is said, intends to visit Spain for the first time.

HEAR UNGER, the tenor who sang Siegfried at the Bayreuth performances of 1876, has been engaged for the Opera at Strasbourg during the coming season.

THE first of the Gewandhaus Concerts at Leipzig for the coming season will take place on October 7th.

UNDER the direction of Dr. Hans von Bülow a series of subscription concerts is to be given in the Hoftheater at Meiningen during the months of November and December, the programmes of which will consist exclusively of compositions by Beethoven, the complete series of whose symphonies is to be given. At the last concert, which is not included in the subscription, the Ninth Symphony is to be performed twice, an experiment which was projected for last season, but not carried out.

HERN IGNAZ BRÜLL has written a violin concerto, which Herr Lantersbach, of Dresden, will produce during the coming season.

SIGNOR FRANCESCO FLORINO, Archivist of the Conservatory at Naples, is preparing for publication the correspondence of Bellini, who was a personal friend of his.

SOME two years since the Russian Government sent two musicians to Siberia to collect and write down the national melodies. By travelling from village to village, and attending the various festivities of the peasants, they have obtained a large number of tunes, including about thirty which were previously unknown. The collection is to be published during the coming winter, and is looked for with much curiosity in Russian musical circles.

DRAMA

LYCEUM.—The CORNICAN BROTHERS, to-night at 8.30.—The CORNICAN BROTHERS having been received with distinguished favour Mr. Irving begs to announce to the public that this drama will be performed Every Evening and Full Dress. LOTUS and FASHION THE FRANCHIERS MR. IRVING CHATEAU HENRI MR. TEARSON. EMILIE DE LEMARQUE MISS FOWLER.—7.30, new Comedy in One Act, by A. W. Pinero, BYGONES.

THE WEEK.

LYCEUM.—Revival of 'The Corsican Brothers.' Adapted by Dion Boucicault.—Production of 'Bygones,' a Comedy in One Act, by A. W. Pinero.
HAYMARKET.—Revival of 'Leap Year,' a Comedy in Two Acts, by J. B. Buckstone, and 'A Widow Hunt,' a Comedy in Three Acts, by J. Stirling Coyne.
BADLER'S WALLS.—Othello.

THAT the rôle of the brothers Dei Franchi is within Mr. Irving's reach needs scarcely to be stated. So limited is the scope for acting it offers, some cause for wonder is afforded that successive actors have regarded it with favour. No room is there for such striking contrast between two natures wholly different, united, as it appears, in one individuality, as is seen in the dual rôle of Lesurques and Dubosc in 'The Courier of Lyons.' The utmost that can be done by a competent executant is to mark the difference, but faintly indicated in the text, between the peaceful and amorous resident in cities and the stern and warlike huntsman of the mountains, and to stamp upon the aspect and bearing of one of the brothers the kind of fatefulness to be expected in the case of one whom the superior powers have chosen as their ministrant or their tool. To do this may task too heavily the powers of an inferior artist, but can scarcely be much of a trial to Mr. Irving. The performance accordingly inspired the utmost delight in the general audience, and won the favourable recognition of those who did not, like the great majority of those present, come with a resolution to be pleased quand même.

That portions of the representation seem heavy is attributable to two facts: first, that the time in which the whole is taken is too slow, and next, that the play itself, having in it no element of dramatic intensity, commences already to be out of date. The original story, with all the advantage it can derive from the dialogue of Dumas, is old-fashioned and improbable, and the play, which has no literary pretensions, appears even more out of date. In the novel Dumas himself fills the rôle assigned in the drama to Meynard, and is a witness of and participant in the events described. His personal narration gives the whole a vivacity which cannot be preserved in the play. Few as are the additions, their effect is damaging. A woman who, though happily married, ventures at midnight, in the hope of securing compromising letters, into a bal d'opéra, and in the same foolish quest accepts four hours later the escort, to an unnamed locality, of the very man to whom the letters are addressed, is a character in which the modern playgoer has little faith. So little faith has he that 'The Corsican Brothers' is practically without feminine interest and is little more than a fairly clever arrangement of ghost tableaux.

With so much care have these been arranged, the only fault to be found is that the whole goes, as has been said, too slowly. Frequently as 'The Corsican Brothers' has been mounted, it has never received a miss en scène such as is now accorded it. The presentation of the bal d'opéra is a marvel of scenic decoration and arrangement, and the successive tableaux in which the action is set are one and all excellent. In respect of costume artistic effect has been sacrificed to accuracy. In the picturesque Corsican dress of the first act, for which he has the warranty of the author, Mr. Irving looks exceedingly well. For the kind of Comte D'Orsay-like négligé which he wears as Meynard, Mr. Pinero might with advantage have substituted the black velvet just-au-corps, the slashed sleeves, the striped silk shirt, the Spanish gaiters, and the felt hat which Dumas is at the trouble to describe as his own equipment. It was difficult, moreover, for the spectator contemplating the costumes of some of the personages to discard the associations with Alfred Jingle, and other characters in the early novels of Dickens, which they were calculated to suggest.

Mr. Irving's own performance is full of colour. The idea of suppressed passion and emotion is conveyed, and the fate:

element is well shown. Of those who act with him, Mr. Terriss as Château-Renaud and Miss Fowler as Émilie de Lesparre alone pass mediocrity. The former plays well, and the latter makes as much of the character assigned her as can reasonably be expected.

An opening comedietta by Mr. A. W. Pinero, entitled 'Bygone,' is inferior to previous works of the same author. Its motive is fresh and truthful, but the treatment is conventional, and the characters need further elaboration than is supplied. The principal character, played by the author, is wholly unsuited to its exponent. Mr. Pinero's line is eccentric comedy, and the part he assumes demands pathos—a quality in which apparently he is wholly deficient. With the exception of a pleasant piece of acting by Miss Alma Murray as the heroine, the whole performance may be classed as indifferent. Both plays, the novelty and the revival, were received with warm favour. The greeting accorded Mr. Irving may, indeed, be described as tumultuous.

'Leap Year,' which has been revived at the Haymarket, has not been seen in London for more than a quarter of a century. It is a late comedy of Buckstone, and, unlike most works of that prolific dramatist, it is so far original that no previous play or novel, French or English, has supplied its plot and characters. Brisk, clever, and bustling, if wholly farcical and preposterous, it may be seen with certainty of amusement. To fit it to modern tastes considerable alterations have been made in the plot. The number of the acts has been reduced from three to two. Sir Solomon Solus, a character created by Keeley, with two or three others of the dramatis personæ, has been omitted, and some change has been made in the dialogue and the business. More than one of these alterations is the reverse of judicious. A comic scene in which an inventory is taken of the furniture, while needlessly complicating the action, introduces an element of added improbability; and the omission of some dialogue assigned to Miss O'Leary renders wholly unintelligible the appearance of Dimple, the central character, in a preposterous attire of parchments. It is possible that this omission and one or two other errors are attributable to want of preparation, the performance generally displaying an amount of unreadiness highly condemnable when, as in the present case, adequate time is known to have been afforded for rehearsal.

Thanks to a good cast and to the intrinsic vitality of the play, a conquest was effected over those difficulties, and the performance was a success. Mr. J. S. Clarke assumed the rôle of Dimple, which Buckstone wrote for himself, and gave it with remarkable drollery. In itself the part is little. Smug, smirking self-satisfaction is all for which it affords room, though there is one of those scenes of drunkenness to which, considering how frequent they are, actors attach unnecessary and exaggerated importance. Into this rôle, which in New York was played by Burton, an excellent comedian, Mr. Clarke infuses an amusing amount of spirit. Alternately coaxing and arrogant in his behaviour, he preserves through all the simper of intellectual feebleness and the stolidity of ineffable self-conceit. With how much drollery Mr. Clarke can charge his gait, his look, his wink, lovers of mirth are aware. The value of his method is in this case thoroughly evident, and the entire representation is in the highest degree exhilarating. The rôle of Sir William Willoughby, who, in order to win the hand of Lady Flora Flowerdew, a widow, dresses himself as a footman, and enters her service, was taken by Mr. Conway, who, in assuming a part created by Charles Kean, showed his capacity for a line of business outside his ordinary walk. Mr. Kemble assumed Charles Selby's part of Capt. Mouser; Mrs. John Wood, succeeding Mrs. Fitzwilliam, played in her brilliantly comic style Miss O'Leary, but seemed ill at ease with the brogue; and Miss Linda Dietz, replacing Mrs. Charles Kean, acted with singular moderation and taste in the very difficult rôle of the heroine.

With this curious specimen of an old-fashioned play, the original production of which dates back to 1850, is given Stirling Coyne's three-act comedy of 'A Widow Hunt.' In this Mr. Clarke reappears as Major Wellington de Boots, probably the most comic of his many comic impersonations. In no other part is the full drollery of the most inimitable grimacer and most diverting low comedian since Liston seen to equal advantage. The bellicose pretensions, the martial swagger, and the uneasy consciousness of innate cowardice are presented with unsurpassable skill, and the whole is a masterpiece of extravagant humour. Mr. Conway is less at ease as Felix Featherley than he was as Willoughby, but his briskness of style and distinction of appearance are of use. Miss Gerard was Mrs. Featherley, Miss Linda Dietz Mrs. Swandown, and Mr. Kemble Leebrook. Both pieces were received with marked demonstrations of favour.

'Othello' has been mounted at Sadler's Wells with much taste, and has been produced with a carefully selected cast. The feature of most interest in the revival is the assumption by Mr. Charles Warner of the part of Othello. In this Mr. Warner shows his command of great resources and displays much force. In emotional power and in poetic insight he has as yet great progress to make before he is entitled to stand forth as an interpreter of Shakspeare's greatest creations. Meantime his effort is not wanting in promise. Mr. Vezin repeats his performance of Iago—a thoroughly ripe, sustained, and intellectual piece of acting, on the whole the best rendering of Iago the modern playgoer has seen. The dresses, prepared under the direction of Mr. E. W. Godwin, and the decorations generally, are creditable to a management which is doing much to bring back the ancient reputation of Sadler's Wells.

Dramatic Gossip.

'FORGER-ME-NOT,' with which the Prince of Wales's Theatre reopens this evening, can only be played for a few days, in consequence of the forthcoming production of 'Anne-Mie.' It is prefaced by a new comedietta of Mr. Sydney Grundy, entitled 'A Debt of Honour.'

At the Gaiety Matinees a miscellaneous entertainment, called 'The Brook,' is now given by five American actors. It consists of songs, dances, and recitations, which are supposed to be exhibited on the occasion of a picnic.

THE Palais Royal has reopened with 'Les Diables Roses' of MM. Grangé and Lambert-Thiboust, and 'Deux Chambres,' a one-act comedietta of M. Ordonneau. Between the two pieces a poetical prologue, by M. Théodore de Banville, was spoken by Mdlle. Legault. The decorations of the theatre, which are in the style of the Régence, are pretty and tasteful, and wholly suited to the character of the entertainments supplied at the theatre. Among the most noteworthy designs are a nymph carried off by a satyr, which forms the central figure of the drop scene, and two large figures, representing respectively La Comédie and La Folie, supporting the central decoration, upon which are traced two lines of Rabelais:—

Mieux est de ris que de larmes secrete.
Pour ce que rira est le propre de l'homme.

'LES PARENTS D'ALICE,' with which the Odéon has reopened, is a four-act prose comedy of M. Charles Garand, dealing with a question not unlike that which underlies the new comedietta of Mr. Pinero at the Lyceum. As the supposed daughter of a physician, Alice is about to marry Maurice, Comte de Chateau. La Marquise de Chateau, aunt to the count, anxious to secure his hand for her daughter, tells the girl she is the offspring of Bohemian parents, and has been adopted by the count. Alice then refuses to bring disgrace to the family of her lover. An unexpected change is, however, brought about when the physician reveals that, instead of being the child of the disreputable couple in question, she is an illegitimate daughter of the marquise herself. 'La Peau de l'Archonte' of M. Liquier is a pleasant sketch in verse of Athenian manners. A marriage has been arranged between the children of two Athenian bourgeois, when news is received of the death of the Archon Clytus. Each of the bourgeois aspires to be his successor, and a rupture of the nuptial arrangements in progress is the result of the quarrel thus begotten. Fortunately for the young folk, Clytus proves to be alive and well, and the suspended negotiations are resumed. A prologue by M. Théodore de Banville was spoken by M. Porel.

'NOS DÉRUTÉS EN ROSES DE CHAMBRE,' with which the Vaudeville has reopened, is prefaced by 'L'Heure du Pâtissier,' a one-act sketch of M. Paul Ferrier. The plot of this trifle shows the kind of flirtation which in Paris is carried on at the pastrycooks' under the guise of the consumption of cakes, and discloses a language of galanterie not less complete and significant if more substantial than that of flowers.

MISS ROSE EYTINGE is to appear at the Park Theatre, New York, in October, in an adaptation from a novel by Mr. Townsend Percy. The scene is laid in Florence, and Miss Eytinge will personate a passionate, unscrupulous, revengeful, but fascinating woman—a creature with all the vicious propensities of medieval times concealed beneath the gloss of modern culture.

MISCELLANEA

The Pound of Flesh.—A curious parallel to the quibble by which Portia defeats Shylock is found in the story of Loki's wager with Brock (Skalda 35, Simrock's 'Edda,' p. 305). The Asir decide in favour of the latter, but Loki, who has wagered his head, saves himself by the plea that the head alone belongs to his adversary, the neck must not be touched. Hahn ('Studien,' pp. 140 & ff.) touches on this story in his elaborate parallel between Loki and Prometheus, but has nothing to say about this particular incident. Can Mr. Conway expound the hidden meaning of the myth? ALFRED NUTT.

To Correspondents.—S. W.—T. A. R.—S. F.—F. R. S.—received.
No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

GRIFFITH & FARRAN'S NEW BOOK LIST.

WORKS BY THE LATE
W. H. G. KINGSTON,
"THE MODERN MARRIAT"

Imperial 16mo. cloth elegant 6s. each, or, varnished boards, gilt edges, 7s. 6d. each fully illustrated.

The THREE MIDSHIPMEN. With 34 Page Illustrations by various Artists."A rattling sea-story." — Daily Telegraph
"Will be read with intense delight." — Art Journal.The THREE LIEUTENANTS; or, Naval Life in the Nineteenth Century."Well calculated to interest boys." — Athenæum.
"Will no doubt prove highly interesting to all boys." — Daily News.The THREE COMMANDERS; or, Active Service Afloat in Modern Days."Fresh and vigorous." — Art Journal.
"Boys will revel in the book." — Victorian Era.The THREE ADMIRALS, and the Adventures of their Young Followers."A capital story of adventure." — Times.
"Not only affords amusement, but conveys incidentally a large amount of information." — Pan. Mail Gazette.HURRICANE HURRY; or, the Adventures of a Naval Officer Afloat and on Shore during the American War of Independence."Worthy of a gentleman who knows how to write a boy's book" as well as any man. — Spectator.The MISSING SHIP; or, Notes from the Log of the Outer Galaxy."Can write a sea-story for boys better than any man." — Morning Post.
"The tales are always well told." — Athenæum.TRUE BLUE; or, the Life and Adventures of a British Seaman of the Old School."As full of adventure as an egg is full of meat." — Fanny Fair.WILL WEATHERHELM; or, the Yarn of an Old Sailor about his Early Life and Adventures."There is not a dry page in the volume." — Times.

Illustrated cloth elegant, 6s., or, varnished boards, gilt edges, 6s.

The RIVAL CRUSOES."Full of incident." — Athenæum.
"The book is a good one." — Times.

Illustrated cloth elegant, 6s., or, gilt edges, 6s. 6d.

JOHN DEANE, of NOTTINGHAM; his Adventures and Exploits."The boys who read it are to be envied by those who do not." — Art Journal.FRED MARKHAM in RUSSIA; or, the Boy Traveller in the Land of the Czar."The manners, customs, national characteristics, &c., are vividly described." — Non-Formalist.MANCO, the PERUVIAN CHIEF; or an Englishman's Adventures in the Country of the Incas."Mr. Kingston displays a knowledge of his subject." — Spectator.
"Can scarcely fail of captivating youthful readers." — Educational Times.MARK SEAWORTH: a Tale of the Indian Ocean."Not read 'Mark Seaworth' do you say? Then you have not read one of the best of Mr. Kingston's capital sea-stories." — Non-Formalist.SALT WATER; or, the Sea Life and Adventures of Nell D'Arny, the Midshipmaid."With the exception of Captain Marryat, we know of no English author who will compare with Mr. Kingston as a writer of nautical adventure." — Illustrated News.PETER the WHALER: his Early Life and Adventures in the Arctic Regions."A good picture of life at sea." — Leeds Mercury.
"In Peter the Whaler Mr. Kingston is quite at his best." — Literary Churchman.

Cloth elegant, 3s. each, or, gilt edges, 3s. 6d. each.

OUR SOLDIERS; or, Anecdotes of the Campaigns and Gallant Deeds of the British Army during the Reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria."Worthy to be placed in a boy's hands." — Times.OUR SAILORS; or, Anecdotes of the Encounters and Gallant Deeds of the British Navy during the Reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria."Full of life and exciting descriptions of gallant deeds." — School Guardian.

Fcap. 8vo. cloth elegant, 1s. 6d.

The HEROIC WIFE; or, the Wanderers on the Amazon."Graphically written, contains a good deal of matter descriptive of Amazonian society." — Liverpool Advertiser.

Royal 16mo. cloth elegant, 1s. 6d.

The CHILD of the WRECK; or, the Loss of the Royal George."Will doubtless be a favourite with the youngsters." — Advertiser.NEW BOOKS,
TO APPEAR IMMEDIATELY.The OTHER SIDE: How It Struck Us. Being Sketches of a Winter Visit to the United States and Canada. By C. E. KERRY. Demy 8vo. cloth, 5s.HEROES OF HISTORY AND LEGEND.

Translated by JOHN LANCELOT SHADWELL, from the German Characterbilder aus Geschichte und Sage, by A. W. GRUBE. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

CHURCH EMBROIDERY and CHURCH WORK, DESIGNS for, from Old Stamps, a Set of Upwards of Ninety Patterns. Collected and Arranged by Miss E. S. HARTSHORNE. 15 Sheets demy, 2 Sheets Text, in handsome cloth case, 5s.

NIMPO'S TROUBLES. By Olive

THORNE MILLER. Author of 'Little Folk in Feather and Fur.' Illustrated by Mary Hallock and Sol. Eytinge. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

BELLE'S PINK BOOTS. By Joanna

H. MATTHEWS. Author of 'The Bonus Books.' With 16 Coloured Illustrations by Ida Waugh. Cloth elegant, 7s.

A DARING VOYAGE ACROSS the ATLANTICBy Two Americans, the Brothers ANDREWS in a small Boat, "The Nautilus." The Log of the Voyage by Captain WILLIAM A. ANDREWS, with Introduction and Notes by Dr. MACAULAY, Editor of the Boy's Own Paper. Crown 8vo. with Illustrations, cloth, 3s. 6d.MUDGE and HER CHICKS: a Story of Children's Home Doings. By a BROTHER and SISTER.

Cloth elegant, with 16 Illustrations, 2s. 6d.

TWO ROSE TREES: the Adventures of Two Sisters. By Mrs. MINNIE DOUGLAS. With 16 Illustrations, cloth elegant, 2s. 6d.HILDA and her DOLL. By E. C.

PHILLIPS. Author of 'The Orphans,' 'Wendy,' &c. With 16 Illustrations, cloth elegant, 2s. 6d.

The HOUSE on the BRIDGE; and other Tales. By C. E. BOWEN. Author of 'Among the Brigands.' 8s. Crown 8vo. with 16 Illustrations by A. H. Collins, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A NEW SERIES OF EIGHTEEN-PENNY BOOKS,

UNIFORM IN SIZE, STYLE, AND PRICE.

Attractively bound in cloth, printed in red and gold, and illustrated by eminent Artists.

FATHER TIME'S STORY BOOK for the LITTLE ONES. By Kathleen Knox.

A CHILD'S INFLUENCE. By Miss Lockyer.

LUCY'S CAMPAIGN. By M. and C. Lee.

ADVENTURES in FANTLAND. By Mrs. R. Lee.

HAPPY HOLIDAYS. By Emma Davernport.

ALWAYS HAPPY. By A. H. Collins.

FROM PEASANT to PRINCE, or the Life of Alexander Menckhoff. By Mrs. Prentiss.

MY GRANDMOTHER'S BUDGET. By Mrs. Broderip.

CONSTANCE and NELLIE. By Emma Davernport.

The HEROIC WIFE. By W. H. G. Kingston.

CORNER COTTAGE and its INMATES. By Frances Osborne.

GRANNY'S WONDERFUL CHALK. By R. F. Browne.

A NEW SERIES OF SHILLING BOOKS,

UNIFORM IN SIZE, STYLE, AND PRICE.

Attractively bound in cloth, printed in silver and gold, and illustrated by eminent Artists.

GRANDMAMA'S RELICS. By HARRY at SCHOOL. By E. C. E. Bowen.

HOLIDAY TALES. By Florence Julia Maitland. By M. and E. Kirby.

ALICE and BEATRICE. By HOLIDAYS AMONG the MOUNTAINS. By M. Betham-Edwards.

The CHILDREN'S PIONIC. By CHRISTIAN ELLIOTT. By L. N. Comyns.

AMONG the HERMITS; and other Tales of Adventure. By The DISCONTENTED CHILDREN. By M. and E. Kirby.

C. E. Bowen. PAUL HOWARD'S CAPTIVITY. By E. Marryat Norris.

WRECKED, NOT LOST. By the Rev. Mrs. Dundas.

IMPORTANT EDUCATIONAL PUBLICATIONS.

GEOGRAPHICAL READING BOOKS FOR STANDARDS II. AND III.

By J. R. BLAKISTON, M.A.

IMPORTANT TO TEACHERS.—These two books cover the whole of the knowledge required to secure a Class Grant for Geography in Standards II. and III.

GLIMPSES of the GLOBE. A First Geographical Reading Book. Cloth, price 1s., or paper boards, 9d.GLIMPSES of ENGLAND. A Geographical Reading Book. Fcap. 8vo. paper boards, 6d.

Each of these books contains materials for Eighty Lessons, or a School Year's Work for Standards II. and III.

By the same Author, to be published immediately.

A SUPPLEMENTARY READING BOOK FOR THE UPPER STANDARDS. ENTITLEDGLIMPSES of the BRITISH EMPIRE.

It will contain a full Year's Work for the Higher Standards.

N.B.—Mr. CATYER'S BOOKS will be found INVALUABLE to INSPECTORS when Examining in Arithmetic &c.

CATYER'S ONE THOUSAND ARITHMETICAL TESTS, or the Examiner's Assistant. Specially adapted for Examination Purposes, but also suited for General Use in Schools. By T. S. CATYER. Eleventh Thousand. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

All the operations of Arithmetic are presented under Forty Heads, and on opening at any one of the Examination Papers a complete set of Examples appears, carefully graduated.

KEY, with Solutions of all the Examples in the

The ANSWERS only, price 1s. 6d. cloth.

CATYER'S ONE THOUSAND ALGEBRAICAL TESTS, on the Same Plan. 8vo. cloth 7s. 6d.

ANSWERS to the ALGEBRAICAL TESTS, 3s. 6d. cloth.

NEEDLEWORK TEACHING IN CLASSES.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—The Books and Appliances recommended by the Education Department are published by Messrs. GRIFFITH & FARRAN.

By the SENIOR EXAMINER of NEEDLEWORK to the SCHOOL BOARD for LONDON.

PLAIN HINTS for Those Who Have to EXAMINE NEEDLEWORK, whether for Government Grants, Prize Associations, or Local Managers, to which is added British Needlework Leagues to be Used with the Demonstration Frames, and a Glossary of Terms Used in the Needlework required from the Scholars in Public Elementary Schools. Price 1s.

SPECIAL TO TEACHERS.—The Best Copy Books for securing the results required by the Government Educational Inspectors are DARNELL'S COPY BOOKS.

Price 2d., 3d., 4d., and 6d. each.

DARNELL'S LARGE POST COPY BOOKS,

16 Numbers, 6d. each. The first ten of which have on every alternate line appropriate and carefully written Copies in French-coloured ink, to be first written over and then imitated the remaining Numbers having Mark Head-lines for imitation only, the whole gradually advancing from a Simple Stroke to a Superior Small Hand.

DARNELL'S FOOLSCAP COPY BOOKS,

24 Numbers, Oblong 3d. each; or, Superior Paper, Marble Cover, 4d. each. On the same Plan.

DARNELL'S UNIVERSAL COPY BOOKS,

16 Numbers, 6d. each. On the same Plan.

DARNELL'S SHORT and CERTAIN ROAD to READING. Cloth, 6d., or in Four Parts, paper covers, 1s. 6d. each.DARNELL'S SHEET LESSONS.

Being Extracts from the above printed in very true b-l-d type. Price, for the Set of six Sheets, 6s., or neatly mounted on one do. 3s.

DARNELL'S (THOMAS) PARSING SIMPLIFIED. Cloth, 1s.DARNELL'S ARITHMETIC MADE INTELLIGIBLE to CHILDREN. This work may be had in three Parts. Part I. price 6d., Part II. price 6d., Part III. price 6d. A Key to Parts II. and III., price 1s. (Part I. does not require a Key.)DARNELL'S GRAMMAR MADE INTELLIGIBLE to CHILDREN. Cloth, 1s.DARNELL'S INTRODUCTION to MODERN GRAMMAR. Price 6d.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW LIST.

NEW NOVELS.

BLACK ABBEY.
By M. CROMMELIN.

A PLOT OF THE PRESENT DAY.
By KATE HOPE.

THE UNDISCOVERED COUNTRY.
By W. D. HOWELLS.
1 vol. 10s. 6d.

The New Volume of the "Tauchnitz Series" of German Authors is entitled,

BRIGITTA: a Tale.
By BERTHOLD AUERBACH,
Author of 'On the Heights,' &c.
Translated by CLARA BELL.
Cloth, 18mo. price 2s.

PRACTICAL BLOWPIPE ASSAYING.

By GEORGE ATTWOOD, F.G.S. Assoc. Inst. C.E.
F.C.S. Mem. Am. Inst. M.E., &c.
With 74 Woodcut Illustrations. Price 12s. 6d.
[Just ready.]

NEW NOVEL, NOW READY,
By THE AUTHOR OF 'GINI'S BABY,'
LISA LENA.
By EDWARD JENKINS.
In 2 vols. crown 8vo. 21s.

A SAILOR'S SWEETHEART.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL,
Author of 'The Wreck of the Grosvenor,' 'John Holdsworth, Chief Mate,' &c.
In 3 vols.

* In consequence of arrangements for simultaneous publication in England and America, Mr Russell's New Novel will not be issued until October 1.

Now ready, in wrapper, Part VI. price 1s. of
MR. WILLIAM BLACK'S SUNRISE:
a Story of These Times.

FORTY YEARS' RECOLLECTIONS:
Literary and Political. By THOMAS PROCTER, Author of 'The Secret Societies of the European Revolution,' &c. Crown 8vo. cloth extra, price 10s. 6d.

Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 3s. 6d. each Volume.
FOREIGN COUNTRIES and BRITISH COLONIES. Edited by P. S. FULLING, M.A.

The New Volumes now ready in this Series are—
PERU. By Clements K. Marchant, M.A. C.B. With Map and Illustrations.
AUSTRALIA. By D. Kay, F.R.G.S. With Map and Illustrations.
GREECE. By L. Sergeant, R.A. With Maps and Illustrations.
THE WEST INDIES. By C. H. Eden, F.R.G.S. With Map and Illustrations.

Now ready, demy 8vo. 430 pages, cloth extra, price 11s. 6d.
NAVIES of the WORLD: giving Concise Descriptive Lists of the Plans, Armament, and Armour of the Naval Vessels of Every of the Principal Nations, together with the latest Developments in Ordnance, Torpedoes, and Naval Architecture and a Concise Summary of the Principal Naval Battles of the last Twenty Years, 1740 to 1890. By Lieut. EDWARD W. VERY, R.N. With more than 60 Plans, Sketches, &c., and a Complete Index.

Now ready, crown 8vo. cloth extra, price 10s. 6d.
EVERY-DAY ENGLISH. By Richard GRANT WHITE. It treats of Speech Writing, Grammar, Words, and Phrases, pointing out the errors which abound in our common use of English, and by its happy combination of learning and humour makes a book which all intelligent persons can read with equal profit and enjoyment.

Now ready, small post 8vo. cloth extra, price 5s. 6d.
MOUNTAIN and PRAIRIE: a Journey from Victoria to Winnipeg, and Peace River Pass. By the Rev. DANIEL M. GORDON, M.A., Ottawa. With Maps and Illustrations.

Now ready, demy 8vo. cloth extra, price 14s.
THE AUSTRALIAN ABROAD.
Sketches from the Main Routes round the World. Second Series. Cloth, 14s. and 12s. 6d. By JAMES HINGSTON. With many fine Illustrations. Uniform with the First Series.

BEATRICE MELTON'S DISCIPLINE. By MAUD JESSIE FRANK. Author of 'Marian,' &c. 18mo. cloth, price 1s.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE & RIVINGTON,
Great Britain St., 189, Fleet-street, E.C.

TINSLEY BROTHERS' NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Now ready at all Booksellers' and Railway Stalls,
PRICE ONE SHILLING.

SEASIDE MAIDENS.

The Summer Number of TINSLEY'S MAGAZINE.

By G. A. HENTY.

Ten pages of Illustrations by Harry Furniss.

"Far beyond anything in the way of ordinary magazine literature."
"Capital stories, each held at a favourite watering-place."
"Thoroughly amusing from beginning to end."
—Sunday Times.

TINSLEY'S MAGAZINE,

For OCTOBER,

Containing Stories, Sketches, Essays, and Poems, by Annabel Grey, "Rita," Ellen Crump, Richard Dowling, Byron Webster, John Augustus O'Shea, Somerville Gibney, Hal
Luther, &c., will be ready on the 26th inst.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

LONDON TOWN: Sketches of London Life and Character. By MARCUS RALL. Illustrated by Harry Furniss.
Now ready, in 2 vols. crown 8vo.

"A few of his low stereotyped characters, such as, for example, 'the man of many engagements,' 'the man that wastes an idea,' occasionally remind us of Thackeray. There is nothing to fatigue, and something to gratify, the idle reader."
—Examiner.
"Many pleasant hours may be spent in the perusal of the book."
—Court Journal.

RANDOM RECOLLECTIONS of an OLD

ACTOR. By F. BELTON. 1 vol. 8vo.
"One of the most amusing books we ever came across."
—Piccolo.
"A more amusing book has not appeared for a long time."
—Globe.

In KENT with CHARLES DICKENS. By THOMAS PROCTER. Author of 'The Life of Lord Lytton,' 'Secret Societies,' &c. 1 vol. crown 8vo.
"We are grateful to Mr. Proct for his 'In Kent with Charles Dickens.'" —Graphic.

A PEAL of MERRY BELLS. By Leopold
LEWIS, Author of the Drama of 'The Bells.' 5 vols.
"There is a ring of solid metal in 'A Peal of Merry Bells.'... Abounding in action and incident."
—Daily Telegraph.

The SPORT of FATE. By Richard Dowling,
Author of 'The Weird Sisters,' 'The Mystery of Killard,' &c. 3 vols.
"The three volumes contain a more than ordinary amount of interesting reading—some of it in Mr. Dowling's happiest manner."
—Daily News.

SOCIETY'S VERDICT. By Annie Thomas
(Mrs. Freder. Cudlip), Author of 'Doris Dore,' &c. 2 vols.

MANY LOVES. By B. H. Buxton, Author of 'Jennie of "The Prince,"' "Nell—On and Off the Stage," &c. 3 vols.

WHAT WILL SOCIETY SAY? A Story of Society and the Stage. By H. C. COOPER, Author of 'The Ring-woods of Ringwood,' &c. 3 vols.

The SILENT SHADOW. By Jessie Sale
LLOYD, Author of 'The Hush-mist Mystery,' &c. 3 vols.

INNOCENCE at PLAY. By Jean
MIDDLEMASS, Author of 'Sealed by a Kiss,' 'With George,' &c. 3 vols.

WINGED WORDS. By Henry Spicer,
Author of 'Judicial Dramas,' &c. 3 vols.

ARNOLD LEIGH. By Mrs. Digby-Lloyd,
Author of 'Fatal Sacrifice.' 1 vol. crown 8vo.

LARRY LOHENGRIN. By William
WESTALL, Author of 'Tales and Traditions of Saxony,' &c. 3 vols.
[Shortly.]

HONOR. By Miss Alford, Author of 'Netherton-on-Fen,' &c. 3 vols.
[Shortly.]

Just ready, price 7s. 6d.

FREE LANCE. A New Volume of Essays.
By CHARLES J. DUNPHY, Author of 'Sweet Sleep,' 'Wildfire,' &c.

TINSLEY BROTHERS, 8, Catherine-street, Strand.

CHATTO & WINDUS, PUBLISHERS.

Now ready, Vols. III. and IV. (Completing the Work), demy 8vo.
cloth extra, 12s. each.

A HISTORY of OUR OWN TIMES. From the Accession of Queen Victoria to the General Election of 1880. By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P.

"Criticism is clamoured before a composition which provokes little but approval. This is a really good book on a really interesting subject, and words piled on words could say no more for it. Such is the effect of its general justice, its breadth of view and its sparkling buoyancy, that very few of its readers will close these volumes without looking forward with interest to the two (now published) that are to follow."
—Saturday Review.

New and Cheaper Edition, crown 8vo. cloth extra, 1s.
MOTHS. By Ouida.
"Not only the author's finest work, but one which marks a new epoch in fiction."
—Morning Post.

NEW NOVEL BY JULIAN HAWTHORNE.
Now ready 3 vols. crown 8vo. at every Library,
ELLICE QUENTIN, and other Stories. By JULIAN HAWTHORNE.

ILLUSTRATED EDITION of MARK TWAIN'S NEW WORK.
Third Edition, crown 8vo. cloth extra, with 214 Illustrations, 7s. 6d.
A TRAMP ABOARD. By Mark Twain.

Now ready, crown 8vo. cloth extra, 6s. the Second Volume of BRET HARTE'S COLLECTED WORKS,
Arranged and Revised by the Author. Containing Earlier Papers,
'The Luck of Roaring Camp, and other Sketches,' 'Bohemian
Papers,' 'Spanish and American Legends.'

Vol. I. contains THE COMPLETE PORTUGAL and DRAMATIC WORKS OF BRET HARTE. With a fine steel-plate Portrait, specially engraved for this Edition, and an Introduction by the Author.
Vol. III. containing TALES of the ARGONAUTS and EASTERN SKETCHES, will be ready in a few days.

Second Edition, Revised.—In 1 thick vol. of 1,300 pages, crown 8vo.
half-Rusburgh, 12s. 6d.

The READER'S HANDBOOK of ALLU-SIONS, REFERENCES, PLOTS, and STORIES. By the Rev. Dr.
BREWER.

"Wonderfully comprehensive."
—Times.

NEW WORK BY THE AUTHOR OF FINGER-RING LONE.
Crown 8vo. cloth extra, with Frontispiece, 7s. 6d.
CREDULITIES, PAST and PRESENT. By WILLIAM JONES, F.R.S.

NEW VOLUMES OF THE PICCADILLY NOVELS.

Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 3s. 6d. each.

JESSE'S DAUGHTER. By WHITE COLLIER,
UNDER WHICH SHED? By E. Lynn Linton. With 12 Illustrations
by Arthur Hopkins.

DONNA QUIQUITE. By Justin McCarthy, M.P. With 12 Illustrations
by Arthur Hopkins.

QUEEN of the MEADOW. By Charles Gibben. With 12 Illustrations
by Arthur Hopkins.

THE BRAMBY SIDE. By the Authors of 'Ready-Money Mortiboy,' HIGH ASPIRES. By James Payn.

NEW VOLUMES OF "THE MAYFAIR LIBRARY."

Post 8vo. cloth limp, 2s. 6d. each.

THE SPEECHES of CHARLES DICKENS. With Chapters on Dickens as a Letter-Writer, Poet, and Public Reader.

LITERARY PRIVILEGES, FANCIES, FOLLIES, and FOLIOES. By WILLIAM T. DOBSON.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITIONS.

Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 6s. each.

MYTHS and MARVELS of ASTRONOMY. By Richard A. Proctor.

PLEASANT WAYS in SCIENCE. By Richard A. Proctor.

ROUGH WAYS MADE SMOOTH. By Richard A. Proctor.

LEISURE-TIME STUDIES. By Andrew Wilson, F.R.S.E.

A MINISTRY of HEALTH. By Benjamin W. Richardson, M.D. &c.

MRS. O. BOWEN'S NEW HUNTING SKETCHES.

Beautifully Coloured, and handsomely half bound, oblong 4to. 11s.

LEAVES from a HUNTING JOURNAL.

By O. BOWEN, Author of 'Cantons in Crumpeire,' &c. Coloured in Fac-simile of the Original.

On the 30th inst. price One Shilling, illustrated,

BELGRAVIA, for October.

Contents.

A CONFIDENTIAL AGENT. By James Payn. Illustrated by Arthur Hopkins.

THE ANGLICAN AGEN. By the Rev. W. Downes, M.A.

THE DILETTANTE. By Austin Dobson.

OUR OLD COUNTRY TOWNS. 3. With Four Illustrations. By A.
Rimington.

MR. KAREL'S INVESTMENT. A Tale of Old China.

THE PAUL and PEANT of ST. PANTELEMON. By E. M. Craig.

ON TRAMP.

THE LEADEN CASKET. By Mrs. Alfred W. Hunt.

On the 30th inst. price One Shilling,

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE,

For OCTOBER.

QUEEN CORNETTA. By R. R. Francis.

A RELIC of DI VIN. By Alphonse C. Swinburne.

THE SCIENCE of LIKENESS and its MEANINGS. By Andrew
Wilson, F.R.S.E. Illustrated.

A NEW STUDY of LIFE. 'PLANDOUR'S LOST.' By R. L. Lee.

HUNTER'S WORK at ST. JOHN'S GATE in 1880. By Major
F. Dugan.

JAMES and THE LOWELL as POET. By Rev. H. B. Hawley, M.A.

COLLEGE LIFE. By John Amory.

ROBERTSON'S NEW MARY A. WILLIAMS.

TABLE TALK. By Sydney C. L. L.

CHATTO & WINDUS, Piccadilly, W.

Now ready, demy 8vo. cloth, price 15s.

A GUIDE TO THE STUDY OF BOOK-PLATES

(EX-LIBRIS).

With 16 Plates in Fac-simile.

By the Hon. J. LEICESTER WARREN, M.A.

JOHN PEARSON, 46, Pall Mall, London.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The CLERK of PORTWICK. By G. MANVILLE FENN.
3 vols. [Next week.]BELLES and RINGERS. By Captain HAWLEY SMART.
1 vol. [Now ready.]BRITISH BEE-FARMING: its Profits and Pleasures.
By JAMES F. ROBINSON. Large crown 8vo. 5s.

EARLY IN OCTOBER WILL BE PUBLISHED.

The NEW ERA: a Dramatic Poem. By VIRGINIA VAUGHAN.
1 vol. fcap. 8vo.

CHAPMAN & HALL (LIMITED), 193, Piccadilly.

JUST AS I AM. By Miss Braddon.

THE NEW NOVEL BY FREDERICK TALBOT.

On September 29th, at all Libraries, in 3 vols.

THE SCARSDALE PEERAGE:
A NOVEL.By FREDERICK TALBOT,
Author of 'Gophie Crews,' &c.

London: JOHN & ROBERT MAXWELL.

MISS BRADDON'S NEW NOVEL.

On September 29th, at all Libraries, in 3 vols.

JUST AS I AM:
THE NEW NOVEL.BY THE AUTHOR OF 'LADY AUDLEY'S SECRET,' &c.

London: JOHN & ROBERT MAXWELL.

THE SCARSDALE PEERAGE. By Mr. F. Talbot.

MODERN FOREIGN LIBRARY.

NEW VOLUME, READY OCTOBER 1st.

QUISIANA.

By FRIEDRICH SPIELHAGEN.

Translated by H. E. GOLDSCHMIDT, Fettes College.

Paper, French style, 3s. 6d., cloth, 5s. 6d.

The Times of September 21st devotes a column to it, and says, "It seems to us that Spielhagen improves in his art, and 'Quisiana' is unquestionably one of the most finished and pathetic of his productions. It is singularly compact, the characters group themselves artistically round one grand central figure, and all the ideas converge toward the dominating conception."

Now ready, uniform.

The CHASE. A Tale of the Southern States. From the French of J. Lermine, by A. SERGEANT.The COUNT of TALAVERA. From the Dutch of J. Van Lennep, by A. ARNOLD.A SHEEP in WOLF'S CLOTHING. From the French of C. Debans, by EVELYN JERROLD.The SERGEANT'S LEGACY. From the French of E. Berthet, by Gilbert
VENABLES.The RIVAL DOCTORS. From the French of A. Lapointe, by Henri van Laun.
J. C. NIMMO & BAIN, 14, King William Street, Strand, W.C.

EPPS'S COCOA.

GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

JAMES EPPS & CO. HOMOEOPATHIC CHEMISTS, LONDON.

MAKERS OF EPPS'S GLYCERINE SCUBES.—Sold in Labelled Boxes only.

Tenth Edition, post free, 1s.

DR. WATTS ON ASTHMA: a Treatise on the only Successful Method of Curing this Disease. By ROBERT G. WATTS, M.D. F.R.S., F.C.S., &c., 5, Bute-street, Grosvenor-square, London, W.
London: J. Mitchell & Co. 2nd Lane-court, Fleet-street.

Enlarged Edition, pp. 260, bound, 1s.; or 14 stamps.

HOMOEOPATHIC FAMILY INSTRUCTOR.
By DR. RICHARD and WASHINGTON EPPS.

Describes fully and Prescribes for a Hundred Diseases.

London: James Epps & Co. 40, Threadneedle-street, and 120, Piccadilly.

THE VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

THE OWENS COLLEGE CALENDAR for the SESSION 1880-81. Price 2s.; by post, 2s. 6d.
Manchester: J. E. Cornish. London: Macmillan & Co.

MR. SPENCER'S DESCRIPTIVE SOCIOLOGY.

New ready, fcap. boards, 10s. 7d. price 7s.

HEBREW and PHENICIAN. Classified and Arranged by HERBERT SPENCER. Compiled and Abstracted
by DR. SCHERER.
Williams & Norgate, 14 Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

Now ready, Second Edition, Enlarged, price 2s. 6d.

THE VOICE and PUBLIC SPEAKING. A Book for all who Read and Speak in Public. By J. F. SANDLANDS, M.A.

Mr. Gladstone, in a Letter to the Author, says:—"I receive your work with great interest and satisfaction. I am truly glad that you are calling public attention to these matters."

London: Hodder & Stoughton, 27, Paternoster-row.

Now ready, demy 4to.

APPENDIXES to YOUNG'S ANALYTICAL
CONCORDANCE. Containing Hebrew and Greek Lexicons, Vowel Maps, Facsimiles, &c. Price to Subscribers, 10s. and half-morocco, 12s. 6d. cloth, 11s. 6d. sewed, post free.
P.O.D. payable to G. A. Young & Co. 14, Nicolson-street, Edinburgh.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

MATHEMATICAL and PHYSICAL PAPERS.
By GEORGE GABRIEL STOKES, M.A. D.C.L. LL.D. F.R.S., Fellow of Pembroke College, and Lucasian Professor of Mathematics in the University of Cambridge. Reprinted from the Original Journals and Transactions, with Additional Notes by the Author. Vol. I. demy 8vo. cloth, 15s.

THE BACCHAE of EURIPIDES. With Introduction, Critical Notes, and Archaeological Illustrations, by J. E.
SANDYS, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of St. John's College, Cambridge, and Public Orator. Crown 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d.

AN ANALYSIS of CRIMINAL LIABILITY.

By R. C. CLARK, LL.D. Regius Professor of Civil Law in the University of Cambridge, also of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law.
Crown 8vo. cloth, 7s. 6d.

London: Cambridge Warehouse, 17, Paternoster-row.

THE HAMNET SHAKSPEARE. Edited by
ALLAN PARK PATON. Vol. I. price 15s., and Part II. COR-
OLANUS, price 2s. 6d. now ready.
London: Longmans & Co.

DOMESTIC STATE PAPERS, CHARLES I. 1642.

New ready, in Imperial 8vo. pp. 808, price 15s. cloth.

CALENDAR of STATE PAPERS, Domestic Series, of the Reign of CHARLES I., preserved in H.M. Public Record Office. Vol. XVI. 1640. Edited by W. D. HAMILTON, F.R.S., and published under the Direction of the Master of the Rolls, with the sanction of H. M. Secretary of State for the Home Department.

"This Calendar presents notices of a large number of original documents of great value to all inquirers into the history of the period to which it relates. Many of them have been hitherto unknown. The papers in Vol. XVI. cover the five summer months of the year 1640, beginning with great events, which intervened between the summoning of the Short and Long Parliaments."

London: Longmans & Co. and Trübner & Co. Oxford. Parker & Co.
Cambridge; Macmillan & Co. Edinburgh; A. & C. Black and Deacons & Poulton, Dublin. A. Thom & Co.

THE LIVERPOOL and LONDON and GLOBE
INSURANCE COMPANY.

1, Dale-street, Liverpool; Cornhill and Charing Cross, London.

FIRE-LIFE ANNUITIES.

The Report and Accounts for 1879 showed the net income for that year £1,081,423
The Capital (paid up) 26,000
The General Reserve and Fire Insurance Fund 1,350,000
The Balance of Profit and Loss Account after paying Dividend 1879 62,834
The Life and Annuity Fund 8,641,921
The last Actuarial Valuation showed that the New Life Participating Class had been very successful, enabling the Company to declare the high Reversionary Bonus of 50 per cent per annum to the Policies effected in that class during the quadrinquennium.
All descriptions of Fire Insurance effected upon favourable terms.
FIRE-RENEWAL PREMIUMS falling DUE at MICHAELMAS should be paid within fifteen days thereafter.

GUARDIAN FIRE and LIFE OFFICE,

11, Lombard-street, LONDON, E.C.

Established 1821. Subscribed Capital, Two millions.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—AUGUSTUS PREYOST, Esq.
Deputy-Chairman—JOHN G. TALBOT, Esq. M.P.
Henry Hulse Rogers Esq.
Henry Bonham-Carter Esq.
Charles Wm. Curtis Esq.
Charles F. Davis Esq.
Sir Wm. R. Lubbock, Bart.
Arthur H. C. Lee Esq.
James Gordon Esq.
Thomas Hankey Esq.
Richard M. H. Esq.
Rt. Hon. John G. Hubbard, M.P.
Frederick H. Jansop, Esq.
G. J. Shaw Lefevre Esq. M.P.
Herbert W. Lubbock Esq.
John C. Martin Esq.
Henry John Norton Esq.
David Powell jun Esq.
Henry Vigne Esq.

Share Capital at present paid up and invested £1,000,000
The following is a summary of the business done during the year 1879:
To & from £1,000,000
N.B. The Policies which EXPIRE at MICHAELMAS should be renewed at the Head Office, or at the Agents, on or before the 14th day of OCTOBER.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD-STREET
and CHANCERY CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1783.
Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.
Insurances effected in all parts of the World.
JOHN J. BROOMFIELD, Secretary.

SUN FIRE OFFICE.
Thames-side-street, E.C. Chancery Cross, S.W.
Oxford-street (corner of Vere-street), W.
Established 1781.
Home and Foreign Insurances effected.
Sum insured in 1878, £32,497,461.
FRANCIS H. MELTON, Secretary.

EAGLE INSURANCE COMPANY,
79, PAUL MALL.
For FIVE YEARS ESTABLISHED.
Accumulated Funds £3,043,541
Also a Subscribed Capital of more than £1,300,000
Reports, Prospectuses, and Forms may be had at the Office, or from any of the Company's Agents, post free.
GEORGE HUMPHREYS, Actuary and Secretary.

LOSS OF TIME IS LOSS OF MONEY.

ACCIDENTS CAUSE LOSS OF TIME.
And may be provided against by a Policy of the
RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY.
The Oldest and Largest Accidental Assurance Company.
Right Hon. Lord KINNAIRD, Chairman.
Subscribed Capital, 1,000,000. Moderate Premiums.
Bonus allowed to Insurers of Five Years' standing.
A fixed sum in case of Death by Accident, and a Weekly Allowance
in the event of Injury.
ONE MILLION and a HALF has been paid as COMPENSATION.
Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Station, the Local Agents, or at Cornhill, London. WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S
STEEL PENS.
Sold by all Stationers throughout the World.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS
THROUGHOUT ON
MORRIS'S FINE SYSTEM.
The Original, Best, and most Liberal.
No extra charge for this given.

Illustrated Price Catalogues, with full particulars of terms, post free.
F. MOEDER, 240, 242, 244, Tottenham Court-road; and 18, 20, and 22,
Moorfield-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above Premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious
Warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites, from 8. 6s. to 20 Guineas.
Drawing-room Suites, from 8. 6s. to 45 Guineas.
Dining-room Suites, from 7. 7s. to 40 Guineas.
And all other Goods in great variety.
F. MOEDER, 240, 242, 244, Tottenham Court-road; and 18, 20, and 22,
Moorfield-street, W.C. Established 1862.

APOLLINARIS WATER.
"Lauris domus Apollinaris."—Hercules, Beck's Ode 2.
GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.
ANNUAL SALE, 8,000,000.
APOLLINARIS COMPANY, Limited, 19, Regent-street, London, S.W.

PROTECTION FROM FIRE.
BRYANT & MAY'S
PATENT SAFETY MATCHES.
EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.
ADVANTAGES—
Are not POISONOUS.
Are free from SMOELL.
Without Phosphorus.
Are perfectly harmless.
To the Operator employed.
Are very DAMP PROOF.
LIGHT ONLY ON THE BOX.
RIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.

PROTECTION TO HEALTH.
M. R. G. H. JONES,
SURGEON DENTIST.
57, GREAT RUSSELL-STREET, LONDON
(Opposite the British Museum).
Will be glad to forward his Pamphlet on Painless Dentistry, free, enclosed by post, which explains the most unique system of the adjustment of Artificial Teeth without pain.
Consultation free, from 10 to 5.

DINNENFORD'S MAGNESIA.
The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this Pure Medicine as the best remedy for ACIDITY OF THE STOMACH, HEADACHE, BRUISES, RHEUMATISM,
ACUTE GOUT, and INDIGESTION, and as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants.
DINNENFORD'S MAGNESIA.

OLD DR. JACOB TOWNSEND'S SARSAPARILLA.
It is the best Autogenous Medicine for the Blood, scurvy, biliousness, flatulency, and all such diseases. In bottles of 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 11s., of all Chemists. Chief Depot, 120, Fleet-street, E.C.

THROAT IRRITATION.—Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice.
For these symptoms use
EPIS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.
Glycerine in these agreeable confections, being in proximity to the mucous membrane, is excited by the act of sucking, becomes naturally heating, and only in boxes, 1/2 and 1s. 1/2, labels.
Epis & Co. Homoeopathic Chemists, London.
A letter received—Gentlemen—I have found your Glycerine Jujubes of considerable benefit (with or without medical treatment) in almost all forms of throat disease. They soothe and clear the voice. In no case can they do any harm. Yours faithfully Gordon Holmes, L.R.C.S., Senior Physician to the Municipal Throat and Ear Infirmary.

"LEARNED, CHATTY, USEFUL."—Athenæum.

Now ready, price 10s. 6d. each, cloth boards, with very Copious Index,

NOTES AND QUERIES.

Vols. I. to XII.

FIFTH SERIES.

Containing, in addition to a great variety of similar Notes and Replies, Articles of Interest on the following Subjects:—

English, Irish, and Scottish History.

The Dream and Death of Thomas, Lord Lyttelton—
The Elective and Deposing Power of Parliament—Anne Boleyn—Scottish Titles—Burial-Place of Edmund, Duke of Somerset—Elizabeth, Queen of Robert Bruce—Bondmen in England—Serfdom in Scotland—Graham, Viscount Dundee—A Jacobite Letter—Abbotsford in 1835—Com-purgators—Bishop of Ross, Scotland, 1417—Knox's 'History of the Reformation'—Good Friday and Easter Sunday, temp. Charles II.—The Jews in England in the Thirteenth Century—Warrants for the Execution of Charles I.—The Fitzmaurs and Stewarts.

Biography.

T. Allington—William Roy—Casper Hauser—Charles
Owen of Warrington—Paolo Sarpi—The Descent of William Penn—William, Abbott of Ramsey—A. H. Rowan—George Cromer, Archbishop of Armagh—Matthew Smith, the first Principal of Brasenose College, Oxford—James Bayer, the Caricaturist—Jeremiah Horrocks.

Bibliography and Literary History.

Shakespeariana—The Authorship of Anonymous Works—
Milton's 'L'Allegro'—Unpublished Letter of Macaulay—
'Histoire des Médecins'—Juifs Anciens et Modernes—
Earle's 'Philology of the English Tongue'—Unpublished Poems by Burns—Dr Johnson and Mrs. Turton—From Greenland's Ice Mountains—Chap-Books—Lord Byron in Scotland—Welsh Language Unpublished Letter of John Wesley—The Works of Thomas Fuller—The Welsh Testament—Burns's Ode on the American Civil War—
Opus Questionum divi Augustini—Letter of Smollett—
'The Pilgrim's Progress'—Development of the Press, 1824-1874—Books Written by Mrs. Olivia Serres: 'The Book.'

Popular Antiquities and Folk-Lore.

Ague Charms—Birds of Ill Omen—Candlemas Gills—
Eggs and Drunkenness—Evil Eye—Jewish Superstitions—Hydrophobia prevented—Handkerchief thrown on Seidick's Coffin—Ladies and Lionses—The Seven Whistles.

Poetry, Ballads, and Drama.

The real Richelieu and Bulwer's Richelieu—"The Irish Brigade"—Thomas Decker—Mrs. Siddons a Sculptor—Barham's Lines on Dean Ireland—Browning's "Lost Leader"—The Lord Chamberlain's Inspection of Plays—
Emma Isola—A Poem by W. M. Praed—Goethe—Shelley—
Henry VIII as a Poet—The Australian Drama—Charles I.
as a Poet—Sheridan and Sir John Baskling—Oxfordshire Christmas Miracle-Play—Christmas Mummies in Dorset-shire—Dante and his Translators—The Christian Year.

Popular and Proverbial Sayings.

"You know who the Critics are"—"You may put it in your eye and see none the worse for it"—Called Home—God's Church and the Devil's Chapel—Unaccustomed as I am to public speaking—Tout vient à point—Wise after the event—La Parole est donnée à l'homme—Robbing Peter to Pay Paul—The End justifies the Means—The English seamen a Fool and is a Fool.

Philology.

Carr—Carse—Heel Tape—"Bloody"—Spurring—For for Than—Vagaries of Spelling—Spelling Reforms—Surrey
Provincialisms—Quadragesimalia—S. v. E.—English Words compared with the Icelandic—Gingham—The Termination Y in Place-Names—Calomet—Yeux—Cameo —Hall, Wyck, and Salt Works—Shaddongate—Shakspere's Name.

Genealogy and Heraldry.

The Insignia of the Knights of the Garter—Arms—
Hungary—Dering Roll of Arms—Unsettled Baronetries—
The Arms of Sir Francis Drake—The Arms of English Sees—Bar sinister—Strawberry Leaves on Coronets—Byron Arms—F. E. E. T. in the Savoy Arms—Seal of Prince of Livonia—The Templars and Hospitaliers.

Fine Arts.

Portraits of Dr. Johnson—Marks on Porcelain—Italian
Works of Art at Paris in 1815—Sir Joshua Reynolds:
Miss Day; Mrs. Day—Portrait of Barber—Church Plate—
Various Paintings and Engravings.

Religious and Ecclesiastical Matters.

Altar Rails, Covered—Liddell v. Westerton—Ecclesiastical Vestments—Funeral Garlands—The Clericane—
"Prester John" and the Arms of the See of Chichester—
Penance in the Church of England—Laud's Service Book—
Epitaph of Cardinal Howard at Rome—St. Cuthbert's
Burial-place—Old Northern English MS. Psalter—Ber-nicle Church—Sacred Vessels—A Roman Catholic Vistica-tion in 1709—Episcopal Titles—St. George's Lodge—Regis-trum Sacrum Bazarianum—Communion Tokens—Fasting Communion in the Church of England—The Title of Reverend—Consecration of Church Plate—"Defender of the Faith"—The "Breeches" Bible.

Classical Subjects.

The Latin Version of Bacon's Essays—Greek Anthology
—Martian's Epigram xlii. 76—Lucretian Notelets—
Medieval and Modern Latin and Greek Verse—Mittitur in disco—Catullus: "Hoc ut dixit"—"Sandon" (Horace) —Cleo—Lucas a non Lucendo.

Topography.

Sandwich Islands—Origin of the Names of the American States—Arthur's Oven on the Carron—Scottish History
—The Yardley Oak—Hart Hall, Oxford—Old Kensington
—Travelling in Italy Forty Years ago—The Equestrian Statue in Hyde Park—Arthurian Localities: Scotland—
The Sacred Lotum—St. John's Chapel, Bedford-row.

Miscellaneous.

Christian Names—Pillar Posts—Hanging in Chains and Irons—George III. and the Pig—The Killenny Cais—The Waterloo and Peninsular Medals—The Clerical a healthy Profession—Unlawful Games of the Middle Ages—Itinerant Empires—Sunday Newspapers—Gipsies—The Wordsworth—Double Returns in Parliamentary Elections
—Curiosities of Corporation Records—Spiritual Apparitions
—The "Dial" System of Telegraphy—Professor
Becker's "Gallus"—Skating Literature—Cricket—London Companies, or Guilds—A Travelling Tutor of the Olden Time—Gunpowder Plot—Baths in the Middle Ages—
The Little Summer—Whitsuntide—Michaelmas—Christmas Contrasts.

FREDERICK WARNE & CO'S

FIRST ANNOUNCEMENTS,

SEASON 1880-81.

Afternoon Tea. Rhymes for Children. With Original Illustrations by J. G. Sowerby and H. H. Emerson. Printed in the highest Style of Colour Printing. Each Page illustrated. Small 4to. picture boards 0 6 0

Merry Ballads of the Olden Time. A Combination of Eight quaint and well-known Rhyming Ballads. Illustrated with 32 Page Plates, printed in Colours, and upwards of 160 smaller illustrations in Tints, with Text. Small 4to. extra gilt 0 6 0
Ditto ditto gilt edges 0 6 0

The Boy's Modern Playmate. By the Rev. J. G. Wood. A Book of Games, Sports, and Diversions. With 600 Illustrations, engraved by Dalziel, Hodgkin, &c. In square crown 8vo. gilt 0 8 6
Ditto ditto gilt edges 0 9 0

Our Little World of Child Life. A Series of Simple Stories. With 25 large Pictures, printed in Colours, Coloured Cover, and appropriate Letter-press. Small 4to. fancy binding 0 3 6

Wordsworth's Poetical Works. (Arundel Poets.) With Notes, Steel Portrait, and Original Illustrations. Small 4to. red under gold edges, bevelled boards, gilt ... 0 10 6
Ditto ditto morocco 1 5 0

Karr's Tour Round My Garden. Re-edited, with additional Illustrations. Crown 8vo. gilt 0 5 0
Ditto ditto gilt edges 0 6 0

Aesop's Fables. Translated by Samuel Croxall, D.D. Edited by Rev. GEORGE FYLER TOWNSEND and L. VALENTINE, with Additions from Sir ROGER L'ESTRANGE. 110 Illustrations, square crown 8vo. gilt 0 5 0
Ditto ditto gilt edges 0 6 0

His Father; or, a Mother's Legacy. By Silas K. Hocking, Author of 'Alec Green,' 'Her Benny,' &c. With Original Illustrations. In crown 8vo. gilt 0 3 6

Baron Munchausen: his Adventures. Comprising 18 mag-nificent Coloured Plates by Richard, and full Descriptive Text, royal 4to. gilt 0 12 6

Party Giving, on every Scale; or, the Cost of Entertainments. By the AUTHOR of 'MANNERS and TONE of GOOD SOCIETY,' 'SOCIETY SMALL TALK,' &c. In crown 8vo. gilt 0 2 6

Benedicta. By Mrs. Alfred Phillips. With Original Illus-trations. Crown 8vo. gilt 0 3 6

Sybil's Book. By Lady Barker. With Original Illustrations. Crown 8vo. gilt 0 3 6

Stories About. By Lady Barker. With Original Illustrations. Crown 8vo. gilt 0 3 6

Ribbon Stories. By Lady Barker. With Original Illustrations. Crown 8vo. gilt 0 3 6

Christmas Cake. By Lady Barker. With Original Illus-trations. Crown 8vo. gilt 0 3 6

Daring Deeds Library. New and Enlarged Series. With Illustrations and emblematical binding Each 0 2 6

WARS of the ROSES.

SEA FIGHTS, from SLUYS to NAVARINO.

LAND BATTLES, from Hastings to Inkermann.

DARING DEEDS of ADVENTURE.

THE BOY'S BOOK of HEROES.

TWO YEARS of SCHOOL LIFE.

ROBINSON CRUSOE.

SWISS FAMILY ROBINSON.

LONDON: BEDFORD-STREET, STRAND.

WARNE'S
POPULAR SERIES OF BOOKS.

THE ARUNDEL POETS.

Original Illustrations.

Small 4to. red under gold edges, bevelled boards, elegantly gilt, 1s. 6d. each; or in morocco, 2s.

1. SHAKESPEARE'S POETICAL WORKS.
2. MILTON'S POETICAL WORKS.
3. SCOTT'S POETICAL WORKS.
4. LONGFELLOW'S POETICAL WORKS.
5. BYRON'S POETICAL WORKS.
6. WORDSWORTH'S POETICAL WORKS.

THE LANSDOWNE POETS.

Small crown 8vo. gilt and gilt edges, with Illustrations. Oxford red-line border, 3s. 6d. each; or morocco, new style, 8s.

THIRTY-SIX VOLUMES.

THE CHANDOS CLASSICS.

(Sale 2,508,000.)

A Series of Standard Works in Poetry, History, and General Literature.

Large crown 8vo. stiff wrapper, 1s. 6d. each; or gilt lettering, 2s. each.

EIGHTY-TWO VOLUMES.

THE CHANDOS LIBRARY.

A Popular Series of Standard Works.

Full Indexes, Steel Frontispiece or Portrait, &c. Crown 8vo. gilt, 3s. 6d. each.

FORTY VOLUMES.

STAR SERIES.

SIXTY-FIVE VOLUMES.

At 1s. and 1s. 6d. each.

NOTABLE NOVELS.

FIFTY VOLUMES.

At Sixpence each.

COOKERY BOOKS.

MODEL COOKERY and HOUSEKEEPING BOOK. New and Revised Edition. 3,000 Receipts, New Series of Coloured Plates. Large crown 8vo. gilt, 5s.

EVERY-DAY COOKERY. 1,800 Receipts, and Coloured Illustrations of 35 Dishes. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Ditto, with additional Coloured Plates, half bound, 3s. 6d.

MODEL COOKERY. People's Edition. Large crown 8vo. with Coloured Illustrations, 1s.

Ditto, half bound, gilt lettering, 1s. 6d.

SCRIBNER'S ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE.

This very popular and high-class Magazine has now reached a Sale of upwards of 12,000 in England alone. Price One Shilling Monthly.

FREDERICK WARNE & Co. Bedford-street, Strand.

ROMOLA.

BY

GEORGE ELIOT.

Messrs. SMITH, ELDER & CO. have the pleasure of announcing the publication of an Edition of 'ROMOLA,' by GEORGE ELIOT, in Two Volumes, imperial 8vo.

The Letter-press of this Edition will be printed by Messrs. Richard Clay, Sons & Taylor, on paper of the finest quality, made expressly for the Work by Messrs. John Dickinson & Co.

The Illustrations for the Work, which were drawn by Sir Frederick Leighton, the President of the Royal Academy, will all be printed on real China Paper, by Messrs. Richard Clay, Sons & Taylor, and mounted on Plate Paper; the Initial Letters will be mounted with the Letter-press of the Book.

The Edition will be limited to One Thousand Copies, and the type will be distributed after each sheet has been printed.

The Work will be published on the 15th of October, 1880.

Subscriptions will be received through Booksellers; each Copy will be numbered, and Copies will be delivered to Subscribers in the order in which Subscriptions are received.

The Publishers reserve to themselves the option of at any time increasing the Subscription price.

The Publishers also reserve to themselves the right of printing a few Copies beyond the Edition of One Thousand Copies, for the purpose of presentation to the Author and Reviewers. Such additional Copies will not be numbered or sold, the Edition for Sale being strictly limited to One Thousand Copies.

Prospectuses and Specimen Pages, with information as to the price at which Booksellers will receive Subscriptions, may be obtained on application to the principal Booksellers in London and the Provinces.

15, WATERLOO-PLACE, LONDON, September 20th, 1880.

Editorial Communications should be addressed to "The Editor"—Advertisements and Business Letters to "The Publisher"—at the Office, 20, Wellington-street, Strand, London, W.C.
Printed by R. S. Francis, Athenæum Press, Took's-court, Chancery-lane, E.C.; and Published by JOHN FRANCIS, at No. 20, Wellington-street, Strand, W.C.
Agents: for Germany, Messrs. Bell & Brodbeck, and Mr. John Murray, Edinburgh;—for Ireland, Mr. John Robertson, Dublin.—Saturday, September 25, 1880.

12

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1880.

PRICE
THREEPENCE
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

advantage in London (or some Manila)—Address Mr. J. C. Spitzer Manila, P. I.

FREDERICK WARNE & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

AUNT LOUISA'S TOY BOOKS.

The Sale of above Six MILLIONS of AUNT LOUISA'S TOY BOOKS in all quarters of the globe, and in every village where the English tongue is spoken, is the best proof of their universal popularity.

One Shilling each, sewed, Picture Cover; or, Mounted on Linen, Two Shillings each.

The Series now consist of—

- | | | |
|---------------------------------------|------------------------------------|----------------------------------|
| 1. The RAILWAY A B C. | 23. The SUMMER ALPHABET. | 63. ALPHABET of ANIMALS. |
| 2. A, APPLE PIE. | 24. BRUIN, the BEAR. | 64. NEW YEAR'S EVE. |
| 3. CHILDHOOD'S HAPPY HOURS. | 25. DAME TROT and her CAT. | 65. KINGDOM of the GREEDY. |
| 4. NURSERY SONGS. | 26. HOME for the HOLIDAYS. | 66. LITTLE DAME CRUMP. |
| 5. LIFE of a DOLL. | 27. PUNCH and JUDY. | 67. CHILDHOOD'S DELIGHT. |
| 6. JOHN GILPIN, the STORY of. | 28. MY CHILDREN. | 68. HUSH-A-BYE, BABY. |
| 7. BING a SONG of SIXPENCE. | 29. JACK and JILL. | 69. TOTTIE'S NURSERY WINTER. |
| 8. The SEASIDE. | 30. The FAITHFUL FRIEND. | 70. CINDERELLA. |
| 9. ROBIN'S CHRISTMAS EVE. | 31. TEN LITTLE NIGGERS. | 71. RED RIDING HOOD. |
| 10. ALPHABET of FRUITS. | 32. ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS. | 72. OLD MOTHER HUBBARD. |
| 11. FRISKY, the SQUIRREL. | 33. Ditto. | 73. LITTLE BO-PEEP. |
| 12. COUNTRY PETS. | 34. Ditto. | 74. HOPO-MY THUMB. |
| 13. PUSSEY'S LONDON LIFE. | 35. PICTURE PUZZLE ALPHABET. | 75. DROLL PICTURES. |
| 14. HECTOR, the DOG. | 36. MY FAVOURITES. | 76. HUMOROUS PICTURES. |
| 15. The FAIRY at the FOUNTAIN. | 37. JOHN BULL'S FARMYARD ALPHABET. | 77. BUNNY PICTURES. |
| 16. UNCLE'S FARMYARD. | 38. TABBY'S TEA FIGHT. | 78. COMIC PICTURES. |
| 17. LONDON ALPHABET. | 39. ROVER'S DINNER PARTY. | 79. JOSEPH and his BRETHREN. |
| 18. COUNTRY ALPHABET. | 40. LONDON CHARACTERS. | 80. The PROVERBS of SOLOMON. |
| 19. ALPHABET of GAMES and SPORTS. | 41. GLOBE ALPHABET. | 81. KING DAVID, The STORY of. |
| 20. HOUSEHOLD PETS. | 42. FAMOUS DOGS, Landseer. | 82. THE WONDERS of PROVIDENCE. |
| 21. HARE and TORTOISE. | 43. NOTED DOGS, Landseer. | 83. LEAR'S BOOK of NONSENSE.* |
| 22. HEY-DIDDLE DIDDLE. | 44. FAMOUS HORSES, Herring. | 84. Ditto. |
| 23. WORLD-WIDE FABLES. | 45. NOTED HORSES, Herring. | 85. Ditto. |
| 24. The BIRTHDAY PARTY. | 46. CHILDHOOD'S PLAY TIME. | 86. Ditto. |
| 25. KING, QUEEN, and KNAVE of HEARTS. | 47. OUR BOYS and GIRLS. | 87. FINE NIGGERS MORE. |
| 26. COCK ROBIN'S COURTSHIP, &c. | | 88. FROG WHO WOULD a WOOLING GO. |

AUNT LOUISA'S MAGIC MODELLER.

Specially Engraved and Printed in Colours by Kronheim & Co., with Full Directions.

One Shilling each, demy 4to. stiff covers, sewed.

1. The NEW CINDERELLA (Makes 4 Large Models).
2. The WONDERFUL A B C (Makes 24 Smaller Models).

Full Instructions for the Young Modeller are given in each Volume.

AUNT LOUISA'S CHOICE BOOKS.

In an entirely New Style of Binding, very handsome.

In demy 4to. cloth, elegantly gilt, new style, price 5s. each;

Mounted on Linen, price 10s. 6d. gilt and gilt edges.

LONDON GIFT-BOOK. HOME FAVOURITES.

CHOICE PRESENT. GOLDEN GIFT.

Also, in choice binding,

1. LONDON PICTURE BOOK.
2. SUNDAY PICTURE BOOK.
3. NURSERY FAVOURITE.
4. THE ALPHABET BOOK.

10. HOLIDAY GUEST.
11. NATIONAL ALBUM.
12. WELCOME GIFT.
13. LONDON FAVOURITE.

20. WELCOME VISITOR.
21. FAVOURITE TOY BOOK.
22. KEEPSAKE.
23. BIRTHDAY.

Uniform with the above,

24. LEAR'S BOOK of NONSENSE.
25. ARMY and NAVY DROLLERIES.

26. PICTURE PUZZLE TOY BOOK.
27. PICTURE PUZZLE ALBUM.

THE CHANDOS POETS.

Under this distinctive title are now published New and Elegant Volumes of Standard Poetry, fully Illustrated, well Edited, and printed with a Red-line Border, Steel Portraits, &c.

In square crown 8vo. gilt, and gilt edges, 7s. 6d.; morocco, 10s.

- | | |
|---|---|
| 1. ALPHABET of the MONTHS. | 14. BURNS'S POETICAL WORKS. |
| 2. LEGENDARY BALLADS of ENGLAND and SCOTLAND. | 15. BOOTH'S POETICAL WORKS. |
| 3. SCOTT'S POETICAL WORKS. | 16. SHAKESPEARE: THE PLAYS and POEMS. |
| 4. POETS of the NINETEENTH CENTURY. | 17. CAMPBELL'S POETICAL WORKS. |
| 5. ELIZA COOK'S POEMS. | 18. COLERIDGE'S POETICAL WORKS. |
| 6. THE SPIRIT of PRAISE. | 19. SHELLEY'S POETICAL WORKS. |
| 7. CHRISTIAN LYRICS. | 20. POPE'S ROMAN'S ILLIAD and ODYSSEY. |
| 8. MOORE'S POETICAL WORKS. | 21. MONTGOMERY'S POEMS, &c. |
| 9. COWPER'S POETICAL WORKS. | 22. POPE'S POETICAL WORKS. |
| 10. MILTON'S POETICAL WORKS. | 23. MACLACHLAN'S POETICAL WORKS. |
| 11. WORDSWORTH'S POETICAL WORKS. | 24. KEATS'S (GEOFFREY) POEMS and PROSE. |
| 12. BYRON'S POETICAL WORKS. | 25. KEATS'S CHRISTIAN YEAR. |
| 13. MRS. HEMANS'S POETICAL WORKS. | |

HANDY INFORMATION BOOKS.

(In crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.)

1. HOW WE ARE GOVERNED; or, the Crown, the Senate, and the People. Fourteenth Edition.
2. MANNERS and TONE of GOOD SOCIETY, or, Soliloquies to be avoided. Ninth Edition.
3. SOCIETY SMALL TALK; or, What to Say and When to Say It. Third Edition.
4. SERVANTS (the MANAGEMENT of): their Duties and Rules.
5. FOOD and FEEDING. By Sir HENRY THOMPSON.
6. OUR SONS, and HOW to START THEM in LIFE. By ARTHUR KING. Second Edition.

COOKERY BOOKS.

With Coloured Illustrations and Practical Woodcuts.

WARNE'S MODEL COOKERY and HOUSE-KEEPING BOOK. By MARY JEWRY. 2,000 Receipts. 24 Pages of Coloured Illustrations. Large crown 8vo. half bound, gilt, 7s. 6d.

WARNE'S MODEL COOKERY. By MARY JEWRY. Containing Complete Instructions in Household Management, with 2,000 Receipts. Coloured Plates. Large crown 8vo. gilt, 5s.

WARNE'S EVERY-DAY COOKERY. 1,000 Receipts. Half bound, gilt, 2s. 6d.

WARNE'S EVERY-DAY COOKERY. 1,000 Receipts. Large crown 8vo. gilt, 2s. 6d.

WARNE'S MODEL COOKERY and HOUSE-KEEPING BOOK. Large crown 8vo. 1s. Ditto ditto, gilt, 1s. 6d.

WARWICK HOUSE, SALISBURY-SQUARE, LONDON, E.C., October 1, 1880.

Messrs. WARD & LOCK have the pleasure to announce a NEW SERIAL for SELF-EDUCATORS, forming the Cheapest and most Useful Work ever issued for the People.

WARD & LOCK'S UNIVERSAL INSTRUCTOR;

OR,

SELF-CULTURE FOR ALL.

FULLY ILLUSTRATED.

In WEEKLY NUMBERS, price 1d.; and MONTHLY PARTS, price 6d.*(Complete in 36 Monthly Parts.)*No. I, ready OCTOBER 18th; Part I. ready OCTOBER 25th, 1880.

Recognizing the progressive spirit of the age, and the demand that exists for carefully-prepared literature suited to the wants of Self-Educators, Ward, Lock & Co. have prepared a Serial Work of an exhaustive character under the above title. It will be a Complete Encyclopedia of Learning, meeting the requirements of Students of all Classes, and characterized by such features as will, the Publishers confidently believe, give it a marked superiority over every similar undertaking. The comprehensiveness of its plan, the thorough execution of its details, the number of its illustrations, the compactness of its size, and the cheapness of its price, cannot fail to secure for it a prominent position.

In projecting the UNIVERSAL INSTRUCTOR, the aim of the Publishers has been to take part in the supply of a national need. At no time has the necessity for mental improvement been more clearly seen than at present, when it is acknowledged on every hand that if Britain is to maintain her supremacy abroad, she can do so only by the diffusion of sound education amongst her population at home.

The SUBJECTS treated of in the UNIVERSAL INSTRUCTOR will cover the whole field of knowledge. They will extend, as will be seen from the list given below, from the most elementary to the most advanced, and, taken together, will form a perfect system of Intellectual Culture. The latest thought of the time, and all modern inventions and discoveries, will find adequate representation; and whilst we would avoid pretending to convert labour into recreation, we have no hesitation in affirming that our lessons will prove eminently lively and interesting.

The UNIVERSAL INSTRUCTOR will contain all necessary directions for acquiring proficiency in the following among other subjects:—

ANATOMY:
ANIMAL.
COMPARATIVE.
HUMAN.
ARITHMETIC.
ASTRONOMY.
BIOGRAPHY.
BOOK-KNOWLEDGE.
BOTANY.
CHEMISTRY.
CINEMATOGRAPHY.
HISTORY.
PRACTICE.
DRAWING.
ELECTRICITY.
ELOCUTION.
ENGLISH GRAMMAR.
ENGLISH LITERATURE.
ETHNOLOGY.
EXPERIMENTAL PHILOSOPHY:
MAGNETISM.
ELECTRICITY.
GALVANISM.
HEAT.
LIGHT.
CHEMISTRY.
SOUND.
METEOROLOGY, &c.

FINE ARTS:
DRAWING.
PERSPECTIVE.
SKETCHING from NATURE.
MUSIC.
SINGING.
FRENCH LANGUAGE.
FRENCH LITERATURE.
GALVANISM.
GEOGRAPHY:
PHYSICAL.
POLITICAL.
GEOLOGY.
GEOMETRY.
GERMAN LANGUAGE.
GERMAN LITERATURE.
GREEK LANGUAGE.
GREEK LITERATURE.
HEALTH.
HEAT.
HISTORY: ANCIENT.
SACRED.
MIDDLE-AGE.
MODERN.
GREAT BRITAIN and IRELAND.
HYDROSTATICS.
ITALIAN LANGUAGE.
ITALIAN LITERATURE.
LAND-SURVEYING.

LANGUAGES:
Ancient—
LATIN.
GREEK.
Modern—FRENCH.
GERMAN.
ITALIAN.
SPANISH.
LATIN LANGUAGE.
LATIN LITERATURE.
LIGHT.
LITERATURE:
Ancient—
ROMAN.
GREEK.
Modern—
ENGLISH.
FRENCH.
GERMAN.
ITALIAN.
SPANISH.
LOGARITHMS.
MACHINES and MACHINERY.
MAGNETISM.
MATHEMATICS:
ARITHMETIC.
ALGEBRA.
GEOMETRY.
TRIGONOMETRY, &c.
MENSURATION.
METEOROLOGY.

MECHANICAL PHILOSOPHY MECHANICS.
HYDROSTATICS.
HYDRAULICS.
PNEUMATICS.
MINERALOGY.
MUSIC.
NATURAL HISTORY:
MINERALOGY.
GEOLOGY.
BOTANY.
ZOOLOGY.
ANIMAL PHYSIOLOGY.
HUMAN PHYSIOLOGY.
VEGETABLE PHYSIOLOGY.
COMPARATIVE ANATOMY, &c.
PERSPECTIVE.
PHYSIOLOGY, ANIMAL.
PHYSIOLOGY, HUMAN.
PNEUMATICS.
READING.
SHORTHAND.
SINGING.
SKETCHING from NATURE.
SOUND.
SPANISH LANGUAGE.
SPANISH LITERATURE.
TRIGONOMETRY.
WRITING.
ZOOLOGY.

The FIRST WEEKLY NUMBER, price 1d., and consisting of 16 pages, will be published on the 18th of October, 1880; and the FIRST MONTHLY PART, price 6d., consisting of 64 pages, and a Valuable CHART OF THE HISTORY OF THE WORLD, printed in Colours, on the 25th of October, 1880.

Orders for No. 1 and Part I. of WARD & LOCK'S UNIVERSAL INSTRUCTOR are now received by all Booksellers, and Copies of the Prospectus will be sent by the Publishers, post free, in any quantities required for distribution.

London: WARD, LOCK & CO. Warwick House, Salisbury-square, E.C.

WARD, LOCK & CO.'S NEW BOOKS AND SERIALS.

A COMPANION VOLUME TO 'MRS. BEETON'S BOOK OF HOUSEHOLD MANAGEMENT.'

Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, price 7s. 6d.

WARD & LOCK'S HOME BOOK.

A DOMESTIC CYCLOPEDIA.

WITH COLOURED PLATES AND NUMEROUS WOOD ENGRAVINGS.

The enormous popularity of 'Mrs. BEETON'S BOOK OF HOUSEHOLD MANAGEMENT' has induced the Publishers to prepare, under the above title, a Companion Work, which they hope will be received with an equal amount of favour. The aim of the HOME BOOK is to make Home the abode of Comfort, Elegance, and Happiness. Among the subjects treated of in WARD & LOCK'S HOME BOOK will be found:—The Way to Build, Buy, Rent, and Furnish a House—The Management of the Home—The Treatment of Children—Needlework in all its Branches—The Art of Dressmaking—Ladies' Toilet—Etiquette—Employment of Leisure Hours, &c.

THREE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FIVE THOUSAND.

Crown 8vo. half bound, price 7s. 6d.; cloth gilt, gilt edges, 8s. 6d.; half calf, 14s. 6d.

MRS. BEETON'S BOOK OF HOUSEHOLD MANAGEMENT.

ENTIRELY NEW and REVISED EDITION, with 150 ADDITIONAL PAGES, NEW WOOD ENGRAVINGS, and NEW COLOURED PLATES, in all

1,200 PAGES, 4,000 RECIPES and INSTRUCTIONS, and 1,400 ENGRAVINGS and COLOURED PLATES.

Comprising every kind of Practical Information on Domestic Economy and Modern Cookery, with Duties of the Mistress, Housekeeper, and all kinds of Servants—Directions for Carving—Legal Memoranda—the Housing, Management, and Diseases of Infancy and Childhood, &c.

AN ENTIRELY NEW WORK.—Just ready, crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 5s.

THE LIFE AND WORK OF JESUS CHRIST.

By the Rev. F. A. MALLESON, Vicar of Broughton in Furness,

Editor of 'Paley's Evidences,' 'Horn Pauline,' 'Butler's Analogy,' &c. in 'The Christian Knowledge Series,' and of Mr. Raskin's Letters to the Clergy on the Lord's Prayer and the Church.

WITH NUMEROUS ENGRAVINGS.

Just ready, in One Handsome Volume, cloth gilt, price 10s. 6d. ILLUSTRATED with SIXTY PAGES of ENGRAVINGS.

WARD & LOCK'S ILLUSTRATED AND COMPLETE EDITION OF CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE, AND BIBLE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK.

Ward & Lock's Edition is a GENUINE UNABRIDGED "CRUDEN" and the MOST COMPLETE that has ever been issued from the press. In addition to the Concordance, this Edition comprises SIXTY PAGES OF ENGRAVINGS, representing persons, places, and things mentioned in the Bible, and illustrative of Eastern manners and customs, and an Appendix specially prepared for it, entitled THE BIBLE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK, containing much valuable information, calculated to be of service to the right reading and understanding of the Divine Word.

WARD, LOCK & CO.'S NEW SERIALS.

IN MONTHLY PARTS, price 6d. each. Part I. October 25, 1880.

WARD & LOCK'S WORTHIES OF THE WORLD.

A SERIES OF ORIGINAL BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES OF THE GREAT MEN OF ALL COUNTRIES AND TIMES. WITH PORTRAITS.

There is no field of reading more intensely interesting than that of Biography, and it is, undoubtedly, one of the most valuable aids in the formation of character. Ward & Lock's WORTHIES OF THE WORLD is the most complete work ever attempted in connexion with this interesting and valuable branch of study, and the Publishers recommend it with confidence to the pursuit of all ages and every class of society.

IN MONTHLY PARTS, price 6d. each. Part I. October 25, 1880.

WARD & LOCK'S HOME BOOK.

A DOMESTIC CYCLOPEDIA.

WITH COLOURED AND OTHER ILLUSTRATIONS.

Among the subjects treated of by Ward & Lock's HOME BOOK may be mentioned:—How to Build, Buy, Rent, and Furnish a House—Duties of Servants and Hints on Superintendence of the Home—Children and what to do with them—The Art of Dressmaking—Needlework in all its branches—The Toilet—Etiquette—How to spend our Leisure Hours, &c.

IN MONTHLY PARTS, price 6d. each. Part I. October 25, 1880.

WARD & LOCK'S FARM BOOK.

A COMPLETE GUIDE TO FARM MANAGEMENT IN ALL ITS BRANCHES.

WITH COLOURED PLATES AND OTHER ILLUSTRATIONS.

Ward & Lock's FARM BOOK is a work for all farmers, and a work also which will prove of great use to that yearly increasing body of Amateurs who take an interest in rural pursuits. It opens with a general account of the Management of the Farm, followed by the Crops of the Farm—Cows and the Management of the Dairy—Sheep, Pigs, Asses, Goats, and Mules—The Horse—The Fruit and Flower Garden—The Planting of Trees—and, last of all, Field Sports and Rural Recreation.

 A Complete CATALOGUE of WARD, LOCK & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS will be sent post free on application.

London: WARD, LOCK & CO. Warwick House, Salisbury-square, E.C.

POPULAR HEALTH MANUALS.

Strongly bound in cloth, price 1s. each.

WARD & LOCK'S

LONG LIFE SERIES.

Accurately Written and Carefully Edited by DISTINGUISHED MEMBERS OF THE MEDICAL PROFESSION.

The following volumes are now ready:—

1. LONG LIFE, and HOW to REACH IT.
2. The THROAT and the VOICE.
3. EYESIGHT, and HOW to CARE for IT.
4. The MOUTH and the TEETH.
5. The SKIN and HEALTH and DISEASE.
6. BRAIN-WORK and OVER-WORK.
7. SICK-NURSING.
8. The YOUNG WIFE'S ADVICE BOOK.
9. SLEEP: HOW to OBTAIN IT.

The SATURDAY REVIEW of August 7, 1880, in a lengthy review of this Series, says:—"Mr. Ward & Lock have done good service to the public in procuring, at the hands of highly qualified members of the medical profession, a series of manuals comprising into the smallest possible space the elementary principles on which the rules of healthy living, in three tiny handbooks, the non-professional reader, the teacher of youth, and particularly will find expressed in plain and untechnical language, adapted to every man of ordinary intelligence and capable of an amount of information which can be put to good use in the management of any age or condition of life, warning them against many an injudicious and dangerous habit, and, if not in all cases supplying the spot of medical advice, giving them valuable hints as to the symptoms which should be noted, and the directions in which professional counsel had best be sought. Prevention rather than cure may be said down as the design which has been kept in view in the compilation of these little books, and it is not too much to say of them as a series that it is hard to imagine how in each of them may be the means of saving many a life."

MOXON'S POPULAR POETS.

NEW VOLUMES.

Large crown 8vo. with red leather binding.

Illustrations and Critical Memoirs by W. M. ROSSSETTI.

Randomly bound, cloth gilt, gilt edges, price 2s. 6d. each.

22. WHITIER'S POETICAL WORKS.
23. LOWELL'S POETICAL WORKS.
24. SHAKESPEARE'S COMPLETE WORKS.

THE LILY SERIES.

NEW VOLUMES.

Pap. 8vo. ornamental wrapper 1s.; cloth-gilt, 1s. 6d.; ditto, gilt edges, 2s.

72. GODWYN'S ORDEAL. By Mrs. J. Kent SPENNER.
73. MADEIRA: a Story of French Love.

WARD & LOCK'S ANNUALS.

BEETON'S CHRISTMAS ANNUAL.

21st YEAR. Price 1s.

THE FORTUNATE ISLANDS.

With Contributions by MAX ANGLER, Author of 'Out of the Earthly Party,' &c.; HENRY FULTON, F.R.S. MONTAGU, &c.; and illustrated by Arthur & John Leighton.

THE EXTRA CHRISTMAS NUMBER

SYLVIA'S HOME JOURNAL.

Containing many valuable and useful Novels. Price 1s.

GLENNY'S GARDEN ALMANACK AND FLOWERS' DIRECTORY.

44th YEAR. Price 1s.

Containing much valuable information for Gardeners, both Amateurs and Professionals. With many illustrations.

GOLDEN CHILDHOOD,

AND

LITTLE PEOPLE'S PICTURE GALLERY. Containing Twelve Coloured Pictures, Four Hundred Engravings, Tales, Poetry, Puzzles, and every thing intended to be of use to Children. Large 4to picture boards, 4s.; cloth gilt, gilt edges, 5s.

THE

CHILDREN'S PICTURE ANNUAL.

FOURTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

Containing 'The Snowman's Christmas Story,' and other Stories, by MERCE LUNDIN, Author of 'The Snowy Holiday,' &c. beautifully illustrated. Imperial 4to picture boards, 1s.; cloth gilt, 2s.

THE YEAR BOOK OF FACTS

IN SCIENCE AND THE ARTS.

Exhibiting the most important literature, improvements, and inventions of the Year.

Crown 8vo. boards, 2s. 6d.; cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Immediately will be published,

A NEW NOVEL, IN THREE VOLUMES,

ENTITLED

ADAM AND EVE.

By Mrs. PARR,
Author of 'Dorothy Fox.'

From the WORLD.

"The admirable variety of these volumes displays the simple and comprehensive philosophy of an acute observer of mankind and nature. The mixture of charming lyrics with incisive views on men and things imparts an exquisite savour to the whole."

THOUGHTS in MY GARDEN. By MORTIMER COLLINS. Edited by EDMUND YATES. With Notes by the Editor and Mrs. MORTIMER COLLINS. 2 vols. crown 8vo. 3s.

NOTICE.

A SECOND EDITION OF

THE MUDFOG PAPERS,

By CHARLES DICKENS,

Will be ready on THURSDAY NEXT at all Booksellers', in crown 8vo. price 3s. 6d.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS',

MISS DE FONBLANQUE'S

FIVE WEEKS IN ICELAND.

In crown 8vo. price 3s. 6d.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS',

MISS FITZGIBBON'S

TRIP TO MANITOBA.

In demy 8vo. price 10s. 6d.

POPULAR NOVELS,

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

NEW WORK BY MR. HENRY WOOD.

JOHNNY LUDLOW.

SECOND SERIES.

By Mrs. HENRY WOOD,
Author of 'East Lynne,' &c.

3 vols. crown 8vo.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE FIRST VIOLIN.'

The WELLFIELDS. By Jessie FOTHERGILL, Author of 'Probation' and 'The First Violin.' 3 vols. crown 8vo.

"A well and powerfully written novel."—St. James's Gazette.
"This is the best of the author's three books in point of construction; and the character of Jerome Wellfield is more finished and more consistent than any she has yet attempted."—Athenæum.

TRANSLATED BY MRS. TYRELL.

LIZZIE of the MILL. From the Original, by Mrs. CHRISTINA TYRELL, Translator of 'No Surrender,' &c. 2 vols. crown 8vo.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF 'OUT ADRIFF.'

PIOUS FRAUDS; or, the Dawn of Love. By ALBANY DE FONBLANQUE, Author of 'A Tangled Skein,' 'Out Adriff,' &c. In 3 vols. crown 8vo.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington-street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

HURST & BLACKETT'S NEW WORKS.

MONSIEUR GUIZOT in PRIVATE

LIFE (1787-1874). By his Daughter, MADAME DE WITT. Translated by Mrs. SIMPSON. 1 vol. 8vo. 18s.
"This book was well worth translating. Mrs. Simpson has written excellent English, while preserving the spirit of the French."—Times.
"Madame de Witt has done justice to her father's memory in an admirable record of his life. Mrs. Simpson's translation of this slenderly interesting book is in accuracy and grace worthy of the original and of the subject."—Saturday Review.

An ACTOR ABROAD; or, Gossip, Narrative, and Descriptive. By EDMUND LEATHER. 8vo. 15s. [Just ready]

TALES of OUR GREAT FAMILIES. SECOND SERIES. By EDWARD WALFORD, M.A. 3 vols. 5s.

THE VILLAGE of PALACES; or, CHRONICLES of CHILSEA. By the Rev. A. O. L'ESTRANGE. 2 vols. crown 8vo. 21s.

CHEAP EDITION of YOUNG Mrs. JARDINE. By the AUTHOR of 'JOHN HALIFAX.' Forming the New Volume of HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY. 16 bound and illustrated.
"There is much tenderness and good feeling in this book. It is pleasant and wholesome."—Athenæum.

THE NEW NOVELS.

ROY and VIOLA. By Mrs. Forrester, Author of 'Viva,' 'Mignon,' &c. 3 vols.

"An admirable tale; told by one who can vividly describe and incisively comment on the manners and personal life of modern society. The dialogue is easy and natural and the writing fresh."—The World.

ST. MARTIN'S SUMMER. By SHIRLEY SMITH, Author of 'His Last Gasp,' &c. 3 vols.

"There is freshness and variety in this story and some of its characters are very prettily conceived. The book is well worth reading."
"A novel of no common merit. It is brightly and vividly written, it abounds in sprightly cleverness and shrewdness, and it contains a great deal of dialogue at once lively and natural, at once spontaneous and amusing."—Fall Mail.

LORD BRACKENBURY. By AMELIA S. EDWARDS, Author of 'Barham's History,' &c. Second Edition. 3 vols.

"Lord Brackenbury" is a very readable story. The author has well maintained the purpose of high-class novel writing, and succeeded in no small measure in attaining it. There is plenty of variety, cheerful dialogue, and general verve in the book. "—Athenæum.
"A story that can be read with not a little interest. The plot is contrived with much skill, and in the double hero and heroine the reader is provided with a great deal of both exciting and tender reading."—Saturday Review.

The TENTH EARL. By John BERTWICK HARWOOD, Author of 'Lady Flavia,' &c. 3 vols.

"The Tenth Earl" has plot and substance, incident and vitality. "This novel will amply repay perusal."—Fall Mail.

A VERY OPAL. By C. L. PERKINS.

"A novel of considerable merit. There is a misstatement of observation and at times a kind of quiet humour which reminds one of Jane Austen."—Athenæum.

FORESTALLED. By M. BETHAM EDWARDS, Author of 'Kitty,' 'Bridget,' &c. 2 vols. 12s.

"Those who can appreciate a quiet, original, interesting, and carefully written story will welcome 'Forestalled' with satisfaction."—Speaker.

STRICTLY TIED UP. 3 vols. [Oct. 5.]

BOOKS FOR THE COUNTRY.

Each Work complete in 1 vol. price 4s. (any of which can be had separately, elegantly printed and bound, and illustrated by Mr. J. GILBERT, MILLAIS, HUNT, LEACH, FOUNTNER, FOSTER, TENNIEL, SANDYS, E. HUGHES, RAMBOURNE, &c.)

HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY

OF CHEAP EDITIONS of POPULAR MODERN WORKS.

Sam Slick's Nature and Human Nature. By Maria Weston Chapman. 1 vol. 8vo. 18s.
John Halifax, Gentleman. The Crossed and the Crown. By Eliot Warburton. 2 vols. 12s.
Kathleen. By Miss Kayvanagh. 1 vol. 8vo. 18s.
A Woman's Thoughts about Women. By the Author of 'John Halifax.' 1 vol. 8vo. 18s.
Adam Craigmiles. By Mrs. Oliphant. 1 vol. 8vo. 18s.
Cardinal Wiseman's Pope. A Life for a Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.' 1 vol. 8vo. 18s.
Lord Hunt's Old Court Scandal. Memoirs and her Bridalmaid. By Mrs. Oliphant. 1 vol. 8vo. 18s.
Sam Slick's Old Judge. Darius. By Eliot Warburton. 1 vol. 8vo. 18s.
Sir H. Burke's Family Reminiscences. The Laird of Norwath. By Mrs. Oliphant. 1 vol. 8vo. 18s.
The Englishwoman in Italy. Working New. By the Author of 'John Halifax.' 1 vol. 8vo. 18s.
Frederic's Life of Jeanne d'Albret. The Valley of a Hundred Pines. Bette's Romance of the Forum. Edited by Miss Knapp. 1 vol. 8vo. 18s.
Studies from Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.' 1 vol. 8vo. 18s.
Grandmother's Memory. Frederick's Book about Doctors. Microbes and Mead. By the Author of 'John Halifax.' 1 vol. 8vo. 18s.
Les Misérables. By Victor Hugo. 1 vol. 8vo. 18s.
The Hunchback of Notre-Dame. Last and Saved. By the Hon. Mrs. Norton. 1 vol. 8vo. 18s.

STANDARD TEXT-BOOKS.

MR. CRUTTWELL'S CLASSICAL WORKS.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo. cloth, 6s. 6d.

1. A HISTORY of ROMAN LITERATURE, from the Earliest Period to the Times of the Antonines. By C. T. CRUTTWELL, M.A. Fellow of Merton College, Oxford, Head Master of Marlborough College.
"Nothing at all equal to it has hitherto been published in England."—British Quarterly Review.
"A most serviceable—indeed indispensable—guide for the student.... The 'general reader' will be both charmed and instructed."—Saturday Review.

2. SPECIMENS of ROMAN LITERATURE, from the Earliest Period to the Times of the Antonines.

Part I. ROMAN THOUGHT—Religion, Philosophy and Science, Art and Letters.

Part II. ROMAN STYLE—Descriptive, Rhetorical, and Miscellaneous Passages.

With Synopses and Indices complete. Edited by C. T. CRUTTWELL, M.A. Merton College, Oxford, and PEAKE RAMTON, M.A., some time Scholar of Jesus College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d.

"A work with a standing-ground of its own. Not only useful, but necessary for many classes of readers. The sound judgment exercised in arranging the plan and in the selection of the passages calls for hearty commendation."—Saturday Review.

PROFESSOR RAMSAY'S CLASSICAL WORKS.

In crown 8vo. cloth,

1. A MANUAL of ROMAN ANTIQUITIES: Law, Constitution, Army and Navy, Public and Social Life, Agriculture, Religion, &c. For the Use of Advanced Students. By WILLIAM RAMSAY, M.A. Trinity College, Cambridge, late Professor of Humanity in the University of Glasgow. With Map, numerous Engravings, and very copious Index. Seventh Edition. 2s. 6d.

2. An ELEMENTARY MANUAL of ROMAN ANTIQUITIES. Adapted for Junior Classes. With numerous Illustrations. Seventh Edition. 6s.

3. A MANUAL of LATIN PROSODY. Illustrated by Copious Examples and Critical Remarks. Sixth Edition. 5s.

DR. BRYCE'S VIRGIL.

VIRGILII OPERA. Edited by A. HAMILTON BRYCE, D.C.L. LL.D., Senior Classical Moderator in the University of Dublin. Text from HEYNE and WAGNER. English Notes, Original and Selected. From the leading German and English Commentaries. Illustrations from the Antique. Thirteenth Edition. In 1 vol. fcap. 8vo. cloth, 5s., or in Three Parts:—

Part I. EUCOLICUS and GEORGICUS. 2s. 6d.

Part II. The AENEID. Books I.—VI. 2s. 6d.

Part III. The AENEID. Books VII.—XII. 2s. 6d.

"Contains the plith of what has been written by the best scholars on the subject."—Athenæum.

Uniform with the above,

HORATII OPERA. Edited by JOSEPH CURRIE (formerly Head Classical Master in Glasgow Academy). Text from ORBLIUS. English Notes, Original and Selected, from the best Commentaries. Illustrations from the Antique. In 1 vol. fcap. 8vo. cloth, 5s., or in Two Parts:—

Part I. CARMINA. 2s.

Part II. SATIRAE and EPISTOLAE. 2s.

"The notes are excellent and exhaustive."—Quarterly Journal of Education.

MENTAL SCIENCE.—S. T. COLERIDGE'S

ESSAY on METHOD, Archbishop WHATELY'S TREATISE on LOGIC and RHETORIC. Crown 8vo. cloth, 5s. Third Edition. (English Metaphysics.) Or, the Treatise separately, Method, 2s.; Logic, 3s.; Metaphysics, 3s. 6d.

THE VOCABULARY of PHILOSOPHY:

Mental, Moral and Metaphysical. With Questions and References for the Use of Students. By WILLIAM FLEMING, D.D., late Prof. of Moral Philosophy in the University of Glasgow. Revised and Edited by HENRY CALDERWOOD, LL.D., Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Edinburgh. Crown 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d. Third Edition.

SENIOR'S (NASSAU WILLIAM, M.A., late Prof. of Political Economy at the University of Oxford, TREATISE on POLITICAL ECONOMY. Crown 8vo. cloth, 4s. Sixth Edition.

CRAIK'S HISTORY of ENGLISH LITERATURE and of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE from the NORMAN CONQUEST. With numerous Examples and Specimens. By GEORGE LILLIE CRAIK, LL.D. late Professor of History and English Literature, Queen's College, Belfast. In 2 vols. royal 8vo. cloth, 25s.

CRAIK'S MANUAL of ENGLISH LITERATURE. For the Use of Colleges, Schools, and those preparing for Competitive Examinations. By GEORGE LILLIE CRAIK, LL.D. Crown 8vo. cloth, 7s. 6d. Eighth Edition.

BELL'S THOMSON'S SEASONS. School Edition. With an Introduction and Notes by ROBERT BELL, Editor of the 'Annotated Series of British Poets.' Fcap. 8vo. cloth, 1s. 6d. Third Edition.

DORSEY'S SPELLING by DICTATION.—PROGRESSIVE EXERCISES in ENGLISH ORTHOGRAPHY, for Schools and Civil Service Examinations. By the Rev. A. D. DORSEY, B.D. Chancellor's English Medalist. 18mo. cloth, 1s. Fifteenth Thousand.

CHARLES GRIFFIN & Co. 10, Stationers' Hall-court, London.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1880.

CONTENTS.

HOWORTH'S HISTORY OF THE MONGOLS	425
THE PRIVATE LIFE OF HAIR	427
POOLE'S HISTORY OF THE HUGUENOTS	428
BYRON'S NEW POEMS	429
POLEY'S RECORDS OF THE SOCIETY OF JESUS IN ENGLAND	430
BOOKS ON THE MARCHES	431
NOVELS OF THE WEEK	431
EDUCATIONAL BOOKS	432
LIBRARY TABLE—LIST OF NEW BOOKS	432
GERALDINE JEWELLER, 'THE CAVE TEMPLES OF INDIA'	432
THE LIBRARY ASSOCIATION: ANOTHER IMAGINARY EDITION, "BIBL." THE SO-CALLED WILL OF THE EARL OF PEMBROKE	434-435
LITERARY Gossip	435
SCIENCE—NICHOLSON'S MANUAL OF PALEONTOLOGY, ASTRONOMICAL NOTES, GEOGRAPHICAL NOTES, SOCIETIES, MEETINGS, Gossip	437-438
FINE ARTS—LIBRARY TABLE; THE PRIVATE COLLECTIONS OF ENGLAND; Gossip	439-441
MUSIC—Gossip	441
DRAMA—MILNICH'S FRENCH TRANSLATION OF HAMLET, THE WALK, Gossip	441-442

LITERATURE

History of the Mongols from the Ninth to the Nineteenth Century.—Part II. The so-called Tartars of Russia and Central Asia. Divisions I. and II. By Henry H. Howorth, F.S.A. (Longmans & Co.)

THIS book grew, as we said on a former occasion, out of the interest with which Mr. Howorth had long regarded and studied the ethnology of Northern Asia.

"The aim and scope of our work," he writes, "are to integrate a large part of the broken history of the Asiatic nomades around that of the famous imperial race which claimed descent from Jingsis Khan."

In other words, the history of that portentous phenomenon of mediæval history and of his house afforded a nucleus round which to agglomerate in something like organic order the amorphous mass of ethnological fact; for, as Mr. Howorth says in another passage, speaking of the dominion of the Golden Horde (and the words might be extended more widely still),

"with the exception of three or four comparatively unimportant links, we are able to trace out the genealogies of the many princes who have ruled over this area and its sections back to their great progenitor Jingsis Khan, and thus to give unity and completeness to a vast mass of details which almost evade logical treatment from their sporadic and dislocated nature."

We hardly succeed in following the author in the passage which ensues:—

"We by this means, as it were, thrust our hand into a vast complicated and knotted skein of cords, and by seizing one knot, the key of the whole, drag out a portion and arrange its threads in symmetrical order."

We should prefer to compare the lines of dynastic history radiating from Jingsis (or Chinghis) to the threads used in the old Indian process of making sugar-candy, which are hung in the cooling sirup, and gather round them the crystals as they form.

The rise of the Mongol power was treated by Mr. Howorth in the first part of his work, published four years ago, which extended to nearly 800 unusually large and close octavo pages. He now gives us another instalment in two divisions, extending together to 1,100 pages more. The work, in fact, so far (and the author's project is by no means complete) consists of three massive volumes, though Mr. Howorth from some idiosyncrasy eschews the latter word.

In reviewing the first part of this great undertaking (Athen. No. 2560) we spoke freely of its defects, as they appeared to us, urging that "if on some accounts we need language not laudatory, it was because we expected the author yet to do much good work, and he had need to take to heart such animadversions as ours." We cannot, however, flatter ourselves that he has taken them greatly to heart. He still declines to bestow on us indexes or tables of contents, or running dates, or other helps to guide and break the journeys of feeble mortals across the vast steppes of nomad history. We have still occasionally those wilful indulgences in what he calls "graphic colloquial phrases," but which to us are irritating bathos, exemplified by his speaking of the Russians as "stewing in their own gravy" (p. xviii), or by his describing the princes of Eastern Europe at the time of the Mongol invasion as engaged too often "in paddling their own canoes." We have still strange misspellings, like "Kaizar" (p. 53), and occasionally strange English, like that which (p. 150) speaks of "Mongol skill in monetary matters," meaning apparently sharpness in cash transactions.

Mr. Howorth might not unfairly urge that one who has felt himself called on to take up so vast a burden, as he labours on towards the end which he alone sees definitely, is in no condition or mood to shift his load at the bidding of critics. But there are two directions in which one respectively hopes and deprecates the result of critical animadversion. That for which one hopes is, of course, amendment; that which one deprecates is resentment. But in Mr. Howorth's case there is less indication of the last than even of the first. Who could deal uncandidly or harshly with a writer who himself is so candid?—

"It has been as much as patience and vigilance could secure that the narrative should be intelligible, and in many places where the pen would willingly have run riot, where a little poetry might have been scattered among the phrases, the temptation has had to be sternly resisted, for fear the facts should be distorted. The facts I have tried to make clear and accurate. In many places I know I have failed, sometimes through the frailty which all suffer from occasionally, sometimes when ill health has made the task of revision irksome and difficult, sometimes when new material has reached me after the story was irrevocably printed. I am conscious, therefore, that the following pages are full of faults; but I would ask the more caustic of my critics, before they tie my scalp to their girdle, to at least look at my too ample table of errata and additions. The book has had to be both written and printed under considerable difficulties, while the resources of the author, upon whom the burden and cost of such a work naturally fall, have been too small to allow him to have an unlimited number of proofs for correction. If some blunder, therefore, seems more than usually stupid, do me the favour, most benevolent critic, who would be nothing if not frank, to turn to the calendar of sins at the end, where I have committed 'the happy despatch,' and saved you the trouble of running your steel into me."—Pp. vi-vii.

Mr. Howorth thinks it possible that fault may be found with the number and iteration of his references. But no reasonable person will find such fault. There is one kind of reference, indeed, that we would beg him to abjure, but that is in the direction of more, and not less, explicit citation. It is to get rid of the tantalizing and time-wasting "Op. cit." and "Id.," which send one hunting back, perhaps through a score of pages, and after all often in vain.

He declines, as we have already said, to give us a table of contents. We feel sure that it must be on principle. "Read, and you will know," he would say. "I am not going to help you to pick and choose, nay, mayhap to skip." He does, indeed, in his preface, "condense briefly a syllabus of the contents of the following pages." But a syllabus, we must still allege, is not a synopsis; it is much as if we wanted a street directory and were offered a copy of Peter Cunningham's 'London.' It is hard on these terms to review a book of some 2,000 pages actual, and 3,000 potential; so we have been fain to make a table of contents for ourselves now, as we did with his first volume. We can hardly do better than exhibit this table, with such few extracts as our space allows by the way.

The eldest son of Chinghis was Juchi, to whom were assigned the tribes occupying the great steppes north of the Jaxartes and the Caspian, which the Mongols called Toghmak, and Western Asiatics the Desht, or Steppe, of Kipchak. Some twelve years after the death of Chinghis, Batu, a younger son of Juchi, undertook that expedition to the West of which the culmination was the battle of Liegnitz in Silesia (1241). The eventual limit of the empire which Batu founded lay far within this, but it spread its dark shadow over the Russian principalities, and reached to the Lithuanian border, to the Carpathian hills, and to the Lower Danube, whilst his standing camp upon the Volga gradually became a great city, not far above Astrakhan, under the name of Serai, or "The Palace," a name retained when it was transferred under his successors some 130 miles further up the great river. The dominion of the Mongol chiefs was originally over tribes rather than territories, and though this underwent modification as they became lords of cities and agricultural races, it always remained true in a measure. To a brother of Batu's, Shaibân, had been assigned the tribes occupying the plains to the north and north-east of the Caspian, more recently known as the Steppe of the Kirghiz Kazaks. Another descendant of Juchi, Nogai by name, had received those tribes of Turks whose pastures lay between the Sea of Azov and the Caspian, once known as Pechenegs (Παγί-ναξίται of the Byzantines), and in later days, after the fashion of eponymy so prevalent among Asiatic nomads, as Nogais or Nogai Tartars. With later accessions from the East,

"these various tribes and peoples were subjected to a hierarchy of chiefs, all owing more or less supreme allegiance to the ruler whose metropolis was Serai, and the whole are comprised in the phrase 'The Golden Horde.'"

The origin of this term seems to have been the designation of the Khan's royal encampment, Sir orde, the Golden Orde or Camp, a word whence we borrow horde, which we apply to any (literal or metaphorical) host of barbarians, and from which also the Urdu language of Hindustan (Zabân-i-urdu, the language of the camp) got its name:—

"The name is applied by Carpini and Benedict of Poland to the great tent tenanted by Kuyuk Khan. "Tentorium præparatum quod apud ipsoe Orda Aurea appellatur.....," says the former. "Invenerunt imperatorem apud tentorium magnum quod vocatur Syra Orda," says the latter. The name was apparently similarly applied to Batu's chief tent, whence it came about that eventually the whole nation [say rather the dynasty ruling it] was known as the Golden Horde."

We now proceed to our table of contents:—

Chap. I. The Ethnography of the Kipchak Steppes.—The Nogais. Identity with the Pechenegs. Karakalpaks or Blackcaps. Kazaks. This term not ethnic. The Little, Middle, and Great Hordes. The Uzbeks. The name probably that of a confederacy taken from Uzbek Khan. Details of Uzbek branches and tribes. After giving comparative lists of Uzbek and Kazak tribal names the writer says, with much judgment:—

"These lists will show that the confederacies were composed largely of common elements, but we must not exaggerate this fact too much, and mistake a result due to the disintegrating and rewedding process which went on during the Mongol dominion for an initial identity. When we examine the tribal names of the two confederacies closely, we shall find not only that they consist of very heterogeneous elements, but that these elements are separable into two main branches; those which inhabited the Kipchak plain before the Mongol invasion, and those who migrated thither in consequence of it."—P. 13.

Notices of the Kipchaks; the Kankalis. Present condition of Tartar hordes.

Chap. II. History of Juchi, Eldest Son of Chinghis, and his Son Batu.—Recapitulation of Chinghis's invasion of Western Asia. Juchi despatched against the cities on the Jaxartes; against Khwarizm; his death (1224). His appanage. Batu Khan's advance towards Europe. Composition of his host. Previous invasions. The great invasion (1238) already described. Sundry traditions in Moravia, &c. Details of invasion of Hungary, and additional reasons for Tartar successes in Europe. Some results of the Tartar sway in Eastern Europe. Tartar war principles:—

"During the war the very spirit of destruction seems to have accompanied him [Batu]; after it was over this policy ceased. Tribute and homage were exacted, and also obedience, but otherwise the victims were treated with comparative leniency, and seldom disturbed at home. This was quite in character with the precepts of Jingis, 'In war tigers, in peace doves.' War with the tigers was no play time. It meant, as it logically means, the destruction of the enemy and all that belongs to him. Rather than leave a population behind which might grow into an army, everybody who could embarrass the communications or the retreat of the army was destroyed. Rather than keep a mass of prisoners, who must be fed and clothed, and who would hamper the movements as well as the commissariat of the army, their throats were cut. With your enemy at your throat, every treacherous method was deemed honest, every cruel expedient justifiable. The issue is no doubt awful, but is at least logical, and is certainly contrasted with that decrepit philanthropy which, when two combatants are determined to fight it out, supplies plaster and medicine to enable them to continue the struggle longer. When the war was over, then the necessity for such measures ceased also. So long as the victors had plenty of broad lands for pasture, and an occasional opportunity of replenishing their harems and houses with wives and trinkets by a plundering raid, they left their neighbours alone, and eventually became demoralized by contact with them and by the enervating effects of luxury and ease, while their former victims were knitting their strength together until they overwhelmed them—a process which we shall follow in the succeeding pages."—Pp. 63-64.

Loyal observance by the Tartars of their own constitutional rules. Batu's selection of a settlement. Christian intercourse with the Tartars. Journeys of John of Plano Carpini; William of Rubrouck; Haithon, K. of Little Armenia. Death of Batu (1255-56). Sertak, son of Batu, his speedy death.

Notes.—1. Journey of the Dominican friar Julian. 2. The Moxel or Mokahas. 3. Passages regarding the Tartars from a contemporary poem. 4. Residences of Batu; the two Serais.

Chap. III. Bereke (Berke) Khan and the Descendants of Batu.—Bereke, brother of Batu, succeeds; the first great Mongol prince to adopt Islam. Renewed invasions of Central Europe (1258, 1264). Wars with Khulagu (Hulaku), Khan of Persia. Friendly intercourse with Sultan of Egypt. The elder Polos visit the Court of Bereke. His death (1265). Effects of the introduction of Islam. Mangu-Timur Khan. Relations with the Russians. Genoese trade and factories in the Crimea. Tuda-Mangu Khan and Tula-bugha. Invasion of Hungary (1285) and of Poland (1286-7). War with Khan of Persia; Tula-bugha put to death. Toktagu or Toktu Khan. Symbolical presents. Intermarriage of khans with illegitimate daughters of Byzantine emperors. Toktu reverts to old faith. Accession of Uzbek (1313). Intercourse with Egypt. The Grand Prince Michael summoned and put to death (1319). Uzbek's mildness to the Christian churches. The traveller Ibn Batuta. Ivan Grand Prince of Russia; extension of his power. Death of Uzbek (1340). His intercourse with the Pope and with the Great Khan in China. Tanibeg and Janibeg, sons of Uzbek. Black Death. Treaty with Venetians. Coinage of Janibeg, with whom ends the flourishing period of the Golden Horde. Minor reigns; and end of Batu's dynasty.

Notes.—1. Catholic missions to the territory of the Golden Horde. 2. Further particulars of the two Serais; city of Majar, and other mint cities of the dynasty.

We have no space, however, to complete our table on this scale, and we must give the rest in mere abstract:—

Chap. IV. Royal Families in Kipchak.—This chapter embraces the two great expeditions of Timur against Kipchak and its lord, Toktamish, the last figure of any importance in the Golden Horde. The first expedition (1391) was made from the side of (the modern) Orenburg; the second (1395) by Derbend and the Terek river.

Notes.—1. The country of the White Horde and its geography. 2. Genealogy of the descendants of Kubinji, founder of the White Horde (the Conchi of Marco Polo).

Chap. V. The later Khans of the Golden Horde and the Khans of Astrakhan.—The later khans are mere ghosts. The essential part of this chapter is the awaking of the Muscovite giant; the breaking of the Tartar yoke and the absorption of Russian states by Ivan III. Shaikh Ahmed, representing the last shadow of the Golden Horde, becomes a captive of the Polos (1502-3). The author takes occasion to glance briefly at "some of the effects which the long servitude of Russia to the Tartars had produced, and at the influence which the Tartars had on Russian institutions" (pp. 347-8). There follows the history of the khans of Astrakhan, the residuary heirs of the Golden Horde, terminating with the Russian capture of the city (1554).

Notes.—1. On the cities of Astrakhan. 2. On the Lithuanian King Vitut. 3. List of Russian families of Tartar descent (after Hammar).

Chap. VI. On the Khans of Kazan and Kozimoff.—Kazan took the place of the older Bolghari on the Volga, the Bolgar of Marco Polo—the province which gave a name (bulgar) to Russian leather, which it still retains over Asia. The Russians often directed their arms against Kazan. The final siege and capture by Ivan IV. (1552) form one of the most interesting pieces of narrative in the book:—

"The old town was rebuilt by order of Ivan. Its commerce soon began to flourish anew, the traces of desolation and ravage gradually disappeared, and in a few years Kazan, so late the scene of war and bloodshed, presented the appearance of a rich and flourishing city. In this state it remained, gradually increasing in size and importance, till a fresh enemy—fire—in a series of most terrible conflagrations, reduced it on several occasions to ruins. Kazan each time seems to have risen from its ashes more beautiful and imposing than before; on each occasion it was quickly rebuilt on a new and improved plan, so that at the present moment Kazan is certainly one of the finest towns in the empire. As regards the number of its inhabitants, its riches and splendour, it only yields the palm to the two Russian capitals, St. Petersburg and Moscow."—P. 423.

Kazimoff was a Tartar principality under Russian protection, which was founded about 1460, and endured for nearly two centuries.

Notes.—1. On the cities of Bolghari, Kazan, and Bulmer. 2. The crowns of Kazan and Astrakhan. 3. Absence of Kazan coinage.

Chap. VII. The Khans of Krim.—With the ceasing of the Crimea and the Kuban (1783) "passed away the last fragment of the empire which had been founded by Jingis Khan, and which had existed so long" (p. 603). Among all the details given as to the khans of the Ghirai family, Mr. Howorth might have felt interested in knowing and telling his readers that one of their descendants, a titular Sultan, Krim Ghirai Katti Ghirai, some fifty or sixty years ago, married a Scotch lady in Edinburgh, Miss Neilson by name (if we remember rightly), whereby the blood of Chinghis Khan mingled with a decent Presbyterian stock.

Chap. VIII. The White Horde and the Kirghiz Kazaks.—Notes: 1. On the (old Russian) "Great Map." 2. Old notices of the Kazaks. 3. White Horde genealogies.

Chap. IX. The Uzbeks.—This is a vast chapter of 190 pages, embracing the story of Shaihani Khan, and the whole chronicle of Bokhara, Khokand, and the minor Uzbek states. Perhaps the most interesting pages are those relating to the captivity of Stoddart and Conolly. But Stoddart is represented, with implicit reliance on Ferrier's authority, as behaving like a madman. Far other was the man who wrote, with a spirit no Roman ever surpassed, in the middle of his loathsome imprisonment:—

"I beg sincerely that no one will regret any sacrifice of me, for it is nothing at all. It may not yet be requisite; but if it be, I regard the probable result, from the action of Government in doing justice to others, and bringing all these countries to reasonable conduct, as fully compensating a much greater sacrifice than that of such an humble individual as I am."

Mr. Howorth seems to have overlooked Kaye's well-known book, from which we extract this, and the deeply interesting letters and fragments of prison diary, so marvellously preserved, of Arthur Conolly, given by that writer.

Chaps. X., XI., and XII. deal respectively with Khiva, with the Siberian khans, and with the Nogais. These end the present volumes. When we say that the author has yet to treat of the khanate of Chaghatai in both of its divisions (Samarkand and Kashgar), of the empire founded by Hulaku in Persia, of the great Timur and his immediate successors, as well as of Baber and the "Moghul" house of Delhi, and to add (as he promises) an index to the whole, it is obvious that the thousand additional pages which we have anticipated may easily be exceeded. May the kindly and indefatigable author live to crown his work!

We have room for but few words more. The longer chapters are enlivened by liberal extracts from such writers as Barbaro, Contarini, and Herberstein, and in later days from that most amusing traveller Baron de Tott. We miss among the author's quotations, however, the once famous work of Ed. Daniel Clark. An author Mr. Howorth frequently quotes is "Tracy Tornipelli," but we do not know why he should write thus a name with which we were all very familiar two years ago in another orthography.

Ricordi della Vita Intima di Enrico Heine.
Per sua Nipote, Maria Embden Heine, Principessa Della Rocca. (Florence, Barbèra.)

THE Principessa Della Rocca is the daughter of Moritz Embden and of Heine's well-beloved sister Lotchen—the sister who inspired more than one of his most charming verses, the sister to whom he addressed, "artig und liebevoll," his 'Neuer Frühling,' with the famous "Fichtenbaum" prefixed to it by way of dedicatory epistle. In the little volume of 'Ricordi' at present under notice she has collected a good deal of family gossip and a good deal that will be, in one way or another, of interest to admirers of her uncle. Apart, however, from its subject and the nature of a portion of its contents, the book is one of no particular merit. It is flowingly and somewhat gushingly written; it contains some fine examples of the art of making mountains out of molehills; it is correct, polite, conventional, and a little feeble; it is, in fact, the kind of work which the admiring relatives of great men feel it incumbent on them to produce, and do produce accordingly in large quantities. What the subject of it would have said about the book had it come in his way is a question that had better not be asked.

The Principessa is most useful when she sets herself to the work of contradiction. It is interesting to note that she does not believe in the famous 'Memoirs,' of which, as purchased and suppressed by Gustav Heine, the poet's brother, we have heard of late, and which are said to be lying under lock and key in the custody of the Austrian Government. They are not, she affirms, nor have they ever been. She admits it as possible, and even probable, that her uncle may have talked of 'Memoirs' to his friends. And she goes on to acknowledge that Heine—at the moment when he was in debate with his cousin Charles over the annuity which he had had from his uncle Solomon, and which, as Solomon had forgotten to mention it in his will, and had contented himself with a bequest to his nephew of a lump sum of 8,000 marks, Charles refused to continue—did actually produce some pages of manuscript which he called his 'Memoirs,' and which he gave to his wife, bidding her keep them safely, and threaten their publication if ever her own annuity was endangered. But the author insists that these were only 'Memoirs' pour rire; she quotes the declaration of her brother, Charles Embden, the poet's literary executor, to prove that the papers bequeathed to him were absolutely uninteresting; and putting the case that the Vienna MS. should ever be published, she warns her readers that she condemns it in advance as spurious, even though it be issued from the Austrian Record Office. Whether the notorious 'Memoirs' are altogether disposed of by this statement from the Principessa remains to be seen. If they really exist, in Vienna or elsewhere, it is a pity that they are kept back from the world. If they were really forged—and it would not be difficult to decide that question, for Heine's is a hand not easily counterfeited—they would sink into oblivion forthwith, and none would be hurt or helped by them. If, on the other hand, they are genuine, they could, however cynical their tone and however anarchistic their tendencies, prove fatal neither to their author's reputation nor to the existing order, both of which are largely and solidly established, and may very safely be left to time. It may be noted that the rumour of their existence en secret is, on the face of it, uncommonly credible. Heine, a rare artist in speech, had in him even more of the professional swordsman than of the professional sentimentalist. He was the boldest and keenest of political and social critics; he was a rebel by nature and habit, and a rebel on the side of right and in the cause of the future; he was extraordinarily far-sighted, and he sat in judgment upon what he saw with rare wisdom and liberality; and the tone of his writings—true "Ritter von dem heiligen Geist" that he was—was as obnoxious and startling to certain of the chiefs of his house, whose bent and ideal were decently and quietly conservative, as to the representatives of authority all the world over. The Heines were Hebrew-minded as well as Hebrew-born; the family name and tradition were too dear to them to be imperilled by such wild and desperate words as Heinrich's; it was their duty and their pride to save the house from itself. We have it on record that Charles Heine began the debate already referred to by refusing to pay the rebel poet's annuity unless he undertook to submit his unpublished work to the censure of a family council. The story of the 'Memoirs,' therefore, has every appearance of verisimilitude. This was the spirit in which the Heines regarded the author of the family glory while he was yet alive. It is easy to believe of Gustav Heine, the founder of the Fremdenblatt and a resolute reactionary, that he would have no scruples when Heinrich was in his grave and incapable of further resistance, and that he would no more shrink from suppressing the 'Memoirs' than he had shrunk from assisting the dying Max to get rid of Heinrich's letters.

Another of the legends contradicted by the Principessa is that one which tells, after Gerard de Nerval, of Heine as miserably and perdurably enamoured of his cousin, and thus accounts at once for his quality of Weltschmerz and one of the most charming and pathetic of his songs, the "Ein Jungling liebt ein Mädchen." True it is, she says, that Heine had a kindness for his cousin, and that he would willingly have mated with her "if his uncertain position and the far from prosperous state of his fortunes had permitted." But that is all. Heine's list of fancies was as long and as fully crowded as Leporello's, and the cousin was only one of many. If Heine had not been a poet, and withal a gosseur and a sentimentalist, the affair would have been no more suspicious or notable than Don Juan's "mille et ré." It is pleasant to pass from the consideration of Heine's hypocrisies to that of Heine's verities, and to turn from the cousin whom he only liked a little to the sister whom he loved much. It was through her brother that Charlotte Heine knew Moritz Embden. He was a trader, but he loved the arts. As he was a poet in a small way, Heine advised his sister always to make much of her husband's verses, in the interest of their common felicity, a counsel whose wisdom he justifies in one of his songs:—

Und lobst du meine Verse nicht,
Lass ich mich von dir scheiden.

Charlotte Embden is still alive, and at seventy-seven does not look any more than fifty. She resides at Hamburg, and is the object of a great deal of attention on the part of her brother's worshippers. His letters have been imparted to so many admiring visitors that they have fallen all to tatters, and have to be accompanied by a signed and sealed certificate of authenticity. The Principessa affords us, too, a pleasant glimpse of her grandmother, née Elizabeth von Geldern, the wife of Sampson Heine, with her fair white hands, her dark-chestnut hair, her bright keen eyes, sitting on the sofa by the window, in front of a table loaded with literature—books, pamphlets, journals—having reference to her famous and beloved son.

Of that son's wife the Principessa appears to have a very poor opinion. The tone she adopts in speaking of Mathilde Heine is, to say the least of it, disparaging. Madame Heine, as represented in her pages, is a person with a parrot; and she is no more. Of course the Principessa (a Heine though she be) is far too well bred to descend to the use of personalities. But it is evident that Madame Heine finds no favour in her eyes, and did nothing that is not questionable. She was wrong in everything: even in forbidding Gustav Heine to erect over the poet's ashes in Montmartre cemetery that sumptuous monument for the construction of which, directly after the poet's death, he hastened to commission an eminent architect. Poor Mathilde's plain marble, inscribed "Heinrich Heine," is surely monument enough, and in its splendid severity a thousand times more to the purpose than the most sumptuous edifice that Gustav's eminent architect could have devised.

A History of the Huguenots of the Dispersion at the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes. By Reginald Lane Poole. (Macmillan & Co.)

THE records of persecution are occasionally a necessary, but not often a pleasant or wholesome, kind of reading. Hostile sects have a natural partiality for them for purposes of mutual aggression. A graphic story of cruelty, though it happened centuries ago, is well fitted to rouse the passions for polemical objects of the present day, and the device is rarely neglected in the coarser style of controversy. But to the plain student of history and culture periods of persecution are distasteful. Violence and injustice practised in the name of religion are not more profitable than other crimes to brood over. No guiding thread for our course in the present or the future is seized by dwelling on the iniquities of the past.

The Revocation of the Edict of Nantes and the dispersion of the Huguenots which it occasioned have always been, for obvious reasons, favourite themes in Protestant countries. The story is, moreover, touching in itself in an exceptional degree. It has all the elements of pathos, innocence on the part of the victims, unprovoked cruelty on the part of the oppressor, and, we may add, the prompt and gratifying visitation of retributive justice on the wrongdoer. Every generous mind must sympathize with unmerited persecution, even when the sufferers are not blameless of misdeeds of their own. Most of the religious sects which passed through the ordeal of persecution in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries failed to show hands pure from the stain of blood contracted in the evil days of a too confident prosperity. But the inferior position and numbers of the Huguenots preserved them as a body nearly spotless from the opportunity of evil. The ferocities of the civil wars cannot in equity be laid at their door; and after the promulgation of the Edict of Nantes the worst charge made against them is that they were somewhat turbulent subjects in an absolute monarchy. After the reduction of La Rochelle and the defection of their least worthy members, the self-seeking Huguenot nobles, their conduct was, by the admission of the Government, not only innocent, but loyal and praiseworthy. "I have no complaint to make of the little flock," said Cardinal Mazarin; "if it chooses evil pastures, at least it does not go astray"; and Louis XIV. himself admitted as much or more. But irrespective of this consideration, their position in the social scale, their intellectual culture, their industrial pre-eminence, their value as working bees in the French hive, constitute their persecution one of the most singular instances of self-mutilation which a government ever perpetrated. The early Christians, the Moriscos, the Dutch martyrs of Alva, the Irish Papists, were all, in different degrees, costly sacrifices of valuable elements of the respective populations. But none could be compared to the Huguenots. Wherever they went in their dispersion they were a wave bearing knowledge, refinement, sobriety, and industry. It is usual to dwell on the pecuniary and commercial loss to France by their exodus. The moral and intellectual loss was far greater, and has never been repaired.

Mr. Reginald Lane Poole has given us a short treatise on this interesting subject, which is distinguished by a fulness of knowledge and individuality of style not customary in a prize essay, and which might lead one to suppose that he had read and meditated on the topic before it came before him as an academical exercise. To extensive acquaintance with English, French, and German authorities Mr. Poole adds the not common accomplishment of a knowledge of Dutch. His tone, on the whole, is very judicious and calm; gravely sympathetic with the victims of royal oppression, but pleasantly free from heat and excitement and that particular bane to historical writing, eloquence. He is evidently aware that the impressiveness of a narrative should result from its orderly presentation of facts, which, when properly selected and co-ordinated, are more moving than all the rhetoric in the world. His style, though not free from either obscurities or inaccuracies, has the merit of being un-borrowed. It is not very easy or graceful, but neither is it commonplace nor marked with that special seal of mediocrity, a limp and feeble fluency.

Considering the extremely fragmentary nature of his subject, Mr. Poole has succeeded in a commendable degree in giving it order and lucidity. England, Holland, Brandenburg, Switzerland, America, and even Russia, received in various degrees of number and rapidity successive flights of exiles, without connexion or order, dribbles of fugitives who had squeezed through the meshes of the net cast around them, as time and opportunity served them to find their way. Each batch, nearly each individual, had his story of anguish and hairbreadth escape, of suffering and betrayal; and it is not difficult to conceive how, when the burning recital was poured into the ears of co-religionists by the careworn victims, a spasm of sympathy shot through Protestant Europe the memory of which thrills to this day. But the subject, taken as a whole, does not admit of regular historical treatment. Individual narratives, such as the pathetic Mémoires d'un Protestant which Michelet rescued from oblivion, are the best means of bringing the terrible reality home to the minds of modern readers; but estimates of the probable numbers of Huguenots who succeeded in finding safe asylums in England, Holland, Switzerland, or Germany are neither interesting nor instructive. Our attention becomes even more languid when they settle down in their new homes, and become prosperous citizens, driving a brisk trade in silks, hats, and other commodities. Their wealth and industry were well deserved, were very honourable to them, and very beneficial to the countries which sheltered them; but statistics of money-making are not particularly attractive reading.

Mr. Poole has pretty closely followed in his treatment of his subject the same plan as M. Weiss in his well-known Histoire des Réfugiés de France, and he could not have chosen a better model. There is, indeed, not much freedom of choice in the matter. Some account of the condition of the Huguenots in France before the Revocation must be given as a matter of course, and then the fortunes of their scattered flight to the Protestant lands likely to give them welcome. The order in which these narratives, if they can be called such, are arranged is not of much importance. They were practically contemporaneous. Perhaps the best method to impart some slight measure of coherence to the disconnected subject would be to deal with the industrial emigration by itself; and there is no reason why a few graphic narratives of individual suffering and trial (such as Michelet has given in his fifteenth volume) should not be interspersed. After this would follow a general review of the moral and intellectual side of the movement, the contributions of the Huguenots to the thought and literature of Europe; not given in lists of names of distinguished men who "flourished" at such and such a date, and were eminent in this or that department, but in vivid criticism of individual works united with a comprehensive survey of the whole field. Both M. Weiss and Mr. Poole have preferred treating the literature of the Huguenots in connexion with each country successively, thus relinquishing the small degree of unity which the subject affords.

Mr. Poole's work in collecting materials is highly creditable to his industry. His fulness of reference is almost excessive. He can hardly make a remark in his text without supporting it by a foot-note. He says in his preface that it was left to him "to assume the systematic habit of the bibliographer." If this is so, he has neglected his opportunity, for nothing less systematic than his notes, or apparently than his reading, can well be conceived. He seems to estimate the value of authorities more by their quantity than their quality, and if he can base a statement, however unimportant, by reference to a French or German writer, he rarely fails to do so. He also seems to be insufficiently aware of the difference between first-hand authorities and second or third rate writers or even compilers. Was it necessary, for instance, to corroborate so obvious a remark as that Voltaire derived much of his knowledge and doctrine from Bayle by a solid quotation from M. Capefigue?

A monograph of this kind, which by its scope and limits cannot be a repertory of facts or a storehouse of knowledge, can only claim serious attention by suggestiveness of thought, by œuvres d'ensemble, placing the subject in its relative position to the general politics and thought of the age. These qualities are hardly to be expected in a prize essay. But Mr. Poole is not a commonplace essayist, and must know that the mere laborious "getting up" of a subject is a very insufficient preparation for writing worthily upon it. Viewiness is bad, no doubt, but it is still worse to be without views. It is the historian's business to master his subject with the utmost thoroughness, to read and digest all pertinent authorities and literature about it. But having done this, it is his further, and much harder, task to give a lucid presentation of the results. Out of a multitude of scattered facts he must by imaginative brooding form a conception, a picture of the period, of the social phase, and paint it in the most luminous and flowing outline he can command. A sentence, even an epithet, may represent a month's reading; a few words convey the conclusion of a protracted investigation. This is to write history, not merely to accumulate the materials of history. Of course the picture may be wrong, the conclusion may be false. It is human to err. But it is a mistake to suppose that only those historians who use their minds and reflective faculties go astray, and that those who content themselves with the use of their eyes and their note-book enjoy a privilege of serene infallibility. Mr. Poole, for instance, with all his punctiliousness in citing chapter and verse in and out of season, has many misstatements, both as to special and general matters of fact. How can he support the assertion that "history has placed Jurieu in the front rank of the French apologists in Holland because the voice of the hour so pronounced him"? The voice of the hour did nothing of the kind, and it was because Jurieu's defence of Calvinism (in answer to Mainbourg) was so inferior to Bayle's, and public opinion so strongly pronounced in favour of the latter, that Jurieu quarrelled out of jealousy with Bayle, and excited the unworthy persecution of the latter in Rotterdam. Again, this in reference to Louis XIV.: "All that can be of interest in our view is to notice that a revolution came over the life of the court on the death of the queen-mother in 1666. Every gaiety was suppressed by a missionary enthusiasm." One hardly knows what to say about such a statement. It was precisely at the date given that Louis XIV. was commencing his career of financial extravagance and defiance of public decency, when Versailles, Marly, and the Montespan were between them about to devour millions, when the reckless expenditure of the king was going to frustrate Colbert's reforms and bring the great minister in sorrow to the grave. Again, Mr. Poole says that "the sombre mind of Madame de Maintenon postulated the Recall as a preliminary to that marriage which the king had already conceded," in ignorance that this accusation against her has been amply refuted. He seeks to imply that the Huguenots were chiefly nobles, forgetting that the whole history of French Protestantism from the Revocation up to the edict of toleration (1787) shows that they were confined almost exclusively to the ranks of the poorest and most humble of the nation. But where Mr. Poole goes furthest astray is in the attempt to suggest that Louis XIV. was in some measure moved by fears of revolt on the part of the Huguenots to take the course he did. And in a surprising passage he quotes "the irony of Defoe" as truly and skilfully putting the case for the policy of "recall." This is not worthy of Mr. Poole or his bibliographic ambition.

The printing of the book is disfigured by a prodigality of italic type, nearly all the quotations, and they abound, being printed in that character. This, however, is a matter of taste, and may not be the fault of the author. We suppose, however, that for the affected spelling of certain foreign names of places he is responsible—Nijmegen and Rijswijk instead of the familiar Nimeguen and Ryswick. If Mr. Poole prefers the Dutch orthography, why does he not consistently write 'sGravenhage instead of the Hague?

New and Old: a Volume of Verses. By John Addington Symonds. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

THE fate of poetic aspirants in our day must often appear hard when contrasted with that of their not even distant predecessors. A brief retrospect will bring before us the figures of Hannah More and Langhorne at the seaside, scratching compliments to each other on the sand with cane or riding-whip; of Darwin, whose rhetorical glitter in his botanical allegory made him for a time the rage; of Hayley, who had a public before Byron sneered at him; and of Gifford, who attained reputation not only as a satirist, but actually as a serious poet. Nowadays work is constantly produced by men who are by no means sure of gaining even a hurried recognition, though they are immeasurably superior to some recognized singers of a still recent time. For this change "the pace at which we live"—the difficulty amidst thronging occupations to spare a glance to merit that cannot imperiously claim it—has partly to answer. Moreover, the public has now been educated in taste as in other things. It has grown more discerning, and consequently more exacting, than in the days when the power to gild mediocre sentiment with a touch of fancy and to set it in correct verse was mistaken for genius. Thus it is not only the scant leisure of our time, but a more instructed judgment, that now demands more than ever individuality in art. Whatever its subordinate merits of grace, culture, and even well-planned effect, the work which wants those happy darings that reveal truths and emotions to us under fresh aspects—darings which mere taste is always too timid to gamble in—has but scant chance of attention. To some extent the poetry of Mr. Symonds evinces the self-reliant boldness which is one element of originality, yet his best efforts are so far less numerous than those which belong to verse of mere taste and sentiment that it may be doubted whether the former will make their due impression. It is right, however, to say that even in those poems which betray no special individuality Mr. Symonds shows a decided advance since he gave us 'Many Moods.' His style is less diffuse and involved; his descriptions are sharper and of more vivid colour. Here is a passage from 'The Dream of Odatis,' which in the latter respect and in variety and appropriateness of detail leaves nothing to desire:—

She stood
In purple primly splendour throned on high
To watch the pomp of armies marching by;

And in her breast her heart leaped, for the show
Filled her with trembling such as lovers know.
And first came youths upon the flowery way
Thick strewn with silk and boughs of conquering bay;

Garlands they wore of violets, and their eyes
Sparkled like stars that stud December skies,
While with puffed cheeks and lips whereon the down
Of boyhood lingered, through the startled town
They blew the silver sound of clarions wreathed
Into strange circles serpentine, or breathed
Through flutes melodious heraldings whereby
Trembling the maiden felt that Love was nigh.
Nor might she pause to think; for now the tread
Of elephants with vine leaves garlanded
Went crushing blossoms with huge feet; their grey Lath trunks were curled to snuff the scents of May,
And on their castled backs and shoulders vast Flamed cressets; on the live coals negroes cast
Spices of myrrh and frankincense, and boys
Like naked Cupids made a merry noise
Swinging from flank and dawl, showering spray
Of cakes and comfits from gilt quivers gay.
Next came the priests, entoning as they went Praises and prayers—their dusky foreheads bent
Beneath the weight of mitres stiff with gems;
And on their breasts and on the brodered hems
Of their loose raiment glittered runes that none
Might read, so far ago in ages gone
By men whose very memories are flown
Were those strange legends wrought in tongues unknown.

Behind them followed oxen white as snow,
Large-limbed, with meek eyes wild and round and slow;

Lowing they went, and girls beside them held
Red rosethearts on their necks and shoulders belled
With golden bubbles. After, in long line,
Passed princely youths on horses; red as wine
Was all their raiment, and the steeds they rode Like thunder-clouds in tawny splendour glowed.

Though this extract will probably recall 'The Earthly Paradise' to many readers, it should be remembered that when Mr. Morris and succeeding poets deal alike with remote legends and write in the same measure a good deal of resemblance may at once be accounted for on grounds that do not affect the independence of the latter. It cannot be fairly said of Mr. Symonds that any previous author has served for his model. Even where the influence of a fore-runner is in some measure discernible, it is often so modified by his own mind that though something of a remembered atmosphere seems to rest upon his landscapes, their remaining features are generally due to himself. In the extract we have given it will be seen that Mr. Symonds had his heart in his task. So much cannot be said of the passage in which Odatis relates the effects of her love-dream. It, however, begins well:—

I slept; I dreamed; and lo! the morrow seems
A mad sweet echo of melodious dreams.

She goes on to say that all things she had loved before fit from her phantom-like, that she is "undone with sweetness," that something new and vague attracts her, to grasp which she would at times venture life, yet that a strange influence still holds her in languid yearning. So far all is in keeping. The dream has left behind it a soft enchantment, in which wonder, longing, and regret tenderly mingle. But this impression—vague, sweet, and mysterious—is at once destroyed when Odatis obtrudes upon it such a harsh and violent contrast as this:—

Dear maidens, say
Why seems it to me that a single day
Hath set between that shore of life and this Waves ruder than the rush of Tantalus!

While we are finding fault, let us say that this collection might well have been weeded of some decided specimens of what has been called "unnecessary poetry," and express surprise that so cultivated a writer should not only employ the abominable rhyme of "whereof" to "love," for which it is true he has the precedent of some recent poets, but that he should rhyme "bliss" to "bles," and, in place of a rhyme to "new," should actually repeat the word.

Though taste and a fair measure of artistic feeling are the most general merits of Mr. Symonds, here, as in his former volume, he at times reveals others of a higher kind. His melodious lyric 'In Dreamland,' in which the past joys of life are transmuted into flowers, has a delicate fancy for its central idea, while throughout we get glimpses of a sweet and shadowed region, where no breeze stirs that does not lull into repose. The allegory entitled 'The Valley of Vain Desires' shows imagination in its design and also force of painting, though both are somewhat marred by superfluity of epithet and constant striving after effect. 'Lebens Philosophie,' with delicate satire and epigrammatic grace, enforces a very wholesome moral—the value of trial and difficulty in giving zest to life.

The fragment from "Greek Themes" entitled 'Sacrifice,' though not without a suggestion of Landor, may claim high praise. In recording the self-immolation of two young patriots, Mr. Symonds seizes so well the spirit and circumstance of the event, so thoroughly brings before us the serene elation of the victims, the mourning gratitude of the crowd, and the familiar sights and sounds of early morning in contrast with death, as to leave a final impression of dignity and sweetness. In a series of sonnets called 'An Old Gordian Knot' the writer once more exhibits that speculative vein which is, perhaps, most characteristic of him. We quote the second sonnet:—

I stood at sunrise on an Alpine height
Whence plains were visible, and the domed sky
Spread vacant in serene immensity;
Westward beneath my feet curled vapours white,
And grew and gathered, while the East was bright.
Then as the silver wreaths clomb silently,
Methought a shadowy giant steeple-high
Towered up above me ringed with radiant light.
Standing he bore the shape of me who stood
Bolt on that summit; yes, he bowed or rose,
Beckoned or threatened, as my varying mood
Constrained his movement; till the light that grew,
Wrought from the strife of clouds supreme repose,
And heaven once more was still and stainless blue.

The poet then proceeds to infer that the various beliefs and worships which man has accepted may henceforth be discarded, being, like the image of the Alpine watcher upon the cloud, merely fantastic reflections of man himself. This conclusion obviously involves one serious difficulty. Since even the highest external objects of man's worship and sympathy must correspond to his own ideal standard (or they could have no charm for him), and since this very standard is a mere projection or reflection of his own nature, if we were to discard all modes of worship and all mental attractions simply because they reflect ourselves, we should inevitably have nothing left to venerate or admire. But however fallible these sonnets may be in point of logic, their suggestiveness, earnestness, and glow of expression are not to be denied. In these respects they are almost worthy to rank with the fine series which we noticed in Mr. Symonds's former volume, his sonnets 'On the Thought of Death.' It is certain that in days scarcely yet remote poets far inferior to himself won their wreaths. Even in our exacting time he may hope for his, if in future, while more severe to himself in what he excludes, he will trust more fully to his own impulses in what he retains.

Records of the English Province of the Society of Jesus. Vol. VI. (Supplemental Volume). By Henry Foley, S.J. (Burns & Oates.)

THOUGH we have been slow in noticing Mr. Foley's last volume, it has been from no want of appreciation of the great value of the book that we have passed it over. The truth is that Mr. Foley's industry keeps him ahead of any but very rapid readers. This supplemental volume is, if possible, a more important contribution to English history and biography than any of its predecessors. It certainly has been more carefully edited; it contains fewer blunders; and for the original documents which are to be found in it, it is sufficient to say of them that they throw more or less light upon the movements and fortunes of every Catholic family in England of any position or means from Queen Elizabeth's days down to the end of the last century.

They who have at all interested themselves with the history of what may be called the Catholic reaction, which irritated Queen Elizabeth so profoundly, scared her ministers, and goaded them on to savage persecution, or who have followed the mazes of treachery and folly which characterized the diplomacy of the Stuarts in their dealings with the Papacy, will discover in this volume a mine of information, to be met with nowhere else, without which the complexity of plots and counterplots that for generations have mystified inquirers must for ever remain unintelligible.

It is nearly fifty years since John Bowyer Nichols drew attention to the great value of the Pilgrim Book of the English Hospital at Rome, and printed a list of the pilgrims whose names had been registered in its pages as far back as 1486. Mr. Foley has now printed in extenso the complete register of the names of every visitor who was entertained at the College between the years 1580 and 1656, and added an index nominum, which occupies twenty-seven closely printed pages. Brief and fragmentary as the entries in the Pilgrim Book are, they are sometimes, as might be expected, curious and suggestive. Thus we find young William Wentworth (figuring then as Earl of Strafford) dining at the English College just five years after his father's execution, and meeting Sir Kenelm Digby, who himself had but recently been let out of prison, and subsequently fraternising with George and Francis Villiers, sons of the great Duke of Buckingham, whose early death by Felton's dagger saved him from the evil to come. A little later Mr. Masson may find a new fact for his next edition—John Milton travelling with a servant, and on the 30th of October, 1638, dining at the same table with "the Hon. Mr. Cary, brother of Earl Falkland, an English gentleman"; and Mr. Mark Pattison may be glad to learn that "James Casaubon

... abjured his heresy and submitted to the Catholic Church" on the 21st of August, 1649, at which time, too, he received "alms, food, and clothes." Was it the great Isaac's son who had sunk so low? Here, too, we come upon poor Richard Crashaw in April, 1649, glad of a dinner perhaps, for his purse was a short one in spite of Cowley's help, and the canonry of Loretto had not yet come to him. It came too late at last. Among the diners at the College, too, in 1636, we find William Harvey, "M.D. to the King of England," as he is described. He was in the suite of Thomas Howard, Earl of Arundel, at the time, or ought to have been, and how he found himself at Rome just then it is difficult to explain. These examples—and they might be multiplied indefinitely—are taken at random in a very superficial scrutiny of the hundred and twenty pages which this document occupies in Mr. Foley's volume; but in that volume there are upwards of eight hundred pages, and our space forbids us from offering such an account of its contents as would at once do justice to the learned compiler and give our readers an adequate notion of the importance of the book.

The Diary of the English College at Rome, now printed for the first time, contains some account of the parentage, education, and even private life of more than 1,300 young men who entered at the College during the two centuries of its existence; and when it is remembered that these young men were, with hardly an exception, the sons of English gentry, it will be understood that such a document must needs be of incalculable service to the student of our family history. The report of Cardinal Sega on the dissensions that broke out in the College about 1580, which is now printed for the first time, is a very masterly and elaborate State paper, and is especially noteworthy for its faithful and minute picture of the way in which the College was carried on, the difficulties, financial and administrative, that it had to contend with, and the remarkable outspokenness of the writer on many matters which hitherto have been regarded as difficult problems in the history of the times. The annual letters, too, which Mr. Foley prints, deserve careful attention, and among the promiscuous papers are some of considerable value. The Jesuits seem determined to have no secrets from English inquirers. They appear only anxious to let us know all they themselves know about their past doings among us. From all that appears in Mr. Foley's six large volumes the English Jesuits have shown themselves a very harmless and inoffensive body of men. Whether they have lacked the power to do harm, or have been cruelly maligned during three centuries, Mr. Foley's revelations will not fail to gain them friends.

The Manchus; or, the Reigning Dynasty of China: their Rise and Progress. By the Rev. John Ross. (Paisley, Parlange.)

THE story of the rise of the Manchu power in China is but a repetition of an oft-told tale. Like the Mongols of the Yuen dynasty, and the Kin and Liaou Tartars, the Manchus found their opportunity in the existence of a degenerate and corrupt government in China, and their instrument in the person of an energetic and able leader. Like the Mongols and Tartars also, they sprang from very small beginnings, and allowed circumstances rather than design to guide their destinies. Of these historical precedents Mr. Ross apparently knows nothing, and he is lost in astonishment at events which to the student of history are but the natural outcome of the political situation.

"As soon," he says, "might we expect the drops of water oozing from a mossy rock to become a mighty river, bearing on its bosom the peaceful fleets of all nations, as the few ignorant descendants of the Tartar Amu-Gioro to become, by their own despicably insignificant resources, the legislators of a fourth of mankind and the rulers of the most populous empire under the sun.....The slim but well-knit Manchu barge was set adrift in shallows, and had to sail along rapids and among narrow gorges where a touch was destruction.....Many a time is the reader of the earlier history of the Manchus tempted to exclaim that there is here another than a visible hand, which, by what seems the slightest accident, now removes the petty tribe out of a snare; and again averts on their own heads the overwhelming destruction with which her foes were prepared to crush her. Her final triumph is as great, and beforehand as improbable, as if a large ship sailed into New York after running down the rapids and plunging into the cataract of Niagara."

From this extract it will be surmised that Mr. Ross is an enthusiast. His admiration for the Chinese is exceeded only by his adoration of the Manchus. He considers the intellectual character of the Chinese to be of a very high order, and the Chinese peasant to be the most industrious and intelligent in the world. As to the form of government, it is as nearly perfect as it is possible to be. It "is, like almost everything Chinese, peculiar to that splendid country and characteristic of that curious people. In the West the principle that 'the ruler exists for the people, not the people for the ruler,' is but the growth of yesterday.But in China that has always been the theory of government from the very dawn of the historical period."

The administration is scarcely less perfect than the form of government, and the people enjoy more personal liberty, more freedom from offensive police supervision, and are less heavily taxed than any people in Europe. It is true that

"a tax collector may occasionally be found bold enough and bad enough to increase the taxation of the people in some district; but the people can have him degraded and punished. A magistrate may be found more than ordinarily covetous, but he can be removed, punished by degradation, or even by banishment.....But these cases are extremely rare."

On reading these and similar passages in one of the introductory chapters we were puzzled to know what excuse Mr. Ross would find for the Manchus for disturbing the peaceful enjoyment of this Utopian state of society. Unconsciously the same difficulty occurred to Mr. Ross, for we find that later on in the book, when it becomes necessary for him to justify the rebellion of the Manchus, he takes quite a different view of the government and administration of China.

"The government of China," we are then told, "is a huge machine for grinding out taxes, and the men in charge become fat and flourishing. There has hitherto been in China no revolution for any other object than that of gaining possession of this taxing machine."

These extracts furnish a specimen of the strange views and inconsistencies which are apparent throughout the work. Of the history of the people the author shows himself strangely ignorant. His remark, for instance, that "the Chinese speak freely of the time when their forefathers went about dressed in a fig-leaf," implies, if it implies anything, that the period referred to is not very remote, whereas certainly for four thousand years—and tradition says for much longer—they have worn civilized clothing. In his chapter on the aborigines of China, which, by-the-by, he begins with references to the Roman Catholic missionaries, he speaks of the people of the Miaou, Man, Li, Yaou, and other tribes as savages, knowing nothing, apparently, of the fact that these people throughout their long history have maintained a considerable amount of civilization, and are now, as ever, very far removed from being savages. Nor is it easy to understand what he means by saying that the "highly ornate and beautiful written language, so philosophical in its character," was "evolved from a few rough signs on slips of bamboo." Certainly no such evolution ever took place, and the only shadow of a foundation for the assertion is the fact that, up to the time of the invention of paper, bamboo tablets were used for writing purposes. The whole idea of evolution from a few rough signs is opposed to the history of the written language.

One other conspicuous fault committed by Mr. Ross is the choice of the orthography he has adopted for the transcription of Chinese names. The question of transcribing correctly Oriental names is a very difficult one, and until some universal system is adopted the wisest course is to employ one of those already in use. The efforts of all authors should be towards unity, instead of which every writer on Chinese matters appears to consider himself bound to adopt an orthography of his own. Unfortunately Mr. Ross can point to so many examples of similar eccentricities on the part of authors that we can hardly be surprised at the strange contortions he has given to both the sounds of English letters and the spelling of Chinese names. What sound Law is intended to represent, or why he should find it necessary to turn initial surd consonants wholesale into vowels, it is impossible to say. Possibly he has as peculiar views with regard to orthography as he has with regard to his own language. When we find it stated that a certain man had "two full brothers," in contradistinction, we suppose, to half brothers, and that the Emperor K'ang-hi, on the occasion of his last illness, "took suddenly and seriously unwell," we need not be surprised to learn that the name of Tai-tung's empress was Jacshungturshowgoongjieung-anyijangchingdwunwhiunwangkanghua.

Mr. Ross's account of the actual facts connected with the Manchu conquest of China is accurate enough, but the numerous faults, such as we have pointed out, which disfigure the work detract materially from its value.

NOVELS OF THE WEEK.

Ellie Quentin. By Julian Hawthorne. 2 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

He that Will Not when He May. By Mrs. Oliphant. 3 vols. (Macmillan & Co.)

The Rebecca Riotor: a Tale of Exile. By E. A. Dillwyn. 2 vols. (Same publishers.)

What will Society Say? By H. C. Coape. 3 vols. (Tinsley Brothers.)

MR. JULIAN HAWTHORNE has republished in two volumes five stories formerly contributed by him to a magazine. Some of these stories, he tells us, were written long ago. In the preface Mr. Hawthorne justifies their reissue by the following pleas:—First, that the imperfections which he now detects in the works of his earlier years might lead him to discard them, but that they are saved because an author may not be the best judge of the comparative merits of his productions. Second, that in the rough sketches drawn by his youthful hand there may be powerful touches not to be found in the more highly finished pictures of his maturer years. Last, that contributions to magazines are liable to pass out of the author's control. Qui s'excuse s'accuse. If in this instance the last plea be valid the other two appear superfluous. It is not necessary to examine too closely the short and often hastily executed stories with which many of the serials teem. But Mr. Hawthorne has established a reputation as a rising author, as one who has the power to interest his readers, and his writing is generally pleasant and refined. His advances, however, has not been so marked or his fame so wide spread as to warrant the republication of every triviality which he may have written. The three tales in the first volume of his new book are rude efforts at story-building. The heroine of the first, Ellie Quentin, is a young lady of strong and variable passions. She has an impecunious and not over-scrupulous father, who brings an action against some one to obtain a fortune to which he has no legal or equitable right. Geoffrey Herve, a barrister consulted by her father, falls in love with, and is loved more and by, Ellie. Her love, conflicting with her ambition, does not reach its goal. We learn that her love produced one good result—her beauty developed with her love. In the description of her features during this period of development we are told that "the curving of her lips was eloquent of refined enticement," whatever that may mean. The cause of the above conflict was that the man with whom her father had the law-suit had died, and left his property to the father and daughter, provided the latter married the nephew. Ambition won the day. Miss Quentin married the nephew, Mr. Amidon. Why this name? There was nothing resembling starch in the character of this insignificant personage. Then comes another alternation of passion. Ellie meets Geoffrey, the old love is warmed up again, but, owing to circumstances which may be left for the reader to peruse, for a second time it is allowed to cool down. Then there is another Amidon interlude. During this time Geoffrey gets engaged to another girl, a discovery which Ellie makes on the third occasion of her love passion being at high pressure. The result of this discovery is a final dramatic scene, in which a drinking trio is introduced, leading up to a most sensational and tragic climax. Mr. Hawthorne never encumbers his stage with too many characters; consequently the imagination of the reader is not fatigued by having to study the comparative analyses of a great number of minds. In all five stories his heroines are only daughters. In three stories two men fall in love with the one woman. 'The Countess's Ruby' is a variation of this triangular love-making. The second volume is better worth reading. 'Kildrum's Oak' and the 'New Endymion' contain much that will interest those who enjoy the effervescence of sensation, spiritualism, or ghost stories. A protest must be made once more against the affectation of writing French dialogue in French-English. In 'The Countess's Ruby' Mr. Hawthorne indulges freely in this practice. Such sentences as the following jar upon an English reader's ear:—

"Great God! Monsieur is he, then, indeed that sublime, that adored man of genius? What happy chance! What charming rencontre! But in this case Madame hopes that the name of Countess Semaroff will be to Monsieur not altogether unfamiliar!"

"Oh, Heaven! Is it possible that Monsieur is so happy as to kiss the hand of the noble lady who deigned to constitute herself the purchaser of the above-mentioned 'Ruined Rampart'? Monsieur is of a verity transported."

There is no reason for not using good idiomatic English. The Countess and Mr. Campbell are supposed to be talking in French. If the Countess had been speaking English there might have been sense in admitting this jargon, though, being Russian, she probably would have spoken excellent English. The author should avoid this method of composing international conversation. Mr. Hawthorne has inherited the gift of writing. He has given proof of his power. These short stories are not the healthiest way of testing, exercising, or increasing this power. Here and there are to be found artistic touches giving faint glimpses of genius and originality. In future it is to be hoped that he will give his readers more studied work, grander in conception, more intricate in plot, and more elaborately worked out than these five sketches—something worthy of the promise he has given, worthy of the name he bears. 'Ellice Quentin' and the companion stories are superior to many of the numerous tales which find a ready sale at the railway bookstall, but they do not add to Mr. Hawthorne's reputation.

Mrs. Oliphant continues to give proof of her industry and of her powers of invention. In her last book she has introduced the heir to a fine estate taken up with communism at Oxford, and planning to join a party of emigrants to Australia, where they hope to put their ideas into practice. Mrs. Oliphant says somewhere early in the book that it is to deal almost exclusively with county people, but the fact is that although a county family furnishes the chief characters, there are a good many others who are nobodies and even less. The most singular thing about the book is that there is no love story of any importance in it. It is hard to say whether there is a hero, and there is certainly no heroine. And yet the story is interesting; so much so, indeed, that most readers will catch themselves skipping here and there, especially the lectures and dogmatic talk of the communistic demagogue. By far the best bit of work in the book is the picture of Lady Markham. Nothing could be more delicate, graceful, and charming. The title presents a difficulty. One opens the book feeling certain that one has already guessed the main part of the plot. But this is a mistake; at the end one is left in the greatest doubt as to whom the proverb is meant to fit. There are signs both of haste and of hard work in this book. The conclusion is singularly abrupt. The reader feels injured in not being told a number of details of possible marriages and other scraps of family history. Towards the end, too, mention is made of the reports of the debates in the newspapers in the depth of winter, some time before the opening of Parliament. The signs of hard work, which in a perfect novel should, of course, not be noticeable, are the pages of incidental matter, which must have been written to fill out the required space. Although there is a great amount of beautiful work in this book, it is not, on the whole, one of Mrs. Oliphant's best.

Miss Dillwyn has produced, in the shape of an autobiography of a young Welshman implicated in the Rebecca riots, a deeply interesting tale. The art of the story-teller is rather artless. Indeed, so much of plot as there is would have been better away. Still, the work fulfils the first requirement—it is readable. Those who are old enough to recollect the rising of Rebecca and her daughters in 1843 will follow the story with pleasure. In the agricultural counties of Pembroke and Carmarthen the rioters were considered to be quiet and, except in their aversion from the sight of an iniquitous toll-gate, law-abiding people. In Glamorgan they seem to have been of different quality. The Upper Killay folk, among whom the scene is laid, are described as a rough set with a twist towards any wild adventure. There were among them drunkards, burglars, traitors, and murderers. It was with these associates that Evan Williams, the hero, was born and bred, and there is little wonder that when the Rebecca riots began he was prepared to take a part therein. It might be thought that so unromantic an undertaking as a rising of peasantry against turnpike gates admitted of few adventures worthy of record. Miss Dillwyn has shown us that it admitted of many. From the day when young Evan saved the life of the neighbouring squire's daughter, to whom he formed a strange attachment, down to the night when he unintentionally killed her father, the reader cannot fail to be interested in the fortunes of the man. The author seems to speak out of the heart of a Welsh peasant squire as the hero was. The language, too, is in full keeping with the subject. Altogether we must pronounce 'The Rebecca Riots' to be a remarkable book. The moral colouring is excellent, and the material colouring, notably the descriptions of the flight of the hero after the homicide and of his delirium in gaol before his trial and transportation, is exceedingly fine.

'What will Society Say?' is just one of those books which are the despair of the critic. It would be easy, no doubt, to obtain a cheap laugh at the author's expense by pointing out in a facetious manner such little blunders as his odd use in the opening chapter of the term "in tail," which evidently suggests to his mind cauda rather than tailum; or his little inaccuracy in the same chapter, where a certain person's death is dated first "rather more than" eight, then thirteen, years before the time at which the story opens; or, again, the solecism of making a man in the Foreign Office speak of his chief as "the governor," or the confusion of tongues involved in the word "quadralogue." Or one might remark with more severity upon the frequent use of the tiresome artifices which results in such a sentence as the following:—"I will therefore conclude this chapter with a letter which I find to have been addressed," and so on; and the occasional references in footnotes to a former novel of the author's, which has not obtained any very wide reputation. But this is a sport that soon begins to pall, and it is pleasanter to try to discover what merits may distinguish even a fifth-rate novel from its fellows. These, however, are apt to be negative. For instance, in Mr. Coape's work there is little bad grammar, little bad French, and no prurience at all; but this last one hardly expects to find in a novel written by a man. The subject is not very interesting, being chiefly the career of a young man who keeps going "on the stage" and off again, and his "incompatibility" with his mother-in-law. Another young man makes a feeble attempt at an intrigue with the first young man's wife, but he meets with no encouragement. Also a slight misunderstanding between the husband and wife, arising partly from his fancy for acting, is healed almost immediately. Thus it will be seen that this novel, if truer to real life than a good many, lacks any elements of strong emotion. The best chapter is one for which the author is inclined to apologize, describing a day's hunting as enjoyed by an Anglo-maniac French nobleman.

EDUCATIONAL BOOKS.

The Kindergarten Principle. By Mary J. Lynchynska. (Isbister & Co.)—Of the two parts into which this work is divided, the first is devoted to the discussion of the Kindergarten principle and the advantages and difficulties of its application, the second to the explanation and use of a few of the Fröbelian occupations. There are now in England so many institutions offering a caricature of the Kindergarten system, and thereby tending to bring it into contempt, that Miss Lynchynska has done good service to education in giving a concise view of the doctrines of Pestalozzi and Fröbel, and of the scholastic practice founded on them. The account of the every-day working of a German Kindergarten is most interesting and suggestive. The really sympathetic teaching of young scholars under six, of which we here get a glimpse, contrasts somewhat sharply with the "list of object lessons" given in a half year in an English infants' school, "which is a very fair specimen of its kind." The essential difference between infants' instruction based on the principles of Fröbel and Pestalozzi, and that too often based on the payment-by-result system of the Code, is that the former considers the child as a discoverer actively assisting the teacher, the latter considers him a mere recipient, and ignores or, at any rate, makes no use of the mental activity and acquisitiveness which characterize the young. The more readily we admit—under Miss Lyshinaka's able advocacy—the importance of the Kindergarten principle, the more keenly do we feel the difficulty of its practical application. The general introduction of Kindergartens seems almost hopeless, except in favoured districts where money and professional skill are abundant. In country places, where it is already almost impossible to find pupil-teachers or stipendiary monitors to fulfil the bare requirements of the Code, such a school as the author describes, and we should like to see, must remain a dream—"a small school of one hundred children in average attendance worked by the head and four pupil-teachers." If, however, the principle underlying the Kindergarten system were more intelligently grasped by school managers and teachers, the gain to public elementary education would be immense, and the instruction not only of infants but of standard children would be vastly sounder and more serviceable than it is.

We have received a little book on French Pronunciation by M. Louis Dureau (Hachette & Co.), who says in his preface that he has had fifteen years' experience in tuition in England, besides twenty in France. After that it might be expected that he would know how to set about writing a book to teach French pronunciation. Unfortunately his command of the English language does not enable him to express clearly the object of his book. Is it to teach those who know a little or those who know nothing? Suppose an English person who had never heard a French word spoken to open this book. He would find that the French a is to be pronounced like the English a in "fat." His first difficulty surely would be to know how the a in "fat" is pronounced, and then he would mispronounce half the words given as examples, e.g., drap, aumône. When we come to "remarks" on the vowels the information is better, but not very intelligible to a beginner. He is told that "a sounds open and long before rd, rs, rt at the end of words.... It is also open and long in be-rre, bar; ca-rre and derivatives, except be-rrade, and compounds." Will this help him to apply an English sound so as to represent the proper sound in French of carre or barrade? Passing to consonants, and noticing by the way that they "are simple, double, or of different nature," a fact which does not give much help towards their pronunciation, we see fil is said to be pronounced "fin." In truth, of course, it is pronounced "fees." Sometimes the author gives the equivalent for the purpose of pronunciation in letters which are to be said as in French. This is very perplexing. The beginner can never be sure whether he is having that which is obscure explained by what is more obscure or not. If M. Dureau wishes to see how French pronunciation should be taught, he should study a little pamphlet on French Pronunciation which we have before us, by R. G. K. W. (Winchester, Wells; London, Nutt). In his "apology" the writer points out the importance to the beginner of getting an intelligible pronunciation: "Hitherto a sort of Stratford-at-Bow medium has been current, in which boys learn to turn into faultless French such fancy sentiments as 'My ancestors have repastured and will milk the cattle,' or 'The bed testers and oval windows will fall due on the 1st May'; while on leaving school they cannot sound one French sentence that could be understood by any Frenchman, or themselves understand a word spoken by a foreigner." And then R. G. K. W. gives in a few lines the essence of the whole matter. It is not really in the sound of French words that the difficulty exists, but in the absurd conventional method of representing what are nearly all common English sounds. "It is curious," says R. G. K. W., "that it is not the un-English sounds which seem to cause any difficulty to an English mouth, but the perfectly simple English ones, for which a series of false tones has been gratuitously devised; and which are, therefore, far more important points in the matter under consideration. They are the correct sounding of a, i, o, eu, and r; the nasal sounds and u offering apparently little or no difficulty..... Considering that there are at most only six French sounds which have not equivalents in English, it seems to be nonsense to tolerate for a moment any mock-French substitute." The writer then proceeds with the various letters; and it is singular that almost the first thing he has to say is that a in French "never has the short English sound as in 'hat,'" which M. Dureau points out to be that which it nearly always has. If accented it is like the English sound ar, without rolling the r of course. Otherwise it is equivalent to "the vowel sounds in 'love' or in 'up.'" It is striking to find how excellent a pronunciation is given to words when one reads in common English pronunciation the equivalents which R. G. K. W. suggests, e.g., "up-ray," "mull-err-rerr," "fool," "dmece," "seem-soo," "shvull-yea." Let the reader now observe that the French words he has been pronouncing so well are apris, malheureux, foible, demi, sept sous, and chevalier.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

In Les Femmes qui Tuent et les Femmes qui Volent (Paris, Calmann Lévy; London, Hachette & Co.) M. Dumas fils, writing to M. Jules Claretie, expounds some more of those peculiar views on the relation of the sexes for the possession and publication of which he is notorious. He has been moved to take up his pen by the action of Mlle. Dumaire and the Comtesse de Tilly. These are the questions he asks and sets himself to answer:—First, "In affairs of the heart, or at the end of them, are the vitriol bottle and revolver admissible as arguments?" Second, "Are not society and the law a great deal more to blame for the introduction of these lethal instruments into the debate than the poor deluded heroines who have been obliged to have recourse to them?" And third, "Would it not be wise to reconstitute society and the law on a more equal basis, and to give woman a share in the work?" As these questions are argued out by M. Dumas fils with all his wonted vivacity and point, and with much of his wonted coarseness, the success of 'Les Femmes qui Tuent' is assured. Into any analysis of the ideas embodied in it we do not need to enter. M. Dumas fils is at his old trick of preaching and astonishing, and the ideas are those of M. Dumas fils—of the author, that is to say, of 'L'Homme-Femme,' of 'La Femme de Claude,' of 'La Princesse Georges,' and other works of the same class. It is possible that in France they are not only acceptable, but useful and influential as well. Here in England it is otherwise, and they are only interesting as intellectual curiosities.

Heroes of the Cross. By W. H. Davenport Adams. (Masters.)—Mr. Adams is a maker of many books, but we must confess that he seldom makes them badly. His work is thorough as far as it goes, and he has a useful capacity for boiling down the results of other men's labours and presenting the residuum to the reader in various attractive forms. 'Heroes of the Cross' is a series of edifying biographies of Christian saints and martyrs, extending from St. Columba to Bishop Patteson. The story is in every case well told, and Mr. Adams gives a list of authorities at the beginning of each sketch. We notice that he has not brought before us any of the less known and less popular heroes, and that he has always chosen some one about whom a tolerably good book has been written lately. Though he has not had time to exercise the least originality, he has carefully used in every case the material at his command. The book is pleasantly written, and conceived in a broad and impartial spirit.

This week the publishers have sent us from the Leisure Hour office the Boy's Own Annual, a volume containing about fifty numbers of the Boy's Own Paper.

We have on our table The Biography of Charles Bradlaugh, by A. S. Headingley (Remington),—Outlying Europe and the Nearer Orient, by J. Moore (Lippincott),—The Penny All about Common Things (Ward & Lock),—Book of Natural Philosophy (Ward & Lock),—The Penny Popular Proverbs (Ward & Lock),—The Joined Vowel System of Phonographic Shorthand, by R. Wiles (Grant & Co.),—The Cow (Ward & Lock),—The Book of the Rabbit, Parts I and II., by L. U. Gill ('The Bazaar' Office),—The Practical Fisherman, Parts VIII. to X. ('The Bazaar' Office),—The Claims of Labour, by W. Donisthorpe (S. Tinsley),—Election Speeches in 1879 and 1880, by the Right Hon. the Marquis of Hartington, M.P. (Kegan Paul),—Notes on Sketching Towers, by an Architect (Bataford),—Two Essays on the Columnar Architecture of the Egyptians, by W. S. Pratt (The Author),—International Gallery of the Eminent Men of the Day, Part I., edited by Prof. H. Reichardt (Leitche & Co.),—Portrait Collection of the Hundred Greatest Men, Class VI. Science (Low),—A Pathway of Song, by T. Smith (Stock),—Albion's Fall, by J. H. D. (Allen),—Nero: a Tragedy, by R. Comfort (Philadelphia),—Palace and Prison and Fair Geraldine: Two Tragedies, by the Author of 'Ginevra' (Kegan Paul),—Shakespeare's King Henry V., by K. Deighton (Allen & Co.),—Women Outside Christendom, by J. G. Mandley (Trübner),—The Morals of Evolution, by M. J. Savage (Trübner),—The Last of the Anabims in the Land of Moab, by Capt. Rencynski (Edinburgh, Cameron),—The Age of the Great Patriarchs, Vol. I., by R. Tuck (Sunday School Union),—Notes on Gospel History, Part I., by S. G. Green (Sunday School Union),—Night unto the End, by the Rev. J. O. Boyce (Bentley),—Is it Utopian? by the Rev. O. Bullock ('Hand and Heart' Office),—Études Politiques de l'Histoire Romaine, Vol. I., by P. Devaux (Trübner),—Abrius der Babylonisch-Assyrischen und Irredischen Geschichte, by F. Hommel (Leipzig, J. C. Hinrich),—Lapidum de Dialecto Attica Testimonia, by H. Van Herwerden (Traiecti ad Rhenum, J. L. Beijer),—Scriptores Rerum Danicarum Medii Ævi, Vol. IX., by J. Langebek (Haunim Typis Officinis Blanci Lani),—La Métrique de Bharata, by P. Regnaud (Trübner),—and La Famiglia Educatrix, by O. Ross (Ancona, E. Aureli). Among New Editions we have Words and their Uses, by R. G. White (Trübner),—How we are Governed, by A. Fonblanque (Warne),—Werner's First German Course, by J. W. Laurie (Laurie),—Genealogical and Chronological Tables Illustrative of Indian History, by A. Graham (Allen & Co.),—and Frauen Liebe und Leben, by P. Thumann (Leipzig, Udolf Titze). Also the following Pamphlets: The Catechism of the Eastern Question, by M. Barry (E. Wilson),—The Memoirs of a Canadian Secretary (Toronto, Greenleaf & Kirkland),—and Personal Statement of Religious Belief, by G. C. Whitworth (Kegan Paul).

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

Cunningham's (W.) The Churches of Asia, cr. 8vo. 4/6.
Heavenly World, Views of the Future Life, by Eminent Writers, compiled by G. H. Pike, cr. 8vo. 3/6.
Hibben's (Rev. J. H.) Ecce Veritas, or Modern Skepticism and Revealed Religion Weighed, cr. 8vo. 4/6.
Pulpit Commentary, edited by Rev. Canon Spence and Rev. J. Kellie, 18mure, by Very Rev. R. P. Smith, 15/6.
Ulthorne's (Bp.) The Endowment of Man considered in their Relations with his Final End, 8vo. 10/6.

Law.

Shirley (W. G.) and Atkinson's (C. M.) Sketch of the Criminal Law, cr. 8vo. 3/6.

Fine Art.

Andrews's (W.) Sketch of Art, Second Grade, Perspective, oblong folio, 3/6.
Granta (The) and the Cam, from Byron's Poet to My, drawn and etched by E. Farren, folio, 3/6.

Poetry.

Colomb's (Col.) The Cardinal Archbishop, a Spanish Legend, cr. 8vo. 4/6.

History and Biography.

- Episodes of French History*. St. Louis and the Thirteenth Century, by G. Masson, 12mo. 2 s. 6 d.
Grube's (A. W.) History of Letters and Legend, translated from the German by J. L. Bladwell, 8vo. 10 s. 6 d.
Haven (H. P.) Sketch of the Life Character Method of Work of a Model Superintendent, by H. O. Trumbull, 8vo. 8 s. 6 d.
Slater's (P.) History of the Ancient Parish of Gisleley, 15 s. 6 d.
Tytler's (S.) Jane Austen and her Works, 8vo. 5 s. 6 d.

Geography.

- Foreign Countries and British Colonies: Austria-Hungary*, by D. Kay, 12mo. 2 s. 6 d.

Philology.

- Asplet's* (G. C.) Complete French Course, Part 2, 12mo. 2 s. 6 d.
Clarke's (H. J.) The Book of Job, a Metrical Translation, with Introduction and Notes, 8vo. 8 s. 6 d.
Goethe's Faust, Part 1, the German Text, with English Notes and Introductory Remarks by A. M. Selous, 5 s. 6 d.

Science.

- Macoson's* (W.) Ontogeny, with an Inquiry into the Etymology and Pathology of Ameloblasts, 8vo. 7 s. 6 d.
Wallace's (A. R.) Island Life, or the Phenomena and Causes of Insular Faunas and Floras, 8vo. 12 s. 6 d.
Warneley's (J.) Geometry for Beginners, 12mo. 2 s. 6 d.
Wurtz's (A.) The Atomic Theory, translated by E. Clemens, 8vo. 8 s. 6 d.

General Literature.

- Alcott's* (L. M.) Jack and Jill, a Village Story, 12mo. 5 s. 6 d.
Babylonian Captivity, or Behind the Scenes, by a Special Commissioner, with Preface by H. W. Williams, 8vo. 2 s. 6 d.
Brodie's (E.) Elise Gordon, or Through Thorny Paths, 3 s. 6 d.
Campbell's (H.) Four, and What They Did, 8vo. 3 s. 6 d.
Doring's (B. H.) Preville Chase, 2 vols. 8vo. 12 s. 6 d.
Erault's (L.) The Captain's Dog, 8vo. 2 s. 6 d.
Forrester's (Mrs.) Boy and Viole, 2 vols. 8vo. 3 s. 6 d.
Gomme's (G. L.) Primitive Folk-Moors, or Open-Air Assemblies in Britain, 8vo. 12 s. 6 d.
Gerville's (Lady V.) Faiths and Fashions, Short Essays Republished, 8vo. 7 s. 6 d.
Gustafson's (R.) Rose Leaves, Tea-Time Tales for Young Little Folks and Young Old Folks, from the Swedish by A. Alberg, 8vo. 2 s. 6 d.
Holt's (E. S.) Earl Hubert's Daughter, or the Polishing of the Pearl, 8vo. 5 s. 6 d.
In Mischief Again, by the Author of 'Hugh's Hensman', 2 s. 6 d.
Leitch's (L.) Nobody's Lad, 8vo. 3 s. 6 d.
Kingtons (W. H. G.) Norman Valters, 12mo. 2 s. 6 d.
Kingtons (W. H. G.) The Herd of Kildonan, 8vo. 7 s. 6 d.
Miller's (O. T.) Queer Pets and their Doings, 8vo. 7 s. 6 d.
Mills's (A.) Bites and Buffs, a Contested Election and its Sequels, 8vo. 6 s. 6 d.
Niebuhr's (B. G.) Greek Hero Stories, translated by E. Hopkin, 8vo. 2 s. 6 d.
Potter's (F. S.) Elfin Hollow, 8vo. 4 s. 6 d.
Potter's (F. S.) Princess Myra and her Adventures among the Fairy Folk, 8vo. 4 s. 6 d.
Ridley's (A. E.) Better than Good, 8vo. 5 s. 6 d.
Shakespeare's Morale, Suggestive Selections, edited by A. Gifford, 8vo. 5 s. 6 d.
Soldiers of the Cross, by Author of 'The Young Armour-Bearer', 8vo. 2 s. 6 d.
Tillotson's (J.) Genia of Great Authors, 8vo. 3 s. 6 d.
Verne's (J.) Tribulations of a Chinaman, translated by E. E. Frewer, 12mo. 7 s. 6 d.

FOREIGN.

Theology.

- Heinrich* (J. B.) Dogmatice Theologie, Vol. 4, Part 1, 8vo. 20 s.
Jungmann (E.) Dissertationes Selecte in Historiam Ecclesiasticam, Vol. 1, 8vo.
Rede (M. E. V.) Die Verfassung der Orthodoxen-Verbände u. Orthodox-russischen Particularkirchen, Book 1, 4to.
Ergebnisse (Die) der Ausgrabungen zu Pergamon, Preliminary Report by A. U. von C. Hübsch, R. Dohn, H. Stiller, G. Lottin, u. U. Ischendorf, 12mo.

History and Biography.

- Deub* (A.) De Balde biographiarum Origine et Fide, 8vo.
Foreror (H.) Histoire de Philippe II, 2 vols. 15 s.
Friedländer (J.) Die italienischen Notariatsurkunden d. 15 Jahrhunderts, Part 1, 10 s.
Winkelman (Ed.) Acta Imperii Inedita Seculi XIII., Papers relating to this History of Italy, 8vo.
Winkelman (Ed.) Die deutsche u. päpstliche Kanzleienurkunden u. Kanzleigebäude d. XIII. Jahrh., 10 s.
Philology.
Günther (C.) Die Verfassung der griechischen, 8vo.
Lange (F.) Beiträge zur Kritik u. Erklärung d. Plautus, 8vo.
Lothmann (O.) Die Tachygraphischen Ausdrücke der Griechischen Handschriften, 8vo.
Leopoldine Alexandri, edited by G. Kinkel, 10 s.
Meyer (F.) Pinars Siegeslieder, 4to.
Müller (L.) Q. Horatius Flaccus, a Study, 2m. 4s.
Schulmayer (H. B.) Kritischer Commentar zu Ovids Heroiden, 10 s.
Tampel (K.) Arce u. Aphroditis, 2m. 4s.

Science.

- Cohnheim* (O.) Verhandlungen Ab. Allgemeine Pathologie, Vol. 2, 12mo.
Halt (H. A.) Halt's Animal, Vol. 1, 12mo.

General Literature.

- Gambetta* (Leon) Discours, 8vo. Vol. 1, 12 s.
Lachmann (H.) Das Verhältniss der griechischen Vasenbilder zu den Griechischen Epischen Kunst, 10 s.
Musterbücher der Westdeutschen Kunst, 12mo.
Bocherfort (H.) Le Pâleur, 8vo.
Zola (E.) Le Roman expérimental, 8vo.

GERALDINE JEWsbury.

In the days when the 'Sorrows of Gentility' and 'The Half Sisters' were in every circulating library, Geraldine Jewsbury had a place in the foremost rank of writers of prose fiction. At the same time, and long after those charming books had survived their season of influence and applause, she was a distinct social force in literary and artistic circles, by virtue of the fine humour and conversational brightness which a winning address and singularly musical voice rendered indescribably effective and delightful. For many years the familiar associate of Lady Morgan, and at a later period the friend of Lady Lissoy, she lived in coteries that rated intellectual endowments above all other distinctions, and wherever she went she found sympathy and admiration. But so many years have passed since her books were novelties, and she spent so long a period in seclusion congenial to her bodily infirmities, that the recent announcements of her death arrested the attention of comparatively few readers. So far as the general public is concerned, her literary reputation was the affair of a vanished generation, and she had in other particulars no less completely outlived an enviable celebrity. There is, therefore, the more reason that her graces and goodness should be commemorated in the literary journal to which she rendered service alike conscientious and brilliant many years ago. Born in 1812 at Manchester, Geraldine Jewsbury had attained her full mental growth and the ripeness of mature womanhood when she came to London with the literary enthusiasm that animated her almost to the last. Her ambition was to be a journalist on the staff of a daily newspaper, and if a delicate and highly nervous constitution had not opposed her purpose, she would have found regular employment in an office where her ears might have been gladdened with the sound of the printing presses, which she used to call the most exhilarating music. It was, perhaps, fortunate for her that circumstances led her to make a less exacting engagement, and preserved to her the curious fancy that the happiest of human kind were the men of letters who plied their pens at Mr. Delane's word of command. Joining the Athenæum staff soon after the merits of her earlier books had given her a position amongst professional writers, she worked on it for many years, until failing sight and other troubles of breaking health incapacitated her for regular toil, and made her only an occasional contributor to our columns.

Making no profession of "good works," she did them modestly and unobtrusively at every turn of her career, in the spare minutes of busy days and with the slender surplus of her never abundant worldly means. In their joyful hours her friends sent for her that their joy might be full; and in their hours of trouble she came to them as an unbitten but ever welcome comforter. Another of her fine qualities was the sweet womanly courage which used to play forth in quaintly humorous talk under the sharpest inflictions of acute neuralgia, and which in her failing years of partial blindness and manifold disappointments exhibited itself in lofty patience and high-minded serenity. After the wont of delicate women who endure their physical tribulations smilingly, she aged early and rapidly; but death alone extinguished her piquant humour and clear moral vision. To the general circle of her acquaintance she said good-bye on her retirement to Sevenoaks from her old haunts at Chelsea. But to the last she maintained an affectionate intercourse with a small and quickly lessening number of old friends, who, having known her in her heyday, will remember tenderly her playful wit, sweet temper, and womanly refinement.

'THE CAVE TEMPLES OF INDIA.'

20, Langham Place, Sept. 30, 1880.

As the writer of the review of 'The Cave Temples of India' in your last issue notices the too frequent printers' blunders which disfigure the work, perhaps you will allow me to direct attention to one made by the binders, which, as I have only just found it out, I have now no other means of correcting.

After plate xviii. was printed off and delivered, it was discovered that the lithographer had carried the hatching quite across the front of the plan of the circular cave, fig. 3, so as entirely to obliterate the entrance. As it was then too late to remedy this in any other manner, I arranged with Mr. Griggs that he should re-engage the whole plate, which was done, and the requisite number of copies of the corrected plate delivered to the printers. Unfortunately he did not insist on the cancelled copies being returned to him, and the binders have inserted both in all the copies of the work hitherto issued.

My principal object in writing to you is consequently to draw the attention of the possessors of the work to the mistake that has been made, and to request them to remove—which is easily done with a penknife—the first impression of plate xviii., retaining only the second and corrected copy.

JAS. FERGUSON.

THE LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

It is quite an accidental circumstance that the meetings of the Library Association and of the Social Science Association should coincide this year in Edinburgh as they did practically last year in Manchester. If anything could overtax the kindness of a hospitable city this might be expected to do so, but there are no more signs of failure in this respect now than there were this time last year in the metropolis of the cotton manufacture. The Royal Society of Edinburgh has placed its rooms in Princess Street at the disposal of the Library Association. The Philosophical Institution, Queen Street, gives them access to its admirable reading-room and news-room. The Royal Academy opens its doors and a Loan Exhibition to them, and invites them to a conversation on Thursday, the 7th. The local committee gives a dinner on Tuesday, the 6th, with the Lord Provost in the chair. The Advocates' and Signet Library will be open to inspection on the same day. Attention should be directed to the Magazine Bible, exhibited in a glass case in the Advocates' Library; also to a stone effigy, by the skilful stonemason Greenshields, of Sir Walter Scott "as he sat," which is marked by a singular air of ease and naturalness. It is said of this piece of sculpture that a friend of Sir Walter's on seeing it exclaimed, "This is not a statue of the man, but his petrification." Among the papers to be read and discussed on Tuesday, that upon Free Libraries by Mr. Mason will probably lead to the most lively debate, because Edinburgh up to the present time has been rather conspicuous by the absence of those useful and popular institutions, and it is hoped that efforts to supply the deficiency will be stimulated by this meeting of librarians. Mr. MacLachlan proposes to set forth 'How the Free Library System may be applied economically to Counties.'

Mr. Small's paper on the University Library, to be read on Tuesday, when the library will be on view, will contribute to the interest of the meeting, and will include an account of Mr. Halliwell-Phillips's gift to the University of early Shakespeare quartos and other Shakespeareana. The account of Edinburgh librarians by Mr. Black will contain some particulars of the late Mr. David Laing's bibliographical career.

Variety will be furnished in the paper by Mr. Leonard Wheatley on Assyrian libraries, and one by Mr. Goudie on the great libraries of Scandinavia. Mr. Cornelius Waiford on "clearing out" libraries will be amusing and instructive. Mr. A. Macfie's paper 'On Copyright in its Relation to the Supply of Books for Libraries and the Public' will cover wide ground. The Report on "indicators," proceeding from librarians of the great provincial libraries, will excite much interest among the managers of free libraries. Mr. E. B. Nicholson has changed his opinion as to the excellence of buckram as binding material, and will pronounce what he calls a palmode in connexion with this subject.

ANOTHER IMAGINARY EDITION.

Laverton Rectory, Bath.

You inserted some time since a letter of mine on "Imaginary Editions." I propose now to give your readers an account of another work which seems fairly to deserve that title, though the book was actually printed in the year in which it is erroneously stated to have been published. The concluding part of my account will furnish a curious instance of the way in which bibliographical mistakes may originate, and be afterwards repeated by successive writers.

It is stated by some great authorities (though not apparently by any recent ones) that Usher published what is called the old (or shorter) Latin version of Ignatius at Oxford in 1642, whereas it was really published for the first time in the well-known 1644 edition, in which it occupies pp. 193-238.

The mistake evidently originated in the circumstance that this portion of the contents of the 1644 edition had been printed in 1642, and that this date appears, accordingly, on a title-page prefixed thereto, which is counted as p. 193 of the entire edition. Of course it follows from the pagination (and it appears also from the contents of the title-page itself, and in several other ways) that the preceding 192 pages must have been printed previously. In fact, there is good reason for believing that part of them had been printed in 1640.

In spite, however, of such plain evidence of the priority in time of the first 192 pages, Ittig (generally a most accurate writer) says that the old Latin version (occupying pp. 193-238) was published in 1642, and followed in 1644 by the publication of the other portions of the edition, including therein the preceding 192 pages. What makes the matter still more strange is that the minuteness, and in many points the accuracy, of Ittig's account, show plainly that he did not get his information at second hand, but had himself seen and carefully examined Usher's edition. And yet he makes this and some other mistakes which so accurate a man could not possibly have fallen into if he had had the book before him at the time of writing, or had even retained a distinct recollection of its contents.

The only explanation of this remarkable circumstance seems to be that some considerable time must have elapsed between his examination of the book and the writing of his account, so that he did not accurately remember the contents of the edition. It seems probable also that he had made some notes which, though no doubt correct so far as they went, were imperfect, and that these misled him at the time of writing his account. Amongst other notes he had probably copied the title-page above referred to, omitting, however, its middle part in which reference is made to the contents of the preceding pages. This will appear still more likely from what will be stated presently. Perhaps afterwards, when he wrote his account, he had even forgotten in what part of the book this title-page stands.

The same mistake, so far as regards the publication of the old Latin version in 1642, is made by Bruggemann ('View of English Editions,' &c., Stettin, 1797), and from him repeated by Harles in a note on Fabricius. Bruggemann, however, gives the means of tracing the mistake. He refers to the Catalogue of the French Royal Library (Paris, 1739) as his authority. In that Catalogue, after the title-page of the 1644 edition, there is quoted in small type the title-page (with its middle part omitted) which counts as p. 193, the compiler of the Catalogue having evidently taken it to be the title of a distinct work which happened to be bound up with the 1644 edition, which he must have supposed to end at p. 192, having overlooked the continuousness of the pagination and the fact that the old Latin version is expressly mentioned amongst the contents as set forth in the title-page at the beginning of the volume. In this way Bruggemann's (and consequently Harles's) mistake is accounted for. Some other old writers might be mentioned who have made the same mistake, one of them in a work published only four years after Usher's death.

It may be worth while to add that the "1642" on p. 193 is altered to "1644" in the Emendanda in Usher's edition, and also in his own handwriting in his copy of the book, still preserved in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin. Evidently, however, this alteration was made, not because "1642" was incorrect (in respect of the date of printing), but to avoid the apparent inconsistency between that date and "1644" at the beginning of the volume, and to prevent any such misapprehension as that to which the date "1642" has, in fact (as we have seen), given rise.

I propose to send you at some future time an account of a mistake of an opposite kind, namely, of a case in which an edition of Ignatius—though it was published 364 years ago, and though in respect of one portion of its contents it was an editio princeps, and though, moreover, its existence was evidently known to Usher, and apparently to Pearson—has been almost universally overlooked for the last 200 years.

J. H. BACKHOUSE.

"BUSH."

In a review of 'English Plant Names,' which appeared in the Athenæum of September 11th, the reviewer says he knows of one instance only in which the word bush is applied to a plant not hard-wooded, that is, in the verse he quotes from the old ballad of the 'Battle of Otterbourne.'

The following additional instances of the use of the word in the same way in Scottish poetry occur to my memory, and I have no doubt I could by searching find many others. In the ballad of 'Young Tamlane' the word occurs thus:—

'Up then spak the Queen o' Faries
Gat o' a bush o' rye,
Rhe's ta'en awa' the bonniest knight
In a' my company.

Burns, in 'The Address to the Deil,' uses it in connexion with a plant certainly not hard-wooded—the rush of the meadows:—

As dreary, windy winter night,
The stars shot down wi' a'leudin' licht,
Wi' you, mysel, I gat a fricht
Ayont the loch;
Ye like a rash bush stood in aicht
Wi' wavin' sough.

Scott, in 'The Lady of the Lake,' describing the sudden appearance of Roderick Dhu's clansmen from their ambush, says:—

From shingles gray the lances start,
The broken bush sends forth the dart.

So much for the poets; but the use of the word in connexion with plants other than hard-wooded is not confined to Scottish poetry, but is a usage of the common speech of the people, or at least was so thirty years ago. To me at that time bush was the proper word to use in speaking of any low and thick-growing plant, bushy the proper description of any thick growth.

JAMES WATT.

THE SO-CALLED WILL OF THE EARL OF PEMBROKE.

The Mount, Wilton, Salisbury, Sept. 23, 1880.

In your review last week of 'Curiosities of the Search-Room' you say that some of the authorities require more verification. An instance of this is found in the quotation from the so-called will of Philip, fifth Earl of Pembroke. This document and several imaginary speeches of the eccentric earl were written by S. Butler, the author of 'Hudibras,' and are to be found in his 'Posthumous Works,' vol. ii. pp. 137, &c. J. E. NIGHTINGALE.

Literary Gossip.

MISS JEWELL'S letters and papers are in the hands of Mr. J. Stores Smith, of Chesterfield.

WE understand that the Archbishop of Canterbury's recent charge is to be published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co.

THE King of Bavaria has bestowed on the eminent Orientalist, Prof. Spiegel, the honour of life nobility.

MR. SWINBURNE'S forthcoming volume of poems is called 'Studies in Song,' and will be out at the end of the month.

WE hear that Messrs. G. Bell & Sons have in hand a 'Selection of English Sonnets by Living Writers,' edited and arranged by Mr. S. Waddington. Mr. D. G. Rossetti, Mr. Matthew Arnold, and Archbishop Trench will be largely represented in the volume, which will also contain sonnets by Mr. Tennyson, Cardinal Newman, Mr. Swinburne, Lord Haunmer, Mrs. Fanny Kemble, Miss Christina Rossetti, Mr. E. W. Gosse, Mr. A. Lang, Earl Lytton, and about forty other living authors.

MR. T. P. O'CONNOR, M.P., has arranged with Messrs. Bennett Brothers, London and Dumbarton, for the issue of another edition (5,000 copies) of his biography of Lord Beaconsfield.

GREAT progress has been made during the last month in the removal of the natural history collections from the British Museum to the new Museum at South Kensington. The inner Botanical Room and the Galleries of Mineralogy, Geology, and Palaeontology are practically empty. Some of the cases of mammalia appear to be in course of depletion, but we understand that the bulk of the zoological collections will not be removed just at present.

PROF. HENRY MORLEY has undertaken to deliver a course of six lectures on 'Characteristics of English Literature' at the St. James's Lecture Hall, Eden Grove, Holloway. The opening lecture will be given on the evening of the 15th inst., and will deal with the effects of the French Revolution on the literature of the nineteenth century.

DR. GÜNTHER, of the British Museum, is engaged on an important work on fishes, which will contain many illustrations. It is expected to be published at the end of this month by Messrs. A. & C. Black.

THE next session of the Birkbeck Literary and Scientific Institution commences on Monday.

MESSRS. SAMPSON Low & Co. have in preparation for serial publication a new work by the Rev. H. B. Tristram, entitled 'Pathways of Palestine: a Descriptive Tour through the Holy Land.'

MESSRS. W. H. ALLEN & Co. have the following works in the press for publication during the coming season:—'Holland,' by Edmondo de Amicis, translated from the Italian by Caroline Tilton; 'The Lyrical Drama: Essays on Subjects, Composers, and Executants of Modern Opera,' by H. Sutherland Edwards; 'The Irrigation Works of India and their Financial Results,' by Robert B. Buckley; 'Incidents of a Journey through Nubia to Darfour,' by Sidney Ensor, C.E.; 'Sketches from Nipal,' by the late A. A. Oldfield, M.D., many years Resident at Kathmandu; 'Accented Four-Figure Logarithms and other Tables' and 'Accented Five-Figure Logarithms of Numbers,' by Lewis D'A. Jackson, A.M.S.C.E.; 'A Dictionary of Ethnological and Philological Geography,' by E. G. Latham; 'Hitopadesa: a New Literal Translation from the Sanskrit Text of Prof. F. Johnson,' by Frederic Pincott; 'The Expiring Continent: a Narrative of Travel in Senegambia,' by Alex. Will. Mitchinson; 'Turkey, Old and New,' by Sutherland Menzies; 'With the Kurram Valley Force in the Cabul Campaign of 1878-1879,' by Major J. A. S. Colquhoun; 'To Cabul with the Cavalry Brigade,' by Major R. C. W. Mitford; 'Stories of the City of London for Youthful Readers,' by Mrs. Newton Croeland; 'The Victoria Cross: an Official Chronicle of Deeds of Personal Valour, from the Institution of the Order in 1856 to 1880'; 'The History of China,' by Demetrius Charles Boulger; 'In Zululand with the British throughout the War of 1879,' by Charles L. Norris-Newman, Special Correspondent of the Standard; 'Mansukhi and Sundar Singh, Hindustani and English,' by H. B. W. Garrick; 'An Integral Calculus' and 'A Calculus for Engineers,' by W. P. Lynam; a new novel by Charles Mackay, LL.D.; 'Analytical Index to Sir John Kaye's History of the Sepoy War, and Col. G. B. Malleon's History of the Indian Mutiny,' by Frederic Pincott; 'A Treatise on the Personal Law of the Mahomedans,' by Syed Ameer Ali Moulvi, Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta; 'An Arabic Manual,' by Prof. E. H. Palmer; 'Illustrations of Architectural and Decorative Art in Rajputana and Adjacent Districts,' by Dr. F. W. A. de Fabeck and Major S. S. Jacob; 'The History of India as told by its own Historians: The Local Muhammadan Dynasties,' Vol. I. 'Gujarat,' by John Dawson, forming a sequel to Sir H. M. Elliott's work on the Muhammadan period of the history of India, already annotated and amplified by the same author.

A new story, entitled 'Dimplethorpe,' from the pen of the author of 'St. Olave's,' will be published during the present month by Messrs. Hurst & Blackett.

MESSRS. REMINGTON & Co. have in the press a new novel, entitled 'The Glen of Silver Birches,' by Miss Owens Blackburne.

MESSRS. BELL announce for immediate publication 'Trade and Economic Statistics,' by Stephen Bourne; 'Horace's Odes Englished and Imitated by Various Hands,' a compilation by C. W. F. Cooper; 'Sylvestra,' a story of manners in England in the eighteenth century, by Annie Raine Ellis; a new story for boys by Mrs. Ewing, called 'We and the World'; 'Mother Molly,' a tale by the author of 'The Rose Garden'; and a volume about 'Our Pets and Play-fellows in Air, Earth, and Water,' by Gertrude Patmore.

MR. STANFORD will publish in November 'Prehistoric Europe,' by James Geikie; the Rev. W. J. Loftie's 'Tourist Guide through London'; 'The Flora of Algeria,' by W. Mathews; and 'Life and her Children,' by Arabella B. Buckley.

MESSRS. GRIFFIN & Co. have nearly ready 'A Selection from the Miscellaneous Scientific Papers of the late W. J. Macquorn Rankine, C.E., edited by W. J. Millar, C.E., with an introductory memoir of the author by Prof. P. G. Tait. The same publishers also announce 'Suggestive Thoughts on Religious Subjects,' by Henry Southgate.

MESSRS. GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS will publish immediately a new translation of 'The Corsican Brothers.' The book will be dedicated to Mr. Irving.

THE same publishers also announce 'A Popular History of Science,' by Robert Routledge; 'Military Miscellany-Readings of Shakespeare,' by Major Seccombe, R.A.; 'The Mountain Sprites' Kingdom,' by the Right Hon. E. H. Knatchbull-Hugessen (Lord Brabourne); Routledge's Annuals for 1881; 'With the Colours; or, the Adventures of a Young Soldier,' by R. M. Jephson; 'Little Buttercup's Picture-Book'; 'D'Aulnoy's Fairy Tales,' edited by J. R. Planché, with illustrations by Sir John Gilbert, R.A.; 'Planohé's Fairy Tales'; 'Mark Dennison's Charge,' by Georgiana M. Craik; 'Meyrick's Promise,' by Miss Phillips; 'Kate Greenaway's Birthday Book for Children'; 'The Secrets of Stage Conjuring,' by Robert Houdin, translated by Prof. Hofmann; 'Hermie: the Story of a Little Girl,' by Mrs. Molesworth; 'The Day-Dawn Album'; 'Eminent Soldiers,' by Davenport Adams; 'Prince Darling's Story-Book'; 'Schoolboys all the World Over,' by Henry Frith; 'Little Wide-awake Poetry Book,' by Mrs. Sale Barker; 'The Fortune-Telling Birthday Book,' by C. A. M. Burdett; 'Amateur Acting,' by Keith Angus; 'Pizarro,' by G. M. Towle; 'A Silver Key to a Golden Palace,' by Alton Leslie; 'Adventures in the Far West,' by the late W. H. G. Kingston; and two new toy books by R. Caldecott, called 'The Three Jovial Huntsmen' and 'Sing a Song of Sixpence.'

A LONDON firm contemplates the issue of a cheap edition of Mr. Emerson's works. The arrangements for this edition will be made on the occasion of Mr. Emerson's approaching visit to this country.

MR. PERCY E. PINKERTON is translating some of the best of Hauff's charming Märchen into English, and will publish his translations at Christmas. This is an attempt to make English children familiar with Hauff's tales, which in Germany have always had a great vogue.

THIS month Messrs. Tinsley Brothers will publish Mr. Richard Dowling's new romance, 'Under St. Paul's.' Mr. Dowling will write, and Mr. Harry Furniss make the drawings for, 'High-Water Mark,' being Tinsley's Christmas Annual for 1880.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK will publish shortly a fac-simile of 'The Boke of Saint Albans,' uniform with the 'Treatise of Fysshynge with an Angle,' recently issued by him. The book will contain an introduction by Mr. William Blades.

MESSRS. HODDER & STROUGHTON's announcements include the following:—Rev. Prof. Fairbairn's 'Studies in the Life of Christ'; 'Scientific Sophisms,' by Rev. Dr. Wainwright; 'The Two Miss Dawsons,' by the author of 'Christie Redfern's Troubles'; 'The Province of Law in the Fall and Recovery of Man,' by the Rev. John Cooper; 'Our Daughters: their Lives Here and Hereafter,' by Mrs. G. S. Reaney; 'The Coming Prince:

the Last Great Monarch of Christendom,' by R. Anderson, LL.D.; 'Consecrated Women,' by Claudia; 'Theistic Problems,' by George Sexton, LL.D.; 'New Zealand,' by Rev. James Buller; 'The Heavenly World: Views of the Future Life,' by eminent writers; 'The Gentle Heart,' a second series of 'Talking to the Children,' by the Rev. Alex. MacLeod, D.D.; 'Heroes of the Strife: Sketches of Eminent Abstinents,' by Frederick Sherlock; 'How Readest Thou?' by Rev. F. B. Proctor; 'Health Studies,' by Dr. H. Sinclair Paterson; 'The Incarnation of God, and other Sermons,' by Rev. Henry Batchelor; 'The Prophet Jonah,' by the Rev. S. Burn; 'The Laws relating to Religious Liberty and Public Worship,' by John Jenkins; and 'Life through the Living One,' by J. H. Brookes, D.D.

THE Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge have in the press two volumes of a series of histories of the dioceses in England and Wales. Each volume will be complete in itself, and will trace the history of the diocese with which it deals from the first planting of Christianity in the district until the present time. The volumes now almost ready are 'Canterbury,' by Canon Jenkins, and 'Sarum,' by Canon Jones. Under the general title 'Chief Ancient Philosophies,' the Society are about to publish a set of books dealing with the principal systems of ancient thought. 'Epicureanism,' by Dr. W. Wallace, and 'Stoicism,' by Rev. W. W. Capes, are in the press. It is the aim of the series to present ancient philosophy in its relation to modern speculation.

MESSRS. SONNENSCHEIN & ALLEN announce the following publications for early issue during the forthcoming season:—'Asgard and the Gods,' 'The Captain's Dog,' 'Rose Leaves,' 'The Fisherman of Rhava,' 'Fabled Stories from the Zoo,' 'Grandmamma's Recollections,' 'Woodland Notes,' 'The Heroism of Christian Women of our Time,' 'Glimpses of Bird Life,' 'Industrial Geography of the United States,' 'The Royal Relief Atlas,' 'A Manual of Insects injurious to Agriculture,' and 'The Microscope: Theory and Practice.'

MESSRS. WARD, LOCK & Co. will shortly publish a companion volume to 'Mrs. Beeton's Book of Household Management.' The title of the new work will be 'Ward & Lock's Home Book.' The same publishers also announce 'The Universal Instructor,' a work which aims at being a complete encyclopædia of learning.

MESSRS. BLACKIE & SON will publish in October 'Switzerland: its Scenery and its People,' pictorially represented by eminent Swiss and German artists, with historical and descriptive text based on the German of Dr. Geell-Fels. They will also publish shortly, by Andrew James Symington, 'Thomas Moore the Poet: his Life and Work'; 'Samuel Lover, a Biographical Sketch, with Selections from his Writings and Correspondence'; and 'William C. Bryant,' also a biographical sketch with selections.

MESSRS. MACNIVEN & WALLACE, of Edinburgh, announce for publication 'Alfred Tennyson: his Life and Works,' by N. O. Wace; 'Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph,' by Marcus Dods, D.D., author of 'Israel's Iron Age,' &c. (new volume of the "Household Library of Exposition"); and 'Great Orators—Burke, Pitt, Sheridan, and Fox,' by Henry J. Nicoll, author of 'Great Scholars' ("Cabinet of Biography Series").

MEASRS. T. & T. Clark will shortly publish the second volume of 'An Illustrated Popular Commentary on the New Testament,' edited by Prof. Schaff, D.D., containing St. John's Gospel, by Prof. Milligan, of Aberdeen, and Dr. Moulton, of Cambridge, and the Acts of the Apostles, by Dean Howson and Canon Spence; 'Notes on Genesis; or, Christ and His Church among the Patriarchs,' by Rev. N. Keymer; 'Commentary on the Apocrypha,' by Prof. Lange; and translations of Prof. Dörner's 'System of Christian Doctrine,' the second volume of Prof. Hagenbach's 'History of Doctrines,' Meyer's 'Commentary on Thessalonians,' and 'The Christ,' by Ernest Naville.

MEASRS. JOHN WALKER & Co. have nearly ready a work called 'English Lake Scenery,' and in the press 'Stories of Long Ago,' retold by Ascott R. Hope.

THE hitherto unpublished letters of Heinrich Heine, of which the Deutsches Montagsblatt of Berlin has commenced the publication, were originally addressed to Dr. Gustav Kolb, the chief editor of the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, when Heine was confined to his bed in Paris in 1851. Heine and Kolb were old and close friends. Their acquaintance dated from 1818, when Baron Cotta sought to obtain Heine's aid in his journalistic enterprises, upon which Kolb was already engaged. It is curious to find Heine writing of the President Louis Napoleon as "ein wackerer Mensch," but we have to remember the German poet's almost idolatrous veneration for the first Napoleon, and also that the letter was addressed to his "Liebster Kolb" before the Coup d'État.

MR. J. W. REDHOUSE writes to correct a mistake in the notice of his forthcoming Mesuevi poems contained in our "Literary Gossip" last week:—

"The notice mentions me as the late Oriental Secretary to the Foreign Office. I have never had so exalted a post or title; and what I have been since 1854 I still continue to be—Oriental translator on the staff of the Foreign Office, as may be seen on p. 6 of the 'Foreign Office List'; at least, I have heard nothing to the contrary up to this moment."

SCIENCE

A Manual of Palæontology for the Use of Students. By Henry Alleyne Nicholson, M.D. 2 vols. (Blackwood & Sons.)

IT is not usual with the Athenæum to notice the second editions of scientific works. This book of Dr. Nicholson's has, however, been so thoroughly revised, so largely rewritten, and is augmented by new matter to such an extent, that it may very fairly be treated as a new production. The introductory chapters merit especial attention. The definitions of palæontology and of fossils and the explanations of the phenomena of fossilization are remarkable for clearness, and they may be studied with the utmost advantage. The chapter on the chief divisions of the aqueous rocks and that on their different ages have been written with considerable care. The succession of formations, the contemporaneity of strata, and geological continuity are subjected to a most philosophical examination, and the conclusions at which the author arrives are of the most satisfactory description. We could have desired to transfer to our pages some of the author's remarks upon those interesting subjects which have been the source of so much speculation. We select one only, which from its compactness and clearness especially suits our necessities, and which gives at the same time a good idea of Dr. Nicholson's style. He is writing of the Lias, which can be divided into a number of "zones," each of which is characterized by some special fossils, and particularly by some special ammonites:—

"The principal difficulty that we have to confront in dealing with these 'zones' is to produce any plausible explanation accounting for the destruction of the special life forms of the one zone and the appearance of those of the next zone. For the most part these zones are of a very limited vertical extent, and they succeed each other in such a manner as totally to preclude the idea that the dying out of the old forms can have been in any way caused by any physical disturbance of the area. Perhaps the most probable view to adopt in the meanwhile is that the formations in which distinct and limited life-zones can be recognized were deposited with extreme slowness, whereas those which show an essentially compact and homogeneous Fauna from base to summit were deposited with comparative rapidity. Upon this view a formation like the Lias is one formed by a process of very slow and intermittent sedimentation, the life-zones being separated by intervals, during which sedimentation must have been at a stand-still, but which were long enough to allow of more or less considerable biological changes, some forms dying out, or becoming modified, while other new ones came in. Upon this view, further, a formation like the Lias, though of comparatively small vertical extent, may represent as long a period of time as the whole of such a great formation as the Carboniferous, which appears to have been formed under conditions of comparatively rapid sedimentation."

We must refer the student to the section which treats of the contemporaneity of strata for many original views, demanding the most painstaking examination.

Of the second part of this valuable contribution to geological science, "Palæozoology," we can only say that the descriptions of the successive forms of life are of the clearest, while the accompanying illustrations are most accurately drawn; they are executed by the wood engraver with rare delicacy, and printed with the greatest care. Nothing can well be more beautiful than the getting up of these volumes. All who have been engaged in the mechanical part of their production must be complimented thereon.

Prof. Nicholson has produced two volumes which will ever be distinguished by their thoughtful character. The 'Manual' will be found of the greatest use to the student in the field or in the study, while the "General Introduction on the Principles of Palæontology" should be carefully read by every one who desires to possess an accurate knowledge of the succession of life on the earth.

ASTRONOMICAL NOTES.

THE Report of Mr. Burnham to the Trustees of the "James Lick" Trust, just published, giving an account of his observations made last autumn at the observatory on Mount Hamilton, is very satisfactory, as manifesting the excellence of the site selected for the erection of a telescope which is required under the Lick deed to be "superior to, and more powerful than, any telescope ever yet made." Mount Hamilton is twenty-two miles from San José (the nearest point of railroad communication with it), which city is fifty miles south of San Francisco. The highest or north peak of the mountain is 4,390 feet above the level of the sea; but that selected for the observatory, about three-quarters of a mile distant from this, is 140 feet lower, or at an elevation of 4,250 feet. The view is unobstructed in every direction, the neighbouring elevations being all lower than Mount Hamilton. "At sunset the Pacific Ocean is seen over the summit of the coast range at various points, and occasionally a snow-covered mountain was seen in a northerly direction, supposed to be Lassen Butte, the distance of which is about 175 miles. The great range of the Sierra Nevada, about 130 miles distant, came out sharp and distinct at sunrise." Mr. Burnham's experimental observations were made from August 17th to October 16th inclusive, with a six-inch refractor long used by himself, made by Alvan Clark & Sons, and provided with eye-pieces giving powers up to 400. Forty-two nights out of the sixty he describes as first class, the remarkable steadiness of the air being probably due to the great absence of moisture, and the proportion of cloudy and foggy nights very small, particularly during the early part of his stay. The prevailing wind was north-west, but there was much less disturbance from its force than he had been led to expect, many nights being perfectly calm and still, though a strong wind blew steadily at times, and occasionally attained a velocity of thirty miles an hour. Mr. Burnham does not waste many words on the appearance of celestial objects generally, considering the only sure test to be the discovery, observation, and measurement of double stars. Of these he gives a catalogue of forty-nine new ones which he discovered, together with observations of others. These are amply sufficient to show the advantages of the interesting station now to be occupied as an astronomical observatory, and Mr. Burnham remarks that a zone of 15° or 20°, too far south for any other American or European observatory, can be observed here. We need only add the following statement from the trustees themselves:—"The smaller equatorial, of twelve inches aperture, has been ordered of Alvan Clark & Sons, and will be placed in position early in 1881; and the great equatorial, meridian circle, and other instruments will be contracted for at an early day. It is not expected there will be any further delay in putting the Lick Observatory in complete working order other than that incident to the importance and magnitude of the undertaking."

We give the places of Faye's comet from Prof. Axel Möller's ephemeris, and those of Schaberle's comet from M. Bigourdan's, continued from our last week's "Notes" up to the 11th inst., when the moon will be at her first quarter:—

Faye's comet (Barben midnight).

Date.	R.A.	H. M. S.	N.P.D.
Oct. 3	25 49 14	26 21
" 4	25 45 56	26 26
" 5	25 41 40	26 34
" 6	25 37 23	26 44
" 7	25 33 06	26 54
" 8	25 28 50	27 04
" 9	25 24 33	27 14
" 10	25 20 16	27 24
" 11	25 16 00	27 34

Schaberle's comet (Paris midnight).

Date.	R.A.	H. M. S.	N.P.D.
Oct. 3	6 32 8	79 6
" 4	6 31 43	79 30
" 5	6 30 12	80 1
" 6	6 28 38	80 33
" 7	6 27 1	81 3
" 8	6 25 38	81 36
" 9	6 24 36	82 8
" 10	6 23 50	82 41
" 11	6 23 3	82 55

The latter comet will be high enough to observe by about or soon after midnight; Faye's will be above the horizon all night, and on the meridian about eleven o'clock. M. Bigourdan observed them both at the Paris Observatory in the second week in September, and found each very near its predicted place. Faye's he describes as resembling a star of only the thirteenth magnitude, without any apparent tail or nucleus. Schaberle's he obtained a glimpse of as early as September 6th, but could not see it long enough to secure a complete observation until the 9th, at about half-past three o'clock in the morning.

Volumes of the Annales de l'Observatoire de Paris, containing the observations up to and including the year 1877, have recently been published under the direction of Admiral Mouchez. With these volumes of observations there appears also a fifteenth volume of the Mémoires, to which is prefixed an "Eloge Historique" of Le Verrier, the last director, by M. Bertrand, Perpetual Secretary of the Academy of Sciences, and an able essay on his astronomical works by M. Tisserand, Director of the Observatory of Toulouse, which will both be read with great interest. M. Bertrand does not forget to make some remarks on the exaggerated views which have obtained currency with regard to the ill temper attributed to Le Verrier, tracing one anecdote to the misinterpretation from which it arose, and comparing it to the earlier misunderstanding of an expression of Whiston with regard to Newton. The volume of the memoirs itself, the first which has been composed since Le Verrier's death, contains an elaborate treatise on the theory of the motions of the planet Vesta, a paper on a point in the theory of the pendulum by M. Yvon Villarceau, and another by M. Tisserand on the perturbations produced on Pallas by the attraction of Jupiter.

GEOGRAPHICAL NOTES.

News has been received from Rubaga, the capital of Uganda, on the Victoria Nyanza, of the condition of the Roman Catholic French mission. King Mtesa has shown no further signs of hostility, and the fathers are in good health. They have, as is usual with missionaries of their faith, begun baptizing at once, although they can hardly know the language of the people yet. They have started an orphanage, in which they collect children whom they purchase from slavery, and call it "redeeming." This is an extraordinary feature of their system, as the purchased children become their property. The fathers are not allowed by the king to leave the capital, and his Majesty and the nobles refuse to give up their practice of polygamy at the fathers' bidding. A second caravan of priests has arrived at the south of the lake, ready to be brought over and open a separate mission at Uwais, a territory also subject to King Mtesa; one of the party was killed in a night attack on the march. A third caravan of priests is ready to start from Algiers and work its way to the lake. The Roman Catholic mission on Lake Tanganyika is also flourishing. Another mission has penetrated to the Ovampo country in Southern Africa, south of the river Cunene, in the protectorate of England. Yet another mission has worked its way from Grahamstown northward, and established itself on the river Zambesi, in the Matabeli country. The exertions made by the Church of Rome to take its part in the civilization of Africa are most praiseworthy, but will require unbounded resources to maintain them at full strength. They will greatly advance geographical and ethnical knowledge.

Capt. Camperio's "Gita nella Tripolitana," now publishing in the Milan L'Esploratore, contains a good deal of information on the trade between Tripoli and the Sudan. The itinerary of a caravan which was organized by Muhamad Zammit, a leading merchant of Tripoli, and travelled from Bengasi to Wadai by the route Rohlf's proposed to follow, is more especially interesting. Fifty-eight days were spent on the journey, but including halts, occasionally of several months' duration, nearly a year was taken up going and returning. Twenty days were spent going to Kufra, the furthest point reached by Rohlf. After a journey of eighteen days through a desert, the caravan reached a negro village in Yaganga (Nachtigal's Wadyanga), where dates and vegetables are plentiful, but wood is scarce. The horrors of the desert were then left behind and a more hospitable region entered upon, though no villages were met with until Aradha was reached. Aradha, sixteen days south of Yaganga, three north of Wara, is described as a town of hovels with 35,000 inhabitants, all of whom go naked excepting the women, who wear a band round the loins. Cattle and sheep are plentiful, cotton grows wild and is cultivated, and much rain falls during the winter. Fortnightly slave markets are held, when male slaves fetch 20 thalers, females between 50 and 150 thalers. Ostrich feathers sell at 15 thalers a rotolo of half a kilogramme. Wara is stated to have 10,000 inhabitants, all negroes. Here, too, the slave trade flourishes. Abesher, the present capital of Wadai, is a more considerable town than either of the above, with forty mosques and many large houses in addition to cabins. Ivory is sold here at 140 thalers the kantar, or hundred-weight. Haj Muhamad, the leader of this caravan, had also been to Bornu in 1878. He there met Giuseppe Valpreda, Nachtigal's Piedmontese servant, living surrounded by his harem and a numerous progeny. He still enjoys the Sultan's confidence, whose clocks and European firearms he is expected to keep in order.

In the course of his highly interesting narrative Capt. Camperio says that "Tripolitana with Bengasi is the worst governed vilayet of the Ottoman empire. But the day will come, and that ere long, when so much infamy must cease in honour of civilization." We suppose Italy will feel called upon to act as the champion of that civilization which is always invoked when Turkish affairs are under discussion.

L'Esploratore publishes a map of Signor Bianchi's journey into Southern Shoa. Bianchi is one of the travellers of the Italian society for the commercial exploration of Africa. From Gafat, in Begemeder, he travelled, by way of Magdala, to Shoa, and thence southward into Guraghe and Kabena. The furthest point reached by him is Kaya, in lat. 8° N. His map is merely based upon compass bearings, and not very detailed, but as it extends into territories not hitherto visited by Europeans, it possesses some value. A full account of Bianchi's journey is to be published in a subsequent number of our Italian contemporary.

M. Lécord, a French botanist, now on the Niger, claims to have discovered an annual plant, easily cultivated, which bears excellent grapes in plenty. "We were in doubt at first," he says, "but, having eaten these large and excellent grapes during a week, can doubt no longer." The author is of opinion that this African plant might advantageously be substituted for the vine, now devastated by phylloxera. But, supposing the fruit to be really as excellent as he says, will it attain maturity in our climate, or does he propose to transfer the business of wine-making to equatorial Africa?

Major Biddulph's new work on Gilgit and Dardistan has just appeared at Calcutta, under the title of The Tribes of the Hindu Kush. The title seems at first sight a little too comprehensive, considering how little we know of the central part of the great range. The author is, however, well qualified from some years' personal observation to speak of the nationalities grouped together towards the north-eastern extremity, where the Dards, Yeshikuns, Galchus, Kadris, Khawars, and Shims inhabit contiguous valleys. The book consists of fourteen chapters, devoted to the geography, customs, modern history, and ethnology of this interesting alpine region, and not the least valuable feature of it consists in the appendix, which contains vocabularies of ten and grammatical sketches of three languages spoken immediately south of the Hindu Kush.

SOCIETIES.

QUESTET MICROSCOPICAL. — Sept. 24. — T. C. White, Esq., President, in the chair. — One new Member was elected. — The President read a paper "On a Simple Form of Growing Slide," which he exhibited in the room in illustration. — Mr. Lugger described at some length Zeiss's new objective, particularly as regarded its use as a very low power; and the advantages attaching thereto for dissecting and for camera lucida drawing were illustrated and explained by the exhibition of the apparatus. — Mr. Hardy made some observations upon Lagidula Grandis and Meliceris tyro, figuring the objects upon the blackboard, and a short discussion upon the subject ensued.

ENTOMOLOGICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.
Pres. Guesst Microscopical, 1

Science Society.

DR. SIEMENS'S electrical locomotive engine is, we understand, about to have a fair trial on the Camden and Ambury Railway of New Jersey. Eight miles of this line are now in progress of adaptation for the electric propulsion, and the trial may be expected to take place very soon.

M. DE FOVILLE, President of the Académie d'Aéronautique de France, has proposed to our Balloon Society a race in this country during the present autumn with any member selected by the Society. The challenge is accepted, and the ascent is to be made from the Crystal Palace. Another race is subsequently to take place in France.

MR. STUART COMBERLAND, who has done so much in exposing the tricks of spiritualists, will lecture on spiritualism and clairvoyance at Steinway Hall next Monday and Tuesday.

MR. SHADWORTH H. HOBSON'S introductory address to the Aristotelian Society, to be delivered on the 11th inst., will be "On Philosophy in relation to its History."

DR. LENNOX BROWN, the vocal surgeon, will preside at Herr Behnke's public lecture on the human voice as a musical instrument at the Literary Institute, 165, Aldergate Street, on the 9th inst.

MR. JOHN SCOTT, the author of a well-known work on estate valuation, and formerly editor of the Farmer's Journal, has been appointed Professor of Agriculture to the Royal Agricultural College at Cirencester.

PROF. SCHNETTLER, at a recent meeting of the Vaudois Society of Natural Science, read a paper of considerable interest on the colour of flowers. Prof. Schnetler from his experimental examination is led to the conclusion that plants contain only one colouring matter—chlorophyll—which, being modified by the acids, or alkalies, or the tannin which the plants produce, furnishes all the tints which flowers or leaves present.

KARL RITTER VON HAUER, Director of the Chemical Laboratory of the Geological Institute of Vienna, died recently. Von Hauer was well known in this country, especially from the very beautiful set of models of crystals which he presented to our Museum.

PROF. SAMUEL STEPHAN HALDEMAN'S death is announced. He was formerly Professor of Comparative Philology in the Pennsylvania University. In 1836 he was employed in the Geological Survey of New Jersey, and in 1837 in the survey of Pennsylvania, his native state, Prof. Haldeaman having been born at Columbia in 1812. He for some time filled the chair of Natural History in the University of Philadelphia and in a Delaware college, prior to which he was Professor of Geology and Chemistry to the State Agricultural Society of Pennsylvania.

Prof. Haldeman's prize essay 'On Analytic Orthography' was published in England in 1858.

The Transactions and Proceedings of the Royal Society of Victoria, Vol. XVI., for April, 1880, has been received. This volume contains several important articles, amongst which we may mention the following: 'On the Relation between Forest Lands and Climate in Victoria,' by the President, R. L. J. Ellery, F.R.S., who has also an article on 'The Tidal Datum of Hobson's Bay'; 'The Diorites and Granites of Swift's Creek and their Contact Zones,' by Mr. A. W. Howitt, F.G.S.; 'On the Genus Amathia of Lamouroux, with a Description of a New Species,' by the Rev. J. E. Tenison-Woods, F.G.S.; and 'Notes on the Customs of Mota, Banks Island,' by the Rev. R. H. Codrington, M.A., with remarks by the Rev. Lorimer Fison, F.R.S.

The Proceedings of the Geological Survey of India, Vol. XIII., Part III., for 1880, has been received. This part contains an important paper 'On the Kumaun Lakes,' by Mr. W. Theobald, Deputy-Superintendent of the Geological Survey, notes by Dr. Ottokar Frantzen on the palæontology of the Karharbati and South Rewah coalfields, and a paper 'On Salt in Rajputana,' by Mr. C. A. Hackett.

We have received a copy of 'Étude sur les Tempêtes de l'Atlantique Septentrional et Projet d'un Service Télégraphique International relatif à cet Océan,' by M. Hoffmeyer, Director of the Danish Meteorological Institute at Copenhagen, which we hope will meet with the attention it deserves. Concerning the author the well-known Dutch meteorologist M. Buys Ballot (to whom we owe the law of storms now generally recognized) remarks, in a short preface written by request, "Personne n'a étudié aussi profondément que M. Hoffmeyer la marche des dépressions barométriques et des tempêtes qui les accompagnent." Starting with the principle, now universally admitted, that out of the tropics every disturbance of the atmospheric equilibrium, producing more or less tempestuous movements in the air, is propagated in the general direction of from west to east, the author allows due credit to the warnings issued by the New York Herald and transmitted to Europe by telegrams, but points out that a part only (about, in fact, forty-seven per cent.) of the barometric depressions which reach the European coasts proceed from those of Canada and the United States, the remainder either arising in the Northern Atlantic itself or emanating from regions within the arctic or tropical zones. His proposal, therefore, is that telegraphic communication be established with South Greenland, Iceland, the Farø Islands, and the Azores, and reports (simultaneous if possible) of the state of the barometer at each of these be cabled daily to Europe, by which means a warning may be obtained of nearly every approaching storm. We have not space to enter into the elaborate details set forth in this interesting paper. With M. Buys Ballot we may well say that there is no occasion "à donner un résumé de ce labour on le recommande; il est très-clair et se fera apprécier de lui-même." The conclusions with regard to the directions of storms in the Northern Atlantic are founded upon the author's daily synoptic charts, extending over two periods, containing altogether about twenty-one months, viz., September to November, 1873, and December, 1874, to May, 1876. At some time in the future it will be perhaps possible to extend the scheme now before us by obtaining telegrams from ships stationed at points in mid-ocean; but the feasibility of the connexion recommended in this paper is perfectly obvious, and no practical difficulties of detail should stand in the way of its being entered upon without unnecessary delay.

FINE ARTS

DOOR'S GREAT WORKS. 'CHRIST LEAVING THE PRETORIUM' 'CHRIST ENTERING JERUSALEM' AND 'THE BRAZEN SERPENT' (the latter just completed), each 33 by 27 feet with 'Dream of Moses's Wife' 'Soldiers of the Cross' 'Night of the Crucifixion' 'Home of Daughters' &c., at the DOOR'S GALLERY, 25, New Bond Street. Daily, Ten to Six.—

